

9 29384

THE

37

RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOLUME VII.

1890.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Assistant Post-master.....	641	Needle Mountains.....	3
City Hall, Rochester.....	303	Night Train, A	122
Court House, Rochester.....	304	Perhaps.....	487
Clark, Edgar Erastus.....	396	Properly Equipped.	488
Dick and His Driver "Dance on the Carpet"	166	"Picnic." A.....	519
Hoosac Tunnel.....	2	Summer Scene in the Life of a Brakeman, A	85
Happy New Year, A.....	1	Sioux City Corn Palace.....	562
Hard Luck.....	600	University at Rochester, N. Y.....	304
"Man-Killer," A.....	488

INDEX.

A

A Little Child Shall Lead Them.....	4
A Love Letter.....	7
Anybody or Nobody.....	11
At Eventide.....	34
About Sleepers.....	121
As Jacob Served for Rachel—poem.....	314
Accidental Declaration, An.....	348
All Around the House.....	353
All Want to Play First Fiddle.....	367
Another Apology.....	395
African Order of the Tall Hat, The.....	414
Anti-Strike Clause, The.....	452
Affairs of the Railways.....	508
Another Reduction.....	530
America Still Ahead.....	531
Advance Made by Woman, The.....	534
Anti-Monopolist's Views, The.....	611
Are Conductors Dishonest.....	621
All Alike—Except Conductors,—poem.....	664
Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, Agree- ment with.....	687
Anecdote of Sheridan, An.....	716
Authoress, A Popular.....	721
Advice of the Spider.....	791
Act of Justice, An.....	820
Absent Minded, Very.....	838
Attacking Clark.....	894

B

Baby and a Banana Peel, A.....	64
Brakeman, The.....	84
Baby in Church—poem.....	94
Boring of the Gotthard Tunnel.....	129
Burdette on the Grippe.....	209
Baby's Writing, The,—poem.....	229
Brother and I, My.....	270
Blissful Ignorance.....	344
Baby's Bedtime Song.....	354
Business Outlook, The.....	363
Blunders in Composition.....	382
Business is Business.....	387
Before and After.....	418
Belknap, E. H.....	427
Benefit Department, The.....	432
Brakeman's Chances, The.....	487
Bearing of Railway Officers Towards their Subordinates, The.....	568
Burglar, The Festive.....	609
Baltimore & Ohio South-Western Railway Company, Agreement with.....	626
Bloodiest Battle in History, The.....	714
Bowser, Mr. and Mrs.....	718
Brakeman at Church, The.....	749

Break ! Break ! Break !—poem.....	769
Building, The Railway Conductors'.....	782
"Bluff That Didn't Go, A.....	831
B. R. T. Convention.....	834

C

Conductors' Reception on the Coast.....	147
Chinese Minister's Ring, The.....	176
Correspondence or Symbolic Meaning of Col- ors.....	238
Charity Begins at Home—poem.....	271
Country Idyl, A—poem.....	309
Cure for Talking Barbers, A.....	330
Child's Reason, A.....	330
Capital Versus Labor.....	336
Coffee in Kidney and Liver Diseases.....	384
Clark, Edgar Erastus.....	396
Chicago and Atlantic Special.....	405
Came a Day Ahead of Time.....	426
Cross, Wm. C.....	432
Convenience of Foreign Coaches, The.....	451
Coupler Legislation.....	465
Calvin "Selah".....	471
Conductor Talks, A.....	489
Charges Against Mr. Wheaton, The.....	523
Conductors and the Strike Principle.....	529
Crook's Romantic Courtship, General.....	535
C., C., C. & St. L. R'y, Agreement with.....	587
Central Railway Strike and Its Lesson.....	612
Conductor "Tom" Garrity.....	613
Conductors' Clam Bake.....	613
Cobweb Party, A.....	616
Conductors' and Brakemen's Excursion.....	617
Commendable Act, A.....	624
Collapse of the Railroad Strike.....	650
Cupola Cars.....	654
Coupler Legislation, Progress of.....	660
Correction, A.....	662
Conductor's Memory, A.....	663
Conductor, A Noted.....	682
Code of Morals, A—poem.....	694
Case of W. D. Weist, The.....	703
Chesapeake & Ohio R'y Co., Agreement with.....	725
Catching the Train.....	768
Cardinal Newman—sonnet.....	794
Chicago & Alton R'y Co., Agreement with.....	801
Crows and the Farmer, The—poem.....	828
Chicago & Northwestern Schedule.....	877
C. & E. I. Strike, The.....	891

D

Dakota Railroads.....	11
Division Matters.....	78
Directory.....	83, 267, 519, 671, 899
Doing Things Well.....	93

Down Here Among My People—poem	310	Federation—poem	584
Deer in the Adirondacks	349	Flagging	599
Daffodils—poem	350	Festive Burglar, The	609
Dignity of Labor	362	Federation Again	705
Day's Experience, A	381	5:59—poem	714
Ditto	383	Fair Elections	717
Dog Soldier, The	386	Fraud "Potter" Again	746
Death of a Pearl	417	Fighting Machines	751
Drawbridge, An Open—A Suggestion	441	Famous Goose Story, The	873
Daniels on Wheaton	479	Fairness	893
Deserving Measure, A	507
Denouncing Seceders	546
Dialogue, A	586
Don't Knock Down Fares	607
Depew Is Not In It—poem	613
During a Domestic Breeze	616
Dastardly Attempt, A	658
"Doing Time" on the Branch	671
Down Grade to Death	684
Doubtful	767
"David and Goliath" in Naval Warfare	792
Doctor Without a Diploma, A	872
December	874

E

Exchanges, 37, 436, 483, 511, 558, 589, 635, 740, 773 816, 887.		Good-by, Old year—poem	1
Editorials, 41, 78, 199, 236, 264, 302, 336, 360, 395 427, 469, 504, 541, 594, 620, 659, 703, 745, 776 818, 855, 890.		Glance Backward, A	150
Edison's First Start	12	Girl Machinist, A	272
Early Railroadng	172	Get on the Platform	329
Eligy	274	Gritty Joke, A	330
Exciting Times to Be Expected	349	Grey Heads—poem	391
Extension Fronts for Locomotives	449	Gigantic Bear Story	418
E Sempre Furfante	544	Grand Chief Conductor, The	433
Evening Meeting, The	575	Got a Chew	485
Eppelin, The Rhyme of—poem	585	Getting Away Under Fire with a Load of Slaves	527
Embarrassing	586	Girl Who Drives a Stage, A	534
Egotistical	625	Great Order's Founder, A	567
Excursion and Picnic of Division 242, Grand Annual	673	Garrity, Conductor "Tom"	613
Erie Trouble, The	755	Gladstone, William Evart	643
Erie and Its Men, The	781	Good Move, A	683

F

Fraternal, 17, 65, 99, 137, 181, 215, 244, 274, 315 355, 403, 441, 480, 501, 536, 578, 617, 656, 695 732, 771, 808, 846, 882.		Glenwood Springs	730
Fun	48, 329, 739, 767, 827	"G. P. A's," The	731
From a Woman's Standpoint	389	Good Things to Know, The	752
Farmer's Luck, A	426
Fraternity	427
Federation	432
Fate of Two Innocents	454
Ford, Mr. E. A., and the Conductors	504
Forehanded Monarch, A	531

G

H

Hole in the Hill, The	2
He Had Her There	10
Home Upholstery	35
Household Angel, A	36
Humor of the Scots	59
Handicapped Man, A	137
Here Is a Genuine Touch of Pathos	204
His Little Snack	209
Her Story a Sad One	229
His Prayer Answered	310
Had His Way	329
He Identified Himself	344
Historic Powder-horn, An	348
How Steam Pipes Set Wood on Fire	382
Health Commandments	388
Humorous Job Printer, The	408
He Squelched the Young M. D.	445
Hughitt and Pullman	454
Happened in Toledo	456
Hermance, F. A., A Letter from	481
Hot Place to Rest, A	496
Help Him Out, To	510
How to Avoid Strikes	517
Hard Week's Work, A	531

Hardening the Brain	535	Le Petit Alphonse	412
House That Jack Built, The.....	678	Lost Both Ways.....	462
Hearst, The Residence of Senator	689	Looking and Seeing—poem.....	494
Hospitable Jailer An	711	Laws Governing the Mutual Benefit Depart-
His Text... ..	716	ment of the O. R. C.....	497
H. & T. C. Trouble, The	731	Livingston, John—"Farmer".....	623
Howard's Assertions, Mr.	779	Little Grave, A.....	722

I

Insurance, 23, 109, 157, 190, 223, 254, 287, 321, 497
In the Attic—poem	390
Influence of Women Upon Literature, The ..	415
Independent Order of Railway Conductors,
The	469
Illinois Central The.....	478
Interesting Interviews with Several Prominent Elmira Conductors.....	492
"Independents," The	521
Illinois Central Plan, The.....	524
Important Correction, An	555
"Independents" on the Coast, The	569
Insurance Commissioner Carey	577
Important Correction, An	596
Illinois Central R. R. Co., Agreement with.	803
In the Matter of the O. R. C.....	832
Items of Interest.....	838
In Defense of Strikes	870

J

Jill's Silver Spoons.....	350
Joseph Jefferson, A Story of.....	525
Jamestown, Destruction of	528
Judge Not—poem	833

K

"Korrek"	493
King Corn at Sioux City	562
Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Memphis Railway
Company, Agreement with	654
King's Reply, President.....	760

L

Legal, 27, 158, 226, 327, 371, 402, 446, 518, 552,
737, 770, 807.
Ladies, 34, 147, 229, 258, 270, 311, 350, 389, 419,
457, 495, 532, 585, 615, 663, 689, 764, 795, 839.
Love Letter, A	7
Let It Alone	81
London's Water Supply.....	90
Love, Richard.....	165
Lulu Lake—poem	177
Lesson in Self-Reliance, A.....	209
Listen—poem	311
Lesson, A—poem.....	346
Longevity of Birds.....	348
Lemuel Drayton's Pocket-Book	377
Long String of Facts.....	383

"Let Us Welcome Our Company Home"— poem.....	753
Ladies Auxiliary to O. R. C.	797
Loaning Passes	830
Little One's Rebuke, The	843
Look Into the Past, A.....	848
Location Again.....	856

M

Miscellaneous, 1, 49, 83, 121, 165, 201, 237, 267,
303, 339, 375, 411, 449, 487, 519, 559, 599, 639,
671, 711, 749, 789, 829.
Mentions, 28, 73, 115, 154, 197, 261, 301, 338,
365, 406, 438, 484, 515, 547, 597, 632, 665, 708.
747, 785, 823, 857, 895.
Merchant's Story, A	8
McNulta, John, Letter from.....	174
Maniere, Rosa.....	201
Mehitable Jones on Women's Rights—poem.	232
McCune, Henderson, Letter from.....	237
Morning and Night—poem	240
Men Who Miss the Train, The—poem	385
My Precious Pet.....	391
My Wedding Tour	457
Measure, A Deserving	507
Must Reduce Expenses.....	529
Mysterious Gift, A	585
Mail Service, The Railway	639
Misouri Pacific R. R. Co., Agreement with..	651
Make Haste Slowly.....	704
Mart's Action Didn't Suiter.....	880

N

No Effeminate Man in Mine—poem.....	36
New Year, The	41
New Style of Cars, A	92
Natural Objects of Great Scenic Interest in
The United States.....	240
Novel Life Preserver.....	346
Nicaragua Canal, The.....	384
New Order, The.....	430
Not Much of a Split.....	480
New Conductors' Order.....	493
Nothing to Say	506
National Assembly of L. A. to O. R. C.	532
No Apology to Offer	543
Not a Seceder	546
No Sympathy for Secessionists.....	563
New York Central, The	603
New York Opinion, A.....	745

New York Central Railroad Strike.....	799
Northern Pacific Railroad Company, Agree- ment with.....	804
Not the Same—poem.....	826

O

Obituary, 32, 77, 161, 233, 255, 299, 325, 368, 409, 447, 486, 514, 556, 592, 637, 670, 700, 743, 775, 814, 853, 889.

A —Ayer, 637; Alexander, Mr. 638.
B —Beers, Amos S., 77; Brown, Mrs. John, 164; Burgess, Mrs. M., 233; Bennett, F. M., 256; Beal, Mrs., 300; Bryans, J. H. D., 557; Brown, — 637; Barker, F. S., 743; Butler, Frank S., 853, 854.
C —Connor, Wm., 33; Cook, Mrs. Jos., 233; Corey, P. G., 234; Carter, John, 299; Carey, Mrs. A. L., 370; Caskey, Flora, 447; Costly, Miss — 448; Cody, L., 592; Chest- nutt, Charley L., 702; Curran, Arthur, 775; Clement, Frank, 889.
D —Dunn, Andrew J., 556; Donlin, James, 670; Da Costa, John A., 701; Daugherty, Ben. M., 702.
E —Edmondson, John, 775.
F —Flaherty, Francis, 33; Flora, Thomas L., 235; Fitz- gerald, James, 743.
G —Gallagher, Mrs. P. H., 32; Gordon, — 257; Goss, Mrs. Harriet G., 300; Graham, James, 368; Garbutt, Robert J., 409; Galloway, Wm. 410; Gaynor, Patrick J., 700; Gorman, Fannie L., 701; Gibson, Wm., 775; Good- speed, Albert, 814.
H —Hatter, Jake, 743; Harrison, John T., 77; Hockady, Minnie, 162; Halbert, Chas. E., 235; Habbersett, Mrs. I. G., 257; Hallisey, Leo., 369; Hubbard, N. H., 369; Hall, Mrs., 486; Hunt, M. D., 593; Hill, — 593; Harris, S. P., 637; Hawkins, Hugh, 637; Henderson, Henry, 744; Haselton, Johnny F., 814; Hanna, Chas. C., 815; Har- nest, Mrs. H. E., 815; Hoyer, Edgar, 854; Herbst, Mrs. W. T., 889.
J —Johnson, John A., 670; Johnson, W. H., 700; Jameson, W. A., 854; Johnson, Mrs. F. A., 255.
K —Kernan, John, 32; Kirkpatrick, G., 32; King, J. G., 255; Kingsley, Frank P., 702; Kepler, J. D., 743.
L —Langdon, F. E., 744; Lyons, John, 744; Lewis, W. C., 77; Layton, Frank M., 164; Laughlin, Mrs. A. J., 234; Laiser, — 257; Logan, Jannie May, 326; Lordan, J., 326; Lawlor, G. C., 592; Lewis, James R., 638; Lyons, John, 889.
M —Mangan, John, 164; McDowell, Jos., 299; Madden, Mrs. John, 300; McCabe, T. J., 325; McCurdy, E. B., 326; Moore, Francis M., 369; Millikin, O. F., 410; Morris, Levi L., 486; Mankin, Mrs. Sadie, 514; Man- gum, W. C., 592; McCarthy — 638; Moore, Thomas, 638; Moon, Thomas R., 670; McAfee, O. J., 815.
N —Nightingill, Mrs. Kittie, 256; Nall, Clara, 300; Norton, Grant, 368; Norton, M., 368; Nall, Bessie, 409.
O —Oliver, Samuel, 33; Ohliger, Mrs. E., 77; O'Brien, Harrold, 325; O'Donahue, Mrs. J., 557; O'Shea, Ed. F. 814.
P —Packard, Mrs. R., 233; Prohaska, Frank, 257; Phillips, D. H., 593; Powell, Walter H., 701; Pender, Miss Viola, 853; Pengra, Wm. F., 161.
R —Robinson, Geo., 300; Rockwell, Samuel, 162; Ryan, J. E., 234; Ravenel, Henry, 255.
S —Sellors, C. L., 33; Shew, Hy, 161; Schoonover, M. B., 162; Sproul, Miss, 233; Sanger, Ed. B., 235; Schofield, James T., 447, 448, 514; Stoner, Mrs. G. F., 514; Sorn- berger, E. W., 556; Stolle, J. M., 557; Stewart, Anna, 700; Shaw, Justus, 775; Smelser, Mrs. Daniel, 853; Smith, John, 889.

T—Tremaine, J. D., 161; Toles, Wm., 164; Tibbets, Geo.
E., 702.

V—Vaughn, Thomas, 368.

W—Ward, John, 33; Wood, James H., 162; Witherbee, F.
W., 163; Welch, J. M., 234; Wood, M. H., 234; Watson, Mrs. P. D., 299; Washburn, Mrs. W. O., 325; Workman, W. H., 368; Wright, J. H., 369, 370; Wood,
W. H., 369; Warren, C. W., 486; Woodward, J. J.,
557; Wright, Mrs. Francis C., 592; Waters, P. T., 593;
Wilson, Flora J. 637; Waddell, A. K., 744, 854.

Official, 39, 82, 114, 193, 225, 252, 294, 324, 736, 772.

Old Canoe, The	60
Origin of the St. Gotthard Railway.....	85
Old Church and Graveyard, The.....	230
Old Kitchen Clock, The—poem.....	239
Origin of Proverbs.....	349
Open Door, The—poem.....	352
One Hundred Yards Dash	416
Only a Little Old Shoe—poem	424
Over-Reached Himself	347
Old Versus New Locomotive Boilers	467
Other Side, The	545
Only A Brakeman Killed	614
Old Way the Best, The.	647
Our Naval Guns.....	649
Old War Ships and the New, The	649
Old Things and Dear	689
Olden Spell, The.....	721
Official Directory	899

P

President Harrison's Stenographer	207
Pay of Conductors.....	264
Perils of Winter Railroadng Among the Mountains	310
Past, the Present, and the Future, The	360
Per Pacem ad Ducem—poem	383
Plain Mary Allen	419
Philadelphia & Reading, The	428
Passford, W. C.	524
Philadelphia Meeting	545
Protection for Unorganized Labor.....	566
Perils and Romance of Whaling, The.....	570
Pinkerton Comment	610
"Party Rate" Possibilities	644
Playing "Rip" in the Catskills	712
Pen Pictures	713
Private School an Important Factor in Na- tional Education, The	721
Political Union	784
Perpetual Fire.....	834
Politics Versus Partizanship.....	855
Publish the Letters	892

Q

Query, A.....	631
Queer Railroad Lawsuits.....	829

R

Railroads, 13, 61, 95, 135, 179, 210, 241, 331, 374 407, 440, 463, 553, 587, 626, 651, 684, 724, 755 799.
Railroad Progress.....	123
Redman's Wedding, A	178
Resources of the Order of Railway Conduc- tors, The.....	199
Rosa Maniere	201
Report of the Special Committee on Uniform Standard Time	205
Railway Scape-Goat, The	222
Rules for a Man of Business	239
Roll of Members of the XXII Grand Division	297
Rochester.....	303
Running the Gauntlet	306
Reason, And the—poem.....	315
Relationship Mixed up with Marriage	330
Railroad Hog, The.....	345
Repartee Extraordinary.....	345
Rambling in the Woods.....	380
Railway Conductors	397
Railways Entitled to Some Gratitude	441
Railway Legislation	463
Rebellion Against Tyrannical Officers	530
Robin's Garden, A—poem.....	531
"Roll of Honor," The.....	541
Railroad Adventure.....	559
Railroaders Fraternize	571
Rhyme of Eppeljn, The—poem	585
Romance.....	601
Railway Statistics	627
Railway Mail Service, The	639
Rand, Wm. F.....	688
Residence of Senator Hearst of California, The	689
Railway Law in Ohio	706
Reason Why, The—poem	718
Railroad Men in Politics	731
Resolution, A	776
Railway Conductors' Building, The	782
Race with Idaho Robbers, A.....	833
Robinson, Wm. D.....	856
Railroad on Tree Tops, A.....	881

S

St. Gotthard, The	49
Some Curious Wills.....	58
Seeing and Thinking—poem	71
Sad Indeed.....	93
Story, but a True One, A.....	132
Sioux City	228
Song of the Steam Demon, The—poem.....	231
Smallest American Railway, The.....	240
Sometime—poem	269
She Is a Rebel.....	314
So Near and Yet so Far	330

Something That Happened	330
Story, A True.....	339
Story With a Moral, A.....	348
Storm Tossed	353
Some Women Are Angels	353
Shall We Be Disappointed.....	361
Some Other Place	385
Spring Openings.....	390
Starvation Camp in the African Wilderness.	417
She Wanted to Price Ticket	426
She Didn't Know	426
Should Auld Acquaintance be Forgot.....	427
Still Dissatisfied	429
Scientific Order, A	437
Spotter Confesses, A	453
Safety Appliances.....	476
Standard Time	477
Still "Sacrificing"	506
Soft Snaps for Brakemen.....	520
Stock for Employés	545
Santa Fé Agreement	553
S. M. A. A. and System Federation, The...	595
Sleepy-Time—poem	615
Supreme Council, Decision of.....	629
Southern Pacific Employes	648
Seniority Promotions	662
Strike, The Sympathetic	677
State Ownership of Railroads.....	677
Scranton Meeting, The.....	679
September—poem	693
Shall We Have a Building	705
Securing a "Pleasant Expression".....	723
San Antonio & Aransas Pass R. R. Com- pany—Agreement with.....	724
Southern Pacific Company—Agreement with	726
Saw a Train Coming	752
Sure Enough S'prise, A	754
Scranton Resolution Again, The.....	818
Shall We Move.....	821
Searching for Mamma	843
Southern Wonderland, A.....	875

T

Tubal Cain's Doll.....	9
Thoughts	35
Tooth-Pick Holder, A	36
Thoughts, A Few	44
To All Who Are Interested	45
The Wherewithal	46
True Story, A	55
That Was Different	76
They Have Passed.....	79
Trip to the Coast, A	168
Three Classes of Married Women	230
Tim	268
Trade in Old Bottles	307
The Chicago Elevated Railway	309

The Wrong Boy	314	Vice-President's House, The.....	462
To Take the Place of a Hen.....	348	Vale, Mr. Corbin	471
True-Hearted Janie.....	376	Vandalia Line, Agreement with	686
Treat Him Kindly	395	Volunteer Organist, The—poem	765
Too Old to Learn New Tricks	405
To the Friends of the Late Mrs. Carey, of Fargo, N. D.—poem	447
Train Dispatcher's Association of America..	452
They Have Made a Mistake.....	493
Tailor-Made Girl, The	496
Tramp Steals a Train, A	510
Two Dorothys—poem.....	532
Too Cheap.....	535
Tyrannical Railroad Company.....	569
"Tote" Fair.....	594
Thanks	602
There Was One Present.....	616
Trainmen and the Strike	620
Twenty Dunkards	675
They Deserve to be Hanged.....	676
To Mr. Geo. M. Hallstead—poem	683
Train Wrecking	706
Three Times a Winner	732
To California in '41.....	789
Time	790
Through Great Granite Gorge	792
Twenty Bushels of Roses	795
Two Dreams and What Came of Them	753
Train Orders.....	763
Too Far—poem	768
Telegraphic Declaration—poem	769
Telegraphers' Trouble, The.....	806
They Wern't His Mules	828
To-Day—poem	831
Trip to the Black Hills.....	846
Two Christmas Eves.....	863
Ticket Agent, The	872
Time is Wasted.....	890

U

Useful and Suggestive.....	273
Uncle Jake's Dumb Critters—poem.....	394
Usual Way, The.....	508
Union Pacific Statement.....	510
Union Pacific, The	600
Unjust	624
Useful Shoes	663
Utilization of Niagara Falls.....	713
Uncle Sam's Cruisers Among British Iron- Clads	716
Unforeseen Question, An.....	769
Union Pacific Schedule	879

V

Vice of the Age, The.....	10
Value of Wives, The	425

W

Wherein He Failed.....	9
Where Do They All Go.....	59
World's Prayer, The.....	177
Wanted the Old Song.....	208
Waning Power, The.....	208
World, The,—poem.....	244
While Sitting by the Fireside,—poem.....	258
What Can She Do,—poem.....	271
What They are Worth.....	309
Woman as a steamboat Mate, A.....	323
What She Wanted to Know	329
When Fortune Came.....	346
Worst Form of Slavery, The	349
When the Trees Begin ter Blossom,—poem ..	418
Woman's Reason, A.....	426
Will It Pay.....	433
Wanted a Family	468
Where Are the Other Fellows.....	468
Who Is It?.....	490
Why He Wails.....	491
Wheaton Declines to Talk, Mr.....	493
What We Want.....	494
We Three and Our Ghost.....	495
Wheaton, Mr., In Town	513
Wheaton, The Charges Against Mr.	523
What Next?.....	526
Wage Earners' Wrongs, The	527
Which Shall It Be.....	532
Wheaton in Rebellion	565
Wheaton Not Alarmed, Chief.....	569
Webb's Position	646
Where Drink is Outlawed.....	675
Way It Works, The.....	676
Widow's Mite, The	719
World of Dreams, The,—poem.....	723
Working the Innocent	751
Where Does the O. R. C. Stand.....	772
Where It Stands	777
What Does It Mean?.....	783
Why Not?.....	784
Where Ignorance, etc.....	821
Which Is Which?.....	839
Weariness,—poem.....	843

Y

Year's Record, A.....	150
Young Tennessee Heroine, A.....	425
Ye Editor Pro Tempore.....	427
Young as Ever.....	422

NO. 1.

JAN'Y 1, 1890.

VOL. VII.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR

♦♦CONTENTS♦♦

Miscellaneous	1
Railroads	13
Fraternal	17
Insurance	23
Legal	27
Mentions	28
Obituary	32
Ladies	34
Exchanges	37
Official	39
Editorial	41
Fun	48

Published by the

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., JANUARY 1, 1890.

NO. 1.

GOOD-BYE, OLD YEAR.

Good-bye, Old Year; the embers will soon cease to burn.
 Thy race is run, 'tis silence now, and quietly we turn
 The leaf of time, with many a pang that you must go.
 A kiss for every blessing, a tear for every woe.

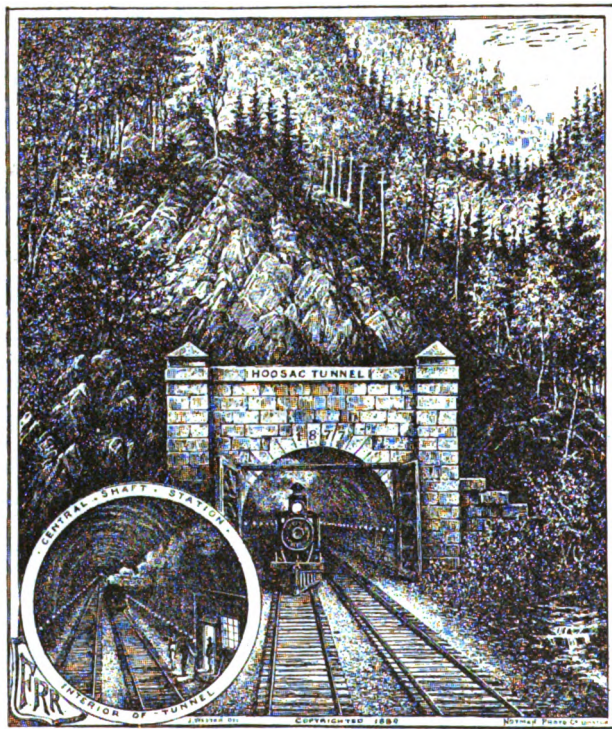

Good morning, Eighteen Ninety, you say,
 "Happy New Year,"

The angel points to the flight of time with rapturous cheer;

Ring in ye welcome songsters, the love of all mankind,
 May the hand and heart with kindly love, be ever entwined.

THE HOLE IN THE HILL.

First projected	- - - -	1825	is three hundred and eighteen feet to the Commenced	- - - -	1851	outlet at the top, while twelve thousand
Cut through	- -	November 27th, 1873	two hundred and forty-four feet from the
First train of cars thro'	-	February 9th, 1875	west end, or not quite midway through the
First regular trains	-	Autumn, 1876	bore, is the central shaft, measuring fifteen
Original estimate of cost	-	$1,948,557.00	by twenty-seven feet, and being one thou-
Actual cost	- - -	$20,241,842.31	sand and twenty-eight feet from the bed of
Total length of tunnel	-	4¾ miles	the Tunnel to the summit of the mountain.
Width of tunnel	- - -	26 feet	It will thus be seen that ample provision

Bricks used in arching	-	20,000,000	has been made for complete ventilation,
Average thickness of arch	-	2 feet	and that with such agencies as these for

The arch of the Hoosac Tunnel is twenty-six feet wide, and from twenty-two to twenty-six feet high. At both the east and west entrances of the Tunnel are elegant granite facades, the superior workmanship of which attests the thorough and substantial character of the entire structure. Twenty-five hundred feet from the west end of the Tunnel is the west shaft, which must at all times be in a state of comparative cleanliness, and free from the many annoying characteristics common to other tunnels. The Tunnel is now lighted with 1,250 electric lights and is a beautiful sight looking from the last car while passing through.

NEEDLE MOUNTAINS—ANIMAS CANON.

Animas Canon has characteristics peculiarly its own. The railroad does not follow the bed of the stream, but clings to the cliffs midway of their height, and a glance from the car window gives one the impression of a view from a balloon. Be-toss a stone across and send it bounding down the side of the opposing rock wall until it falls into the waters of the river coursing through the abyss below. Emerging from this wonderful chasm, the bed of the gorge rises until the roadway is but a low, a thousand feet, are the waters of the river, in places white with foam, in quiet coves, green as ocean's depths. Above, five hundred feet, climb the combing cliffs, to which cling pines and hemlocks. The canon here is a mere fissure in the mountain's heart, so narrow that one can easily few feet above the stream. The close, confining and towering walls of rock are replaced by mountains of supreme height. The Needles, which are among the most peculiar and striking in the Rockies, thrust their sharp and splintered peaks into the regions of eternal frost.

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM."

"Get up there, Dandy," and with a few curses that would bring the flush of shame to the cheek of any man less depraved, Philip Griswold gave the poor beast, whose frame was covered with skin and hair only—for flesh had been a stranger to the beast for many a year,—a dozen lashes on the back and sides. He tried to get the old family horse into a trot; but New Years was the same as all other days to this jaded animal, who was even more humane than his drunken master.

And so the old one-horse sled and its occupant grated along, over the bare and icy ground, for a few moments, and then horse and sled plunged into some huge snow-drift, and weary was the New Year's ride of farmer Griswold, as he returned from the city, where he had been "to purchase something for dinner," as he stated when leaving home in the morning. But, as a matter of fact, the real purpose had been to fill himself up to the brim with "tanglefoot," which had been found not at the butchers, neither the grocers, but at a little house painted red, with a sign that was nailed across the sidewalk, and painted thereon, not by an artist, but by one whose views of artistic beauty depended on the size of the letter that every passer-by could read: "Last Chance," kept by Samuel Jenkins. And right well was it named, for it had been the "last chance" that many a poor fellow had had in this life, in the twenty-five years that Samuel Jenkins had doled out his poisonous fluid at ten cents a glass.

More than one poor individual had been rudely driven from his door in the "wee sma' " hours of morning, and before he could gain entrance to some other fireside, the blinding snow and piercing cold, coming in contact with the maddening, deadly poison, had finished the journey of life, and the next evening's paper had contained the customary news item: "One more unfortunate gone to his death." Did any of our readers ever find such an item in the papers, or is it the imagination of the writer? Would that this were the truth! that it were all imagination! How many, many homes would have been so much happier; how many less throbbings of hearts, and dreary abodes, where even death would seem a welcome guest, instead of the drunken father that entered the door.

Go back with us twenty years before the commencement of our story, and we will take you to the home of Philip Griswold. Not the same farmer Griswold of to-day; but the rich farmer that lived just outside the city limits—whose home was the envy of every one around, because the soil was rich, the pastures large and fair, the crops always the best in the neighborhood, the choicest grades of stock, so fat and sleek that they were the envy of every neighbor for miles around; whose horses were the pride of this prosperous young farmer, with every earthly comfort at his command and no mean account at one of the city banks, where he deposited the proceeds of a well spent life. Generous to all and a friend to the unfortunate, what else could come to make the days of Philip Griswold more prosperous and happy? But yes, there was something else. Inside the cozy farm house sits the noble woman, whom he had promised to love and protect. And gaily is she singing one of those pretty songs she had learned in her childhood days, when happiness seemed supreme, but even enhanced to-day by the love of a faithful, loving husband. Living on and alone together, gliding down the stream of life where the waters were placid and clear; and the sun's bright rays that shone so beautifully across the surface, with never a wave or a billow to mar the picture. This was the counterpart to the home of Philip Griswold at the present time. But "time works changes." Yes, this is too true. With the help of some other agent, that, for the present, has no bearing on our lives.

And thus they lived on in this quiet beautiful home for a number of years, and one New Year's morning there came to their fireside the prettiest present of their lives, a little wee bit of a girl baby. "Santa Claus" had been so busy when Christmas came, with his dolls and sleds and candies for every body's children that he had neglected these good people. But He who gives everything to those who are of His people, had not forgotten them when New Years came; and this little stranger was given a royal welcome. And like the oft told fable, they rejoiced at the happiness of the smallest of God's creatures.

"We ants never borrow, we ants never lend," and happy were they both in this new found treasure. And a few more years of happiness, and prosperity, and love go gliding by, and then a change. O, what a change. Would you like to read the story of the next few years? A history that drove away all the bloom of youth and joy of life; nothing on earth left. Fame and fortune, and pride, and home, all departed. Nothing on earth left but a few living coals of that love that never dies; a woman's only treasure.

But we will pass it all by, for the picture would be too natural, and the painting would have no cheering colors therein that would be anything but sad and unpleasant. So we will go back to the commencement of our story, as old Griswold was heaping malicious invectives upon poor old Dandy, as he waded through the snow and drifts, and pulled the sled along the bare and frozen road that New Year's morning.

Only one mile more to go. This is not far to drive, but O, how bitterly cold it is, and the storm is growing worse. The drifts are piling higher and higher and Dandy is growing weaker and weaker at every step. But the cruel lash has ceased its cutting and the horrid oaths have at last ceased flowing, for the driver has almost fallen asleep, and rolled off the seat to the bottom of the sled, and lays there unknown and unknowing, as if it were the sleep that knows no waking. But old Dandy, poor and feeble, bruised and lame was true to his trust, and a little later on this precious load of inanimate, (to-day) worthless humanity was conveyed to the rear door of what was once the comfortable home of him who lay in the bottom of the sled. Not a friend on earth but the poor heart-broken wife and loving daughter, just ten years old, who came out to bring in their "New Year's gift."

They carried him in and laid him down by the stove; warmed and nursed, and brought to life the remains of a once proud and happy husband and father. Not dead, O, no! but benumbed by the frost and cold of a terrible winter day, and only the wreck of God's humanity and wisdom. So the remainder of the day was spent by the wife and little daughter on her birthday, in bringing back to life that which, seemingly, was of little worth, even to them, not forgetting good, honest old Dandy, who was made as comfortable as possible in the remains of the once elegant apartments of the stable.

As the night shades gathered around this dreary, lonely habitation, a little reason came back to the mind of Philip Griswold, and with little to eat and that little coarse and simple, they sat down to the table to eat their "New Year's dinner." After they had finished he drew his rickety chair close to the dilapidated stove, and what passed through his mind during the next two hours was known only to God and himself.

Not a foot of land did he own. The little stock that was, the house and everything therein, but his wife and daughter, had passed out of his hands; he had taken the "last chance," and everything that he once had that made life pleasant and home a paradise—his once proud position in society, his good name, and lastly his manhood—had been made over to the owner who had kicked him out of his rum-hole that New Year's morning—"Samuel Jenkins."

For two long hours he sat and meditated, when finally the power of reason and judgment seemed once again to enter his mind, and the poor outcast in his own sight, burst out in bitter, scalding tears, that told, too plainly to be mistaken, the suffering that he endured.

But once again "a child shall lead them," and the little one that came as a New Year's present just ten years before, climbed up in his lap and putting her little arms around his neck, in a sweet and plaintive voice said: "Papa, will you promise me one thing for a New Year's present one year from to-day, if I will be your own, dear good girl; we are, O! how poor, but it will only cost a little trifle, and it will make me, O! so glad, and mamma, dearest mamma, will then be just as happy as she used to be?"

And she twined her little arms around his neck and imprinted one warm kiss, not upon the cheek that God had given him, but one the demon of darkness had disfigured. He gave the little girl the promise she had sought, that, ere another year rolled round he would be the same kind and loving father that he had once been. And to seal the promise, he gathered what once was a noble wife and mother, made sorrowful and wretched by his conduct, within his arms and gave her the same promise he had made to his little child.

Five years have passed since then. Once more the old year has gone out and the new is ringing in at the happy home of Philip Griswold. Samuel Jenkins is dead and the coroner's verdict was in the morning paper of the last day of the old year and read: "Died by his own hands." But the old house at Farmer Griswold's has been refurnished and repainted, the farm has once more put on its old accustomed dress of thrift and enterprise.

Some good friend had chanced to give help when it was needed, and he had purchased it of Mr. Jenkins to be paid back as Mr. Griswold could do so. It has all been paid. Even old Dandy is as sleek and fat as he was before the tempter had robbed his master and himself of all the good things of earth. Even Philip Griswold is a man once again.

There are many scars that once were burning deep into the heart of wife and daughter and himself, but to-night they are all healed over. The promise has been kept and never will be broken. God has been very kind.

And on this happy New Year's eve, with a few dear friends, they are gathered around the open grate in the cozy parlor, when Mary, now a young lady grown, brings in her New Year's gift, and going to her mother gives her one loving kiss and holds before her a beautiful portrait of a little girl that looked just as she did only a few years ago, and on one side the words so plainly written, "A little child shall lead them."

This, kind reader, is no fancy sketch, neither the rapid flight of one's vain and unhealthy imagination; on the other hand the circumstances as they are noted, are all the realities that we have seen. And it is possible that there is one who is living to-day, who will, after reading this story, live over again in memory, those childhood days that were to her, so unhappy, but brightened anew by the happiness that beamed on the young life, and was transferred in all its splendor and beauty to the father and mother; to the one who lived to atone for all the misery he had brought upon the innocent. To the other who had gathered in the blessing of a happy home and a husband's love, returning love as none save a noble woman can ever do. A home sanctified and made noble by the faithfulness and goodness of home's greatest treasure, a loving trusting, child. The world is full of just such histories. They are made up of pain, and want, and woe, crowded full of desolation and despair.

Some times the light never breaks and the storm never ceases. But once in a while a crown of glory beams resplendent on the overcast sky of vanished hopes and deadened impulses. As the conqueror of a blighted life appears in the love that is awakened through the medium of some one to whom is given the precious duty that no other can perform. And often in this life when it would appear that everything else had failed, when the pathway has grown full of weeds and thorns, and darkness covers the earth, seemingly forever, the kind Father above sends one little ministering angel the power that he possesses, and "A little child doth lead them." E. H. B.

A LOVE LETTER.

He hurried up to the office as soon as he entered the hotel, says the Detroit Free Press, and without waiting to register inquired eagerly:

"Any letter for me?"

The clerk sorted out a package with the negligent attention that comes of practice, then flipped one—a very small one—on the counter.

The traveling man took it with a curious smile that twisted his pleasant looking face into a mask of expectancy.

He smiled as he read it. Then, oblivious to other travelers who jostled him, he laid it gently against his lips and actually kissed it.

A loud guffaw startled him.

"Now, look here, old fellow," said a loud voice, "that won't do, you know. Too spoony for anything. Confess, now; your wife didn't write that letter."

"No, she didn't," said the traveling man, with an amazed look, as if he would like to change the subject. "That letter is from my best girl."

The admission was so unexpected that the trio of friends who had caught him said no more until they had eaten a good dinner and were seated together in a chum's room.

"It's no use; you've got to read it to us, Dick," said one of them; "we want to know all about your best girl."

"So you shall," said Dick with great coolness; "I will give you the letter and you can read it yourselves. There it is;" and he laid it on the table.

"I guess not," said one who had been the loudest to demand it. "We like to chaff a little, but we hope we are gentlemen. The young lady would hardly care to have the letter read by this crowd," and he looked reproachfully at his friend.

"But I insist upon it," was the answer. "There is nothing to be ashamed of—except the spelling: that's a little shaky, I'll admit; but she won't care in the least. Read it, Hardy, and judge for yourself."

Thus urged, Hardy took up the letter, shamefacedly enough, and read it. There were only a few words. First he laughed, then swallowed suspiciously, and as he finished it, threw it upon the table again, and rubbed the back of his hand across his eyes, as if troubled with dimness of vision.

"Pshaw!" he said, "if I had a love letter like that—" and then was silent.

"Fair play!" cried one of the others, with an uneasy laugh.

"I'll read it to you, boys," said their friend, seeing they had made no move to take it, "and I think you'll agree with me that it's a model love letter."

And this was what he read:

"Mi oween dear PaPa

I sa mi PRairs every nite and Wen I kis yure Pictshure I ASK god to bless you GOOD bi PaPa yure best gurl

DOLLY."

For a moment or two the company remained silent, while the little letter was passed from hand to hand, and you would have said that each and every one had had hay-fever, by the snuffing that was heard. Then Hardy jumped to his feet.

"Three cheers for Dolly, and three cheers for Dick's best girl!"

They were given with a will.

A MERCHANT'S STORY.

A TRUE STORY.

Happening a few days ago into the office of one of our leading merchants, I was kindly greeted and the gentlemen present continued their conversation; it was anent their flight of bank defaulters to Canada, and the probability of the extradition law being so settled as to cause the delivery of the delinquents to the United States. Many remarks were made on the subject, most of them condemnatory of the unfortunate exiles. The owner of the office did not say a word, he was seemingly an impassive listener. The conversation was about to take a turn when Mr. Chester (such I shall call the merchant) said, "I have heard with attention all you had to say about defaulters, did it ever occur to any of you to examine into the cause of the defalcations. I would be the last man in the world who would attempt to defend the wrongdoing of any man, if a man was led into breaking the trust reposed in him either to furnish himself with means to indulge in a life of sin or dissipation, or to gamble with on change in the vain hope of acquiring a speedy fortune; that man deserves to be held up to public odium, and to be punished to the full extent the law permits. But there are cases in which I think there are palliating circumstances, and which I deem should invoke commiseration. If you will listen to me I shall tell you a case at point.

Some years ago I knew a young man who occupied the position of cashier in a bank in England, he was married and had three young daughters, his wife was in consumption, and daily expected an increase to her family. I need not tell you that the pay of bank clerks in England is very small, all this man had to live on was about $750 a year. Paying doctors' bills and providing wine and delicacies for a delicate wife, left him at all times in a chronic state of impecuniosity. This was in the year 1854. Towards the end of the month of August the bank clerk found himself without a penny to purchase necessities for his house. He knew that in a few days pay-day would come round, he had plenty of money in his charge, he thought it would be no sin to borrow ten pounds from the bank for a few days. He took the money, and replaced the cart-ridge sovereigns he had taken with one of farthings.

He went home on his way, buying a chicken and some wine for his wife, the doctor had that morning said that it was absolutely necessary that she should have such nourishment. The next day he was at his place in the bank, when a messenger came in and told him that his wife was very sick, and that the doctor had sent for him. The manager of the bank, when told the circumstances, at once granted the clerk permission to go home. He ran through the streets and arriving at his home, ran up stairs two steps at a time, went into his wife's room—and there what a sight met his eyes—there lay the woman he loved with all his heart and soul, and by her side also dead, lay his babe that he had never seen. He threw himself on the dead body—he knew nothing more for six weeks, when consciousness again asserted itself his wife's grave was green, and he was a prisoner for defrauding the bank. The clerk who had replaced him had opened the deceptive cartridge coin, and informed the bank authorities of what he had discovered. The president of the bank and several of the trustees were old friends of the clerk's father, and through their influence the matter was hushed up, but his character in England was gone, he had to seek a new home in America. Do you think gentleman that man was guilty of a crime? Do you think he was a criminal to be ostracised by society? Do you think him a man unworthy to shake the hand of an honest man? If you do gentlemen you will never grasp my hand in friendship—for I am that man—Lapakia, in The Appeal.

Tubal Cain's Doll.

The finding of a pumice-stone doll in a bed of gravel 320 feet below the surface of the ground at Nampa, Idaho, on the Oregon Short Line railroad, has set the archæological experts of the country, and of the world, for that matter, all agog.

It appears that Mr. M. A. Kurtz, a citizen of Nampa, was engaged in boring an artesian well in that village. Nampa is located about twenty miles from Boise city, and is between the Boise and Snake rivers. The region thereabouts is covered by extensive lava deposits of the post-tertiary or quarternary date. The driller, on beginning the well, bored first through sixty feet of soil. Next he drilled through fifteen feet of lava rock. Below this he found one hundred feet of quicksand, then six inches of clay, then forty feet of quicksand, then six feet of clay, then thirty feet of quicksand, then twelve feet of clay, then clay balls mixed with sand and then coarse sand. While working through the coarse sand, the image was brought up by the sand pump.

Mr. Kurtz was standing by the well at the time. He was very much interested in the work, and when the valve of the pump was opened, held his hand where the contents would pour over it. As the water and sand poured out, something, which Mr. Kurtz supposed was a petrified twig, caught his fingers. He took it to a barrel and washed it, and found instead a well proportioned red doll.

In regard to the age of the stratum where it was found, Mr. S. F. Emmons, of the United States Geological Survey, expressed it as his opinion that the beds from which the image is supposed to have been derived are, probably, of far greater antiquity than any deposits in which human implements have heretofore been discovered.

Of the image as a work of art, Prof. Wright, of Oberlin, says:

"The high degree of art displayed in the image is noteworthy. It is not the work of a boy or of a novice. The proportions are perfect, and there is a pose of the body that is remarkable, and which differentiates it from anything that has been found among the relics of the mound-builders. Altogether it supports the hypothesis of Prof. Putman, advanced some years ago, that civilization advanced on the Pacific coast long in advance of that which has anywhere else been discovered. And it is by no means impossible that we have here some relic of those catastrophes by floods which are so universal in the traditions of all nations. It is by no means impossible that we have in this Nampa image one of the playthings of the near relatives of Tubal Cain, and see in it a veritable antediluvian relic."

Wherein He Failed.

"Elijah, dear, will you dress Willie this morning? I'm in such a hurry, and it won't take you but a minute or two."

"Certainly," replied Mr. Bixby, cheerfully. "I'd just as soon dress the little chap as not. Here, my little man, come and let papa dress you. I'll have you as neat as a pin in a jiffy."

Willie, aged 4, comes reluctantly from his playthings, and Bixby begins:

"Now, let's off with your mighty gown and—keep still, dear, or I can't unbutton it. There, now, we'll—sit still, child! What makes you squirm about like an eel? Where's your little shirt? Ah, here it is, and—sit still! Put up your arm—no, the other one, and—can't you keep still half a second? Put up your other arm and stop hauling and pulling so! Now, let's—come here, boy! What under heaven do you mean by racing off like that with nothing on but your shirt? Now you come here and let me put the rest of your duds on. Stand still, I say! Put your leg in here! Not that leg! There you go squirming around like an angleworm. Now, if you don't keep still, young man, I'll—stop pulling at that chin, and—here Mary Ellen, you'll have to dress this wriggling animal yourself. I couldn't do it in ten years. Go to your mother, sir!"—Time.

The Vice of the Age.

In some ways we may be wiser than our ancestors; but they had the better of us in one thing—they did not give way to hurry. An insane haste has broken out in every department of life. The sense of the shortness of life has come upon men suddenly; yet, instead of moderating their desires in accordance with the conditions of our ephemeral existence, they persist in striving to cram into our life far more than it will hold. Art, literature, architecture, are all being ruined by hurry. How many men who were meant to be great have become woeful daubers! The artist cannot be content with a house nowadays—only a palace will suffice him; and, to keep up his palace he must hurry. His name once made, he can be sure of receiving customers from one end of the civilized world to the other. He turns out ~~daub~~ after daub; his technique becomes abominable; his old skill vanishes; but his name remains—and the name enables him to keep up his palace. Literature fares no better. Some of the later efforts of writers who were once splendid craftsmen is mere journey work. We like swift work if the swiftness is employed in setting down ripe thought and wise observation; but there is now to be seen a sort of hurry which is not swift—it is the convulsive struggle of men who have lost their speed. There are writers and writers. If a merely pretty novelist can keep on producing innocent stories which delight innocent folk, we have no right to demand more; but we expect much from a great artist; and we do not often get it now after the artist has once been bitten with the taste of money. In architecture, we have only to look at the rows of gaudily decorated shells, designated as Queen Ann "residences" and "cottages," that may be seen in any suburban town, to realize to what a pass hurry is bringing us. If we could learn the value of wise deliberation, reserving outbursts of swiftness for extraordinary occasions, neither individuals nor communities need break down under a constant strain which is as foolish as it is unnecessary.

He Had Her There.

She was late in motioning to the conductor to stop the car, and was therefore carried half a square beyond the crossing.

"Sir, is this the way you attend to your business?" she demanded as she stood on the step.

"I stopped as soon as you motioned," he replied.

"But you were gazing along the street. You ought to be reported to the manager."

"Yes'm."

"But I will let you go this time."

"Yes'm."

"But let it be a warning to you in the future."

"Yes'm."

"You didn't seem to be much afraid of being reported," observed a passenger as the car moved on.

"Well, no," replied the conductor, as he softly chuckled down below his Adam's apple. "She's the manager's divorced wife. you know."

Dakota Railroads.

The report of the railroad commissioners for the fiscal year has been placed in the hands of the governor for transmission to the legislature. From it the following items of interest have been gleaned: The total number of miles of new road constructed in the territory is 205.81; the total mileage is 4,515.07, of which 2,006.09 miles is in North Dakota and 2,508.98 in South Dakota.

The annual increase has been as follows:

1885.....	1888.....	547.79
1886.....	230.86	1889.....
1887.....	777.54	205.81

This year's increase is thus made up:

Manitoba.....	155.83
Deadwood Central.....	3.33
South Sioux Falls Rapid Transit company.....	6.00
Watertown and Lake Kampesky....	5.65
Burlington and Missouri River company from Nebraska line.....	35.00

Total.....205.81

The export tonnage is as follows:

Grain.....	874,046
Flour.....	51,267
Provisions.....	16,362
Animals.....	141,976
Other agricultural products.....	92,256

Import tonnage:

Lumber.....	175,597
Coal.....	133,294
Plaster and lime.....	19,480
Salt.....	1,706

Total tons of all kinds carried in Dakota.....2,042,604

The legal expenses of the various roads in Dakota amounted to $331,090.25; printing and stationery, $587,043.96; the total expense of all the roads was $60,469,030.57; the total earnings of all the roads were $94,578,816.85; the whole dividends of and by all the roads after expenses were deducted, $5,994,696.50; the surplus on hand for the year was increased $1,095,064.68; the property account was increased $14,459,661.99; the total debt was increased in round numbers, $24,000,000; the total valuation of all the roads was increased $65,000,000.

In the equipment division the following facts are given:

Number of locomotives.....	2,844
Number of passenger cars.....	1,224
Number of freight cars.....	63,177
Number of cars of all kinds.....	65,219

Under the head of operating expenses the items of oil and waste amount to $459,191.17 alone.

As an illustration of the value of stock:

Stocks and bonded indebtedness of the Chicago, Burlington and Northern per mile.....	$ 2,254.38
Cost to build, per mile.....	2,370.47
Chicago and Northwestern, total stock and bonded indebtedness per mile.....	43,482.43
Cost.....	37,985.46
Total stock and bonded debt of all roads.....	37,828.86
Cost.....	35,921.80

Excess.....$ 1,907.06

The expenses of the board of commissioners, including printing and stationary, is $1,928.09. The report in all its features is methodical, accurate and succinctly arranged, and is a work that reflects credit upon the board and the secretary, Hon. J. L. Robinson.

Anybody or Nobody.

Some people have a very ungracious manner, even when they do not mean to be discourteous. They fail to realize that it is a duty to appear kind as well as to feel kind.

A certain young man whose only fault is a lack of courtesy in little things was greeted one day by a young lady of his acquaintance, as he was walking with a friend.

"I have just had a letter from Miss Carrie Dean, and she asked to be remembered to both of you.

"Miss Dean is very kind. Thank you for the message," said the second young man.

"I shouldn't remember her, if I should see her, but never mind," said the ungracious one. He had lifted his hat when he bowed, and seemed to have no idea that his reply was rude and cutting.

The young lady flushed with wounded feeling, but retorted with quick wit: "You wouldn't remember Carrie? Well, she remembers you. She remembers almost anybody," Edison's First Start.

Thomas Edison had been in several western telegraph offices, where he was looked upon as an expert, and was at last ordered to Boston to fill a vacancy. The weather was warm, and he donned linen clothes and a broad-brimmed hat. Before he reached Boston the weather turned cold and stormy, but just as he was, linen duster and all, he reported at the telegraph office.

He walked into the superintendent's room, and said:

"Here I am."

The superintendent looked the young fellow over with a critical eye, and asked:

"Who are you?"

"Tom Edison," was the reply.

"Who's Tom Edison?"

The young operator explained that he had been ordered to report for duty, and the superintendent told him to sit down in the operating room. His advent there created considerable amusement, and the operators geyed him not a little. Edison sat quietly, making no outward sign of disturbance. An hour or more passed, and then a New York sender, noted for his swiftness, signaled the office. There was no one to take his message, the operators all being otherwise engaged.

"Let the new fellow take him," said the superintendent.

Young Edison sat down at the instrument, and in four hours and a half wrote out messages in a clear, round hand, stuck a date and number on them, and threw them on the floor for the office boy to pick up. The time he took in numbering and dating were the only moments he was not writing out transmitted words.

Faster and faster ticked the instrument, and faster and faster moved Edison's fingers, till the rapidity with which the messages came tumbling out attracted the attention of other operators, who, when their work was done, gathered around to witness the spectacle. At the close of four hours and a half, and one of the New York business, there flashed from New York the salutation:

"Hello!"

"Hello yourself!" ticked back Edison.

"Who are you?" sounded the instrument.

"Tom Edison," was ticked back.

"Tom Edison, I'm glad to know you," came over the wires. "You are the only man that could ever take me at my fastest, and the first man that ever sat at the other end of my wire for over two hours and a half. I congratulate the office in getting you there."

The young man in the limp duster and slouch hat had won his first laurels in the Boston office. He was never geyed after the first day.

I.

Hist!

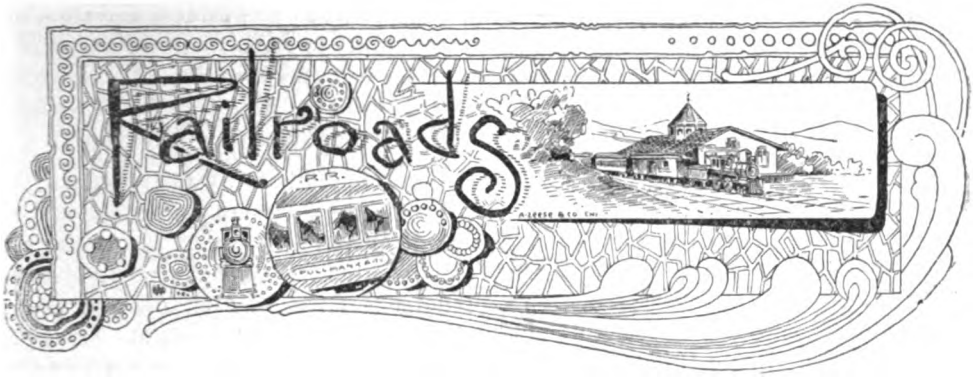

List to the knell
Of the deep-toned bell,
Tolling the death of a Year;
While memories dear
Come thronging near,
With faces sad, to its bier.

II.

Hist!

List to the song
Of the white-robed throng,
Hailing the birth of a Year;
While hopes are borne
On wings of the morn,
Filling our hearts with cheer.

—JOSEPH TRULL.

A conductor on the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis R'y, took up a ticket that was 34 years old, a few days ago.

Conductor Koeyer of the Missouri Pacific was badly cut with a knife in the hands of a drunken passenger who could not pay fare.

The Oregon Railway & Navigation company are arranging to build a branch from La Grande, Oregon, across the Ronde Valley to Elgin, (20 miles) if a free right-of-way can be secured.

2500 feet in length is the measurement of the projected tunnel on the Denver & Rio Grande R'y, called the Tennessee Tunnel, seven miles from Leadville, Colo. The contract says that the work must be completed within six months.

Mr. J. C. Stubbs is now 4th Vice-President of the Southern Pacific, and in charge of all the traffic affairs of that company. If one can arrive at this round of the ladder of such a corporation while he is only a "stub," what may he not become when he has reached the fullness of a perfect tree.

2735 cars have been equipped with the Thurmond car coupler since the first day of June, and this company has orders for three thousand additional; the results already shown and the prospects for the future seem to be very good.

Rumors are afloat that the Vanderbilts will soon secure control of the Fitchburg R'y, and operate it in connection with the N. Y. Central; also that they are looking after the interests, or, rather their interest, in the New York, Ontario & Western.

A magnificent banquet was tendered Mr. Jeffreys while visiting in London, England, recently, by prominent Chicago citizens who chanced to be sojourning there. It must have been very pleasant for this gentlemen to receive such an ovation in a foreign country, from those who were in perfect knowledge of his worth, both as a railway manager and a citizen of the city which will enjoy the beauties of the World's great exposition in 1892.

A number of the empyloes of the N. Y. P. & O. R'y, entered into a conspiracy to rob the cars as they were enroute to their destination. They were arrested and one of the party has confessed to the theft. Boys, don't do it; it never has paid any one and it never will. Your "Merrie Christmas" and "Happy New Year" will not be half as pleasant as they would have been could you all have spent them at home, with father and mother or wife or children. Don't do it.

We have been reading of the beauties that might arise in the future by a consolidation of all the railways in the country. The author has one peculiarity that, to say the least, is a great incentive toward porgnosticating or prophesying such an event; it consists in his great flight of imagination. If one-half that he imagines should come to pass there is no doubt that in the future he will deem himself a great man. The future will probably determine whether the arguments used are those of good sense and sound judgment based on business principles, or not. One thing is certain, however, that the writer points out in a clear and concise manner all the good things that might accrue from such a state of things, but forgets entirely the small matter of saying anything about any disadvantages that might arise if such a plan were ever carried into effect.

At the fifteenth annual meeting of the Passenger and Freight Conductors' Mutual Aid and Benefit Association, held at the Sherman house, Chicago, Nov. 29th and 30th, Mr. J. H. Snyder, of the Michigan Central R'y, president of the association, made a few remarks, being followed by Frank Champlin, who delivered the annual address. His remarks were listened to with pleasure, and his prepared history of the different strikes that occurred from 1881 to 1887, was an item of history that any laboring man can read with profit. $47,000 had been paid out during the year for benefits. The total membership at the present time, is 1,232. Total amount of premiums paid since organization, $492,339.50. J. E. Curran, of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, was elected president for the ensuing year.

The great theme among railway associations at the present writing seems to be competition. As it is an old saying that "competition is the life of trade," we may reasonably anticipate lively times during the next year. Each one seems to be very busy making arrangements with his neighbor, on the best terms possible, to enhance the interests of both. If some poor fellow should chance to be an "odd fellow" and get left in the deal after the shuffle is all over, he will feel very chilly and think a "Manitoba wave" has struck him. "First come, first served" seems to be the order of things at the present time. How much good it will do the public and the employee can better be told in the future. But there is one thing pretty certain; if the latter gain anything in the play, it must be by strict attention to business and from their own ability to work out the problem of receiving a proper reward for the services of a class who are necessary to the welfare of every standard railway in the world.

On Nov. 27th, Mr. Daniel McCool, Gen. Mgr. of the Southern California R'y, was tendered a reception by the employes of his road, and presented a costly diamond stud as a testimonial of their respect for him as a man and an official. It is good that the employes of any road can feel like this toward one in whose employ they have been, upon his leaving them for other fields of labor. We can sympathize with the gentleman as he wears this token of respect. We were once presented with a diamond by a friend—if our memory serves us right it was an Alaska diamond, cost probably fifty cents. But we were running a train those days, and by the advice of many good friends we were persuaded not to wear it for fear the company with which we were connected would imagine we did not come by it honestly. But this gentleman will have no fears as to this, and we trust that wherever he may go he may so deport himself that his conduct toward his employes may shine as brightly for their welfare and their prosperity as the glittering diamond that adorns his person.

We would sincerely like a job on the lines where the Pacific and United States express companies are doing business in the southwest. The safes are to be supplied with combination locks to which the route agent has no key and does not even have the combination, and when the safe is to be opened for the purpose of relieving it of any package or placing therein another, it will be done by the agents at the different stations who have both the combinations and the keys. Under these regulations a job on one of these trains would undoubtedly be a sure thing. For instance, if the train is stopped by a band of renegades that ask the express agent to give them the keys or die, all he will have to do is to die, for he will be politely informed that he is not any relation of George Washington if he informs them that he does not carry them, and all they will have to do is to hold a little wake over his inanimate form, after quietly knocking the breath out of him, and then proceed to blow up the safe with a sledge hammer. It would seem to be an inducement of the first water, to kill the poor fellow on sight. So, whoever feels prepared to die can surely find a position in that latitude.

We notice that the managers of the road which is being built from Cooperstown, Otsego county, N. Y., via. Davenport to Catskill, on the Hudson river, have abandoned the projected line via. Prattsville and Windham Centre, over the Catskill mountains, on account of the heavy grades. "Grades" is a good word to use in this case. We were permitted to draw the first breath of life in this "neck o' woods," and it's "up-hill business." We were permitted to ride in a lumber wagon over this projected route when very young. Grades! When you were at the bottom of the grade you couldn't see the top, and when you were at the top it was too far to see the bottom. Still, if a road could be built it would undoubtedly be a grand success, as nearly all the land is held very high; some of it nearly a mile. And besides this peculiarity the majority of it is tilled on both sides. Sometimes in planting seed it is a trifle inconvenient to find dirt enough to cover it, but you can nearly always find a good sized rock to roll on top and they make an excellent covering. Every country and every individual is more or less afflicted with many little things that make life uncomfortable. When Job—that patient man—was on earth, he was afflicted with boils; so this country is afflicted with a surplus of stones and rocks and grades three thousand feet in height. Yet, not all men that are born there are paupers. Jay Gould was a baby in this country, yet today he is in fair circumstances, and in commercial circles is graded pretty well up, although at one time he was nothing but a

Jay. It is said that the new road will run by the way of Jefferson, Dunham and Cairo. This is better, but still it will not be all prairie, even in that section.

We notice the advance in railway building in other countries, which must call into play in the near future the worth and energy of a large number of railway employes in every department of the service. In times past this branch of the business has principally been confined to a few of the old provinces, aside from the United States, but to day there are roads projected and under way in a number of countries, even some where you would least anticipate it. South America has awakened to a sense of the needs of the hour, and poor Africa, who has so long been looking on the dark side, has had an awakening, started under the untiring efforts of such daring travelers as Livingstone and Stanley, while the railway managers of this country seem to be unwilling to rest contented with their share of the business, but are quietly reaching out to every place where a foothold can be gained to enhance their best interests. Many a one has laughed at the Pan-American Congress, but the result may furnish a situation for many a worthy employe.

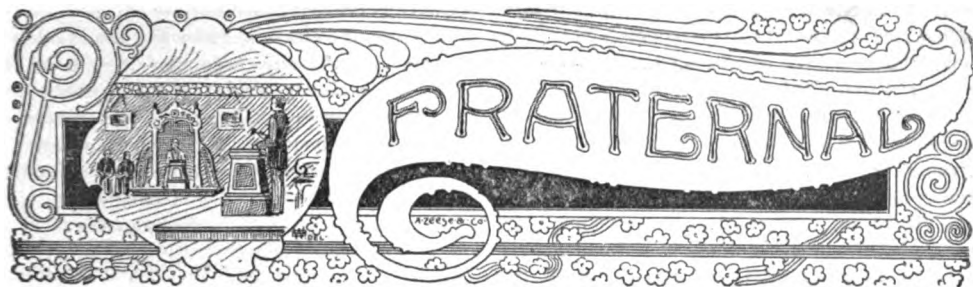

What a country! In the west, corn, oats and many other cereals are being piled up because the railway companies can not furnish cars to haul their products to market. Not but what every road is willing to assist in the work, but they are all short of cars and power to haul them, and on this account many a one will be obliged to wait for some time before their turn comes. But by and by there will come a time when every side track will be filled with empties instead of loads. The grain will not be all shipped out but the market will be knocked out, prices will be down and no one will want to ship until prices are better, and there will be few extras, only a few sections of each train, and times, in railroad parlance, will be very dull. So it is best, boys, "to make hay while the sun shines."

A rumor which appears at the present writing, to be based on very good authority, comes to us that Mr. C. P. Huntington of the Central Pacific, is the power behind the throne that is so earnest in building the "Short Line" into Sioux City, and that it in all probability, will be built into Ogden before the close of the coming year, and also, that in this event, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific will immediately perceive the necessity of their not being left out in the cold, and that preparations are already being made by that management to hasten this event. That it is not all talk seems to be very evident, and the business men and jobbers of Sioux City seem to be very jubilant over the prospects that are before them. There is also a Manitoba wave in the atmosphere that seems to be sweeping along the line traversed by the Missouri Pacific, as if they had their scouts out for the purpose of ascertaining whether they might not find it to their interest to protect themselves in that latitude. At all events it would seem that this little village that has more vim in the composition of its inhabitants, and more corn to put into its palace than any other place heard from, was, or is destined to become the base of certain railway extensions, like Council Bluffs and Kansas City, which in the future may be of great benefit to that enterprising borough. The railway magnates and officials do not usually pick out a dead place from which they extend their facilities, for their own benefit. And they are not very much given to building into or out of any location for the simple purpose of helping the citizens thereof, unless they are to be benefited to some extent. They generally put lots of faith in a live community and very little in a dead one. Their perceptibility in picking out the right places for a base of action to assist themselves, is quite marked; it is never below par, and every reader will find it marked "A, No. 1," every time they tackle it to be downward. At all events, many a "smart Aleck" who thought differently, has been "downed," and it took him quite a lengthy period to get on his feet again, financially. And amidst all the rumors that are floating around this city, if a portion of them only prove to become certainties, it will be a great thing for a young and growing town. And it may be the right thing to do, for some of the members of the Order of Railway Conductors who have a few pennies laid by that is bringing them but little return, and have not subscribed anything to the "building project," to keep an eye open to the probabilities which are in sight for the proposed home of the Order. Our feeble advice to you in the matter of registering you name for stock would, of course, avail but little, and it is possible we have no right to offer it, but as a dispenser of information which we honestly believe to be true, we claim the right to place a few facts before you in as truthful a manner as possible.

ELKHART, Ind., Nov. 30th, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR:—In the November 15th issue of the CONDUCTOR, I notice an article from the pen of Brother Daniels calling the attention of the members of the Order to the advisability of so amending the law as to admit of holding biennial sessions of the Grand Division, he sets forth many good reasons why it should be brought about, and I presume the principal reason of all which he had in view, was the almost ruinous cost of holding a session of the Grand Division, and of the benefit which the $30,000 or $35,000 so expended every year, might be to local divisions if it could be retained in their treasuries. The worst feature of the case is, that the evil is growing and will continue to grow greater instead of less in the future, without bringing any increase in benefits.

Brother Daniels cites one objection which it seems to me might grow to be a grave one in biennial sessions, and it is this: The possibility of sometime finding our Grand Offices filled in one year or term, with inexperienced men. It seems to me this objection is great enough to cause us to cast about for some other solution of the difficulty.

Now, why would it not be possible for the members to be satisfactorily represented in a session of the Grand Division held every year, if we could arrange to be represented by districts instead of divisions, something after the manner in which citizens are represented by their congressional delegates.

We will suppose that the Grand Chief Conductor should be instructed to lay out our entire jurisdiction in districts which should contain in each case not more than 500 members, and should at the same time decide upon and designate a point in each district where such delegates, elected at the annual election of officers, should meet in March or April of each year and elect and instruct our delegates to the Grand Division from said district. It does not appear as though this should require more than one days time, after which our "subs" could go about their business, and the unfortunate object who had been elected as a delegate to the Grand Division should proceed at the appointed time to represent his 500 constituents just as honestly, and certainly as ably, as it could be possible to do, for we have probably the most able men in the entire five hundred to vote and act for us, and we find we have reduced the number of delegates down to about thirty instead of two hundred and fifty, and with a proportionate decrease in the expenses of conducting a session of the Grand Division, while I believe that the aforesaid thirty representatives would transact more business and do it better in one week than three hundred in three weeks.

I should like to hear the objections to this plan, and I presume I shall be gratified, but I would like to suggest one more point in this connection, and it is this. Please advance something else in its stead if you don't like this, and if your idea is best we will try it.

I am in P. F., H. W. G.

CHILLICOTHE, Ills., Dec. 7, '89.

EDITOR THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: I have read with some interest your article in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR OF DEC. 1, on the subject of "Federation," by "Old Time Tough." It is well known that the sentiment of the Grand Division at Denver was almost unanimously opposed to Federation, and that the subject was not permitted to be discussed there. At the same time it is equally well known that there is, throughout the Order, a feeling that something more definite and positive should be done by our organization, with a view to acquiring for us a more pronounced and tangible recognition. There is a feeling that we are in an attitude of humiliation. It is believed that if we would have equity we must come with something more than clean hands and ask for it. There is a growing desire to assume a more aggressive attitude. Those who hold to these views are casting about for some means of maintaining and supporting such an attitude. Now, it having been demonstrated that our most powerful labor organizations are unable, when stubbornly coped with, to dictate even arbitration of their claims. What more natural than that alliances should be sought among those who have a common cause to urge, to what may be termed a common source.

These are the views, the sentiments and the necessities, which have evolved the scheme of Federation. And, when viewed from a theoretical standpoint, what a magnificent scheme it seems to be. Its theme looks worthy the best efforts of a patriots life, and makes ones blood tingle when regarding its possibilities. Is it any wonder that perhaps the majority of all railway labor organizations are carried away with it? This brings us to the question: Is the solution to the problem of how shall we protect, to be found in Federation? I am one of those who say most emphatically No! And the highest compliment that can be paid to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is to say, that its delegates in convention assembled rejected it.

Laying aside all questions of moral duties as distinguished from legal rights, Old Time Tough strikes at least one of the key notes when he claims that Federation is impracticable as a means of accomplishing its proposed object.

You may erect the engine and when you view its ponderous proportions it may give promise of being able to so awe those with whom we would make terms as to cause a speedy acquiescence to all reasonable demands, as the price of its inactivity; but attempt to bring its parts together in operation for the accomplishment of some end peculiar to only one of its components and after a second or third trial you will find that there is something lacking—there is a want of mutual support—a lack of control, which can eventuate in nothing but dissolution, to be followed by the most disastrous inharmony among those who did most toward its success. But shall we forbid discussion of the subject? By no means. Let this most important matter be fully considered in the hope that all may be dissuaded from further desire to pursue this ignis-fatuas.

Then we can turn to other and better means of accomplishing our object. I may be asked what means I have to propose. If so I can only say now, that it is time that we should at least learn fully the weight of our consequence in the labor world. We should know whether the attitude we have assumed and maintained is of any concern or value to our employes and if so is it of sufficient value to render them willing to accord us, in consideration therefor, what we have always expected namely, a fair adjustment of such inequalities as may be made clearly apparent to the mind of any fair and impartial hearer. I am not now claiming that there are any glaring inequalities which we have heretofore failed to have adjusted, nor do I assert that conductors are by any means a down-trodden class. I only urge that it is time the Order had a clearly defined standing and a formal and positive recognition. The means of bringing this about are open for discussion. I will leave the subject for a future communication.

Yours,

NORMAN WATKINS.

ELKHART, Ind., Thanksgiving Day, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: Upon this day of all others it would appear to be not only profitable but pleasant to turn our thoughts for a few moments entirely away from the roast turkey, or fried liver, whichever it may be that circumstances have set before us, and ask ourselves what particular reason we have to celebrate this particular Thanksgiving, and what we see in our past record, our present condition, or future prospects, to be especially thankful for.

In connection with this matter, it is only fair that we take cognizance of our condition as individual conductors and members of the Order of Railway Conductors, in the past, present and future.

Our thoughts are very often turned toward the past, and sometimes very abruptly, too, by having the question asked, "Of what particular use are we, or have we been, either as an order or as individuals, so far?" Or again, "What do you ever expect to accomplish, either alone or with the aid of your association, while you are bound by the very peculiar platform upon which you are founded?" These questions are indeed serious ones, and deserve more liberal and comprehensive treatment than my ability can give them and involve principles which attract the attention of our most able thinkers and writers upon questions of social and political economy. Still, the first question is one upon which every one of us should have an opinion, though it should be never so meagre, and I believe the reply, if honestly and candidly given, would furnish us with one excellent reason why each returning Thanksgiving should be met with a greater degree of satisfaction than the one before. And this is the answer which I believe should come from every careful observer of the social condition of the railway conductor in the past and present. We have accomplished more toward a thorough social and moral reformation of the average conductors during the past ten years than had been accomplished in the entire forty or fifty years of railway history prior to our organization. That this is a fact which does not depend for confirmation upon the biased opinion of any member of the Order, I believe will go without denial.

That this is a fact and has been commented upon by others than members of the Order, was brought to my attention some time ago when in conversation with an official, who now holds a prominent position in railway circles, the remark was made, "I am satisfied that no man can become a thorough and consistent member of the Order of Railway Conductors and listen to and follow its teachings without becoming a better man at home and upon his train, and I have noticed that the best members of the Order were among my best conductors."

It seems to me that when we adopted a platform which was in direct contradiction to the one adopted by Cain, and declared that we "were our brother's keeper," we had made a long stride toward the moral and social reformation of our brother conductor and ourselves, and I call upon every reader of THE CONDUCTOR to bear witness to the fact that "the end has justified the means," and that to-day the Order of Railway Conductors can point to a work of morality and social elevation second to none in the history of the railway service, and is there one of us who dares to try and tell of the untold blessings which have been bestowed by the payment of over half a million of dollars in our Insurance Department? But I think I hear some brother say, "That does not enter into the subject under discussion at all," and I agree with him.

Now, then, if we have made it appear that we have really performed any good work, even in a general way, since our organization which had remained undone before, let us give it a logical solution and permit the organization to receive the benefit of the doubt, and say that we have arrived at this Thanksgiving with a good work well begun and already showing its fruits in the decrease of the many vices which beset the conductor of years ago.

The answering of the question in regard to our past goes very far toward giving a solution of the problem of our future, and I know, Mr. Editor, that the thatch which covers your poll has grown too thin and white for you to ask whether the same ratio of improvement can be reasonably expected until such a time as shall find us all standing in the glaring light of perfection in morality and social perfection. Ah, no! that problem has proved too great for all men and in all classes of life and advancement, and if the work for ourselves and our brothers is well and promptly done when it appears at our hand, our mission in life will be sufficiently arduous and reward fairly earned.

There still remains a second question to be decided among us, in which our peculiar principles as an order should be fully and fairly discussed, but such a discussion can be read in the written and unwritten history of the Order from its inception up to to-day, and we still stand alone as an Order every member of which can say, "I am my own monarch and shall vend my own labor." Surely such an organization should commend itself to the attention of every conductor whose stock in trade is the work of his hands and head. Whether our individual labors as members of an association have been productive of any degree of benefit or not does not enter into the discussion as regards the Order, for the history of all organizations proves that their rise or fall is due not to the organization, as a body, but to the untiring work or apathy of its members, and there let the credit or blame rest, as it belongs.

And here, brothers, let me say that when you turn your attention to new idols, if you do, that if you are no more benefit to the new than you have probably been to the old, neither yourself nor your object of worship will be particularly benefitted, and you will find yourselves again looking for some influence or power, which must not be less than infinite, to raise you to that degree of influence to which you believe yourselves to be entitled when you simply say, "I am a member of your association."

There is room for thought in our past and future, but how much more room for work in our present.

Hoping these thoughts may call forth others of greater importance and clothed in better fitting garments, I am

Yours in P. F.,

*

SAVANNA, Illinois, Dec. 9, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: A very profitable though not very largely attended meeting of Robinson Division No. 78, was held yesterday, at which we had the pleasure of meeting with Brother Wm. P. Daniels, G. S. and T. The regular routine business having been disposed of in the forenoon, the afternoon session was devoted to the election of officers, and resulted in the following selections being made: C. C., Geo. W. Ashford, third term; A. C. C., A. E. Hodges; S. and T., Frank B. Cornelius; S. C., Wm. H. Lally; I. S., John Joyce; O. S., John H. Coy; Div. Com., three years, A. E. Hodges; Div. Com., one year, E. B. Feathergill; Delegate, Geo. W. Ashford; Alternate, E. B. Feathergill.

The officers elected were duly installed by Brother Wm. P. Daniels, G. S. and T., after which we were favored by a nice talk by Brother Daniels, who touched upon many of the prominent features of vital interest to our Order. We then indulged in the new work until we closed, just in time to allow some of the brothers from a distance to catch the west-bound limited. Every one left the hall fully impressed that, to one and all of us, it had been both a pleasant and profitable meeting, for which Brother Daniels has our sincere thanks.

Yours Fraternally in P. F., G. W. A.

[With pleasure we give space to the following clipping from the Star of the West, Cad Allard editor, Beardstown, Ills.—ED.]

O. R. C. BALL.

Once more we have the pleasure of noticing the entertainment presented to our people and their many friends adjoining this Mecca of pleasure by the above named exquisite and gentlemanly organization, known in our city as a band of brothers, fraternally obligated to sincerity, truth, fellow feeling and an avowal of a few hours to trip the light fantastic to the enchanting strains of one of the best orchestras that ever visited Beardstown. One thousand invitations were distributed welcoming the fair ladies and their escorts to join in and make this, the third annual, the grandest and gayest of them all. Five hundred of the chosen recognized the "bid" and gave to the conductors a recognition based upon true worth and fresh memories of the times long gone by, but ever to be remembered. Not only did the management do their work well, but the ruler of the elements brushed away all appearance of fog and let the stars shine brighter and purer than on any previous occasion of the kind. Everybody was dizzy with delight, and wore a smile which seemed to say, "Arn't we glad we came?"

"Who was there from abroad?" Well, there was the cream of Rock Island society; the old reliable C. B. & Q. delivered a coach load of gaity seekers and elegant dancers; Monmouth, Bushnell, Vermont, Astoria, Virginia, Ashland, Roodhouse, and last but not least, Table Grove came in on time with 32 couple. All formed in line for the grand march, which was headed by Mr. Mylo Lee and bride of but a few weeks, and went through the preparatory step and landing upon the threshold of an evening of mirth, music and selected enjoyment. Precisely at 9 p. m. the train started—Instead of the old fashioned call for "Tickets please," the order was, "Salute partners," "All join hands" in the poetry of motion—not so much poetry but lots of motion—and, true enough, motion prevailed until 11:30 p. m., when the message arrived from mine host of the Park House, H. H. Cole, announcing that two sections of No. 3 should "run wild" against "Dunn" and meet in the dining room of his tavern. No sooner had the order been given than all were ready to do justice to the spread—and such a spread as it was! The kings of old never sat down to a finer one. Smacking their lips with hearty congratulations as they departed from the inn of thanksgiving and comfort to the inner man, and made room on the side track for other watering mouths who anxiously waited the sound of the supper horn. Parker, Golden and Terry with their "Horn" (Frank), appeared cool, calm and collected during the whole "strike" for supper. In fact, nothing occurred to worry the minds or mar the pleasure of these gentlemanly managers—save the "Fat mans 4," who wanted the floor, and were shown the door, and said no more but danced "al-le samee," in every quadrille with the best looking ladies on board. After supper the order was to clear the track and let all the sections fan the gentle breeze until 4:50 p. m. Well, all had through tickets and the prompter announced the new dance: "Conductor's Rest." Horn and Pals laid the levers on the steam chest, tied the throttle in the back part of the tender and, according to the time card, landed every soul safe and sound in the arms of morpheus, to dream of more happy days to come.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 12, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: On Sunday, Dec. 8th, West Philadelphia Division No. 162 held its annual election of officers. The P. W. & B. are again "in the soup," to use a common phrase they were "snowed under" for offices, but we trust they are democratic and will try again. Brother T. J. M. is raising whiskers, but failed to raise the necessary number of votes to send him to the Grand Division. Brother G. B. should have kept out of the race, which would have avoided the necessity of two brothers filling the C. C.'s chair. (Which brother will claim the honors of Past Chief at the expiration of the term?)

Brother H. need not offer up his little prayer, viz., "the good Lord deliver me from my friends." (You are saved.)

We are pleased to note that our worthy Brother Secretary A. H. McC. has been selected to represent us in the Grand Division; but, Brother, be modest in your remarks, or the Grand C. C. will "set on you."

We think the brother who made the motion to increase salaries was not familiar with the Division's treasury.

Brother J. C. T., it is customary for the chair to recognize all nominations made before declaring nominations closed.

Listener is onto the nine brothers, who sat in the Division to the right of the rostrum; whispering is prohibited in select company.

M. V. should learn the brother's front name before nominating him. Brother H. is after you.

We saw Brother J. T. M. electioneering in the ante-room, where he caught the brothers as they passed in, which was no doubt brotherly, but it was not brotherly to nominate a Past Chief for the outer door.

The brothers objected to meeting at No. 1920 Wharton street. They preferred a railroad station.

The brothers' liberal donation to the building fund has put our annual tea party in the mud, unless we draw an order on Brother A. H. McC.'s pet.

We were pleased to note Division No. 204's number in the ante-room, which will in future meet in the same hall on alternate Sundays from No. 162.

We learn Brother W. Gibson has taken a vacation and left the city for the wilds of Virginia for the purpose of shooting bears. We are also advised that Brother Scheltz has cleaned his gun and left for the wilderness of Maryland to trap grouse. Brother Gillen was seen purchasing salt and enquiring of Brother Leonard the cost of second-hand vinegar barrels. He will no doubt use the same for packing bears and grouse for winter use.

We wish to advise the brothers that Brother W. H. B. is not the Listener, and should not be held responsible.

The writer's name was given to him in confidence, which is the corner-stone of our Order.

As Brother W. J. M. has been appointed by the Division as correspondent, Listener will cease with this number of THE CONDUCTOR, at least for the present, but will in the meantime scan each number for a letter from the Brother; if not forthcoming, you will again hear from the Listener.

LISTENER.

PINE BLUFF, ARK., NOV. 26, 1889.

To Editor of the Conductor.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:—In fulfillment of my promise to Bro. E. E. Clark, whom we had the pleasure of having with us on Sunday, November 24, at our organization, he being the Grand Officer who organized this new Division No. 251. But, before going any farther I want it understood that you are not to print any of my acrobatic spelling, with this understanding I will try and give you a brief account of our organization. Bro. Clark opened a special meeting of the Grand division where the name of Cotton Belt was chosen as the name of our Division. We then elected the following officers: Bro. O. J. Kingsbury, C. C.; Lawrance Cody, A. C. C.; D. Savary, S. C.; A. J. Englehart, J. C.; Hon. W. C. Huguen, I. S.; C. L. Chestnutt, O. S., and your humble servant as Secretary and Treasurer. After the installation of the officers we initiated four candidates, but owing to the very poor service of the express company our paraphernalia did not arrive until today, which was a great disappointment as some of our brothers were very desirous of performing on Daddy Neimyor, who was one of the novices. He is G. Y. M. at Pine Bluff and is over 50 years old and a great friend of all the boys. Our other candidates were Conductor's Chestnutt, Clark and Harris. We also elected as the executive committee Bro. O. T. Cook for 3 years; J. L. Le-Bosquet, 2 years and G. L. Clement for 1 year. After we adjourned several of us invited Bro. Clark to a little spread at the Lindell Hotel, after which we showed Bro. Clark some of the principal places of interest of our town, but owing to the lateness of the hour they did not appear at their best; however I think Bro. Clark will bear me out in the assertion that they are all right when seen under the proper light. Since our organization we are beset with applications, some good, some bad and some indifferent, but we will be very careful and not let our greed for a large membership and a fat treasury get us into the common error of the majority of new Divisions, that of letting in bad material, for while I am sure we have some of the best fellows on earth in this water bound country, still we have some that might prefer to cast their lot with some organizations which believe different from what we do. I nearly forgot to mention that after our banquet Bro. Kingsbury presented Bro. Clark with a very nice gold headed silk umbrella, which, owing to the inclemency of the weather and the hearty manner of the presentation Bro. Clark very much appreciated. Now with hearty good wishes to Bro. Clark and all the Grand Officers and a lot of satisfaction to ourselves that we are now organized and in position to be recognized by our brothers all over the world, I will close,

Yours in P. F.,

W. C. HAZLETINE, S. & T.

AURORA, Ill., Dec. 2, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: As I have been appointed correspondent to THE CONDUCTOR by our Division, I presume I will have to write or die in the attempt, and I will take for my first subject something easy. I could write a glowing account, taken from the newspapers, of the great and booming city of Aurora, where city lots three miles from the postoffice double in price while you sleep, or an equally glowing description of the beautiful Fox river, "from the history of Illinois," but I won't do it, as without doubt it would stop the sale of newspapers and lay the history of Illinois on the shelf, so I will simply say that at a regular meeting of Belknap Division No. 96, Sunday, Dec. 1, 1889, the following officers were elected for the year 1890, and installed by our P. C. C., Brother Frank H. Reese: C. C., Tom Flynn; A. C. C., C. D. Judd; S. and T., W. E. Lindsay; S. C., J. F. Trahy; J. C., T. J. Murphy; I. S., D. A. Wedge; G. S., E. A. Nall; Delegate to 22d G. D., C. D. Judd; Member of Division Committee, three years, Ed. Poole.

Of our newly elected officers I cannot speak too highly. Brother Flynn, our C. C., succeeds himself, while Brother Judd, our A. C. C., is a veteran in his position, this being the third year he has filled the A. C. C. chair. While this will be his first appearance in the G. D. as a delegate, many brothers will recollect his smiling countenance and winning ways at Toronto and Denver. I am paid ten cents a word for all the good I say of Brother Judd. Brother Lindsay, our S. and T., also succeeds himself. Brother Trahy, our S. C., was promoted from J. C. of last year.

Brother Murphy, our J. C., makes his first appearance as an officer, and I am sure he will make a successful one. I. S. Brother Wedge and his able colleague, O. S. Brother Nall, are serving their second term in their positions. Brother Ed. Poole, three year member of our Division Committee, is one to whom all members of our Division look up to in matters where good sense and sound judgment are required, and he is the right man in the right place.

Of our officers I give this short description, and I would like, did space and time permit, to give as full mention of each member of our Division, but will say that sixty-four better members do not exist in any Division.

I accepted the position of correspondent because I was a defeated candidate for every office in the gift of the Division, and our good C. C., knowing how anxious I was to hold office, out of his great goodness of heart, took pity and appointed me to this one, with strict orders to write something, assuring me if I did not comply he would fill the position himself, hence this effort on my part. If it appears in THE CONDUCTOR all right; if not ———, and I will know that for once true merit and worth were not appreciated.

No. 96.

MR. EDITOR:—Having received two letters one day, lately, each of which refers to the statement of expenses of the Benefit Department that was sent to members in November, I was somewhat struck by the approval of the one and the condemnation of the other, and the language used in each. I accordingly wrote to each of the writers asking permission to print their letters in the CONDUCTOR and thus give their views to all members, and not confine them to myself only. Having received that permission from one of the writers, I send you herewith the letters, but do not give the name of the brother who has not yet replied to my request.

I do not care to comment upon either, but will only say that if the writer of the first letter will cite one case where there has been unnecessary delay or trouble in the settlement of any claim whether for death or disability, I will prove beyond question that the delay has not been caused by officers of the Benefit Department. If he knows of any such insurance companies as he describes in his letter, he should by all means let the rest of us know about them so that we can all have the benefit of them, and if the companies will advertise in THE CONDUCTOR and perform what is promised for them by the writer of this letter, I will guarantee them an enormous business. They should not "hide their light under a bushel," that is if I have succeeded in correctly figuring out the brother's meaning. His figures are somewhat confusing and I may not understand them exactly. If members of the Order can get more benefits for a great deal less money than the Benefit Department provides for them, we had better all drop out and give our entire patronage to these others. I should be very sorry to see the Benefit Department of the Order discontinued, but I do not believe in sustaining it for glory alone, and if it is to cost us twice what it is worth to us, let us discontinue it as quickly as possible.

The secretary of a Division writes to this office complaining of delay in the action of the insurance committee on a certain disability case. What the cause of the delay in their hands was I do not know, but if the claim is allowed and paid, it will be a simple gift to the brother, as in this, and in several cases that have been paid, the members had forfeited all right to any claim against, or benefit from the Department, and they have been paid through the charity of the Grand Division. Would any other insurance do anything of this kind? It is sometimes well to think of these things when you feel impelled to criticise your own insurance.

The same secretary says that members of his Division think that $9,863.00 is too much salaries to pay for one year for the department, and he is entirely correct—it is too much, altogether too much, and it has never yet been paid. An examination of the statement will show that he has mistaken a six for a nine, and that the amount paid for salaries is $6,863.06 for nearly two years instead of over $9,000 for one year.

Yours very truly in P. F.,

WM. P. DANIELS, Secretary.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Nov. 11th '89.

Mr. Wm. P. Daniels, Grand Secretary and Treasurer, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:—Your complete statement relative to the expenses of the insurance department accompanying notice of assessments No.'s 171, 172, 173 and 174 received, and I assure you it meets with my most hearty approval. In the past six years I have carried policies in five societies and insurance companies and find by experience that the insurance connected with the Order of Railway Conductors is superior in every respect to any of them, and taking into consideration my classification by all insurance companies, (Freight service conductor.) I find it the cheapest insurance, and offering the greatest inducements of any that I have learned of, most especially accidents or injuries resulting in total disability, while some companies pay one half the original amount, others pay little or nothing when so disabled, while, in my estimation, then is the time when assistance is most needed to keep an unfortunate brother from a realization of the cold charities of this world. It is a strange fact that so worthy an insurance is within the reach of nearly every conductor, yet less than one half of the members of the order avail themselves of the protection afforded them and their families, while others who have carried theirs a number of years cease to meet their assessments promptly and soon lose all interest in the matter and are suspended, (Elmira Division No. 9 not excluded.) next we hear that misfortune or accident has befallen a brother, then we learn with regret that he is suffering and his family are in need and no provision made to meet the future necessities. Some conductors say they cannot afford to meet the assessments, yet I contend these very ones cannot afford to miss a single one. Hoping that I may be able to assist in procuring at least one member before the year closes and wishing yourself and all officers and members of the Order every success, I close. Yours truly in P. F.,

WM. BENNETT.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 5, 1889.

Editor Conductor:

DEAR SIR: In reading an item in THE CONDUCTOR of November 15th, signed F. P. Silvernail, I am sure what he says is right in regard to this matter of insurance. A man may feel ever so charitably inclined as he is called upon to help a widow and orphans of some "dead brother workman," but as he puts his hand down in his pocket to give a dollar toward their relief, he cannot help but feel as though it is an injustice to be allowed to do so. Inasmuch as the chance is open for all to make a provision for their family in case of death, and the man who does so (and then is called upon to give more toward the relief of wife and children of some man who neglected to do so) is the one who suffers as he is paying for his own insurance and also for the neglect of another man. But, on the other hand, if no assistance is given these poor widows and orphans, who are the sufferers? The wife and children must pay for a poor husband's neglect of their future wants, and it would not be right, strictly speaking, to deny them any assistance; and of course these men who are unable to pass an examination are worthy of help, and I would be one of the first to contribute toward so worthy a cause. Still I am in favor of every man who can, carrying a policy, and, although I know nothing of what is talked of in your meetings, still I think that is the place to get hold of these negligent creatures and induce them to join your insurance. I know several men who become wrathful on the subject if approached by their wives, and the poor wife feels as though one attempt to induce her "liege lord" to provide for a future for her without him is enough, and sooner than call forth such remarks as, "Oh, yes, you want me to be insured and then hurry up and die," or, "Yes, you want a good time when I am gone," etc. A woman would forever after leave the question of life insurance alone between her husband and herself. But when a fond mother looks around her and sees bright little faces growing up and little minds to be educated and bodies to clothe and feed, and such a possibility stares her in the face as being left without means to do this, it is enough to drive a woman to some such under-hand business as this, and I hope when the cap fits a man as he reads this, he will be sure to put it on. Now I hope that I have not said too much, as this is my first attempt in writing for THE CONDUCTOR, and I will sign myself

"SUSIE."

CHARLESTON, S. C., Dec. 8th 1889.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR—I have never written an article for publication and if you have no room for this I will not feel disappointed if consigned to the waste basket, where perhaps it rightly belongs. In reading your issue of Nov. 15 I was very much pleased with Bro. Silvernail's article, and I am very much like him, a "crank" on insurance. As we do not know today what "tomorrow will bring forth," it is always best to be prepared, and everything that Bro. Silvernail says must strike home. And the resolutions passed by Denver Division No. 44, has such a good clear ring of justice to our families. And while I have the matter of insurance on the brain and continually advising all to insure while the opportunity offers, I most respectfully and earnestly ask if you do not think it would be better for all if the whole system of insurance was changed so as to let all have a chance. Would it not be best to have it so that a brother could take either one, two, three, four or five thousand dollars, according to his ability. There is many a poor conductor who would like to carry one thousand that cannot carry twenty-five hundred, and a great many that are now insured would carry three thousand, for I believe if this plan was adopted the three thousand policy would not, on account of increased insurance, cost any more than the twenty-five hundred, and again I believe that at least (90) ninety per cent of the members of the order would carry some insurance, thereby increasing their interest in the Order, and would be the means of breaking up these frequent appeals from Divisions for aid, and the assessments sent to Division Secretary and treasurer would certainly work more satisfactory. I believe that these suggestions will meet the approval of all the uninsured, and would like Mr. Editor to hear this discussed, as no doubt the matter will be brought up at the next meeting of the Grand Division. Yours truly in P. F.,

S. C. GILBERT,
208 Charleston street.

RENFREW, Ont., Nov. 19:h, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR:—Almost every issue of THE CONDUCTOR contains an article of some kind on insurance. Each contributor on this question invariably brings to task the brothers of our Order who are not members of the insurance department, lecturing them on the duty they owe to those who are near and dear to them. This may be a very commendable course to pursue, but I have not yet seen anybody grapple with this question in a practical manner and endeavor to account for the gradual falling off in the membership in this department. Can it really be possible that this lack of interest is solely attributable to the apathy of the members of the Order, or is there something in the conditions of the laws of the department that fails to attract the confidence of the brothers.

These are questions that we should endeavor to solve, and if the cause of this want of interest be located, set ourselves to work to apply the remedy that will not fail in making our system of insurance so inviting that our brothers will not need to be reminded so often of their duty. The disability clause of our insurance laws is the point on which hinges the main objection of many of our Order. When this clause was drafted it seemed to be the intention that the conductor should be provided for when his usefulness, as a railroad conductor, was gone. This was managed very effectually, should the member become disabled by accident; but if disabled through sickness it is necessary to get the requisite number of medical men to make affidavit that he is "totally disabled from performing any labor whereby he can maintain himself and family."

Why attach this provision to the disability through sickness and not likewise to disability through accident? This is usually the first question of those who look closely into rule 14 of the laws, and grasp its real meaning. Can it always be answered to the satisfaction of the questioner? Not in one instance so far as my experience goes. Now to give you an illustration of what I mean. I, in my capacity of station agent, may some day accidentally lose a hand while coupling cars—which I am sometimes in the habit of doing, when trainmen are switching, in order to forward the work. I could, by the disability clause, claim my full insurance and at the same time it would not necessitate me resigning my position as agent, and I could continue to earn my full salary as at present. But, if unfortunately I should be attacked by some disease that would so disable me that I could not devote my whole time to my duties, perhaps not be able to do more than two or three days work every week, my employers could not be expected to allow their business to be neglected in this manner and would naturally desire to have the position filled by some one who could attend to it properly. The consequence of this would be that I would be without a situation, without means to keep my assessments paid up, and finally be compelled to forfeit my membership, also unable to claim any compensation because the necessary affidavits could not be procured that I was totally disabled from performing any labor whatever. This illustrates an inconsistency that does more to keep down the membership of the department than anything else connected with it, and calls urgently for a remedy if we are to succeed in our good intentions of providing for those who are near and dear to us when grim death steps in and claims its victim.

Now to show you that there is some foundation for my contention, in this case. One of the delegates at Denver, last convention, got up and asked—when this subject was being discussed—if, when he became disabled through sickness from following his occupation as conductor, could he not claim his insurance on the disability clause. Being answered in the negative, he expressed himself as having understood the clause in the way he put it and apparently thought that there was something here that was not exactly right. This goes to show that a great many have joined our insurance with this impression in regard to disability and when they become aware of the real meaning of the clause they become disgusted and drop out. This, of course, is not right but how are we going to combat it? For my own part I would rather see the disability clause stricken out altogether than allow this inconsistency to remain as a stumbling block to the welfare of our insurance system. I would be pleased to see some of the brothers come forward and express their views on this point. I have been a member of the insurance since I first joined the Order and I would like its membership increased instead of decreasing, as at present, and I trust that some member of the Order will be successful in producing a scheme that will have this result.

Yours truly in P. F.,

W. M. DICKSON.

W. P. Daniels,

DEAR SIR:—I forwarded notice of October 30th after paying for assessments for month of September and told you that considered the benefit (cost?) too high; and the most reason why I left the benefit was this when any of our brothers get disabled we have more trouble in getting the money than the thing is worth; when there was a call made on any of our brothers for any of the brothers on the other side there was never a kick made; therefore, I leave this mostly on that account, and for this: I think there is too much expense attached which I think causes the assessments to come so high; to think, $3.00 per month, and one month or two months I have paid $4.00, which is very nearly $40.00 per year. When I can insure in one insurance for $7.00 per year, for disability, and get my $10.00 to $15.00 per week for a sprained ankle, as long as it interferes with my work, although I can do my work—I get it just the same—and for the loss of an arm or a leg, or in any way that I am disabled, I will get $3.000 for $7.00, and for $14.00 per year I get double; and in another insurance in which I am going to insure, I get a sick benefit, and my doctor bill paid and $4.00 per week, beside; and in case of death I get $2.000, and the most it can cost me is $20.00 per year; so you see that a man can insure in one insurance, by paying $14.00 a year for an accident policy or disability; in case of accident he gets $3.000.00, and for disability in any way, no matter how little you are hurt, for $7.00, you will get $15.00 per week, or, for $14.00 you will get $30.00 per week; hand or leg cut off or killed you get $6.000; in case of death by accident. And in this other insurance I will get, in case of death, $2.000 my doctor bill paid and $4.00 per week. So you see if I insure in one for $14 per year, and the other for $20.00 per year, $34.00 per year, (it may not cost me that) what do I receive? In one case I would get, or my wife and family would get the sum of $8.000 for $34.00. In your insurance I get no Doctor's bill paid, no sick benefit for my money for disability or death, the sum of $2.500 and perhaps my wife would have a hard time to get that. What does this cost me for one year? very near $40.00 per year. I have paid this for 4 years I think. It is too much and too much trouble in getting the money.

Yours truly, _____

"Which" is why we are led to wonder how some things can be and not overcome us like a midsummer night's dream."—Ed.

Carriers of Passengers—Connecting Lines—Action for damages. On appeal the court—

Held, That where a ticket agent of a company sold to plaintiff a first-class railroad ticket over its own and other lines, containing a provision that in selling the ticket defendant acted only as agent, and was not responsible beyond its own lines, plaintiff cannot recover against defendant for being ejected from a first-class car, and being compelled to travel in a smoking-car, on one of the other lines.

Harris vs. Howe, Recev. of E. W. T. R'y Co., Tex. S. C., Oct. 18, 1889.

Ejection of Passenger—Damages—Conductor's Check—Wreck—Excessive Verdict—Action for damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of a wrongful ejection. The evidence showed that plaintiff bought a ticket to a point on defendant's road; that a wreck occurred on the way, and the train was delayed over night. Plaintiff being sick was unable to wait on the train, and asked the conductor if the check he had given him would be good for the next day, and was told that it would not. The next day plaintiff boarded another train for his destination. The check was presented, and after some dispute the conductor refused to accept it, whereupon the plaintiff offered the conductor the regular fare, but, upon refusing to pay the extra price demanded when tickets are not bought before entering the train, he was ejected. On appeal—

Held, That plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for such ejection by the conductor.

Louisville, etc., R'y Co. vs. Wilsey, 1y. S. C. of App., Oct. 24, 1889.

NOTE—The plaintiff was given a verdict for $2,500 by the trial court, and while holding that he had a right to recover damages for the wrongful ejection, yet this cause is reversed and remanded for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is excessive.

Drover's Pass—Contract—Carriers—Injury—Action in trespass, wherein it was—Held, 1. That a contract of transportation by a common carrier, in which the shipper, in consideration of reduced freight charges, releases the carrier from liability for negligence, when made and carried out in a state where such contracts held valid, is valid in Pennsylvania.

2. That the decisions of state courts governing commercial contracts made within their jurisdiction are just as binding as decisions on statutes.

Forepaugh vs. Delaware, etc., R'y Co., Penn. S. C., Oct. 7, 1889.

Injury to Passenger—Proximate Cause of Death—Conductor's Negligence.—When a passenger on defendant's train on his way to "H.," heard some one in the car supposed to have been an employe call his station when the train reached "L.," and believing it to be his station endeavored to alight; and the conductor without giving any warning or notice, negligently caused the train to be suddenly started, whereby the passenger was thrown violently from the car steps onto the track, where he was left by the employes in an unconscious condition, and instantly killed by a train passing in an opposite direction. In an action by the wife for damages, the court—Held, 1. That the deceased was not a mere trespasser; and as he was known to have been thrown on the track and rendered unconscious in alighting from his train, it was defendant's duty to use care to prevent injury to him from its own train.

2. That the wrong of defendant's conductor in leaving his injured passenger on the track exposed to peril, without mind enough to care for himself, was the proximate cause of his death, and hence the company is liable in damages.

C. I., St. L. & C. R'y Co. vs. Cooper, Ind. S. C., Oct. 20, 1889.

MENTIONS

If our correspondent who signed his initials "D. A. R." will kindly send his full name we will gladly publish his communication.

We are pleased to note the promotion of Brother E. L. Fay, of Division 30, Springfield, Mo., to the position of superintendent of the St. Louis & San Francisco R'y.

Brother Frank A. Weisz of Division 157, having taken unto himself a wife, concluded to journey westward, and was seen by his many friends in Chicago on December 6th.

Brothers S. E. Howd, T. B. Place, and J. W. Morris, of Division 111, are requested to correspond with the secretary, R. D. Simpson, care United States Hotel, Los Angeles, Cal., and notify him of their whereabouts.

Brother Ed. E. Keyser, member of Sheridan Division No. 238, Chillicothe, Mo., called upon us December 12th, being at Cedar Rapids, Ia., on a visit, his wife accompanying him. He is engaged with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R'y.

Brother Burt Cox, of Denison, Texas, would like any information that will enable him to locate Brother L. C. Devoe, who was running a train on the Second Division of the Mexican Central R'y, out of the City of Mexico, when last heard from.

The secretary of Arkansas Division No. 36, Pueblo, Colo., wishes the address of two members of that Division. Brothers Emery J. Burns, and Humboldt Ward. Anyone knowing their whereabouts will please inform brother E. C. Mattes, Pueblo, Col.

In this number appears the advertisement of Jos. P. Wathier. A perusal will repay any conductor who wishes to purchase a watch. Mr. Wathier is thoroughly responsible, and his customers may depend upon his goods being exactly as represented.

We find on our desk this morning the December number of the Railroad Brakeman, or rather, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen's Journal, with the name of L. W. Roberts as editor and manager. Allow us to bid you a happy New Year, may your position be a happy one to you, profitable to your readers, and the principles you advocate such as will be a blessing to every member of your organization.

Brother John Renschler, Secretary and Treasurer of Lackawanna Division No. 12, Scranton, Pa., would like to know of the whereabouts of brother Ed. Higgins; last heard from in Blue Canyon, Cal., and L. P. Post of Sunbury, Pa. Anyone having any information regarding these brothers will kindly advise Brother Renschler.

It pleases us to note the promotion of brother Nelson Brown, to the position of passenger conductor on the C., H. & I. R'y. Brother Brown is a member of Rochester Division No. 8, and has been in the service of the C., H. & I. but little over two years. His rapid promotion since entering the service of the above company, is all the certificate that is necessary to make him a place among the most worthy members of the Order.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Sioux City & Northeastern R'y held in Sioux City, December 2d, Frank S. Butler was elected one of its directors, and at a meeting of the new Board of Directors immediately after, he was chosen Secretary of the new Board. Brother Butler, we will take lemonade anyhow. May you be an honor to the company who have so generously honored you, is the kindest wish we can offer you, gratis.

We were the recipient of an invitation from the brothers of Friendship Division 81, Beardstown, Ill., to attend their third annual ball, held on Thursday evening, Nov. 28, 1889, for which we wish to return thanks. We would have been pleased to have attended one of their happy entertainments, but circumstances forbade our doing so. We also received a very pretty menu card, carefully prepared by Messrs. Myers & Cole, proprietors of the Park Hotel; in looking over the list we noticed that someone who was present had marked the various dishes that brothers Parker and Golden partook of, and out of 34 on the list there remained only two that were unchecked: "Tongue and Kisses—French." Why they left these out is more than we can surmise. Some people "eat to live;" others "live to eat." God pity the hotel keepers. In another page you will find a description of the grand entertainment. May they all live to enjoy many more just as pleasant ones, is our wish for these brothers of 81.

And here comes another. First annual Ball of Sheridan Division No. 238, at City Hall, Chillicothe, Mo., Tuesday evening, December 31, 1889, all printed on a double card, silver edged, white paper. Thank you. We can not "bawl." Too near the end of the year; too near the beginning of the new. Dance the old one out and all join hands and usher the New Year in. Do the best you can; you can never make any of them any too pleasant. They will only go and come a few more times, perhaps to some of you never, again. Then live to make each other a little better, a trifle more happy, as the old goes away, and the new one comes in its place.

From a Circular, No. 17, issued from the office of the general manager of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie R'y Co., Minneapolis, Nov. 25th, 1889, signed T. D. Underwood, General Manager, we learn that Brother S. W. Derrick, member of Division 22, Sanborn, Iowa, has been appointed chief operator, in charge of the commercial telegraph department of that road. One more mark for attention to duty. Once again a gentleman's ability recognized by a Railway company. Let us congratulate you.

While brother G. J. Johnson, C. C., of Division 40, and also General Superintendent and Vice-President of the Railway Officials and Conductors Accident Association of Indianapolis, Ind., was with us a few days ago, he kindly showed us a number of letters which had been tendered him, entirely unsolicited, by different railway officials; also from personal business friends and acquaintances where he is personally known. They are certainly very pleasant mementos to have in one's keeping, and must be to the brother a great source of enjoyment and pleasure.

The Grand Chief Conductor reports that on one of his trips lately, he was fortunate enough to meet with the genial traveling passenger agent of the Northern Pacific, brother John N. Robinson, who will be remembered as past Grand officer, having served an entire term upon the Executive Committee of the Order. It will be of interest to his many friends to know that he is still driving tacks and hustling for people for the Northern Pacific in a very extensive territory east of Chicago. And there is not one in the vast army, more deserving or proficient than brother Robison. John, call and see us.

We are glad to hear that brother Allen Ostrander, of New Haven, one of the oldest conductors in the service, who has been very ill for a long time, is once again at his post. We once met the good brother in the Division room of 201, New Haven, within sound of old Yale College, and we walked together 'neath the shade of those majestic elms in this old Puritan village, a day passed so pleasantly that we shall never forget its pleasures while we live.

Brother Wm. H. Berger, member of Division No. 23, and delegate to the Grand Division at the annual session held at Buffalo, in 1881, died at his home in Catawissa, Pa., on Monday evening, 25. For over twenty years he was in the service of the Catawissa R'y Company, and the P. & R. R. Co.; since June 1st of this year he has had charge of the postoffice at Catawissa, Pa., having received his appointment as Postmaster at that time.

From a letter received from brother J. E. Barry, Secretary and Treasurer of Jackson Division 149, Jackson, Tenn., we were requested to change the address of Brother M. Fouche from Jackson, to the First National bank, Rockwood, Tenn., of which he is president.

From brother Ashley, secretary of 55, we learn that brother Tom H. Earnest, a member of that Division, and a resident of Independence, Montgomery County, Kansas, was, at the late election, elected to the office of Register of Deeds of that county, and had the pleasure also, of running far ahead of his ticket. One by one they are getting there. Success to you, brother. Be very "Earnest" in your labors.

We were shown a copy of the "Annual Review," published by the Gazette Company of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. It is printed in magazine form, containing 128 pages and is a credit to Cedar Rapids, and also the Gazette Company, who have shown themselves "masters of the situation," in giving their readers this Christmas offering. We are inclined to believe that everyone connected with their paper has taken the same interest to make this a success that the company have shown. The embellishments, some 300 in number, have been originated and perfected by themselves and are worthy of much more than a passing notice. Such enterprise as this is what makes any newspaper a success both in worth and circulation. The printing of this elegant souvenir is all done by Dawley &

Metcalf, the gentlemen who have the contract for THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, for 1890, which is a sure guarantee of faithfulness and elegant work. Success to the Gazette.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Brother E. J. Palmer, last heard from at Kansas City, on the Rock Island, will kindly inform Brother H. L. Grimshaw, Secretary and Treasurer, Pike's Peak Division, No. 244, Colorado City, Colorado.

From a note received by the Grand Secretary and Treasurer, we learn that Brother F. E. McFarland, of Tacoma, Washington, a member of Denver Division 44, has been appointed general yard master of the Union Pacific Railway at that place. Another going to the front. Keep on brothers, until the places are all filled. There are plenty of chances open, and it is for you alone to say who shall go to the front in the railway service.

Two countrymen from Marion, Iowa, called on us a few days ago; came in with their overcoats on—one of those terrible hot days—and introduced themselves as Mitchell and James. They were strangers to us, so we invited them to lay aside their overcoats and take off their hats, but they both refused, saying they could only stay a few moments. One of them, the largest, put his feet on the editor's table and the other put his in the waste basket, and they opened up both at once, on the story telling business. For a while Charley was in the lead, and then Jim was ahead. We marked a tie several times, and finally called in Brother Sackett to decide which should win the prize. He listened for an hour or so and finally called it a draw. We could not have decided, had we been obliged to, as they were both experts at the business. Come again boys, and we will refer you to a treatise we have on the art of telling stories through the telephone.

Charles A. Brant, a gentleman who was born in Russia, has travelled all over the world, and for a long time has been in the service of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R'y, in their dining car department, and lastly in charge of the elegant depot dining room in Milwaukee, has received an offer of $5,000 a year to take charge of a new hotel in Montevideo, South America. His friends tell us that he can prepare anything from a chicken to an elephant, so that the dantiest stomach will relish it, and it will produce no injurious effect. Success to you Charley, in your new undertaking.

We notice that a meeting of carpenters was held in Jersey City a few days ago. Several speeches were made in which arguments were advanced that the World's fair, if held in the city of New York, would be a disadvantage rather than a blessing, from the fact that when the work was accomplished there would be so many men out of work that it would be a curse rather than a thing to be wished for. It is probable that this would apply to any other place, just the same as New York. It seems to us that this is entirely a new version of the situation. On the same principle it must be a detriment for either a city, state or nation, to have any public works projected, and the Almighty must have a grudge against the poor laborer as well as the carpenter, in giving us a bountiful harvest, and this year he has been especially severe in the state of Iowa, where such crops were never before seen. But it is very possible that Congress will not stop to inquire of the Jersey carpenters whether a fair shall be held in 1892 or not. But, if their decision should influence the people of these United States of America so much that it might fall through, we feel that Columbus even at this late day, would regret that he ever discovered New Jersey.

Brother Clark, Grand Senior Conductor, spent a day at the general offices lately. He finds the different Divisions taking up the work with alacrity, and all seem well pleased with the same. His visits to the different Divisions in the district apportioned to him have been enjoyed by the members thereof, as letters to this office show us. We are very glad that the interest is taken in the different Divisions that is so apparent, and also that the work of the Grand officers is thoroughly appreciated. Brothers, attend your Division meetings. Get acquainted fully with the work, and also with each other. Learn to be foremost in all good works, and charitable one toward another. If you think a brother is wrong on any question that is important to the Order, try to reason with that brother in a brotherly manner. Convince him of his error, not with a club, neither with a spirit of vindictiveness, but with feelings of brotherly love "one toward another."

We learn upon good authority that Mr. George C. Smith, for many years the efficient chief engineer of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R'y, has tendered his resignation, for the purpose of accepting the position of chief engineer of all the roads controlled by the Barings, bankers of England, in South America. Also one, 600 miles in length, which is now being constructed from Montevideo to Paysante. We are personally acquainted with Mr. Smith and have been for a good many years, and if anything that we might offer in his behalf, would add even a might to his capabilities, or his faithfulness, in any position he has ever been called upon to fill, or his ability to always make everyone whom he may come in contact personally, feel that he is a thorough and true gentleman, we would gladly give it. But in some men's lives their acts speak louder than words, so we simply wish you God speed, George, in your labors in your new and untried field.

Will the brother who kindly sent us a communication from the far west, and signs himself "Oregon," please to give us his name. Such thoughtlessness as this causes us any amount of trouble and inconvenience. We have repeatedly stated in as brotherly a manner as we are capable of doing, that we can not publish any communication without the writer thereof will give us his name. We do not care to publish it, and we can not conceive why our correspondents will not live up to these requirements without our repeatedly asking them to do so. Brother, give us your name so that your very good item may appear in the next number.

We notice in one of our excellent exchanges, The Railway Age, an account of several gentlemen who united and purchased two thousand acres of land in Marion county, Florida, for which they paid $1.50 per acre; yesterday they received a telegram that a very rich vein of phosphate had been discovered, and their agent had been offered $75.00 per acre. We always thought that Florida investments would bring rich results if those who invested would only be patient and let time have a wrestle at it. Some three years ago, the editor and some three or four hundred smart business men purchased each a lot in a new town in the same state; we paid $1.50 per lot. After waiting two years we sent one of the aforesaid down there to see how the lots were getting along. They were all O. K. At first sight our agent did not feel very happy at the outlook, but upon gaining later and more costly information he became very favorably impressed with our purchases. There were about 400 town lots close to town, but covered about twenty feet deep with water. Some enterprising gentleman had been out in a boat and surveyed them, and they were all duly blocked. The streets were not named and probably will not be for some time to come. He writes us that the uniformity of the lots is very marked, and it may be possible that in the course of time the course of the bay may change and they will become very dry. Our agent has never returned, as we have leased the ground to him, and he is raising young alligators for northern conductors who may visit the southern country. We would advise everyone who has $1.50 to spare to invest it in Florida real estate, wet or dry.

We were reading in the Railway Age a few days ago, a little item "How the General Manager and the Conductor got Acquainted," stating that two brothers who had long been estranged and bore no particular affection for each other, at last got together and have become excellent friends. We could not help thinking how true this is of so many people in this world. (We have no reference to the ladies, they never disagree,) but so many people are in the same line of business, even neighbors, who fall out at some trifling, disagreeable matter, one perhaps a little too obstinate, and the other quite too unyielding. They fall out about what? O, nothing, and do not speak to each other perhaps for a year. What a dear, precious way to feel, when, in nine cases out of ten, a fair, candid talk, would set all things right and the world would keep moving on just the same. This is a subject that is worthy of a little thought by all our readers; there is trouble enough that comes to everyone, that we seemingly can't prevent. Then do not court these difficulties that make life so unpleasant. But be willing at all times to live and let live; to yield a little and forgive a trifle and the world will be that much happier.

J. H. Ruben was the name we first noticed on a plain and simple card which dropped slyly out of a beautiful envelope, post marked Bloomington, Ill., Dec. 13th. Now we did not say that J. H. Rubin was plain and simple, for if we did he has some good children that would pull our hair until we were "red headed," and as we remember them for some kind favors shown us in the past, let us wish them a "Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year." But the thread of our discourse is off, so we return to the envelope, and out drops a beautiful complimentary to the Seventh Annual Reception and Banquet given by Bloomington Division No. 87, O. R. C., Friday evening, Dec. 20th, 1889. We forgot the ladies were included. The whole paraphernalia was arranged in elegant style, and with the exception of the card, closed up like a sachel, or bag, or case, or something to carry a fan or an opera glass in. You see we are posted from the fact that the lady has been shut up in the garret for ten days, at work on one of these articles, and every time she hears the door open, the millenium is coming, and all we hear is "There, Good Lord," and then we know she has dropped her work on the floor and has sat down over it. It is old gold and blue and satin and silk and cords, but it is all bought with paper. Here we are again, off of the subject, and we ask the brother of 87 to excuse us because we have written a good many words this last month of the year, so we will do the next best thing and wish you much happiness on the evening of December 20th, 1889.

John Kernan, member of Huron Division 121, employed as conductor on the Dakota division, C. & N. W. R'y, fell from his train at Oakes, Dakota, on the evening of October 14th, being run over and fatally injured. On receiving the sad news here at his home in Huron, a special train was immediately sent, conveying his wife, and company's surgeons to the place of accident, 136 miles distant.

Brother Kernan remained conscious to the last and fully realized that none could help him, only bravely trying to hold out till his wife reached him. But while willing hands of friends and brothers, and physicians did all in their power to prolong life, it was not to be, and he quietly passed away twenty minutes before his wife reached him.

His remains were taken to the home of his parents at Ironton, Wis., for burial, accompanied by members of Division 121, acting as pall-bearers, and there, in the quiet cemetery, among the hills where he had played in his childhood, he rests.

His sudden death was a painful shock to his many friends, all of whom deeply deplore his sad and untimely end. Having formerly been employed on the Madison division of the C. & N. W. R'y, and during the last six years on this division, he had made many friends, among the employes and the public. Being a man of exemplary habits and very much attached to his family, it was with much regret that we found he carried no insurance, which can only be accounted for by his having felt as many others felt that "nothing will happen to me." How soon will brothers learn that death must come to all, and that not one of us is doing his best for the dear wife and little ones at home, who is not carrying an insurance policy. How much easier it would be to leave home to take out your run, and how much more proud and manly you would feel when you come home and receive their loving greetings, if you were protecting them from hunger and cold charity, by carrying an insurance. In this matter there is no time for delay.

Brother Kernan was only 32 years of age, and left a wife and two small children, one but three weeks old, who have our heartfelt sympathy, and shall receive all the assistance we can give them. We desire to thank the officials of the C. & N. W. R'y, for special train service to and from the place of burial and other courtesies extended. Such kindness is not forgotten.

F. R. PECHIN, C. C

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 4, 1889.

At a regular meeting of Monon Division No. 89, Order Railway Conductors, held November 10th, 1889, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted, in the memory of the wife of our beloved brother, P. H. Gallagher:

WHEREAS, God, in his infinite mercy and wisdom, has called the wife of our beloved brother, leaving him and his little children to mourn the loss of a good wife and mother, that as each and every brother felt the distress and condolees with their brother in his irreparable loss, therefore, be it,

Resolved, That we extend our untold sympathy to him in this his severest hour of trial, urging him to be reconciled, as God doeth all things well, that if he only asks he will receive. He notes the fall of the sparrow. Blessed is he that puts his trust in God.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, and that a copy be sent to Brother Gallagher, and that they be published in THE CONDUCTOR.

CHAS. TURNER,

R. W. LAWTON,

Committee.

HALL OF LONG PINE DIVISION NO. 173.
ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS,
CHADRON, Neb., Dec. 1, 1889.

WHEREAS, God, the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, having seen fit to remove from our midst our esteemed brother and dear friend, G. Kirkpatrick.

Resolved, That in humble submission to His will, we bow and are conscious of our great loss.

Resolved, That in his death we have lost a true brother and his family an upright and loving husband and father.

Resolved, That those traits of character which have endeared him to us and all who knew him, are worthy of our emulation and to be held in lasting memory.

Resolved, That this Division extend to the stricken wife and their relations our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the records of this Division and a copy of same be presented to the family of the deceased, to the city papers, and sent to the official journal of this Order.

A. M. WRIGHT,
GROVE H. BENSON,
R. FLANDERS,
Committee.

HALL OF LONG PINE DIVISION No. 173.
ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS,
CHADRON, Neb., Dec. 1, 1889.

WHEREAS, God, the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, having seen fit to remove from our midst our esteemed brother and dear friend, Charles L. Sellors.

Resolved, That in humble submission to His will we bow and are conscious of our great loss.

Resolved, That in his death we have lost a true brother and his family an upright and loving husband and father.

Resolved, That those traits of character which have endeared him to us and all who knew him are worthy of our emulation and to be held in lasting memory.

Resolved, That this Division extend to the stricken wife and their relations our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the records of this Division and a copy of same be presented to the family of the deceased, to the city papers, and sent to the official journal of this Order.

A. M. WRIGHT,
GROVE H. BENSON,
R. FLANDERS,
Committee.

At a meeting of R. B. Hawkins Division No. 114, Order of Railway Conductors held December 1st, 1889, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty God in his divine wisdom to remove from our midst within the past year Brothers William Connor,

John Ward and Samuel Oliver, therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Brothers Connor, Ward and Oliver this Division and the noble Order has lost three true and worthy brothers.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere sympathies to the wives and families of our deceased brothers in their sad bereavment and commend them to him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That these resolutions be engrossed upon the minutes of our division and a copy sent the bereaved wives and families, also a copy sent THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

CHAS. STROUD,
GEO. E. VANCE,
A. BORLAND,
Committee.

From Brother Chas. Ireland, Secretary of Friendship, Division No. 83, Beardstown, Ills., we are advised that Brother M. Flaherty and wife of that Division, have been called upon to part with their little Francis, who died on Sunday Dec. 1st, aged 15 months, being the second child they have lost within the past year. We sincerely trust that when we offer the tender sympathy of every member of the Order, in this their double affliction, that they will realize that all have a feeling of love that if it were possible, will find a lodgment in their hearts that may help to assuage the grief they are experiencing.

Many of the brothers will be pained to learn of the sad and untimely death of our esteemed brother, Geo. Robinson, who, on the night of Nov. 22d, while in the discharge of his duty, when proceeding west with his train from this city, was brought to a stop by a freight train on the bridge that spans the river at Vaudrieul. Anxious to ascertain the cause of delay, he stepped down on to the bridge and from some unknown cause fell over the side into the rushing waters below and was rapidly carried beyond all human aid, it is feared never to be seen again, notwithstanding the untiring efforts that have been made by his many friends. We who know him best can testify to his genial, unselfish nature. Quietly he pursued the way his business instincts pointed out to him and in his honest, straight forward manner of dealing he made friends of all with whom he came in contact. Mount Royal Division No. 75, loses one of its most devoted members in the death of Brother Robinson.

Yours in P. F.
J. H. E.

AT EVENTIDE.

[The following beautiful poem—in unmeasured rhythmic feet, but full of the poesy of the Muses, describes the vision of a lovely and lost friend. It was written by Francis B. Wheaton, wife of the popular Grand Chief of the Order of Railway Conductors. "not," as she says, "without misgivings as to its merit," which are entirely unnecessary, as it is one of the purest and sweetest efforts we have perused in a long time—Elmira Star].

The air was soft and balmy, full of the twitterings of birds as they soothed and nestled their little ones to rest, and with innumerable other sounds that bring peace and comfort after the labor of the day. The sun was making its westward journey, filling the sky with indescribable grandeur. While watching the beautiful scene the clouds took unto themselves shapes that filled me with delight.

Between snowy banks I beheld a silver sea, bluer, calmer and more placid than ever a sea was known to be. On its bosom were mystic ships with sails spread; silently they sped on their journey and safely reaching the harbor were lost to view.

Suddenly the blue and silver sea was changed to one of gold; and across its shining surface I beheld another ship freighted with heavenly passengers. The white-haired captain and all the silent crew go to and fro, fore and aft, but there is never a sound as the vessel rises and falls and rides steadily on.

But over me comes a restless longing to break the awful stillness and ask a few questions I fain would know. So reaching out my hands to the captain, whose form is bent with the weight of many years, I cry, "Tell me, oh venerable boatman, is there no message from my heavenly sailor, who crossed the golden sea; who sat in thy phantom boat; who leaned on thy strong right arm?"

The silent old man only paused and sorrowfully shook his head.

"But boatman, oh merciful boatman, I implore thee! there must be a good word from your heavenly shore?" Once again I cry, "Oh, boatman, rest from thy labor and harken to my voice. In the years that are gone thou didst have little children who played about thy knee; whose arms clung lovingly about thy neck; whose lips met thine in tender kisses, and thou didst love thy little children, and thou wast a sailor and sailed the seas in stormy as well as in sunny weather; thou never feardst the gale, for thou didst rule thy crew with patience and love.

"But one day a higher captain called thee on duty for a voyage far different from any thou hadst ever taken; and thou wast compelled to obey and leave thy boat and crew and thy little children. And, good boatman, another sailor was needed to make up that good ship's company, and another father was called, who put on the white uniform and didst sail with thee.

"Now, oh gracious captain, tell me of that voyage out of the storm of darkness, pain and weariness of mortal life, didst thou sail into the sunshine and smooth seas and ride safely into the harbor of immortal life? Let the memory of thine own children plead for the child of thy sailor and give me thine answer."

I could see the sailors as they performed their work, and beheld the rise and fall of the boat, but across the stillness came no sound but the echo of my own voice with its plaintive tone; for the questions brought no answer until looking again I saw the stern old captain with his faithful crew about him, and in their midst, oh, blessed sight? I beheld my loving sailor. With a cry of joy I stretched out my arms that I might be taken to the breast that had sheltered me in childhood, but although I could see only love in the dear face, I could feel no arms about me, no tender kisses on my lips; for the boat glided on; the distance widened; captain and crew bowed their heads as the silence was at last broken and I heard a voice saying :

"Peace be still !
Bow thy head, and take Life's rapture and life's ill
And wait—
At last shall all be clear."

The music of the words soft and low, yet sweet and clear, lingered on the air, and I saw the boat drift in through the golden gates of the heavenly harbor, and captain, crew, and my loving sailor were lost to view.

The golden glory faded from the sky ; the birds were at rest, and I was alone, but was cheered and comforted.

WEVIE.

Published by permission of the author.—Ed.

Thoughts.

"Read, to gather tho'ts," some author says. Methinks if the thoughts of some readers could be gathered together, they would resemble the contents of our grand-mother's chip basket. A great many sound, clean hickory, maple and iron-wood on the top; towards the center more of the same sort only smaller and closely packed, and in the bottom saw-dust and chaff; answering to the small talk of youth. Such a basketful would be a good representation of a good moral character, whose possessor had made the trial of life and came out with all that was best at the top, and the foolishness and folly of youth crowded down to make room for something better.

This would be better represented by a few snappy splinters laid across the top concealing the vacuum beneath, and I fear we have too many of the snappy sort of characters in life to deal with. Too many of the snappy, vacuum-underneath sort of books to read, emanating from snappy brains, to feed others of the same sort. Books with a lack of the faith that strengtheneth all things; books as well as mankind. Faith, without the aid of which we sink, tired and discouraged by the wayside.

LA CROSSE.

Home Upholstery.

The covers of well-made chairs, sofas and upholstered furniture yield to wear and tear long before other parts do, the woodwork generally outlasting a number of covers. It is less of a job to re-cover such furniture than one would suppose, and many a dollar could be saved by careful housewives with little detriment to the appearance of the work if they would undertake the doing of this themselves. The old cover carefully removed by drawing the tacks and laid out on new material, furnishes a perfect pattern for the new cover. So of any linings, back covers, etc., etc., that ought to be replaced. Care should be taken to mark the place of the buttons on the new cloth before it is brought into position for fastening. Usually the springs will need to be changed for new ones. You can procure such of any upholsterer at about the price he would charge if he was to put them in himself. Buttons, tacks and other trimmings can be picked up at dry goods and furniture stores. As a general thing the expense of these is small. The material may be procured from the same source. In choosing a fabric do not be misled into taking one of poor quality because the price seems low. The best is the cheapest here, in the long run, always.

One of the best fabrics for covering furniture is mohair plush. It is handsome and in point of durability can hardly be excelled by any other material. Silk plush will not begin to give equal satisfaction to the other. If less expensive material is wanted, a good quality of cretonne is pretty. Ready for work, put the springs, linings and so on in place precisely as they were before. The outside cover should be exactly the same shape as the old one was. This brought in place should first be secured by buttoning down. For this use a large darning needle, and double linen cord. Push the needle up from the under side, string on the button, and return the needle a little to one side the starting place; then tie the threads tightly. After the buttoning is evenly done all over, tack down the edges. Do not start at one place and finish completely as you go, but first stretch out the cover and drive in a stray tack here and there, all around, at first. After tacking, trim off the edges of the cloth where needed, and finish up with upholstering gimp, either fastening this with ornamental tacks or sewing it on with a crescent-shaped needle. A coat of furniture varnish or oil over the woodwork will complete the job. Old cane-seated chairs can be fixed up very nicely by cutting out the old seat. Fasten straps made by quilting together, on a machine, four thicknesses of heavy bed-ticking around the pieces to which the canes had been fastened, and make secure. Eight such straps are used, four at right angles to the others. These support a cushion; make a little larger than the chair frame. A row of fringe will hide the pieces over which passed the straps. The cushion is fastened to the straps.

A comfortable little sewing chair can be made of a soap box, with a board as wide as the box for the back. Slats must be put across inside the box three inches from the top to support the cushioned seat, or the box turned bottom upwards and a slit made to insert the back, which should be slightly inclined outwards for comfort. Cushion in with anything in the way of old cloth, using straw or excelsior packing for the stuffing, with a layer of cotton batting over it, and covered with cretonne.

A wicker rocker can be decorated very beautifully by the use of a few yards of satin ribbon. In the open work of the chair run in antique pink and dark copper-colored satin ribbons. It gives a pleasing effect to use ribbon one inch wide, and run the two colors side by side in the same row of holes, tying bows of the two colors at the four corners of the seat, and upon the arms of the chair.

Fancy cushions of all sizes and shape are so fashionable that every lady who is fond of needle-work should display her skill upon a pretty head rest to hang upon the back of an easy chair. The shape of the cushion or head-rest depends much upon the size and shape of the chair; but for an ordinary size a cushion twelve by fifteen inches would be a convenient shape. For the foundation of the cushion cut two pieces of strong muslin or ticking, the desired size and shape and sew together on three sides; leaving the fourth open to put in the filling. The stuffing should be of down or best of feathers. The velvet or satin is tied bag fashion at each end, the frill formed in this way being lined with satin. Mahogany plush with gold-colored satin is a very handsome combination. Finish with bows and ribbons of gold; the bows of ribbons should be fastened to the upper corners of the cushion, the two pieces of ribbon, each one-half yard in length, should be used to fasten it to the chair. For the centre of the head-rest either embroider a spray of flowers or applique.—Canadian Queen.

A Household Angel.

For a good every-day household angel give us the woman who laughs. Her biscuits may not be all right, and she may occasionally burn her bread and forget to replace dislocated buttons, but for solid comfort all day and every day she is a very paragon. Home is not a battle field nor life an unending row. The trick of always seeing the bright side, or, if the matter has no bright side, of shining up the dark one, is a very important faculty, one of the things which no woman should be without. We are not all born with the sunshine in our hearts, as the Irish prettily term it, but we can cultivate a cheerful sense of humor if we only try.

A Tooth-Pick Holder.

A tooth-pick holder is a pretty and useful ornament for a gentleman's room. Take a stiff piece of box cover, eight by twelve inches; cover neatly with golden-brown plush or velvet, and blind stitch a piece of yellow Silesia over the back. With a ball of rather fine gold tinsel fashion a spider-web a little to one side and nearly covering it in width; stitch the tinsel to the velvet with yellow silk so that the stitches do not show. Thrust three or four quill tooth-picks through the web and daub them irregularly with gilt. In the upper right-hand corner fasten a small gilt cuff to hold tooth-picks. If you cannot get this easily at a fancy store, make one of pasteboard and cover with gilt paper. Fasten a small button at the top and paint it gilt. Two yards of orange or old gold satin ribbon will be sufficient to hang this by; fasten to both upper corners with a bow and ends at left-hand. A big toy spider may be tacked in the lower left-hand corner, just at the verge of the web. This trifle sells for $2. If you can send to a large city for your supplies, it can be made for fifty cents.—Canadian Queen.

"No Effeminate Man in Mine."

In passing a group of ladies one day,
I incidentally heard one of them say,
What, at first, I construed as a joke:
"I told Mr. Blank I preferred he would smoke.
In fact, I do like a man who will use
Tobacco and cigars when he may choose,
The more the better if he so be incline;
I want 'no effeminate man in mine.'"

Then I concluded she said what was true,
Voicing the the preference of more than a few;
I wondered if she in her "standard" would let
In the consumer of the cigarette?
If smoking cigars made men who do it,
If tobacco gave strength why not chew it?
Why not more "manly" to also use snuff?
Would manhood be granted if one took enough?

Manhood's standard, let such ladies tell it,
Is in the strength of the breath, then smell it;
Then make it stronger by taking a drink
Of whiskey or beer until it shall stink.
When a man once becomes dissipated,
Such ladies with him wish to be mated.
There is an animal more manly than that
If such be the standard, called a polecat.

When man's unstrung through tobacco and gin.
They, with open heart, will bid him come in.
Cigars and tobacco this one prefers,
And the man who don't smoke "not wanted in Such taste appears to some chaotic, [hers."
Since she "prefers," for her, a narcotic.
In opium smoke come visions ecstatic,
Why not "hit the pipe" and be quite erratic?

A man, then, whose breath, is clean, pure and
Will be ostracised by such ladies, neat; [sweet,
Although his eyes are as clear as the stars,
Unless he will look through smoke of cigars.
Do not complain, if one whom you trusted,
Learning you better, becomes disgusted;
And declares some day, foul breathed, with eyes
You, as his wife, are too manly for him. [dim,

One of the neatest exchange papers that is laid upon our table is "The American," published at Lake Charles, La. The character and tone of the matter in every number is most excellent, and we read it all, with interest and profit. As a newspaper, it is strictly for the interests of the southern people, and the country in which it labors. Such a paper should be appreciated and we sincerely hope that it may enjoy a circulation according to what it richly merits.

Scribners Magazine for December is one of the prettiest holiday numbers that we have ever seen; every article save one being complete in this issue. An entertaining paper from that genial gentleman and lucid writer, Edward J. Phelps, "How the Other Half Lives," by Jacob A. Ries, are excellent articles for Christmas entertainment.

"The Railway Telegrapher," published at Vinton, Iowa, in the interest of the railway telegraphers of North America, comes to us in a new Christmas dress. Improved in every way, its style and quality have received a new impetus and we heartily wish it success in its mission to enlighten and improve the service in every part of the country. Keep your conscience and editorials as bright and clean as your magazine of Dec. 15th, neighbor, and all will go right, even to the height of our wishes. "A Happy New Year."

Demorest's Family Magazine for January has come to us, in holiday attire, enlarged and improved beyond our highest anticipations. The second illustration, "Diana or Christ," and "The Last Prayer," are given as the experiences of the early Christian martyrs, when the name of "Christian" was sneered at by the multitude, and to any poor mortal admitting it, death was almost certain. And in these engravings, the love, faith and devotion of a noble woman are so ably and so beautifully shown. The "New Year Illustration," "The Little White Hearse," by Ellen Wheeler Wilcox, "Home Art and Home Comfort," "The Undying Voice," "The Infant Monarchs of Europe," Uncle Sam's Money," are a few of the generous offerings of their New Year's edition.

The editor of the New Era, a paper published at Lenox, Iowa, a town on the C. B. & Q. Railroad, in the center of the blue grass region of Iowa, kindly mailed us a copy of his paper, a few days ago. Its editor is C. A. Cole Esq. The paper is published every Saturday morning; this is the third year of its existence. We know nothing of the population of this domain, but if the energy of the editor in showing off the town in the Christmas number, is any criterion of the size of the place, there ought to be not less than 250,000 inhabitants. It contains sixteen pages, largest size printing paper, and is a creditable showing for any publication. If the inhabitants of the blue grass region do not appreciate such efforts they are deserving of a flood or a drowth, next season.

We have received from the Chancellor of the new National University of Chicago the "Announcement" for 1889-90, a neat publication of sixty-four pages, which gives a list of forty non-resident professors who are well known scholars, many of them being professors of such institutions as the University of Virginia, Tulane, Boston, Madison and Lehigh Universities.

The Announcement gives thirteen under-graduate courses and an equal number of post-graduate courses leading to all the various college degrees. The institution is said to be modelled after the famous London University and provides examinations whereby scholars can secure degrees by non-resident study and examinations at home, thus benefitting a large class and solving many educational problems. It also agrees to teach "any person in any subject" by mail, and expects to introduce here the University Extension System of Great Britain, by which local lectures are given by the professors, thus bringing the University closer to the people.

No honorary degrees will be given. The tuition is moderate, and the University affiliates with all other institutions by accepting their certificates. Two hundred students are said to be already enrolled. The Announcement will be sent free to any one who addresses 147 Throop street, and our readers who apply before January 1 need only pay the usual matriculation fee.

The National Magazine for January announces two new and valuable departments—"Biblical Literature" and "Pedagogy"—with Rev. J. C. Quinn, Ph.D., and J. S. Mills, A.M., President of Western College, as editors. Agricultural readers will be especially interested in the new "Institute of Agriculture," described in this number—a part of the University Extension System of the National University of Chicago, whose non-resident or correspondence under-graduate and post-graduate courses have met with such favor. Other articles are by Prof. E. A. Birge, of the University of Wisconsin, and eminent specialists. Subscription, $1 per year. Sample copy, 10 cents.

The Daily Union and Advertiser, Rochester, N. Y., is emphatically the peoples own paper. Politically it is earnestly, honestly and fearlessly Democratic, and uncompromisingly devoted to tariff reform, but seeks always to treat opponents fairly. It is constantly introducing new and novel special features, and is a never failing source of entertainment and instruction to many thousands of readers. It publishes the news of the wide world on the day of its occurrence and abounds in special articles, essays and stories of the highest class and of captivating interest. Its market reports are full and complete, its political views are eagerly read by all classes of people, and its editorial utterances are quoted and copied all over the land.

On the first Saturday in January will be commenced the regular weekly publication of Bill Nye's inimitable letters.

For sale by news dealers at 50 cents a month.

Scribner's for January, 1890, will appear Dec. 21st. This is the fourth year of this valuable magazine. One new feature added to its other attainments is a department under the heading of "The Point of View," a few pages where many of its best writers can discuss any subject that is of a literary nature. These are intended only for the expression of individual opinions. Some of the writings in the January number are worthy of more than a passing notice. "Water Storage in the West," by Walter Gillette Bates; "The Right of the World to Thackeray's Life," "The Beauty of Spanish Women," by Henry T. Finck, are but a few of its choice selections.

Mr. Lee. "Why Addie, you needn't cry about it! I only said Mrs. Allen was a very well informed woman, and I wished you would follow her example."

Mrs. Lee. "Yes, and last week you said you wished I could manage to look as stylish as Mrs. Allen,—and she makes all her own clothes. But she has what I haven't."

Mr. Lee. "What is that?"

Mrs. Lee. "Well she gets all her information from a magazine they take. I admit that she knows everything that is going on, and is bright and entertaining in conversation; but I could do as well as she does if I had some source of information. She lent me the last number of her Magazine lately, and I learned more in one hour's reading, about various social matters and the topics of the day, than I would pick up in a month by my occasional chats with friends. It certainly covers every topic of interest, from the news of the day down to the details of housekeeping; and everything is so beautifully illustrated, too. Every time Mamie goes over to the Allens' she comes back and teases me to get you to take Demorest's Family Magazine, as the stories are so good. Even the boys watch for it every month, as a place is found for them also in its pages, and Mr. Allen swears by it. It is really wonderful how it suits every member of the family!"

Mr. Lee. "Well, perhaps I had better send for a Specimen Copy, for, if it is anything like you say it is, it will amuse and interest the whole of us."

Mrs. Lee. "I see that W. Jennings Demorest, the publisher, 15 East Fourteenth street, New York, is offering to send a Specimen Copy for 10 cents, so we can't lose anything, as each number contains a 'Pattern Order' entitling the holder to any pattern she may choose, and in any size—which alone makes each copy worth 30 cents, and I just want a jacket pattern like Mrs. Allen's. The subscription price is only $2.00 a year, and I must say I can't see how they can publish so elegant a Magazine for so little money."

We will send THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR and the above magazine for $3.00

DECEMBER 20, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: When, oh, when, will our members and the conductors of the country wake up to the idea that it is their duty to protect themselves first, and if anything else is to be done, let those to whom they are under no obligations take care of themselves? Almost daily our members are asked to do something for someone outside of their legitimate line of work. Yes, not only asked, but are doing it, and scarcely a month rolls away without a record being made of the dismissal of a conductor for favoring some one. Again we ask, when and where will it stop? Are we under more obligations to others than to ourselves? Certainly not. Then why jeopardize not only our own living, but that of our families, by such acts? The future of the American conductor depends more upon himself and his own acts than any other one thing. No organization can sustain wrong doing and live, to say nothing of being a benefit to its members. Parading wrongs before the public will not right them. Would that every member would take this matter to his Division and there inaugurate measures to right them, instead of making them common talk for all who are on his line of road. Assertions that the Order cares nothing for its members goes for nothing in face of facts. We do not feel at liberty to print and make public quite all of our business affairs, and of course meet with condemnation from some because we do not, but the Order will not change its course to meet petty objections like these. It is true the more prominent the organization, the more you will find that are willing to condemn. The Order has never assumed that it could operate railway lines or were better judges of their financial capacity than those in charge, and is not in sympathy with such methods; and while we can prove that the acts of others are discriminating against us daily, we can bide our time and by honorable and gentlemanly methods secure the desired result. We are aware that it's much easier to carry forward an undertaking by appealing to the baser passions of men than to their reasoning powers. Yet it is not always the easiest way that gets the permanent results. As a rule, members expect too much of organization, and are willing to give but little to it, in a word "get something for nothing." Great results are only reached by united efforts and in the case of our Order, they can be shown in each case. One member says "the Order has never done anything for me," and when asked if he had ever needed or asked for help said: "No, sir," with great promptness. The results of last month's work were worth thousands of dollars to our members, as they are lasting. Have you any stock in our building? Look it up and see if you do not think it to your interest to invest a few dollars. I am sure you cannot go amiss. Wishing one and all a happy, bright and prosperous New Year,

I am sincerely yours in P. F.

C. S. WHEATON.

CHICAGO, Dec. 1889.

EDITOR: Since writing my last letter to THE CONDUCTOR, I have made quite an extended trip, visiting Divisions 102, 192, 62, 189, 16, 15, 13, 2, 64, 145, 73, 20, 193, 134, 26, 135, 148, 139, 210, 205, 184, 140, 136, and 239, at most of which a meeting was held, but in a few cases business being so good that it was impossible for brothers to get off, and no meeting could be held.

I believe from this time forth a better attendance at the Division meetings will be the result of the new work, as we have now as good a secret work as any organization of our character, and that it is much more interesting than the old, has been acknowledged by the brothers, and I have been told by members all around where I have visited, that they were going to give the Division meetings their attendance in the future, that they are more interested than they have been before, and that they will try and induce other brothers to attend, feeling satisfied that they will be repaid.

Now brothers is a good time to give this matter your individual attention. You have all as Divisions, had your election of officers. Now do you think that by coming once a year to the Division and taking part in such election and paying your dues, that you have done all your duty. I say no, by no means. Your duty has just commenced. You have helped to elect these brothers, it is your duty to give them your assistance; they desire and expect it. You have no right to assume that they, and they alone, can in any sense make the Division a success. That can only be done by the individual members themselves trying to bring about that result. That a great deal depends on the officers, I willingly admit, but you as members, each have a personal responsibility resting on your shoulders, and it is a duty you owe to the Order and to yourself, that you discharge it as becomes a brother. If anything is worth doing, it is worth doing well. So with this; our Order. So long as you retain your membership, your best efforts should be exerted to make it a success. If you are not willing to do this, I believe it is your duty to leave it to those who are willing to do so, by leaving them to themselves. Take yourself away and be satisfied that you have acted in good faith, both to yourself and the Order.

To-morrow I expect to attend a union meeting. These meetings can, I believe, be fruitful of much good, and I only wish that one might be held every Sunday in different sections of the country. I find that brothers in Virginia are quite desirous of having one, and I trust that the G. C. C., will be able to give them an early date.

The past two days have been spent in the south and the latter part of that time amongst the mountains of Virginia. One finds, on awaking after riding all night that he is in a town or city completely hemmed in by mountains, with no way in view of getting out, and it looks as though the only way would be by going out with a ladder. But of course there is a way out as there was in, and we finally found it, at the same time regretting that we had to leave those who had treated us so kindly, but with the satisfaction that we would at some future day return and spend a second day in their midst.

I desire to thank most cordially, all those brothers who so kindly tried to make my stay amongst them so pleasant, and assure them that they succeeded beyond any question.

Yours truly in P. F.,

C. H. WILKINS.

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR: After writing from Marquette, I met with Division 240 there, and had a very pleasant visit with them. Their Division is small in numbers but they are a good working Division. From Marquette I went to Brainerd, where I met with Division 197. We had a good meeting and stayed in session until we were driven from the hall by another organization, who were holding meetings in same hall. This Division has taken in twenty-two new members this year, a showing to be proud of. I was given an invitation to be present at their public installation of officers and ball, on Dec. 16. Of course I would like to go, and equally of course, I cannot.

From Brainerd, I went to Winnipeg and met with 47. The membership of 47, is very large, but they are also very widely scattered. We had a very well attended meeting and a very pleasant little supper after. The members are very hospitable and I made some very pleasant acquaintances, which I hope to have an opportunity to ripen into warm friendship.

For some reason Division 236, at St. Cloud, Minnesota, did not get notice of my arrival and no meeting was arranged. I met brothers Wirt, Snicberger and Patton, with whom I had a pleasant visit, and went on to Minneapolis, to meet with 117. We had a large attendance, between fifty and sixty, and the entire afternoon was spent on the "new work." I am going to meet with 229 next Sunday, 246 Monday, 95 Tuesday, 244 Wednesday, 247 Thursday, 36 Friday, and 132 Sunday. From there I am going home to spend Christmas with my family, having been away from home since November 9th.

Wishing you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy and prosperous New Year,

I am yours in P. F.,

E. E. CLARK.

THE NEW YEAR.

With this number of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR we commence the New Year. For seven months its pages have been under our supervision. Whether we have disappointed our friends and been a plague to our enemies, as far as we are personally concerned, is among the things that are to us, unknown. If we have utterly failed in our endeavor to please our readers, if we have disappointed the hopes of many, who anticipated and expected better things than have been accomplished, then the fault lies entirely with us. For we have had any amount of friendly advice as to how to run a periodical, and it is not because we are stubborn, self-willed or obstinate, that it has not all been followed. On the other hand it would be, and is, our greatest wish to please everyone, and have nothing in its pages but just what every member of the Order desires to see. But, unhappily for us, not for them, among the 15,000 members and 40,000 readers, there are no two that are at all alike; no two think alike. What would and does please one, can not and will not satisfy the other, and were we to try to do as everyone wishes us to do, we would now be an inmate of some lunatic asylum, and some one else would be obliged to wish you all a happy New Year. We have no excuses to offer because the former issues have been no better than they have. Neither promises for the future, more than the plain and simple one that experience should be a great benefit to every person who has undertaken this kind of work. Had the Grand Division placed a sum of money at our disposal with which we could pay a handsome sum to some of the eminent writers of the day, such as all first-class periodicals have to do, our lot would be very easy, and no trouble to compete with the majority of the prominent magazines of the day. But this is not allowed, neither can it be expected, for the reason that the conductors and their families for whom the CONDUCTOR is designed, are not reveling in wealth, and are not able to pay for such luxuries, so we are compelled to do the best we can with the means at our command, and what little faculty we possess in catering to the tastes of the conductors of America. We do, however, really believe one fact; that is, that all that has appeared in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR has been of that nature that no one can complain that it is not moral in its tone, and although the most cutting and smart sayings have not figured either in its friendly communications or editorials, there has on the other hand, been little to offend, and the general tone of all has been that of "Brotherly Love" and "Perpetual Friendship."

For the year 1890 we anticipate that we may be able to draw, not on our imagination, but from some sources that may come to us in our work in the shape of offerings from a few of our personal friends in the railway service whose writings will be read with pleasure by all of our numerous readers. This will, of itself, tend to vary the monotony of some of our reading matter that is kindly tendered us by some of the members of the Order alone.

Brothers, since January last, you have received seven numbers of THE CONDUCTOR'S MONTHLY, and ten of THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR. In the year to come you will receive twenty-four numbers; each year they will have cost you and your family $1.00. Are they worth it? do you begrudge this $1.00? Are they not worth to your children, in years to come, more than one hundred cents? Or, had you and your family rather part with it, and use the dollar for something else? Put it on the basis, even, that it is ever so poorly managed, is there not, even then, a dollar's worth of information in the year's reading? Will the children read the story in the Christmas and the New Year's number and throw it one side and say they are not worth reading. If so, we will impart to you a secret worth knowing. It shall cost you nothing. So you cannot complain of the price if it is good for nothing, and not worthy a place in any respectable magazine. Any one of you please sit up some night, and out of your own knowledge and memory, without borrowing the thoughts or words of others, write one that is a great deal better, and we will gladly publish it; and, aside from all this, write an elegant testimonial that you will not be ashamed to read to your friends and your children. There is not one taint of egotism or pride in our nature. If any member of the Order can write any editorial or worthy communication in better style, in better taste than we can, send them along with lightning speed, and every one will find a place, a worthy place, even if our own be crowded out forever.

But there is one thing you cannot do, my good brothers; you never will do it either—for the very simple reason, "you are not built that way." You can never listen to the words of greeting that have come to us because we have done as well as we have been permitted to, with any less egotism than we have felt. You will never listen to the words of criticism that have been offered by those who little anticipated that secrets are always kept, and still feel the kindest regard for these good brothers, who, having a moments leisure, score the editor because he is the handiest person in the world to dedicate their anathemas to. And they never stop and think: "could I do any better, were I in his place?" And when any of you really believe that you have a heart that will go out to the troubles and suffering, wants and anxieties of your fellow man and brother; one that takes in their frailties and misgivings, and throws around them all, the blessed mantle of charity; one that forgives when forgiveness seems almost to be a falsity; one who lives to see others live to be happy. We say, when you gather about you the thought that you can discount the editor in matters of this kind, quietly lay down the "cue" and say, I will not try, for if you do you will be beaten in the attempt.

So, we offer to you all, our earnest, heartfelt wish, that this New Year may come to you as the happiest and most welcome one of your whole life; that, in the year to come, everyone may feel strengthened to live as a friend and a brother should do, forgiving the faults and follies that you see in a brother; willing to assist him at all times and in all places. Each and everyone resolving to live up to the principles you profess: that the Conductor of America may prosper in all things that bears the stamp of manhood, to the end that prosperity and happiness may crown all his efforts, to the advancement of the Railway employe, no matter what his profession may be.

THE WORK FOR THE YEAR 1890.

As the old year goes out and the new comes in, it is well that every member of the Order of Railway Conductors should arrange some plan that shall be a guide for his conduct, as a brother, for the year to come. Perhaps the first thought that may present itself is this: "Have I attended my Division meetings as often as I might have done in the past?" If one cannot gain any information by doing so, if it is a task for him to spend a couple of hours in the Division room once or twice a month, whereby he can learn many duties as a railway conductor, and assist his companions in all the duties that are required to be performed; if it be a tax on his time and patience, then one thing seems certain beyond a reasonable doubt, either the Division, the Order or the brother is radically wrong. If it be the Division, then your presence is material for its salvation; if it be the Order and its principles which are essential for its prosperity, then you are not doing a brother's part if you are not trying to create a healthy state of affairs therein; if it be your fault because you have no interest in the matter, either way, then it may be necessary and well for us to inquire, of what use are we, individually, as a member of this organization? Then, again, have we been doing our very best, in the past, to live up to its principles as set forth in the Constitution and Statutes, and as promulgated by its teachers, who make no mistake in their definition of what the principles of the Order are designed to be. If any or all of them are right, then he has a sacred duty to perform to live up to them, to the best of his ability. If any or all are wrong, then it is his duty to assist with all his might in eradicating the vicious ones, and in building up in their places live and healthy ones, that are for the best interests of everyone, and not for any particular person.

But, alas! there are so many in every society that sit down and grumble at everything that is attempted, pleased with nothing, finding fault with everything, and doing nothing on earth to bring about a different state of affairs, and help instead of hindering the means to eradicate the evils that they complain of themselves.

In these remarks we have reference solely and alone to the censure of the Grand officers, and all those who are engaged in defining the policy, the work and the perpetuation of the principles of the Order. We have no reference whatever to the invectives hurled by the dissatisfied ones, or for the antagonism that exists against the editor; we have cared about these unpleasant features of the situation; they have worried and bothered us no little, as complaint after complaint has been made or written to, not ourselves, but other brothers, in regard to our inability to successfully perform our part of the work. They do not often write to us to this effect; but make their views known to some other brother, either by letter or word of mouth, seemingly forgetting that, although we have no ability, no tact for any business, still we do have ears to hear with, eyes to see with, and even friends who will "carry the news to Sarah." All that effects us is the fact that all these complaints are made to some one else; we hear and know of them all, but it is not an easy matter to answer a letter directed to some one else. If they would be brotherly enough to write this to ourselves, then there might be an explanation given and we might have a chance to find out what the trouble is, and very likely an improvement might be made, or, at least a better state of feeling arranged, so that the one who feels aggrieved might think differently on the subject. But a person who is smarter than all others can hardly feel satisfied to do this. It is pleasant and more efficacious many times, to impart this information to others, then they feel free to do the same thing, and the "hero" of the battle that is being fought, is, as they suppose, entirely unconscious that any fighting is going on, because the powder they are using is of the "approved pattern" and warranted not to smell. But, alas! the whiz of the bullet is sometimes heard, and the sleepy dreamer awakens in time to find out that a war is being carried on in his own country.

Now, we hope that no brother will for one moment think that there is one word in these remarks that is intended to be personal, or that the cause of them hurts us in the least; for it does not. But that such inconsistency prevails we are fully informed. We simply call them to mind because we are inclined to believe that the principle is wrong. They do not seem to us to be brotherly, neighborly, or Christian-like. We shall try to do our duty to the best of our ability; then, if others find fault, condemn or feel dissatisfied, we cannot help it. But we will say that we really believe that if a brother has a difference of opinion from another, or disagrees with him in any way, that in the majority of cases a better result follows by dealing directly with the offending brother, than trusting, in nearly every case, to a third party. Personally, we have not a particle of feeling in the matter, but these little things are true and they are worthy of being thought of as the resolves and reformations of the New Year are being formed.

I watched the old year go out last night; O, how quiet it seemed to me.

It was only the death of a few, few days, in the round of a century.

A few months of toil and trouble and strife, one spoke in the wheel of time

One platoon of soldiers, tired and weary, that faltered and fell out of line.

It seemed that the life went ebbing fast, that the end was only when

The castle had fallen, the walls had vanished, till the vision of what had been

Died out in its weariness, sank to sleep, without one murmur of pain;

And the only vision that was left of the year, never will come again.

I thought I could hear one sad good bye, just the faintest whispering, gone,

Like the sweet, soft sound of the organ's peal: a bird echo at morning dawn,

A dim, white speck of a fair, bright ship, in the distance, far at sea,

Going down 'neath the waves, and the only sound, "I'll never come back to thee."

Then the light was all gone, of the olden year, and the brightness was far, far away

In the echo of days that never return: only brought back in memory.

You never can bury them, they never die, though the dark clouds overcast;

The memory of days and months and years, never fade, for they always last.

So the old year left us so quietly, faded out all its strength and power.

How sad it seemed it must say good-bye just at the midnight hour.

The end had come, the life run out; The fading of what had been

Was the only semblance of living power that ushered the New Year in.

But it came, the New Year, like all others, one jewel thought just dropped;

That the Old Year went, and the New Year came: but the wheels of time never stopped;

They move right along from day to day; they gather no dust each year,

But rolling by your home and mine, they often leave many a tear

The old, faithful clock, in the sitting room, tick, tick, tick, hear it delve;

But the sound seemed a little bit sad, methought, till the last tick said, its twelve.

Then the calendar seemed to turn round again, '89 no more in sight,

But '90 has taken its usual place, only claiming its own, in the right.

And the hours went on so quietly, till the light of morning came,
And the sun shown out in its majesty, a golden sheet of flame;

And we wandered forth 'mid the busy crowd, and we heard the merry cheer

As the children sang, in childish voice, I wish you a Happy New Year.

So we joined in the chorus with might and main, let it ring to the spires so tall,

Let it reach the hearts of the poor and lonely, a Happy New Year to all.

May the kindly words be felt alway, may it give you a welcomecheer,

Though a sigh roll by for the death of the Old, one laugh for the new, new year.

May your sorrows be less than they ever have been, friends more loving and true,

May the blessings of life be multiplied, the sky more radiant and blue;

May the Home, Love, Life, of everyone, grow brighter till you reach the end:

Is the kindest wish, the most beautiful thought I can offer, as a dear, dear friend.

E. H. B.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

Railroading once more, yet only in memory. But as the old year goes out and the new one comes in if we have a heart that is humane, and a perception that is not blunted, with a bit of the old love left that goes out in kindness toward those with whom we have been associated for more than a quarter of a century, it is natural to recall, at this time, these old associations and live over again the scenes and incidents of the past, as they come to us once again. It is very probable that many, very many of our readers may think that we might better employ our time in writing something that would be interesting to you all. We have labored faithfully to do so in every other article that we have written, so we kindly ask you to bear patiently with this as it is the only portion of a holiday that we have had, or will have, and there are many, very many who will read this and will realize that they have not been entirely forgotten, although, time changeth many a one; and new pursuits findeth new friends and the old ones often forgotten or neglected.

So we will commence with Brother Wiers, for he is so very thin that the winds of December may pierce his form so that it may be too scant for a photograph, as he passes from one coach to another on Nos. 1 and 2, honest old John Ripley following in the wake, with hopes and tears that the good shepherd may be a little more kind to the little flock than he ever has been before. And here comes Uncle Powell, who has spent a life time on the Northwestern, with a new one on the "Q," and if he has any enemies they are ashamed to own it. Scott Dewey on 13 and 14; we have lived as neighbors for 27 years; been friends, and as far as we are concerned ever shall be. Frank Murray, not quite as old, but just as happy, and every time he can gather a crowd around him they are happy too. Charley Johnston: the ladies say he is handsome; and if we were to contradict them, many a fair one never would read THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR again—his good wife included. And his partner, Neal Ruggles; we can only remember his good qualities, and if he ever had any other, we never knew them; but he will never grow old to us; for there are a few things in this life, that circumstances and time never change; and although he has never married yet, it may be possible, that his good old father and mother, as they sit by their fireside, 'neath the hills in the good old mountain state, may still be thinking of the love he bears toward them. Frank Reese comes walking through the car as stately as a king, and some one might whisper: "he is proud and stuck up;" but as long as his friends think differently, little will he care. But yet, we know he is, yes, proud—of his wife and little daughter; yes, stuck on them both. And old Tom Hartman run on the Dubuque till his hair turned gray, and he knew every one, from Chicago to the Mississippi; and then they changed him off; but this did not break his heart. But there came a blow, when the reaper, Death, came along, and took for one of his sheaves, the fair-haired daughter, and never said, "with your permission Tom:" Ed. Poole is not forgotten in the list, and if it were not that the Aurora correspondent has told of his worth in this issue better than we can, we would say more. And Frank O'Neil, whose heart is twice as big as his body; he never chews "Fast Mail," but he runs it well. "May his shadow never grow less," and it cannot very much. So, here's a health to good old times, Frank. Frank Hughes, the sage of (not Canada) but "Downers Grove," "Have your tickets ready, please." Meets a drunken lout who says: "Haint no money nor ticket, Frank." "Go to thunder, I'll put you off at Saluda." Business first, last and always. And Ed. Degroot, the "blonde." If three and four won't make your hair curl, then you can throw your curling irons in "the scrap pile." Then there are Rossiter, Cone, Chase, Crane, Slossen, "the irrepressible Sep," and full, rosy cheeked Judd, a little younger, but none of them babes in the railway service. Horace Dodd, three D's, he ought to be Dr. of Divinity, of Laws, and all other institutions of D's.

And Dudley, Ed, here is the King B., he can remember when Col. Hammond was a baby; one of the old forty-niners, he goes back further than Lossing does in his history of "Who Discovered America," a trifle stiff and lame, but "still in the ring," and going to Rochester. And Ayers, not hard nor soft, but just Shell; "The Hunter of the Gang." Happy New Year to you and yours, J. K. P. Howland, or more naturally, Jim, with a heart that goes out and takes in the misfortunes of all. Frary, round the horn each day he goes. Mike Mount, about as near heaven as earth; he never was very fleshy, but good timber all the way through. Then the two Cunning boys, Aleck and Bill "Fox," upright, honest and big-hearted, and an ornament to any profession. Merrill, he ought to be a good conductor for his father was a railroad man before him. Billy McGowen, of the narrow gauge, he has no peer in any service. Lucas, well we will listen to some new Peoria story in the future, Charley. Richardson, Jim, James L. would not sound natural; a time card in one pocket, a Grand Army card in another, a few "Post" tickets further down, and a recommendation for a lucrative position in another. And we would not forget his great, big-hearted brother, who has gone where the flowers bloom all the fairer, and where the winter never comes. Ed. Flinn, who by-and-by, can sing of his run, "Listen to the same old story;" and we would not for the world forget that good, quiet gentleman, Colliver, no less worthy than any other, with the quiet Willard, as he goes along in the path of duty.

And we have not forgotten, nor do we think any the less of the long array of toiling freight men, but space forbids at this time. However, some other day you will not be forgotten. But excuse us if we do, in a friendly manner say one word in remembrance of poor Johnny Hart. He cannot hear one word we say, and the adversities of this life have no terror for him, for he sleeps, sweetly sleeps, beyond the river.

So we have remembered you as the old year dies out, and while we are but a poor writer, yet all remember that our memory is very good and we have for you, one thought, a "Happy New Year."

TO ALL WHO ARE INTERESTED.

One of the most important questions that will undoubtedly be brought to the notice of the Grand Division at its next session, will be that of our Mutual Benefit Department. The pages of THE CONDUCTOR are open for a wide and free discussion in regard to our laws as they are at present, or any changes anyone may deem best to suggest for the better working of the department. There are a number of members that we could name who are capable of presenting plans for a more secure solution of this important question than has, as yet, been presented. If they will kindly do their whole duty in this matter, we shall be more than pleased. If not we may only deem it right and advisable to call them by name. We sincerely trust this may not become necessary; but that everyone who is holding clear and distinct views of his own as to the right method of upholding this branch of the work, will at once come to the front and do their duty in this matter. They come to us and write to us personally, and tell us, and define the right way. Now, this will not do because it is not the right way to do. The right way is to present your views where they will be heard by the delegates to the next Grand Division; so that they can go there prepared to act intelligently on the best plan that has been submitted. This is the right way to do; this is the brotherly way to act, instead of lagging back in the dark and railing against the present laws, as insufficient for our future wants. If the brothers whom we have in our mind will do this we will feel very much obliged to them. We will admire them more and more and they will think ever so much more of themselves, although their plan may not be adopted and some better one may. We dislike to make a publicity of these brothers names; will not do it if such a thing can be avoided. Yet, if worst comes to worst we shall be obliged to, because it is justice, simple justice, that every member does his duty and on an important question at issue, like this, it is a crime to withhold your opinions that are essential to the welfare of the Order. We are perfectly aware that many of our readers will carelessly say: well, this is pretty plain talk. Yes, this is true, and one thing more is just as true as this. The age that we now live in is an era of plain talk and the one who indulges in it and is honorable and honest in what he says, and will carry out his views regardless of fear or favor, is the coming man in political or social circles. Any person that unites with any society with the end in view that the space his name occupies on the roll of membership, or the room his form may occupy in the chair he sits in (providing he has any influence or any thoughts of his own) is a compliment or a blessing to that organization, was never more mistaken in all his life. The people that make this world, the ones that bring life into everything; that make it better, and gives it a healthy growth, are the live ones of this world; it is not the dead ones and the drones. And this principle is just as pertinent to our social life as it is to any other phase that you may see fit to put it. Of course everyone realizes one fact that cannot be gainsayed; this is that some are endowed with more brains and better flow of speech than many others. Still, the one who has neither of these gifts to any great extent, can, with a little more force put forth, do something to make a showing. He can at least get up and say that he cannot do much. That it is impossible. That is praiseworthy from the fact that when he has done even this much, the ones that do the work know just how much to depend on him; he has done one thing that is honorable and honest, his position has, at least, been defined.

But it is not this class that we wish particularly to speak about in this article; it is the brother who is competent to bear his part in the strife; who knows himself that he is, and everyone else is aware of the fact. But, instead of doing it, he does not exactly like the way things are going so he sits back in his good old armed chair and grumbles at what we are doing, and everyone else, and grows mighty wise in the knowledge of all things, and first you know there comes an obituary notice that the brother has died with brain disease; when, if in life he had occasionally tapped that brain and let out a little of his knowledge for the benefit of others it would have been a great deal better for the society to which he belonged, his life would have been spared many years to his family, and he might never have died of "congestion of the brain."

New, we have in our mind a large number of these brothers; good brothers, you ask. Most certainly they are; but they are dying a slow and painful death because they are all the time complaining, and although that is hard work they feel that it is too much of an effort to get up and propose some way that is better than the road we are traveling in. So in all questions, important ones that come up for discussion, that are necessary to the life and the health of the order, rather than open their mouths to advance an idea that might divulge some plan that would save the patient, they sit quietly still and never say a word when awake, only to grumble when they sleep. They lie on their backs and snore for fear that some one else will not know or feel that they are dissatisfied with themselves as well as with others.

We like a live man for a partner in any business. It is preferable to a corpse every time. No matter if you do once in a while make a mistake, show your hand; come out of the bushes; show your hand if it is only a pair. Muster up a little courage; draw to them; be somebody and then we will know that you are alive.

So we admonish these brothers to express their views on the important needs of the Order, on all subjects. Bring them up in your Division meetings; talk over and about them; send your communications to THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR; come out of the slough. Do something for your country and we will not be obliged to publish your names. And lastly; act as brothers. "Do as you would be done by." You will be happier, so will we, and everybody else.

THE WHEREWITHAL.

Our readers should interest themselves in the two Page Bank Portfolio with its seven words and thirty-one definitions, advertised in another column by the Wherewithal Manufacturing, Publishing Company, Girard Building, Philadelphia. It deserves the consideration of everyone. A little faith and a little more investigation on their part, would demonstrate the value of this invention and lead one to wonder why it has not more rapidly become universally used.

Every father and mother, son and daughter and school committees particularly, should look into this help to education.

A man, or any one, who, for any cause is deficient in education, will find in the Wherewithal, means to quickly supply his or their deficiencies if the battle is on for good education, (and we think it is) then there is a system of which we know of and, having tested, say it is good and true for all time to come, a wonder worker indeed.

The factories of the Dueber Watch Case Manufacturing Company and the Hampden Watch Company, at Canton, O., are the largest in the world, and the only establishment where complete watches are manufactured upon the same grounds, in the same locality and by the same firm. The great success of these two factories, rests upon two well known maxims, which have been successfully applied to the manufacture of The Dueber Hampden Watches, ever since the commencement of their business.

First: "What is worth doing is worth doing well." No watch case or watch movement has ever been allowed to leave the factory unless complete in every particular, and with that excellence of manufacture and attention to detail, which is characteristic of the Dueber Hampden Watches.

Second: "Honesty is the best policy." All watch cases bearing the name "Dueber" and their various trade marks, have always been, are now and always will be exactly as represented. The purchaser of a watch unless he is well posted in the different trade marks and stamps, which are printed upon the various styles and makes of watches, sold by dealers throughout the country, is often at a loss to determine as to the quality and value of the watch he is buying, as very often the stamps and trade marks are not always a guarantee that the watch is what they indicate; but we wish to say that the name "Dueber," and the trade mark, an anchor or a shield has never been placed upon any low karat watch cases of any description. This is equally true of the trade mark of The Hampden Watches. In short these goods have never been manufactured with an intent to deceive the public in any way and the well known name "Dueber" and the Hampden trade marks, upon a watch, has always been a guarantee throughout the trade, for a genuine article and no attempt at fraud or chicanery. The Dueber Hampden Watches are manufactured from the very best materials, by the most skilled workmen, in a thorough and workman like manner and superior style. They have attained a national reputation, and purchasers find the advantage of supplying themselves with an honest standard watch case and watch movement. Railroad men, especially, in buying a Dueber Hampden watch, will be sure, if they purchase a Hampden Watch which is marked "Adjusted" that it is actually what it is claimed to be, and not simply adjusted in name only.

The splendid record which Dueber Hampden Watches have given upon many thousand engines, amongst multitudes of train hands, etc., throughout the United States is the best evidence of their high and superior quality and the perfect satisfaction which they have given their owners. The frontage of the factories where the Dueber-Hampden watches are made at Canton, O., is 1,400 feet. The buildings are made of pressed brick, three, and some five stories in height, filled with the finest and latest improved and most perfect watch and watch case making machinery ever made. The Dueber-Hampden Co., do not make any of the so-called cheap watches, which are advertised so extensively through the medium of catalogues, and through schemes of giving them away by grocers, tobacconists and soap dealers, but can always be found on sale with all first-class and reliable jewelers and watch makers throughout the United States and Canada. If you wish to buy a watch, buy a Dueber-Hampden. It is well known to railroad men, that this journal is not inclined to deal in fulsome nuffery of any article advertised in its columns, but at the same time it always gives us pleasure to note the progress that modest merit is sure to obtain.

Brother Henry Reed, a prominent member of Division No. 42, Trenton, Mo., dropped in among us a few days ago, in company with his old friend Shekelton, of 58; they ran opposite each other on the Rock Island for several years. Brother Reed's home is at Trenton, and he has left the service of the Rock Island for the same reason that the majority of the good railway conductors lose their situations; made one little mistake and rather than keep a man who has served for years and years and never before the scratch of the pen against him, he is dropped like a poisonous adder. And someone who is untried, or one whose record is ten fold worse is substituted for him. It matters not how hard the official axe may fall, or how deep the wound, nothing counts but dismissal. One may not be able to obtain a position for years. Nothing is thought of that by some. They must suffer in order that the service may be purified. Good word, happy thought, but O, how far-fetched.

We cannot tell when we have had our sympathy awakened more keenly and deeply than upon the occasion of reading a note received by the Grand Secretary and Treasurer from Brother Frank Rosencrans. "With a sad heart I write to tell you of the death of my son George," says the brother. Were truer words ever uttered? Only one line, only sixteen words, but a whole volume contained therein, yes, a book. Not only the story, a sad story, but the feelings and experiences are all described in this one simple line. So we go on through life; at first the bush is covered with beautiful, full-grown roses, but first we know a change appears, and one droops a little and finally drops off, and the next, and at last all are gone: by and by the poor old bush itself will die. But it is the dropping off of the roses that pains us most: so, we ask of you, kindly, brother, to accept our sympathy, for we have had all the experience. We know just how you and yours feel, and we tender you the sympathy of every member of the Order.

To the Minister's.

He—Now, dearest, that we are out for a walk, is there any place you are particularly desirous of going to? I am at your service.

She (shyly)—Yes, George, I would like to go to that big white house over on the next corner.

He—All right, dear. Some friend of yours lives there, I suppose.

She—Yes, George, the minister.

He "caught on"—Yonker Blunder.

The Puzzled Gentleman From Japan.

A distinguished Japanese official visited New York recently, and a member of the municipal government, who had been in Japan and can speak the language of that country, undertook to show him around.

"Is that an officer making an arrest?" asked the Japanese, as he saw a man stop a milk wagon.

"Not exactly," replied the official. "He is a milk inspector, and his duty is, under the law, to see that no impure milk is sold in the city. If the milk is all right he will let the milk man pass on; otherwise he will arrest him."

"What is impure milk?"

"Milk that has been mixed with chalk or water."

"Is the chalk a poison?"

"Oh, no; it impairs the quality; that is all."

"Does water in milk make anybody sick?"

"Why, of course not. But when a person pays for milk he wants milk, not water, which he can get for little or nothing when he desires it. It is a swindle on the public to put water in milk."

"But you say no one is hurt by it?"

"Feelings are hurt, that is all."

Soon after they passed a low corner saloon, when the door opened and a man came staggering out tripped, struck his head against a lamp post and fell heavily on the sidewalk, where he lay as one dead.

"What is the matter with that man?" asked the foreigner from Japan.

"Full of benzine," replied the municipal officer, with a look of disgust.

"Benzine? what is that?"

"It is the name we have in this country for poor liquor—poison whisky, you understand?"

"Is there any good whisky?"

"Oh, yes; there is good whisky, but some saloons can make more money selling bad whisky."

"Bad whisky is poison?"

"Deadly poison, sometimes."

"Has the man a license to sell whisky, same as the milkman has to sell milk?"

"Of course, or he could not carry on the business."

"And do they inspect the whisky as you do the milk?"

"Never."

"Yet there may be poison in it, while milk is adulterated with chalk or water that does no harm in particular, you say."

"Ahem," said the city official, twisting about uneasily, "let us look at the markets."

At the markets they found officials inspecting the meat that was for sale.

"What do they do that for?" asked the Japanese.

"To see that the meat is healthy," was the reply.

"If a man should eat a piece of unhealthy meat would he stumble on the sidewalk, and split his head against a lamp post, as the man did coming out of the saloon? Would watered milk make him do it?"

"Why, certainly not."

"Yet you inspect meat and milk, and let men sell poisoned whisky that kills people as much as they please. I can not understand your country."

And we ask. Who can?—Texas Siftings.

No Socks.—"Phat are yiz given Nora this year for a Christmas present, Mrs. O'Flynn?"

"Faith an' she's gettin' a sale-skin sock."

"An is that so? Musha! its the divil a sock you wore at all, at all, Mrs. O'Flynn, whin you and I were bits of coleens in Connemara."

A WOMAN OF INFLUENCE.—"Pat."

"Well, what is it? Don't be disturbin' me, Mary. Ay'm figurin' out me chances of gittin' on the force."

"Is she onny relation of yours, this Patty, that do be makin' so much money singing?"

"How much does she make?"

"Shure an' it's a thousand dollars a night, I don know."

"That bein' the case, Mary, she's me first cousin be the mother's side. I'll go an' see what infloence she has wid the Commissioners."

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., JANUARY 15, 1890.

NO. 2.

THE ST. GOTTHARD.

This mountain, so often named lately, and far-famed on account of the gigantic work of having a tunnel cut through it, is not, as many suppose, an isolated elevation, but, on the contrary, a mighty central group which separates the Canton of Uri to the North, from the Canton of Tessin to the South, with branches shooting out eastward toward the mountain giants of the Grisons, and westward into the Valais. Out of this group there arise about twenty separate mountain peaks, of which the highest, (above the level of the sea) are: Pizzo Valetta, 2540 met.; Pizzo Orsino (Peak of Usern, or Winterhorn) 2667 m; Schipsius, 2677 m; Ywerberhorn, 2678 m; Pizzo dell Uomo, 2688 m; Sella, 2706 m; Greno di Prosa, 2738 m; Fibbia, 2742 m; Sasso di St. Gottardo (Gotthard Stone) 2760 m; Blauberg, 2816 m; Pizzo Lucendro, 2977 m; Kastelhorn, 2960 m; Pizzo Centrale (Tritthorn) 3003 m; Leckihorn, 3053 m; Pizzo Fieudo, 3082 m; and Pizzo Rotondo, the chief of this lofty company, 3197 m.

The plateau forming the base of the above named peaks is watered by 27 lakelets interspersed among the mountain throng. Between them a saddle shaped valley, bordered with huge masses of rock, has formed, which is called the Gotthard pass and rendered passable by a high-road.

The central group encloses seventeen other Alpine valleys and nine glaciers; from it descend the Ticino and the Reuss taking rise in the lakes of Sella and Lucendro.

The heights of St. Gotthard not only separate the waters, but have been since time immemorial the boundary of nationality and language between the north and south; between the passionate population of the Livinen valley and the tenacious, stern and warlike inhabitants of the Canton of Uri.

The St. Gotthard is remarkable with regard to geognosy and mineralogy, being composed of metamorphosed sediment strata and built up of granite, mica-gneiss, slate and limestone, as well as on account of its rich vegetation and animal world. Marmots, alpine hares and whole herds of chamois live in its ravines; eagles have their eyries on its rocky ledges and white grouse and snow-finches build their nests on its slopes.

The strata of the St. Gotthard are often penetrated by so-called "geodes," or slides, the walls of which shine with the brilliancy of the finest crystals, of quartz and adularia lying embedded among the soft flakes of chlorite (velvet tale). Such geodes or crystal-caves are searched by men specially practised in this work, called "Strahlers." Moreover, in the St. Gotthard, is found crystalline calc or cipolin which had already been used by the Romans for monumental buildings, black slate-clay with impressions of sea-weed, besides Sericit slate, horn-blend, (amphibole), serpentine, pentagine, dolomite, decomposed trapp, red sparry-fluor, smoky-topaz, tourmaline, cyanite, garnet and talc.

The pass of the St. Gotthard does not seem to have been known at the time of the Romans, as there is no indication anywhere as to its having served for a passage. Cæsar's armies, for instance, went over the Mount Cenis and the St. Bernhard. The Longobards—a tribe related to the Saxons and formerly inhabiting the regions of Hannover and Altmark of to-day—are said to have been the first who, in 568, went over the St. Gotthard to Italy, after having invaded the peaceful valleys of the Halvetians. Possibly the watch-tower which still crowns the height above the Reuss and bears the name of Longobard's Tower, had been built as a defence against them. The first authentic information about the passing over the St. Gotthard, dates from the Crusades. There was no inn there at that time, for when the Count of Brienz in 1107 and King Baldwin IV, in 1184, returned home from their pilgrimage to Palestine, they complained that no hospitable roof had sheltered them. Still later, when bitter feuds broke out between the inhabitants of the different valleys on the plateau between the lakes with regard to the right of transporting merchandise, there was no building to afford shelter or protection. Tradition says, that in the 12th century the Benedictine Abbey of Disentis erected a chapel on the mountain in honor of Bishop Godehardus of Hildesheim (died 1038), and thus gave rise to the present name of the mountain. In ancient times it was called Mons Elvelinus, and afterwards Ursara. In 1317 Azzo Visconti, Duke of Milan, had a small hospice built up there, "on account of deliverance from the pains of gount, and in honor of the holy Gotthard;" and it is certain, that in 1374, a hospice with a chapel was existing on the height of the pass.

This first hospice, in 1431, sheltered the highest Italian church dignitaries when they undertook the difficult task of crossing the mountain on their way to the Council of Easle. 1478 it was visited by the leaders of the Confederate troops, Bubenbergh and Waldman—the latter Burgomaster of Zurich, condemned and executed by the people in 1489—on the occasion of their expedition to Bellinzona. At that time an avalanche, rolling down on the south side of the hospice, into the Val Tremola, buried sixty warriors from Zurich in the abyss.

Carlo Borromeo, Archbishop of Milan, and one of the most bitter enemies of the reformation, caused the building to be enlarged in 1560 and founded a living for a priest. In the place of the old refuge house which had been heavily damaged in course of time and bad weather, a new building was set up, 1629, and two Capuchin monks from Milan were installed there in 1642. Forty years later, when the Turks had invaded Austria and put to flight a great many monks, twenty-four of them, of the Capuchin order, came to settle in the hospice. At that time there was a great traffic on the mountain. Not only merchants, learned men and pilgrims took advantage of the pass, but bands of strongly-built mountaineers from the "Inner Canton" went over into Italy, either to serve in the army or to earn a living as door-keepers or guards. From the south there came mendicant Friars, artists, and particularly the so-called Venetians, or crystal-searchers, who passed over the mountain to seek their fortune in Switzerland and in the holy Roman empire. People at that time had no idea of the beauty and the deep mysterious poetry of the alpine highlands. They thought the heights and precipices inhabited by monsters and goblins, and made their last will, before crossing the sombre mountain regions in the greatest possible haste.

On the the night of April 10th, 1775, the hospice was entirely destroyed by an avalanche; the chapel, custom house and stables shared the same fate. Voluntary contributions collected in Italy, Germany and in Switzerland made it possible to begin a new building in 1777; two years later a three storied house and ware-house were ready. Two Capuchin monks lived there and devoted themselves with the utmost diligence to the difficult task of bringing help and succor to the needy.

Wealthy travelers, who passed over the mountain, and the inhabitants of the neighboring valleys gave alms and presents to the well deserving monks, who certainly made the best use of them. People of rank, for whom there were some beds always in readiness, made it a point of honor to pay for the accommodation afforded them as bountifully as possible. Besides these Capuchin monks there was at the hospice an innkeeper appointed by the parish of Airolo, and his family. This man had as difficult a task as the friars. He had to admit travelers of every rank and to feed and lodge them gratuitously; sick people had to be nursed until they were able to be taken to the hospitals at Hospenthal or Airolo. While the weather was rough, a bell was continually rung at the hospice, and the innkeeper and the monks by turns went out into the barren, rocky wilderness, amidst snow-storms and dense fogs to relieve the unfortunate wanderers. Surely, countless acts of heroism have thus, unnoticed, been performed in the course of time by these unassuming and disinterested men.

In other matters too, the innkeeper and his servants had many services to render to the travelers; thus he was bound to help the owners of the beasts of burden to unload and reload them, without demanding payment.

The community of Airolo used to let the inn and the hospice to the highest bidder for a yearly rent (1775 to 1769). The innkeeper made his profits partly off the inn, partly off the pasturage grounds allotted to him, whereon he might feed forty-five cows and between eighty and ninety goats. Besides, he possessed the right of hunting for ten days during the season in the Valley of Ursern, and a share in the amount of the yearly collection in favor of the hospice. In addition to these advantages there arose the circumstance that in the 17th and 18th centuries part of "those French pensions" was set apart for the St. Gotthard hospice and amicably shared between the innkeeper and the monks.

Unfortunately, the new buildings were not destined to be of long service to humanity, for in 1799 they were laid waste and destroyed by the French "for reasons of strategy."

Already in 1755 the surroundings of the hospice had been the theatre of a combat.

The inhabitants of the Livinen Valley rose up against the oppression of Uri; on May 8th 1755 the bailiff sent by Uri, James Anthony Gamma who died in 1770 was taken prisoner with his custom house officers and from that time the pass of the St. Gotthard became an important strategical point.

The embittered populace of Livinen acted upon the advice of some valiant leaders and occupied the then existing hospice as well as the pass. One hundred men were stationed as sentries in and around the building.

On May 13th, one thousand men of Uri marched through the Urnerloch into the Ursern valley, there formed into companies and the next day they had already mastered the hospice and the pass. Heavy rains and snow storms prevented their further advance, and thus it happened that the peaceable hospice served for sometime as headquarters to a troop of soldiers and as starting point for military operations.

On May 21st, 700 men of Unterwalden arrived at the hospice and after a short council of war, 100 of them were left in the garrison there to ensure the safety of the retreat.

On May 22d, 1755, the troops of Uri and Unterwalden entered Airolo and heavy judgment was passed on the rebels in the valley of Livinen, which, as well as the hospice, again were taken possession of by Uri.

In the history of modern wars the St. Gotthard has been noted for the struggles between the French, the Russians and the Austrians, and particularly for the famous expedition of Souwaroff over the Alps. Army divisions with horses and great guns, either on their retreat, or in order to attack the enemy in the rear, in that year passed over narrow mountain paths, which until that time had only been trodden by chamois hunters, mountain herdsmen or haymakers from almost inaccessible plots of grazing land, the only men who in such places never felt giddy.

The French, with their constant proclamations of liberty, equality and fraternity, after devastating the country of Unterwalden, like robbers and incendiaries, had also invaded Uri. The mountaineers resisted manfully, but had to submit in silent despair. About the middle of May, 1799, the French under General Soult, advanced over the St. Gotthard and fought in the valley of Livinen against the Austrians and the inhabitants of the Tessin who had taken up arms. On May 19th, the French division in the garrisons, under General Suchet, were driven back over the Oderalp pass. Those commanded by Lecourb were beaten by the Austrians under General Haddik. The Austrian eagle advanced victoriously and stormed the Devil's bridge on the 29th, under General St. Julien, thus on June 6th, Uri was freed from the French. But instead of following up these advantages, the Austrians remained inactive in the valley of the Reuss, to the great vexation of 5000 armed mountaineers eager for warlike exploits. In the meantime the French had gathered strength, attacked the Austrian army on August 14th, from the lake and from every side path, threw it back after a hard fight and drove it toward the defile of the Schollinen. Here the Austrians had occupied a strong position near the Devil's bridge, Aug. 17th, and now defended it with the courage of despair, but in vain; they could not resist the French charge and had to give up the bridge, first blasting one of its side arches. However this did not keep the French soldiers, elated with victory, back. They scrambled down into the foaming abyss of the Reuss and up again on the other side amidst a shower of bullets and before night-fall they were again masters of Uri. The mountaineers had marched off with the Austrians; the whole country lay waste and desolate. Suddenly, in September, like an unexpected flash of lightning, the old field-marshal Souwarow appeared with a Russian army of 25,000 men and 5,000 horse at the south foot of the St. Gotthard. A small force belonging to Lecourbe's division opposed him, but could not hold out against him and retreated into the narrow Val Tremola. Their firing was so well directed that the Russian grenadiers would not advance. On hearing this, the old warrior, Souwarow had a hole dug in the ground, and declared he would make it his grave if his "children" should turn back. The courage of the Russians was rekindled by these words, and with an audacious enthusiasm almost amounting to fury, they threw themselves upon the enemy, repulsed him, and gained the summit of the pass. (Sept. 25th). This success was partly brought about by a move of General Schweikowski, who had advanced by difficult alpine paths and through the valley of Sorescia taking the enemy in the flank. In remembrance of this victory the field-marshal caused the words, "Souwarow victor" to be engraved on the granite rocks. When the Russians arrived at Andermatt which had been abandoned, there was great danger of their dying of hunger from absolute want of provisions; they cut up dried animal skins and cooked them. The flesh of dead horses was a feast to them, and when they found a large provision of soap in a store-room, it was devoured as a treat. Tradition even says, that a whole box of tallow candles fell a victim to Russian appetites.

After the bloody drama of 1799, that reached its climax on the St. Gotthard pass in the destruction of the then existing building, the eye of the wanderer for years and years met nothing but desolate ruins and decay.

In 1833, the following description gave a sad idea of the whole state of things: "Since the events of the war in 1799 this philanthropic establishment has ceased to exist, the buildings have been the prey of wild destruction. Now there is nothing but a sort of a shed for the beasts of burden as well as merchants' wares. It is generally hoped, that pains will be taken to restore the hospice."

The political circumstances had greatly changed since 1799. The newly created Canton of Tessin had become a rightful member of the Swiss Federal State; within its boundaries were situated the remains of the building which had formerly afforded succor and shelter.

A new road had been constructed in the place of the old mule tracks used since the time of Charlemagne. In consequence of the increased traffic over the pass, and the local dangers and inadequate shelter it was absolutely necessary to provide a new house of refuge. The former custom house, a solid construction situated close to the lake (Lago Grande) was restored and fitted up in order to serve as a hospice, which it does until the present day. On the opposite side of the road the hospice was built, and in 1869, the plain but solid Hotel du Monte Prosa, In the midst of the desolate landscape that, on account of its want of vegetation, reminds one of the arctic regions, this establishment, including post and telegraph offices and containing excellent air stoves, is a worthy representative of modern times.

The simple, yet good and comfortable arrangements of this mountain inn are agreeably balanced by the very moderate prices. The traveler arriving by the diligence during the winter months is highly pleased to get a tumbler of grog or a cup of beef tea, for the sum which the owners of the refreshment rooms down in the plains to the north and south might take for an example.

The inn-keep of the Hotel du Monte Prosa, has, like his predecessors for centuries, the care of the administration and the cooking of the hospice.

Latterly there have been about 15,000 persons yearly received at the hospice and about 25,000 rations of bread, soup, and warm refreshing drinks dealt out. In January, 1865, an unusually heavy fall of snow blocked up the road to such a height that it was completely impassable, and more than a hundred persons had to be lodged and fed for eight or nine days.

Almost every winter it happened that on account of the snow drifts, avalanches, etc., numerous travelers were taken up for the space of five days, or even a week. They were for the most part poor Italian laborers who sought the hospitality of the hospice on their way to and from work.

The name of the present inn-keeper at the hospice, Felix Lombardi, who, aided by his wife, has in most noble and benevolent manner exerted himself and earned the thanks of many thousands, will for this reason remain honorably mentioned long after the hospice will have become a lonely, abandoned house.

The hospice of the St. Gotthard as well as the Hotel Monte Prosa, are the highest permanent habitations in the St. Gotthard group of mountains, and must always have been anything but a light task, to spend one's days year by year, up there on the threshold of the sunny, luxuriant south, in the midst of an arctic region, surrounded by dangers, with the misery of the destitute always in sight.

The St. Gotthard, or rather the neighborhood of the hospice, in spite of the complete want of antiquities or remains of ancient buildings, has in former times repeatedly been chosen as the subject of learned treatises, as is proved by still existing writings.

In 1781 at Zurich, the learned General Baron, of Zulauben, published a dissertation, written in French, wherein he tried to prove "that the Tauriscans were the first to people the land of Uri, and that they adored the sun as a deity on the top of the St. Gotthard mountain."

According to the most recent measurements, the hospice is situated 2093 m. above the sea, while the culminating point of the pass, forming the boundary between Uri and Tessin, rises to 2114 m.

The road over the St. Gotthard was at first nothing but a most primitive footpath. In 1353 it was enlarged to the width of four metres and paved with large granite boulder stones, thus attaining the dignity of a mule track and bridle path, called "saumpath" in German (three hundred weights made one "saum," that is "seam" or measure; therefore a horse laden with three hundred, was called "saum" or "sumpter horse.") The distance from Fluelen to Bellinzona was done in four days by sumpter horses when the weather was favorable. The first to drive over the St. Gotthard in a coach was the English mineralogist, Greville, July 25th, 1775. The attempt cost him 28 carolins (Louis d'ors.) In 1793, another Englishman set out on the same bold journey, which took him seven days from Altorf to Magadino. The subsequent coaching expeditions always cost 24 carolins (547 frs.) Yet in those times this road was the favorite passage from Germany to Italy. 16,000 persons and 9,000 horses made use of it year by year. The beasts of burden transported yearly on an average 20,000 bales of goods which yielded about 20,000 florins of transit duty to the Canton of Uri.

The construction of the roads over the Bernhardino and Splugen, by the Grisons, obliged the inner or central Cantons also to undertake the making of a new road, lest they should lose the valuable transit trade. The present road was constructed between the years 1820 to 1824 and 1828 to 1830. Its gradient on the north side as far as Goschenen, is not very considerable, about 4 to 7 per cent. Through the defile of Schollinen to the Urnerloch, and from Hospenthal to the summit it averages 7 to 10 per cent.

The difficulties of the declivity from the summit to Val Tremola, could scarcely have been mastered, if the gradient had not been brought down to six per cent. by the construction of numerous turnings formed by expressly built strong walls.

The breadth of the road is throughout, six metres (18 feet.) The costs amounted to 280,000 frs. (old coin) for the distance from Amsteg to Goschenen, and 400,000 frs. for the upper part. The expenses of building were to be covered by shares emitted by the Canton of Uri. The government of the Canton of Lucerne answered for a sum of 240,000 frs. The government of Lucerne also appealing to the "Tagatzung" on behalf of Uri, the latter was allowed an increase of transit duty for 33 years. For the upper part of the road from Goschene to the frontier of the Canton of Tessin 400,000 frs. had to be found. Lucerne guaranteed this amount as well to the shareholders, and had to advance to Uri half of the interest and the capital of the loan.

The St. Gotthard is scarcely ever practicable for coaches before June; in the winter it is sometimes impossible to cross it at all, for months, on account of the snow. After the enormous snowfall in 1863 the snow is said to have lain to the height of thirty metres (90 feet) in the Val Tremola. During the last few years 60,000 travelers going by diligence, have generally crossed the St. Gotthard in the course of a twelve months. To our days it has been reserved to substitute for the ingenious road over the pass a modern railroad, by boring through the centre of the Alps, and constructing boldly devised gigantic viaducts.

When the first train came rushing through the new road of communication and the shrill whistle of the engine woke the echo in the narrow, rocky ravines of St. Gotthard, people thought that now the hospice would become a "quiet house" and soon remain desolate; but the summer of 1882 has proved the contrary. Attracted by the beauty of the road, thousands have crossed the pass, and the Hotel Monte Prosa often was so densely crowded that some tourists had to content themselves with a couch of hay.

NOTE. Metre: 39.37 inches. Franc: 19 cts. Carolin (Louis d'or), $4.84. Hospice: A place of refuge or entertainment for travelers on some difficult road or pass, as among the Alps, kept by monks, who also occupy it as a convent.

A TRUE STORY.

"How strange it is that we have no report of No. 1," said the dispatcher, who was on duty at the division headquarters, of a prosperous city in Illinois, on the line of one of our public thoroughfares; and turning to his companion, who sat at a table opposite, said; "Call C. P. and see if they have heard anything from her, as she is due at Q, at 10:30 and here it is 11:30 p. m. and not a word." C. P. was called and the operator answered, "Nothing at all; No. 1 left here at 9:50 on time; nothing since. You might call F. and perhaps he will be awake, although he is not expected to be on hand unless some train should pass, or someone might apply for orders." So the operator called F., who, to their surprise, answered immediately: "No. 1 departed on time, 10:27, nothing since.

It was twenty-two miles from C. P., to the terminal of this division, and on this track also ran the trains of the W. Railway, one passenger leaving C. P. five minutes ahead of No. 1. But W. No. 1 had arrived at Q. on time, had been reported, and so the two were busy conjecturing what could possibly cause the delay.

The operator who had been on this line but a few days rather modestly enquired of the dispatcher whether the conductor and engineer were attentive to business. "The conductor," said he, "is called so, and the engineer is the oldest runner on the road; it can not be that they have made any mistake." And then they glanced over the train sheet where is written the record of those trains which carry the thousands to their destinations safely, as well as the few, who, from causes that may be forever unknown, make some slight mistake, when the first thing that is ordered is the wrecking car and crew.

"Charley, you may ask Q, if No. 1 has arrived yet, or if they have received any information in regard to them," said the dispatcher, a few moments later. "This is a bright moonlight night, but O, how bitterly cold, and it is Christmas night, too," said Charley, "O, how I hope nothing has happened to them such a night as this."

So Charley called up Q., who answered, "Nothing yet." "It must be," said the dispatcher, "that if anything is the matter it is below U., because F., can see there by going round the curve, and he says he went down the track and could not see anything, but said it is bitterly cold. The good Lord pity that conductor; this is his first trip for two months. He has been terribly sick with a fever and did not look when getting his orders, as if he could walk through his train.

"How is the track from U. to Q.?" asked Charley.

"It is nine miles and all down hill," was answered, "73 feet grade to the mile, and curves and reverse curves to beat anything."

G. T., G. T., G. T., went the little ticker on his table. Q., What is it? Q., message "to the superintendent." "Met extra on 12th St. bridge, one mile north of Q.; they had an engine and way car, conductor and two brakemen; we were running thirty miles an hour; they as fast as they could up grade. My engineer jumped off and went down the embankment, seventy-five feet, through a board fence, landing in the creek below; one arm badly broken and shattered. The fireman was thrown against the head of the boiler and at least two tons of coal against him; have dug him out; he looks like 'Hamlet's ghost,' but think he will live. Tank of engine sets inside of mail car. That was on fire but we have succeeded in putting it out. No passengers hurt, and no other train men; cars are all on track. One brakeman on extra killed outright; conductor can not live but a few moments; their engineer hurt, not fatally. The conductor and engineer left Q., on arrival of W. No. 1, and forgot all about us. Had no orders against us. Send this by check stripper; have sent flagman back eight miles to U., and ordered physicians and help from assistant superintendent at Q. Signed——Conductor No. 1." "Here Johnny, take this down to the superintendent," said the dispatcher, "and I will notify Chicago."

What a noble band of willing workers, some twenty-five in number, as they took turns in shoveling the coal that had fallen on and covered up the poor fireman. And merrily, or at least, how lively, the mail sacks flew out and the water was dashed into the mail car, to prevent the train from being burned up. They will never be forgotten by "That Conductor." And the poor fellows who were killed and wounded were watched over and cared for as well as could be done until the arrival of the "relief crew" from Q.

Then commenced the work of getting the engine, (what was left of it) and the way car, of the extra, back to the nearest station, and transferring of the mail to another car; and at three o'clock in the morning the living and the dead rode together into the city, whose inhabitants were quietly sleeping, sweetly sleeping, with no fear or trouble, and just as they pulled up at the depot, surrounded by a few rough and dirty railroad employes, the poor conductor of the ill-fated extra breathed his last. Not a very soft dying bed for the poor fellow, who, only a poor railroad conductor, sent out over a road he had never been over before in his life, trying hard to do his duty to his employer and his occupation, making the first mistake of his life, and only a little while after the Christmas chimes had died out, on that bitter cold December morning, we said "good-bye," and soon the morning came and with it the coroner's jury, so that the law could be obeyed, and tired and weary, the conductor and crew of No. 1 answered the many questions that they, in their wisdom, propounded.

And while this scene was being enacted, the assistant superintendent at Chicago, had reached his office; a genial gentleman of the old school, and told the operator that he wished to talk with the Conductor of No. 1. And tired and sick from the night's hard work, he sat down by the table and answered the questions transmitted to him, as the operator gave them, as they came from the wire.

"Were you on time last night, when you met the extra?" "Yes, sir."

"Had you received any orders after leaving G. T.?" "No, sir."

"How fast were you running when you came together?" "About thirty miles an hour."

"How fast was the extra probably running?" "As fast as they well could do so."

"Were you exactly on time?" "Yes, sir."

"Sure, are you?" "Yes, sir."

"There had been no signals out, at any station?" "No, sir."

"No orders given you that you did not observe?" "No, sir."

"Were any of your passengers injured?" "No, sir."

"How do you know?" "The same way I know anything."

"Were you injured in any way?" "No, sir." (It was a falsehood however.)

"Have all your passengers gone on?" "Yes, sir."

"How many through passengers had you?" "About seventy-five."

"Were any of them injured in any way?" "No, sir."

"How far were you from approaching train when your engineer could first see them?" "About three hundred feet."

"Was there any way the accident could have been avoided by you or your engineer?" "No, sir; with the exception that we might have both of us stayed at home."

"How long from the time it happened were your passengers transferred at Q?" "Four hours and thirty minutes."

"Have you any further information to communicate that would benefit us, in any way?"

"I think not, if I can be excused. Would like a bite to eat. Good-bye."

Not very much of an appetite for a warm breakfast had this conductor, and his faithful crew, who had been in the field of danger and death the whole night long, when the thermometer stood at 20 below zero, with clothing wet through and frozen.

The poor brakeman who walked seven miles to guard against accident and protect the rear of this train was perhaps never thought of by the passengers who were being protected. The history is written in the memories of his companions who faithfully did their duty, although they are only employes, and not only servants of these corporations but also of the people, for it sometimes takes a little nerve, brings to the surface a little courage, needs a little wise thought and careful consideration, in times of danger, to be a "faithful, loyal employe." It is not always sunshine to him; the path is not always strewn with beautiful flowers, and happiness does not always appear because one bids it welcome.

The life of a railway man is full of little thorns that sometimes prick very deep, because you see, daily, the inner thoughts of those whose duty it seems to be to make it unpleasant, with those with whom they come in contact; all are not so. O, no, far from it. But full enough to show to many a one, the unpleasant side of an individual character. It has always been so, it will always be the same. Time and art and ingenuity have lightened many of the hardships and burdens of the operatives of all our railway systems. But no power has ever been given, no patent has ever been issued that makes everyone the agreeable passenger that he or she might be, and at the same time bring happiness to, not only themselves, but all those they chance to meet. And in many instances true and faithful ones like the one just described. The precious load of human beings who are all in all to someone, scarce ever give a thought to those who brought them safely out of the peril in which they were placed; but there are thousands who follow the calling of railway employes, that have many such experiences, that never forget them; and in most all cases have this thought to console them, "they did their best to do their duty."

This story is a true one, and if a copy of this number should reach the eye of the brave engineer and other faithful employes who were with the editor on this Christmas night, perhaps they can vouch for its truthfulness.

E. H. B.

Epidemic Influenza.

The epidemic of influenza which we have already referred to as occurring in Russia, has spread into Finland and Eastern Prussia, and is not unlikely to spread throughout Europe and even reach this country. The disease travels rapidly and has been known to make all Europe sneeze within six weeks, so that we can expect an arrival here before the winter months are over. It used to be thought that this epidemic moved in definite cycles of one hundred years. Although such an idea has long been abandoned, it is a curious fact that the influenza prevailed in America one hundred years ago, and Dr. John Warren in a letter to Dr. Lettsom, says that "our beloved President Washington is but now recovering from a severe and dangerous attack of it."

In 1830 an epidemic started in China, it reached Russia in January, 1831, and by May it had spread to Western Europe; but it only reached this country in January, 1832, and then prevailed but slightly.

Another and severe epidemic started in Russia in December, 1836; within a month it appeared in London and rapidly spread over Europe. This time, again, America was not affected. An epidemic of considerable extent prevailed in the United States about ten years ago and there have been various mild manifestations of the disease. On the whole, however, North America does not seem to be very favorable to the development of epidemic influenza in its worst forms, and it is very unlikely that we shall have a severe visitation if we have any at all.

The disease is not dangerous except to children or the aged, while the former often shows a decided exception.

There is no doubt that this new epidemic will prove a boon to bacteriology, for Seifert's micrococcus has not quite satisfied pathologists, and we anxiously await the announcement of the discovery of the influenza bacillus, only regretting for the sake of American science, that the miasm always begins in the east and travels west. The bacteriological laboratories of Europe will therefore have the first chance.

The disease is undoubtedly due to some micro-organism which floats in the air, and which infects the human system, but is generally killed in so doing. For influenza is but slightly if at all contagious.

We observe that some feeling of alarm prevails lest this epidemic be a precursor to cholera, as was the case in 1831 and 1847.

There have been, however, plenty of cholera epidemics without a preceding influenza, and a great many influenza epidemics without any associate cholera. The micro-organisms of the two diseases are as essentially different as are the two diseases themselves. The cholera germ lives in water and soil; the influenza germ in the air. The relation between the two diseases has been, we believe, purely accidental.

Some Curious Wills.

The St. Louis Republic, some time ago, had a chapter on wills, showing the testators to have possessed minds singularly constituted.

Often quoted is the remarkable will of Solomon Sanborn, of Medford, Mass., who died about fifteen years ago. Sanborn was a great patriot, and specially gloried in the part Massachusetts took in the revolutionary struggle. In his will he left his body to Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes and Prof. Agassiz, not, however, without imposing some of the most unheard of provisions and conditions. His skeleton he desired prepared in the most artistic manner known to the profession, and placed with the many others in the anatomical department of Harvard College. While preliminary preparations were being made in carrying out this extraordinary request, he desired the surgeons to be careful with the skin so that it could be tanned in pieces of sufficient size to make a pair of drum-heads. Upon one of these drumheads the "Declaration of Independence" was to be written, and upon the other Pope's "Universal Prayer." Fitted in its proper wooden frame this ghastly relic was to be presented to the local drummer, whom the testator designates a "distinguished friend," upon condition that he would promise to carry it to the foot of Bunker Hill monument on each succeeding anniversary of the battle, at sunrise, and beat upon it the invigorating strains of "Yankee Doodle."

The skeleton of Jeremy Bentham, in the Hospital Museum, London, is there at the request of its owner, who made a special provision in his will to have it presented to the curators of the hospital, who, upon accepting the gift, were to have the skeleton mounted and put in the presidential chair at each meeting of the hospital directors.

Dr. Wagner, an American, is up to or even ahead of the English precedent in the dismemberment idea. During his life his relatives had given him but little thought. When it came time for him to die—he had a little money, about $1,000—his brothers became very kind. After his death, when the will was read, the following remarkable clause was disclosed.

"To my brother, Napoleon Bonaparte, I bequeath my left arm and hand; to George Washington, my second brother, my right arm and hand; to my other relatives, my legs, nose, and ears. My money $1,000 cash, now in the B—— Bank, I bequeath to the physicians and surgeons who carry out my request by dismembering my body and giving to each of my relatives the portion allotted to him or her.

Horatio G. Onderdonk, a brother of the Bishop of New York, made provisions in his will which would have turned old Draco green with envy. Draco was strict, and well understood the meaning of the expression "ruling with a rod of iron;" but had Mr. Onderdonk lived at the time the old man was preparing his famous code, he could have helped to make it more binding. The last paragraph in the Onderdonk will reads as follows:

"No heir must be an idler, sluggard, profligate, drunkard, gambler; use liquors or tobacco; go fishing or hunting on Sundays; attend races; enter a bar-room or porter house; neglect to rise, breakfast, and be ready for business by 9 o'clock; or get married before he or she arrives at the age of 25 years.

Where Do They All Go.

Every minute of the day seventy human beings are brought into existence and sixty-seven are removed, says a writer. The population of the world is steadily increasing at the rate of three per minute, or 4,320 per day, more than 1,500,000 per year. Just think of the yearly increase of man being equal to the entire population of the State of Iowa. Where do they all go? The home of the human race, as far as we are able to learn, was in Asia, and from there all the nations have come. The rapid increase of population in the United States shows the tendency of the race to scatter and seek new fields.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Humor of the Scots.

In order to disprove the frequent assertions that the Scotch are not humorous, says the New York Sun, the editor of a Scottish paper recently declared his columns open, and invited all the jokes of the people which his constituents would send to him. These are fair samples of what was handed in:

"Two boys having met a man in white 'spats,' one of them said he wore 'white pente's breeks below his ither anes.'"

"This is but the forefront of the battle—'tis rare, what this boy said in a wag-gery."

"A woman, having foresworn whisky in a glass, drank it out of a cup."

"A man took the hat worn by a scarecrow."

"Whisky having been ordered for an outward application, the patient drank it."

"A man, having eaten a herring at tea, wished also for some treacle, which was refused."

"A boy, being asked if he had 'passed the doctor'—in a medical examination—said: 'Yes, I passed him up at Cochrane's corner.'"

"A clergyman said he would visit the families in his district, 'embracing the servant girls as he went along.'"

"An undertaker, being asked to pray at a funeral, said he would rather make a coffin gratis."

"A woman in a shop, wishing to ask for a dolman, asked for a donkey."

"A horse falling down dead, a man asked, 'Did it ever do that before?'"

"Heaven was defined as a place where 'whisky is plentiful and police are scarce.'"

"Have you seen Tom since he left?"
 "No; but I'm gaun tae write tae him tae speir his address.'"

Intellectually the Scotch are one of the very greatest people in the world, but they don't seem to be very funny.

The height of sea-waves has long been the subject of controversy. Eminent hydrographers have insisted that storm waves were not usually more than ten feet high, and rarely over twenty when the conditions of the sea were most favorable for wave development. Many a traveler, reclining on a cabin transom, has looked up through the skylight to see the waves rearing their frothy crests, and wondering how even a twenty footer could show so high above a great ship's deck. Many a sailor dowsed by an up-driving wave while lying out on a top-gallant yard has, doubtless, shaken his head incredulously when told that the highest waves were not above twenty feet, the rest being "heel" of ship and dip of yard. Now, however, comes expert testimony to prove that storm waves are often forty feet and sometimes from sixty to seventy feet in height. In the recent British scientific expedition some instructive data were gathered by a sensitive aneroid barometer capable of registering its extreme rise and fall by an automatic register. "With a sea not subject to an atmosphere of unusual violence, it indicated an elevation of forty feet from the wave's base to the crest." Admiral Fitzroy, after a long series of careful measurements from the main top of his ship, came to a similar conclusion.

The Old Canoe.

Where the rocks are gray and the shore is steep,
 And the water below looks dark and deep,
 Where the rugged pine in its lonely pride
 Leans gloomily over the murky side;
 Where the reeds and the rushes are tall and rank,
 And the weeds grow thick on the river bank;
 Where the shadow is heavy the whole day through,
 Lay at its mooring the old canoe.

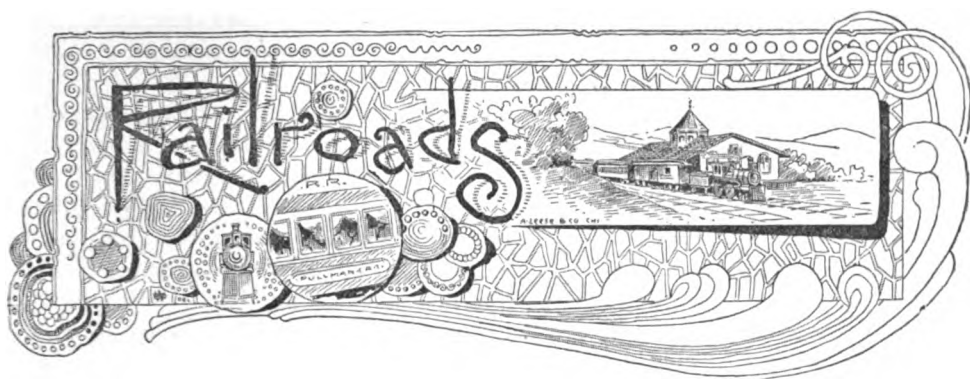

The useless paddles are idly dropped,
 Like a sea-bird's wings that the storm has lopped,
 And crossed on the railing, one o'er one,
 Like folded hands when the work is done,
 While busily back and forth between,
 The spider stretches his silver screen,
 And the solemn owl, with his dull "to-whoo,"
 Settles down on the side of the old canoe.

The stern, half sunk in the slimy wave,
 Rots slowly away in its living grave,
 And the green moss creeps o'er its dull decay,
 Hiding the smouldering past away,
 Like the hand that plants o'er the tomb a flower,
 Or the ivy that mantles the fallen tower;
 While many a blossom of liveliest hue,
 Springs up in the stern of the old canoe.

O, many a time, with careless hand,
 I have pulled it away from the pebbly strand,
 And paddled it down where the stream runs quick,
 Where the whirls are wild, and the eddies thick,
 And laughed as I leaned o'er the rocking side,
 And looked below in the broken tide:
 To see that the faces and boats were two
 That were mirrored back from the old canoe.

But now as I lean o'er the crumbling side
 And look below in the sluggish tide,
 The face that I see there is graver grown,
 And the laugh that I hear has a sober tone,
 And the hands that lent to the skiff light wings,
 Have grown familiar with sterner things;
 But I like to think of the hours that flew
 As I rocked, where the whirls their wild spray threw.
 Ere the blossoms waved or the green grass grew,
 O'er the mouldering stern of the old canoe.

—Selected.

The Rio Grande switchmen now receive Chicago pay.

* *

Scarcity of cars is the cry all over the country. Why not build a few more?

* *

One thousand locomotives is what the Baldwin Locomotive works intend building this year,

* *

The elevated railroad in New York carried 8,000,000 more passengers in 1889 than in 1888.

* *

There was laid during the year 1889, 5231 miles of railway, being 1800 miles less than the previous year.

* *

The largest organ in the world is being built for the Auditorium in Chicago and will be worked by electricity.

* *

The Railway Age gives the names of 120 active and retired railway officials who have died during the year 1889.

* *

A double header on the Denver & Rio Grande, near Walsenberg, Colo., broke in three parts wrecking an engine and fifteen cars.

* *

The pay-car of the Ohio, Indiana & Western Railroad, with Gen. Sup't. Wilson and J. C. Cummings, trainmaster, on board, was wrecked near Covington, Indiana, the morning of Dec. 16th. The superintendent and trainmaster were both killed and both bodies were badly mutilated. Supt. Wilson has been connected with this road for 19 years and was a universal favorite.

* *

A safety switch has been invented by Mr. Louis Dunn, of Minneapolis, which good judges claim will save all danger of derailment.

* *

The auditor's and accounting department of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, will be removed from Chicago to Topeka, Kans.

* *

National association of General Baggage agents hold their 19th annual convention at Ebbitt House, Washington, D. C., Jan. 15th, 1890.

* *

On Dec. 1st the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburgh had in their employ 25234 men, nearly 29 per cent of whom are members of their relief fund.

* *

The Northern Pacific Railway has ordered five new steam shovels of the Bucyrus Manufacturing Co., which will make eleven new ones in all.

* *

That was an unfortunate and serious accident on the Northern Central, near Emigsville, Pa., where two engines and thirty cars were wrecked, also three men killed.

* *

The net earnings of the Westinghouse Air brake Co., of Pittsburg, ending September 1st, for the year 1890, was $1,375,000, leaving a surplus of $500,000 after paying all expenses. 140 for the same period in 1889. Still it is quite a respectable number.

* *

The Detroit Bridge and Iron Works will erect the new car sheds for the new union depot at Grand Rapids, Mich. They are to be made of iron and glass and will be 600 by 134 feet.

* *

A serious wreck on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, at Oakley, a suburb of Chicago, resulted in the death of four persons, with others injured. A switch being left open a train ran into another on a side track.

* *

We learn that Mr. Paul Morton, General Freight Agent of the C. B. & Q., has tendered his resignation and will be succeeded by Thomas Miller. We have not learned the future intentions of Mr. Morton.

* *

The Berlin Bridge Co., of East Berlin, Conn., has taken the contract for the Chesapeake Dry Dock & Construction Co., at Newport News, Va., which is to be exclusively of iron. The contract price is $150,000.00.

* *

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul will run a second class excursion train from Chicago to San Francisco, and return, twice every month, from January to May. The first will leave San Francisco about Jan. 22d.

* *

The Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway have ordered fifteen new locomotives of the Brookes Locomotive works, of Dunkirk, N. Y., and 2000 freight cars from the Litchfield Car Co., of Litchfield, Illinois.

* *

The immigration from foreign countries seems to be falling off in comparison with last year, as the reports from the principal ports for 1888 show 473,172 against 378,-

* *

The contract for grading 46 miles of the Pacific Short Line from Plaineville to O'Neil, Nebraska, has been taken by Raynolds Brothers. It is anticipated that the entire line will be finished by Jan. 1st, 1891, costing $19,000,000.00.

* *

Mr. D. E. Thompson, superintendent of the northern division of the B. & M., in Nebraska, (headquarters at Lincoln, Nebraska,) we learn has resigned his position to take effect Jan. 1st, 1890, leaving for Europe about Feb. 1st, on a trip for his health.

* *

C. H. Resseque promoted to be General Manager Montana Division, Union Pacific Railway; we have worked under his management in days gone by. A thoughtful, wide-a-wake gentleman, not afraid to learn and improve, a promising light in the railway profession.

* *

The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad have given a mortgage in the sum of $150,000,000 to the Union Trust Company, of Chicago. It is given on the rolling stock of 470.58 miles of road and secured by 15000 bonds of $1,000 each, with interest at five per cent.

* *

A train on the Santa Fe was held up near Temple, Texas, a few days ago. After mortally wounding one of the guards they overpowered the rest, compelling them to uncouple the express car, ordered the engineer to go ahead, and then rifled the car of the enormous sum of $42.

* *

According to the first semi-annual statement of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Relief Department, their membership has already reached 5000 and is rapidly increasing. The disbursements have been as follows: for the month of June, $104; July, $660.25; August, $968; September, $1,375.50; October, $4,724.15; November, $4,874.15. 200 members received assistance during November and two death claims were paid.

* *

The report of the Illinois Railway Company for the half year ending June 30th, 1889, shows gross earnings of $6,430,830.00 an increase of $979,236.00 over the same period in 1888. Net earnings, $2,403,858.00 increase, $763,260.00. Also an increase of mileage of 322 miles.

* *

We hear that the genial gentleman Tom Miller, (everyone calls him Tom) will succeed Mr. Paul Morton as general freight agent of the C. B. & Q. We have personally known this gentleman for more than 26 years, and our best wishes go with him in his new vocation, with entire confidence that he will fill the bill.

* *

Mr. Charles Howard, who has been superintendent of the Providence & Worcester road for nearly three years, was chosen general manager of the New York and New England road at their annual meeting in Boston, Dec. 10th. Mr. Howard is 46 years of age, having been in the railway service since 1870.

* *

The Erie Car-heating Company have great faith in the durability and efficiency of their principle of heating cars, and offer to furnish them to other roads for the space of ten years at ten dollars a car, yearly. Their chief specialty seems to consist in their manner of making connections between the coaches.

* *

The Grant locomotive works will be transferred to Chicago in the very near future, they having purchased a section of land in the town of Cicero, with an additional eleven acres. They have been financially assisted in many ways by the liberal business men of Chicago. Mr. E. T. Jeffrey, who was for so long a time, general manager of the Illinois Central Railway, will undoubtedly have much to say in regard to the management of this gigantic corporation. This will be the first plant of this kind west of Pittsburg, and will undoubtedly bring other manufactories near them so that the first we hear there will be a city of engine buildings, like that of Pullman.

* *

Mr. E. T. Jeffrey has given to the world the experiences of his travels in Europe and his visit to the Paris exposition, by publishing a volume of 72 pages called "Paris Universal Exposition." This will be of great interest to the gentlemen who desired him to attend in the interest of "The World's Fair in Chicago."

* *

From later advices we learn that Paul Morton, general freight agent of the C. B. & Q., has accepted the position of Vice-President of the Colorado Fuel & Coal Co., and the White Breast Coal Co., of Illinois and Iowa, with headquarters in Chicago. It is presumed that he has quite a monied interest in this corporation.

* *

The Railway Age for Dec. 20th, presents to its readers a very neat likeness of the President and General Manager of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, Mr. Roswell Miller. Mr. Miller has the supervision of nearly 6000 miles of railway. We have much faith in this gentleman, believing him to be a man of marked ability, and a gentleman who tries to do what is right with those who are under him.

* *

Near Eastaboga, a small station 50 miles east of Birmingham, on the Georgia Pacific Railway, Miss Betty Emmens was walking along the track when she discovered that the spikes had been drawn and a rail misplaced. Just as she made this discovery Miss Emmens heard the roar of an approaching passenger train running at full speed. She knew the train would be wrecked if she did not stop it and she did not hesitate an instant. She wore a red flannel petticoat, and hastily tearing it off ran toward the approaching train waving the garment across the track. The engineer saw the signal in time to stop the train. When the passengers heard of their narrow escape and Miss Emmon's coolness they at once made up a handsome purse and presented it to her.

* *

S. W. Foote, Phillip Sharrer, C. V. Whitebeck, of Syracuse and Emmett Van Camp and Adelbert Lay, of Rochester, New York Central railroad conductors who were recently discharged, have been reinstated again. This will be gratifying news to the friends of these men, who have felt that the officers of the railroad company had put them on the list unjustly.—Syracuse Sunday Times.

* *

The opinion formed by Mr. Manvel, president of the A. T. & S. F., after making the tour of the entire system, some 7,500 miles, seems to be very favorable, as he expresses his sentiments in the following words: "It is a wonderfully fine piece of property." He seems to be very hopeful of its future; an opinion that would seem to endorse rather than condemn the action of those who planned this gigantic scheme.

* *

Lake Superior is 325 miles in length, greatest breadth 160 miles, square miles, 81,000.

Lake Michigan, length, 300 miles, breadth, 108 miles, square miles, 23,000.

Lake Huron, length 100 miles, breadth 169 miles, square miles, 20,000.

Lake Erie, length 250 miles, breadth 80 miles, square miles, 6,000.

Lake Ontario, length 180 miles, breadth 65 miles, square miles, 6,000. Total square miles, 135,000.—Selected.

A BOY AND A BANANA PEEL.

There is always a chance for the boy who keeps his eyes and ears open and can draw an inference from what they report. A quick-witted boy appeared on the scene in an emergency, and shamed a group of dullards.

A long, yellow ice cart, heavily laden, slid, the other day, into a gutter in Chambers street, near West Broadway, New York. The rear wheel stuck firmly against the curb. The driver lashed his horses and swung them around, but to no purpose. Ingenious philanthropists offered all kinds of suggestions, patted the trembling, sweating horses, and some put their shoulders to the side of the truck, but without avail. The off rear wheel would not turn. A bare-footed little colored boy had watched the proceedings with a child-like look of sympathy for the overstrained animals. He suddenly ran down Chambers street, and returned panting, carrying in his arms a lot of banana peels.

"Say, boss," he called to the driver, "I'll make yer wheel turn with this 'ere, if yer'll let me put 'em down."

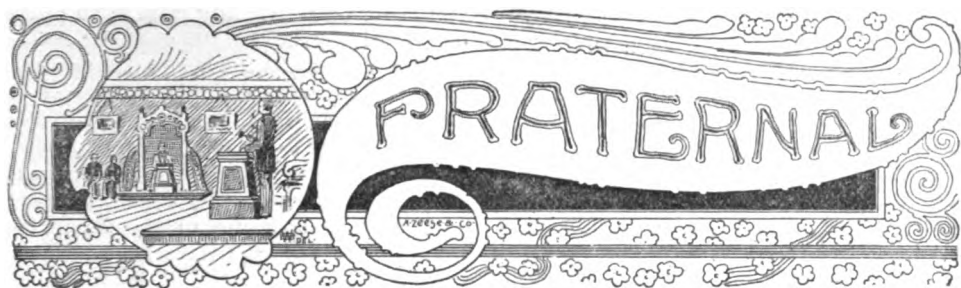

"All right, sonny!" said the driver.

The little lad sprang under the wheels, and carefully laid down the skins.

He pressed some close to the curb, where the wheel was jammed. Then he sprang back and shouted: "Now, boss, pull away!"

The crowd laughed; the driver pulled out his lines and gave his horses a lash. The animals sprang forward, the wheels glided along the layer of banana peels, and the heavy wagon rolled out of the gutter. The onlookers cheered as it rolled away.

"Oh," said the little boy, "I've seen pop move barrels and big boxes with oil, and pop tole me a little oil makes dings go round. I seen hebby men fall on banana peel, an' I guessed dey'd move dat wheel."—New York Sun.

WELLSVILLE, Ohio, Dec. 26, 1889.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR: The office of Train Master Ohlinger, of the C. P. Division, Penn'a Co's R. R., was the scene of a very happy event Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock, namely, the presentation of an elegant gold-headed cane to conductor J. A. Stambaugh, and a beautiful piece of silverware to his lady, as testimonial from the conductor's and brakemen of this division, of their appreciation of his past favors. Mr. Stambaugh has been for a number of years, foremost and most prominent, in his endeavors to promote the financial interests of his fellow conductors and brakemen, and has been successful in his efforts. Brother Stambaugh is a member and Past A. C. C. of Division No. 14, and is esteemed and respected by the R. R. employes generally.

The presentation speech was neatly made, by Brother J. L. Francis, of Division No. 14, and responded to in a feeling manner by Brother Stambaugh.

S.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 16, 1889.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR: Division 103 had their annual election of officers on Sunday the 15th ult; and strange to say, I was elected as correspondent to the, or of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR by acclamation—Think of it. I blush to acknowledge it. I have now held that honorable position down for about five years, and have sent that many contributions in all these fleeting years; but this seems to be a case where the office sought the man, and not the man the office, for understand me, I am no office seeker. I am indebted to Brother Baldwin for this much sought for position. He wants all the Brothers of Division 103 to have "Soft jobs," and correspondent he evidently thinks is a nice easy one—easy won, and Brother B. took especial care that I should win it, and everybody was satisfied, so I will have to be, and in this connection will say, that Indianapolis Division 103 O. of R. C. is doing very good work, has a large membership, and could have a larger one if each and every brother would exert themselves a little to get good men to join us in our labors. There is plenty of good material in this village railroad centre of Indianapolis, who would be willing to go with us if we would only use our influence with them. Let them know we would like to have them join us, for their benefit as well as ours. Now do not think I want Tom, Dick and the other fellow to be admitted, for I don't, but I know there are men or conductors "if you please," running into this city that would make good members of our order. I want to see all good conductors within its ranks, and I want to see all that do belong to this order take a policy in the O. R. C. Insurance if they are not protected otherwise. Every meeting brings to our Division a circular asking for aid to help some brother's widow and orphan children. This should not be; I think every man in railway service should be amply insured for the protection of his loved ones when he is called to make his last run to that terminal station from which no one returns. Brothers,² I want you all to be ready for the trip, so that we may all meet a happy and united order around the altar of the Grand Chief Conductor of the universe.

As I have become 12 hours late, I will take siding, for fear I may get run into, "the waste basket," but if acceptable or worthy will write again.

Yours in P. F.

"CAR EATER."

GREENFIELD, Mass., 1889.

I have been permitted to read from the journal, two articles in favor of Sunday trains, and have wondered, if, among the readers of this periodical containing so much common sense, there were not many others who were amazed that any being of ordinary intelligence, living in a Christian land, under the shadow of our institutions of learning and churches, where our children are taught that the breaking of God's laws is attended with punishment, some times swift but always sure, should harbor the idea that we as a nation can play fast and loose with the nation's Sunday and hope to escape the wrath of the God of nations. Great nations have been entirely overthrown. Why? What does God say: "Because ye have disregarded my Sabbaths have I brought all this evil upon you" Look at the history of Rome, once so prosperous. Rome! Where is all her glory now? Why did Rome fall? Because of her virtue? Because she kept God's Sabbaths? Read and see! Now from a worldly point of view, is it profitable to run Sunday trains? What do some of the managers say? "I find my men are worth more to me if they are kept entirely from Sunday work." Think you could get some excellent ideas on the subject by addressing the manager or superintendent of the N. Y. Central and others I might mention. Every intelligent conductor knows that if a man is overtired he is more liable to forget orders, and you know too well what the result may be. It is commendable in Brother Severance that he is planning some way for the comfort of those who are working hard all the week. Let us do all we can for them. They need and in many places sadly too, less time for work and more time for recreation, but let us never again for a moment forget, that if we as a people neglect nature's law and God's command "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work," just so sure shall we bring God's vengeance upon us and upon our children.

Yours in P. F.

C. F. WADLUGH.

NORTH PLATTE, Dec. 18, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: North Platte Division No. 35, had its annual election of officers at a meeting yesterday, with the following result: C. C.; Geo. W. Hartman; A. C. C.; Thos. Costello; S. and T.; W. L. Park; S. C.; Wm. Blood; J. C.; Jas. Keeler; F. S.; J. F. Jackson; O. S.; N. C. Stone; Delegate to Grand Division, N. R. McBride; Alternate, Wm. Lahey. During the meeting the brothers were agreeably surprised by the presentation to the Division, of an elegant set of emblematic banners, by Mrs. Geo. Hartman and Miss Alice Vernon, wife and sister-in-law of our Chief Conductor. The event will long be remembered by our Division, and the beautiful gifts treasured, not so much for their intrinsic value as for the thoughtfulness of their fair donors in thus signifying that they are with us heart and hand. Such occurrences bind the members closer together and always remain a bright spot in the history of an order. The members expressed their appreciation of the gift by a neat vote of thanks to the ladies, and we desire to thank them through THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, and assure them that when we gather around our mystic shrine, their names and faces will be recalled many times in the far future by their skill and taste.

The members of 35 are pretty well scattered as those of other Divisions are I suppose, but are very loyal to her. We have them in all parts of the United States. The "Limited fast mail" on the Union Pacific is a hummer, the conductors run through from Council Bluffs to Cheyenne and from there to Ogden; P. L. O'Brien, W. W. Keen, C. H. Peirie and W. L. Park are on the first run; Shingle McManus, Hillord and Wolcott on the second, making runs of 519 miles. Conductors on the Julesburg branch are running through from North Platte to Denver, and it is a great deal more satisfactory.

Conductors on the Union Pacific are generally well satisfied. They have a pleasant set of officials and very little to complain of. "Contentment is happiness," and so we are. Several official changes occur the first of the year, but they are mostly in the line of promotions, contrary to the old way of making "clean cuts." We think this much preferable, as it is felt all along the line, giving all some interest in the prosperity of the road.

PUNCH.

FARGO, Dec. 24, 1889.

EDITOR MONTHLY: Division 72 again begs leave to a word to the brothers and sisters who read the CONDUCTOR. The event of the year was the 3d annual ball of Division 72, given at the armory in the city of Fargo. Over two hundred couples of the elite of our beautiful city enjoyed the hospitality of the O. R. C., tripping the light fantastic toe and partaking of the good things at the refreshment table, until the hour of 2 a. m., and has been declared of all, the greatest society event of the season.

The annual election of officers took place at our last regular meeting. C. C., A. L. Carey; A. C. C., C. T. Probert; S. and T., C. H. Baker; S. C., V. R. Neal; J. C., Chas. Wheeler; S. J., Frank D. Allair; O. S., D. B. Reed; Delegate to 22d Grand Division at Rochester, N. Y., A. L. Carey; Alternate C. H. Baker.

A special meeting will be held Dec. 29th, for installation of officers and conferring the new work on all who can attend. Our Order is prospering and the membership increasing; some by transfer card and some by initiation. Your correspondent is sorry, however, that so few are entering the insurance department, and let me say right here, that no brother can afford to go unprotected when you consider the cheapness of the cost. I asked an agent, working for a life insurance company, the other day, what I could get into his company for per thousand dollars at my age, namely, 42 years old? His reply was forty dollars per year on a thousand. Now while less than forty dollars will protect you in the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars for one year, as against forty dollars on one thousand for the same time, why can any sane man allow his insurance to lapse, or why all do not avail themselves of the opportunity is more than I can understand. We have just experienced a sad case here in Fargo, in the death of Brother Vanvleck, who I understand was at one time insured in our Order, but unfortunately allowed it to run out, leaving a widow with two sick children, one of whom died one week after the death of Brother Vanvleck, leaving a bereaved widow and mother. Division 72 have born all the expense and is now helping the family to get through this winter, although Brother Vanvleck was not a member of 72, we are ever ready, as I believe all Divisions are, to respond to the call for relief, and when the hand of Almighty God is stretched out to call one of our number from the care and troubles of this world, we humbly bow in reverence and say, thy will be done. But sad and sickening is the thought that the dear ones left behind are unprotected by our cheap insurance. Brother Editor, stir up the question at the next G. D. I hope to see some important steps taken to increase the insurance list.

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to the CONDUCTOR and all its readers.

A. L. C.

P. S.—I enclose a clipping from the Fargo Argus and Fargo Republican, marked on the back.

A. L. C.

CONDUCTOR'S BALL.—The ball given by the Order of Railway Conductors at the armory last evening, was a success in every way. It was their third annual ball, and was pronounced by those present the most brilliant of the series. The attendance was unusually large; the music by Rupert's orchestra could not well have been improved; and the refreshments were choice, varied and nicely served. The programme was admirably arranged; and under the direction of Messrs. Weber, Sloan, Trotter, Probert and Hume—the floor managers—the entertainment passed off as pleasantly as could have been desired.—Fargo Daily Republican.

There was a gay gathering at the armory Friday evening enjoying the third annual ball given by the Greer Division No. 72, O. R. C. The grand march took place at 10 o'clock, from which time it was a continuous round of pleasure until a late hour. Many and varied were the handsome costumes that adorned the fair ones that graced the dance with their presence.—Fargo Argus.

The Thomas Dixon Division, No. 171, of the Order of Railway Conductors, elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Chief conductor

H. A. Sewell; assistant conductor, George W. De Long; secretary and treasurer, D. O. Gibbs; S. C., J. C. Ralston; J. C., John J. Lee; O. S., Eugene Bump; delegate to grand division, T. G. Ross; alternate, J. J. Parris; executive committee for three years, George L. Worcester. After the election a collation was served at Roach's dining rooms. Among the guests present were C. E. Weisz, of Middletown, N. Y.; a member of the national board of directors of the Order of Railway Conductors, who delivered a very effective speech upon the aims and purposes of the order. He referred in very emphatic terms to the practice of railway companies discharging conductors for supposed dishonesty without affording them an opportunity for defense against the "spotters," who in several recent cases have been proven guilty of making false statements. Mr. Weisz is also a member of the insurance committee of the order and presented some interesting facts and figures relative to that branch of the association. Up to December 1st, this year the committee had paid out $142,500 to the families of diseased conductors.

Addresses were also delivered by Conductors Brown, Robinson, Slattery and Donnelly, Train Dispatchers Wade, Woodward, Van Alstyne and William H. Anderson. The remarks were of a lively and humorous nature, and some of the speakers displayed more than ordinary elocutionary powers. The evening passed quickly and merrily and the attendants expressed hope that similar collations might be frequent.

RICHMOND, Ind., Dec. 26, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: It has been some time since I have had anything to say representing the Lodge Division 110 of our worthy Order. Another Christmas has past and I hope all the railroads have been as kind to their men as were C. St. L. & P., officials to theirs, they having refrained from moving anything but live stock and perishable property in order that the employees could, as far as possible, spend the anniversary of Christ's birth with their families.

The Adams Express Co., especially the division whose headquarters are at Cincinnati, displayed their generosity by presenting each passenger conductor, express messenger and engineer, running into that city over whose lines their company is represented with a ten pound turkey and a can of select oysters. You will know by this that your obedient servant had something to eat on that day. I have no doubt that the recipients of these tokens of regard will see that the Adams Express Co., will not be neglected.

The employees of the Pennsylvania Line west of Pittsburg are very much disturbed over an order just received from headquarters that an arrangement has gone into effect whereby agents will be supplied with employes half-fare tickets. We are all shaking in our boots for fear that for our New Years present we will receive notice that the system of issuing of passes to others than actual employes will be abolished, but we hope for the best and are half inclined to the opinion that it is only the intention to issue half rate tickets to employes of other lines upon a request from their proper authority and that we will be expected to pay half rate when traveling on foreign roads. I do hope that such is the intent of the order as the company, I believe, has the reputation of being more liberal in the way of free transportation of employees and their families than any line in the west. No officials could be more kind to their men than those connected with the division with which I am identified. I know that this treatment has had the desired effect, for I do not know of one in any capacity who does not have their interest at heart, and the few accidents that have occurred upon this system for several years, I think, is sufficient evidence that the men in all grades have carried out instructions issued from time to time for their guidance. I also believe that the traveling public feel about as safe when riding over this road as it is possible for them to feel over any line, as it is not an uncommon thing to hear a passenger remark that "while the Pennsylvania Railroad had considerable (imaginary) red tape and that the mileage books in use are not entirely satisfactory, the services rendered are so perfect that it is a pleasure to be one of their patrons.

Since my last letter we have been called upon to bury our worthy brother, Daniel Driscoll, consumption being the cause of his death; also it has pleased divine providence to remove from their earthly habitation, the beloved wives of our brothers Wm. S. Parkes and Edward S. Gardner. The proper resolutions of condolence were passed by the lodge. There has been nothing of special importance to write about except it may be news to former employes to learn that there are now eight passenger trains per day on what was the Third division and sixteen per day between Logan and Chicago. This will give them an idea as to the increase of business on these divisions and that we have trains scheduled at forty miles per hour and running on time. The Second and Third divisions running through the gas belt have increased the freight tonnage so as to make it necessary to keep in continued service, a yard-engine at Marion, Kokoma and Anderson and part of the time in the locality of Ridgeville. This increase has caused a great number of promotions, consequently a great deal of happiness. Am sorry I have no list of the men promoted so as to inform their friends of their prosperity. Next Sunday our division will elect officers for the ensuing year. Our worthy chief feels that he has held the office long enough and when last heard from declined re-election. However, it may be forced upon him, as he has given entire satisfaction and I know he has the love of the order at heart. Our dear brother McKee, assistant chief, having been transferred to another division, it will be impossible for us to put him on the throne. I rather predict a stormy session, and am sorry I cannot be there to make a little thunder. Our old stand-by secretary and treasurer, Alexander, will be elected by acclamation, as a better man for the place cannot be found. Will give you a list of officers in my next. I close with this one request, that every member become a member of our insurance department, because it is the cheapest insurance to be had and can be carried by all and thereby avoid the embarrassment of having to take up a collection to support the family of one whose light was extinguished without warning. Wishing you all a happy New Year, I remain.,

Yours in P. F.,

FIN.

SLATER, 1889.

E. H. Belknap.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: Division 212 on the 16th day of Decembr elected the following officers to serve during the coming year: Chief Conductor, W. H. Watson; Assistant Chief Conductor, N. C. Pettegrew; Secy. & Treas., W. H. Burgum; Sr. Conductor, S. T. Tuttle; Jr. Conductor, H. Meyers; Inside S., J. S. Barnes; Outside S., W. P. Botton; Delegate, N. C. Pettegrew; Alternate, H. Myers. Brothers Geo. W. Bracy and A. C. Reynerson of Division 97, acted as marshal and installing officers during the installation ceremony, which took place immediately after election as it was very uncertain when we would have so many of the brothers present again as on this occasion.

7

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 15, 1889

EDITOR CONDUCTOR: Monon Division No. 89, held its annual election of officers today. Officers elected are as follows: H. S. Rearden, C. C.; H. C. McKinney, A. C. C.; H. W. Adkins, Secy. & Treas.; C. G. Bush, S. C.; Geo. Aikin, J. C.; R. T. Hinton, T. S.; C. E. Campbell, O. S.; T. C. Laughlin, member of executive committee; H. S. Rearden, delegate and J. T. Waterhouse, Alternate. Brothers Rearden and Adkins were re-elected to the same office they have filled for the past year. Owing to the great strain on our division treasury, we are not as well off financially as we would like to be, but every dollar that has been used has been put to a good use, and we are out of debt and have a balance to our credit. To the many brothers who came to our assistance in the Lafferty case, we return our sincere and heartfelt thanks. Our division has grown steadily during the year, and we now have on our roll 170 members. Our division meets every Sunday, and I believe that if all divisions would meet once a week that they would have a better attendance than they do by meeting twice a month. By meeting once a week nearly all brothers can attend at least once a month and a great many can attend oftener, if they will but try to do so. It is more a habit than anything else that keeps brothers away from division meetings. If those brothers who absent themselves from their division meetings so much, will only attend a few meetings they will soon get the habit on them so that they will not want to miss a meeting when they are in off the road. Of course there are some brothers who have no chance to attend, and are excusable. I find that this non-attendance at division meetings exists in all divisions, and now a few words to the non-attending brothers. Will you not try to make a start with the new year that is fast approaching, and attend your division meetings, go there and have a voice in the council of your division and help the officers conduct the affairs of the division. Without your help they cannot long succeed. I heartily agree with S. D. J., in the last issue of THE CONDUCTOR, in regard to the long term of grand officers. I also am in favor of Biennial sessions of the Grand Division, their annual sessions are too expensive to the whole order. One word to our Mutual Benefit department and I am done. I have in the last four weeks paid to the families of two of our brothers, $5,000.00 who held certificates on our benefit department; this shows that we are founded upon a good basis, and why all brothers do not take out policies I can not understand. Our insurance is certainly not expensive, ten cents a day, will keep it up, and no brother will hardly miss this small sum. Insure, brother

Yours truly in P. F.,

H. W. ADKINS, Sec. 89.

CINCINNATI, O., Dec 24, 1889.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR: Having seen nothing in CONDUCTOR from Division No. 181. Look out now, as 181 has a correspondent for the first time since our existence. Hope you have an editor's turkey for Christmas dinner, as I am on the road will have to eat pork at a chop house and take cold water for wine, but as I am a tetotaler this will not be a hard task to go through. Well no more. You will hear from our best man soon, and I hope often.

Jo Jo.

FAIRBURY, Neb. Dec. 26, 1889.

DEAR EDITOR: Will you please send the CONDUCTOR to me at Fairbury, Neb., instead of Trenton, Mo. On account of bad health and through the kindness of C. L. Ewing, superintendent, and E. A. Stone, Train Master, east of the Missouri river, and W. I. Allen, general superintendent west of the Missouri river, on the Great Rock Island, and other friends who were instrumental in having me changed to the western climate and I have found the change very beneficial. My best feeling will ever exist toward those who helped me in this case. It gave me much pain to leave my old home, Trenton, Mo., where I have been located for the past 13 years, steady at work for the C. R. I. & P., and being deprived of the pleasure of meeting with the brothers of my Division 42, but I must say I have met with many kind brothers out west. When I landed at Fairbury the first to meet was an old time brother, W. H. Hurlless, who gave me a welcome hand and assured me that I would be kindly treated; next to meet was James Martin, another good and true brother, and many others I have met that will stand the test anywhere. I run from Fairbury, Neb., to Phillipsburg, Kans. Phillipsburg is located on the Denver line of the Rock Island, 283 miles west of St. Joe. I would like to explain the feeling of some of the brothers running west of Phillipsburg but I will refrain from that at this writing.

Yours truly,

G. F. STAMPER.

PLYMOUTH ROCK, Dec. 1889.

Two hundred and sixty-nine years ago, viz. the 22d of December, 1620, a small weather beaten bark touched the rocky strand at Plymouth, Massachusetts.

The wilderness, snow clad and black, was solitary, and no voice was heard but the breaking waves of a wintry sea and the moaning winds through the branches of the pine trees which crowded the cheerless coasts. The little band disembarked from the May Flower, and, on their knees amid the snow and ice of that inhospitable shore, offered up thanksgiving for the preservation of their lives, not for wealth and honor and comfortable homes and the protecting arm of civil government, but for the privilege of life and liberty in the wilderness. They were not only expatriated but driven across the sea to a worse than solitary wilderness, one invested by ravenous beasts and the savages of the forest, the primeval owners of the soil, yielded and gave up their native soil to the progress of civilization and the strides of American genius. Yet they were thankful.

As amid the storm they sang

And the stars heard, and the sea

And the sounding aisles of the dim wood rang

With the anthems of the free.

This looked like a small beginning as the least of all seeds for empire and future greatness, but they came in obedience to a principle for liberty of conscience, freedom to labor and think and worship, according to outward seemings. Their persecutors might have laughed them to scorn, and have regarded them as annihilated so far as their independence or greatness in their future is concerned. As they left home and country for freedom of religion and of thought. They acted in harmony with that principle, they did not seek to establish commerce and outward prosperity first. These were not their errand, but they erected a rude edifice, which should serve the double purpose of church and school house, and in this they took shelter until they could build a house, (separate from the church) for their families. From that hour onward, education and religion and the culture of the intellectual and moral faculties seem to be their beacon light, their leading idea, and though famine and sickness thinned their ranks and threatened to exterminate them, they triumphed over multiplied obstacles and evils, maintaining through all their sufferings their original thought, viz: liberty, education and religion. The mother country not satisfied with expatriating the pilgrims, greedily followed them across the sea as soon as they began to prosper, to hunt down their liberties and eat out their substance.

But we find this little band, though not very numerous, strong enough to resist the oppressive invasion. In a century and a half the banner of American liberty floated over the sterile shore, where the May Flower discharged her handful of faithful souls. King Philip's cruel wars were but a check upon the rapidly developed plans of the new comers and intruders upon their rights the arbitrary acts of our mother country, and the threatened punishment for the violation of these acts caused a revolt by their children, their anger was appeased by casting overboard the cargo of tea sent into Boston Harbor in 1773. That night, the darkest in American history, was made light by the faces and cheerful with the smiles of Otis, Quincy Adams, Hancock and others whose lives were made sacrifices for their country and whose fortunes were laid upon its alter, and today this little colony and a few cotemporaneous ones have become great and spread out into a broad empire, which stretches across a continent and stands up before the world a proud and powerful nation, eliciting the respect of the world for its power and enterprise. Its commerce enlivens every ocean, its sail whitens every sea. Its agriculture, its manufactures and its inventions rival those of the oldest and richest countries, while its schools and institutions for a higher education surpass those of any people in the world.

But Plymouth Rock and the May Flower do not belong alone to Massachusetts or to New England. Thousands on the shores of the Pacific and tens of thousands, whose enterprise has subdued the western wilds, and extended the arts of peace and civilization with a rapidity and power before unknown in the annals of mankind, have been animated by the blood of the Pilgrim Fathers, or been guided by that which their examples furnished and hence they justly claim kindred with all that makes the name and fame of Plymouth Rock immortal.

The sons of New England everywhere and all who sympathize with the character and achievements of the Pilgrim Fathers, and their prosperity will rejoice in gathering around one common altar and celebrating the anniversary of their landing and the deeds which have made that day one of the most signal and illustrious on the records of civilization.

HOUSTON, Texas, Dec. 23d, 1889.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: It seems that some of my kind brothers of El Capitan Division, No. 115, have been telling tales out of school, and thereby obliged me to write a word or two in self-defence, not, however for publication, but for the pleasure it gives me to write a friendly letter to any brother of the Order. You, however, stated correctly, in your issue of December 1st., that I could not attend my Division more than once or twice a year, but my heart is always with the O. R. C. boys. God bless them, and may THE CONDUCTOR continue in its good work which it is so nobly doing.

This unique exhibit started on its eastern tour Dec. 3d, from San Francisco, and thus far it has been our good fortune to be handled almost entirely by O. R. C. men, among the number being Conductors Post, Hubbert, and some others whom we cannot now call to mind. West of El Paso from Sanderson to San Antonio, we were in charge of Conductor Lock Campbell, of Division No. 76, San Antonio. From San Antonio to Columbus, with Conductor J. A. Morris; and from there to Houston, with Conductor J. K. Lyons of Houston Division. These gentlemen are all enthusiastic members and good competent men. We were also fortunate in making the acquaintance of Superintendent W. H. Murray and wife, at San Antonio, who made our stop in their city extremely pleasant.

Everything on the San Antonio division seems to go as smooth as clock work, so much for putting an old reliable O. R. C. man in the position of superintendent. If our head officials were to make more such appointments there would be less friction on our railroads of to-day.

We leave this city for New Orleans to-night. From there over the T. & P. R'y to Texarkana; then via. Mo. Pac. R'y to St. Louis, Kansas City, Pueblo and Denver, thence over the C., R. I. & P. to St. Joseph; from there through the north west to St. Paul, Duluth, Ashland, and down to Chicago via. the C. & N. W. Thence over the B & O. to Washington and Jersey City; thence west over the B. L. & W. to Buffalo; then over into Canada and back to Chicago. This covers our entire itinerary. Hoping I have not taken too much of your time, I will say good bye.

I am truly,

J. B. LAUCK.

BRainerd, Dec. 17th, 1889.

Editor Railway Conductor,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: At a regular meeting of Brainerd Division 197, held December 16th, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

A. C. Harrison, C. C.; J. B. Quimly, A. C. C.; I. C. Loomis, S. and T.; S. Corrigan, S. C.; S. C. Hannon, J. C.; J. McGowan, I. S.; M. F. Hannon, O. S.; W. H. Cumin's, delegate; James Smith, alternate.

The same evening the installation of the officers elect took place at armory hall. When the officers took their places Brother Cummings came forward and in a neat and appropriate speech, on behalf of the ladies presented Brainerd Division 197, with as handsome an alter cloth, bible and set of flags as any one could wish for. Brother Spaulding made a very happy response. After the installation the floor was cleared, the band struck up and the dance commenced, which wound up with a grand banquet at the Arlington.

Division 197 is one of the prosperous divisions of the Order. Fourteen members were initiated last year, one by petition and nine by transfer, while only one was lost and three by transfer. Hoping all good brothers may have as good a time as we did Dec. 16th.,

I remain yours in P. F.,

I. C. LOOMIS.

Seeing and Thinking.

When oft I see how dishonesty
So many life prizes is winning
While honest men are suffering, there
I only see but the beginning.
Their thoughts of life after this strife
Suggests when there comes a solution
We may depend we'll find at the end,
An adjustment and right distribution.

When oft I see in society
All kind of wealth take precedence,
While virtue and worth meet with scorn and mirth,

To their claim none giving credence,
I revert in thought to the one who taught
Of a place where no lowly are slighted,
But woe unto those these earthly things chose
There, and now are, as sepulchers whitened.

S. E. F.

GALESBURG, Ill., Dec. 31st, 1889.

DEAR EDITOR: Thinking perhaps you would like to hear from Division 83, and to let you know we are all on deck, and by no means have forgotten our old worthy ex-member, "his nobbs," will take pleasure to inform you of our election of officers which took place Dec. 28th, as follows:

A. N. Marshal, C. C.; Geo. Conley, A. C.; D. S. Hecker, S. and T. and delegate; O. B. Strickler, J. C.; M. Kellog, S. C.; James Graham, I. S.; W. L. Swanson, O. S.; J. K. Howland, alternate, and correspondent of Division 83. Our old worthy, distinguished brother, J. M. Peck, for trustee, and with a corps of the above names, can see no reason why Division 83 should not prosper in future as in the past.

Merry Christmas and happy New Year to you and all. God bless our whole fraternity.

Yours in P. F.,

J. K. HOWLAND.

TERRE HAUTE, Dec. 24th, 1889.

Editor Railway Conductor,

DEAR SIR AND BRO: A few more days and the old year will have gone. We will close another volume of life's history, and open a new balance sheet with "old father time." Before we close the volume of '89" permit us to take a retrospect of the past, as there are many things memory will want to dwell upon. Draw the volume close that no one can read our innermost thoughts, as there are many, many, passages known only to ourselves. If these thoughts were only in keeping with life's brightest uses, it would fill our life with deeper and better meaning toward the balance of mankind. Therefore, try and call to mind some manly word spoken in defence of some fellow being, and we will not read with vain regret the record of fond joys that are no more. Do not refer to the long array of whispered slander, uttered in idleness or malice. But turn to the unwritten future and let that be filled with joy and gladness, should we be spared to welcome another New Year, we can refer to it as one of the brightest spots in the book of memory.

We must not forget that it is God who arranges the law of precedence, implead Him or be silent. If we have capacity for a higher station in life, take it. How many men have we in this world that would have to go to bed poor and wake up Vanderbilts or Jay Goulds.

Men must learn to labor and wait if they would succeed, remembering in all things that their competitor is only a man. Most certainly there is dignity in labor with the hands as well as with the head. In our intercourse with the world, a continuous circumspection is of great advantage—slowness of belief and proper distrust are essential to success. The credulous and confiding are ever the dupes of impostors. Ask those who have lost their property how it disappeared, and in almost every case, you will find from misplaced confidence. Therefore, in the affairs of the world, men are not saved by faith but for the want of it.

Trusting that the Ruler of the universe will extend His protecting hand to every member of the profession, and each succeeding New Year may find the Order stronger in every respect.

Yours in P. F.,

C. H. ARTHUR.

SIoux CITY, Jan 1st, 1890.

To fifteen thousand brothers of the O. R. C., I send greeting, and wish you a happy New Year.

This beautiful New Year morn, 1890, I hope finds you all, with your families clustered around you, in the possession of health, wealth and happiness. I sincerely trust that not one cloud will cross your pathway on this New Year's day, or the coming year. And as you stand on the verge of the new year, pause and reflect for one moment, looking back over the past, recall to mind, if possible, if, by living it over, you could better it, and if so, make a solemn vow you will profit by the experience of the past and live a more useful one if possible, the incoming year.

Another year has gone. Its records are closed and what has been done of good or evil, cannot be undone. This New Year day is a mile-post to show us how rapid our transit from the cradle to the grave. At the end of each year we lay up in the archives of the past, a volume; the records of our thoughts and actions, in which no erasures can be made. And on this New Year's day we open a new volume, unwritten, on which we are to write our actions of the coming year, which will be enduring as time. In looking back over the history of our noble institution, how many of us have done, by our acts and influence, to make it what it should be? It is now a man twenty-one year's of age. Has the conductor of the present improved from the one of twenty-one years ago, and if so, has our order been the cause of bettering his condition.

New Year's day is properly a day of rejoicing and making merry. It is no less an occasion of reflection; review the events of the past and lay out work for the future. Have we subverted the object of our being? Have we cultivated our moral nature, placing ourselves on a higher plane in life's journey? Have we strewn our pathway with the memory of good deeds? Have we left our foot-prints on the sands of time that may inspire our brothers to renewed action and nobler motives for the future in life? Let us each day add something for the elevation of our brothers, that it may be said we made the world better and left the memory of good deeds to those who follow after.

Life is a problem of mysteries. He solves the problem best who lives and acts for his own present good and the elevation of his brothers; contributes to the pleasures and happiness of his loved ones, and provides for their future in case he may be called home in an unexpected hour, thereby leaving a competency for those he holds most near and dear; at all times scattering sunshine along life's journey.

During the year just closed, death has cut down many of our noble brothers. He has been no respecter of persons. He has taken those in vigorous manhood and noon time of life, as well as the old and weaker ones. So it will ever be in the future. All must be laid away when the reaper, death, calls, and while we mourn for those gone, let us look forward to the future with the positive assurance that there is a life beyond, and the time will come when we all shall meet in a happy band in that division room where there will be no ballots cast or passwords given to permit us to enter.

But the records of a well spent life will be an assurance we are entitled to a seat.

H. HURTY.

MENTIONS

In this number appears the advertisement of Jos. P. Wathier. A perusal will repay any conductor who wishes to purchase a watch. Mr. Wathier is thoroughly responsible, and his customers may depend upon his goods being exactly as represented.

We trust that Brother E. A. Sadd, will kindly accept our thanks for special favors. Such ones are what make a man, a society, and fills the world full of good deeds, unawares.

From the St. Charles, La., American we read that on Christmas day the morning glories were all in bloom, and all kinds of beautiful flowers growing and blooming out in the open air.

Harvey Division No. 95, McCook, Neb., will hold their annual ball at McCook, Neb., on the evening of February 24th, to which all members of the Order and their friends are cordially invited.

Winfield Division No. 245, Winfield, Kansas, holds their first annual ball New Year's eve, Dec. 31st, 1889, in Manning's opera house. Thanks, brothers, for complimentary; we can only hope that you will have a happy time.

Second annual concert and ball of Holyoke Division No. 197, Order of Railway Conductors, evening of Wednesday, Jan. 15th, 1890, at city Hall, Springfield, Mass. A beautiful invitation. Thanks brothers, for same; but too busy. Yet hope you may all enjoy your second annual gathering.

We wish to tell every member of the Order a little story. Do not go and repeat it to anybody else, but every time you sit down in your Division room and find yourself a little deficient in the knowledge of the work, and of course feel a trifle awkward on account of being dull and rusty in this matter, just bring to mind the recollection of a brother who is a member of Colorado City Division No. 244, who has learned the ritual by heart, and can fill the chair of any officer in the Division, without the help of the book in any manner. We refer to Brother W. E. Morand. Let us hear from the other members as fast as possible; we will notice all with pleasure, and also any other proficiency in any line that is for the good of the Order.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Brothers R. H. Anderson, E. W. Beeman, E. L. Minkler and J. H. Reynolds, will please correspond with Brother A. E. Anderson, Sec. Yellowstone Division No. 191, Glendive, Mont., and if these brothers see this notice, will they kindly write Brother Anderson, as it is for their interest to do so.

Brother James McPartland, the efficient Secretary of 58., also delegate to Rochester, came in to shake hands with us during the holidays; could not stay but a few moments as he was very busy, but we improved the time very earnestly and had a good visit. Glad to see you at any time and if we are busy, will go right along with our work as if nothing had happened.

We very much fear that the C., B. & Q. R'y are growing more and more worldly each year, as we notice an item going the rounds, that on Sunday, Dec. 8, there was shipped east from Galesburg, as follows: Cars of stock, 427; dead freight, 236; empties, 15; total 627 cars; being the largest number of cars going east in any one day since sometime in June. A pretty good day's work, especially for Sunday.

The Union and Advertiser, Wm. Purcel, editor, and W. F. Balkam, manager, comes to us regularly from the city where our next session of the Grand Division is to be held. It is an able and interesting newspaper, and all members of the Order are cordially invited to call at their office, by the manager, when in the city; and in as much as they will undoubtedly have a good deal to say of us, while we are the guests of the citizens of the beautiful city of Rochester, and as we will undoubtedly be under many obligations to them for many favors, we trust that every member who can do so, will not wait until our next annual meeting to accept their kind invitation.

Brother Peck, of 58, gave us a call the other day. He related a few incidents of his railroad life when living in the city of distilleries and revenue taxes, (Peoria, Ills.) He is not railroading at present but takes a lively interest in the welfare of the Order.

The whereabouts of Brothers Robert Balentine and W. C. Tulls, is earnestly requested by Bro. J. A. Morse, secretary of Thurber Division, No. 63, Austin, Minnesota. Any one who can furnish this information will confer a favor by writing Bro. J. A. Morse.

In the number of Feb. 1st, we will give our readers a likeness of a prominent member of the order, who is at present division superintendent of one of the trunk lines of railways. Many of you have seen him, and we are happy to be able to present you a good likeness and say a good word for a brother and a gentleman.

Have you ever had the Grippe? It is a pleasant thing to have; don't miss it if you can possibly have it. It is a jewel encased in memories that will last you a long time. The first three days you ache as never before, the next three cough and sneeze your outsides in, the balance of the time too weak to do either. Don't miss it; if you do you will lose the finest act of your life. We have had it in all its elegance.

Brother George Clegg, of the Santa Fe—do any of you remember him? We do. Thirty years ago he ran an engine on the Quincy division of the C., B. & Q. R. R.; later train master and conductor on the C. & N. W., conductor on the D. & R. G., then on the A., T. & S. F., leaving there to take a position vacated by the promotion of Brother Fred. L. Chase. Success to you, Brother Clegg, all through the journey of life.

Some of the members of the Order and readers of the CONDUCTOR may feel at liberty to make a few remarks, because this number of the magazine is a few days late and there may be a little shortage of items that might interest them. We have only a few words to offer in excuse for this. At the farthest there are only fifteen days to do all this work in, and out of this fifteen we have been in bed eleven days. Besides this Brother Sackett has been laid up, Brother Daniel's family has been very sick, and he has been off the hooks. And in addition, the printing office from the proprietor to the "devil" have been laid up. So, on the whole, the general health of those who are expected to aid in getting out a readable magazine has not been of a very high order. Even at this time many of them are only able to sit up a half a day at a time.

We are pained to hear of the misfortune that has come to Brother George Wright, of Elmira Division No. 9, who was for thirty years conductor on the N. Y., L. E. & W. R'y, stricken down with apoplexy at his home in Elmira. At last advices, he was able to sit up and all his many friends and brothers, while sympathizing with him in this great affliction, will hail with gladness any encouraging news of his return to health. A genial gentleman and a good brother.

At a regular meeting of the Lone Star Div. No. 53, held Dec. 15th, 1889, the following brothers were elected to the different offices as follows: A. L. Dain, Chief Conductor; G. W. Crowthers, Assistant Chief Conductor; Geo. W. Scales, Senior Conductor; Jno. Hudlor, Inside Sentinel; Thomas A. Murphy, Outside Sentinel; S. E. Kinsinger, Secretary and Treasurer; Chas. N. Knowlton, Delegate to G. D.; A. L. Dain, Alternate Delegate. Yours in P. F., S. E. Kinsinger, S. & T.

Brother Wilkins dropped down from Chicago a day after Christmas, and gave us a little good advice, to all of which we listened with an attentive ear. We are always glad to meet any one who is able and willing to impart any information to us that is for the good of any righteous cause and for our own benefit. Although his time was mostly taken up with business which had accumulated during the absence of the G. C. C., we had a few moments to spare in social conversation to our comfort. Come again when you have an off day.

Brother Parker, C. C., of Division 58, gave us a call a few days ago. He was staying at home for a few days, being a sufferer from the new and fashionable Russian disease "La Grippe." It has settled in his head, ears, neck, stomach, back, arms, feet and limbs, with a curious feeling in the throat and lungs. He said he did not feel very well, himself. We asked him if he considered it catching, and the answer was that he had caught it some way and he rather presumed that it was

From the worthy correspondent of our own Division, No. 83, Galesburg, Ill., we find that they have exercised their very best judgment in the selection and election of officers and delegate for 1890. They are all young men on the right side at all times. By this remark we do not wish to have any one infer that our views are always correct, or in speaking of the right side, that we are any criterion for any one to go by. What we do mean to say, is, that they are first-class railroad men, honorable and upright, above suspicion of all meanness, and well fitted to not only fill but adorn the positions to which these brothers have called them. No charges, Bros.

Married, at St. Luke's Episcopal church, Clover, Va., on Dec. 18, 1889, Mr. M. M. Albright, and Miss Hattie Carden. The bride is the accomplished daughter of Doctor and Mrs. Carden, the groom, one of the most popular conductors on the Richmond and Danville railroad, and a member of Richmond Division No. 152, O. R. C. The happy couple left on the same day to visit some of the principal cities of the North. Brother Albright was attended by members of Divisions 152 and 221 O. R. C., also members of Danville Division B of L. E.

To the brothers who are favoring us with the very creditable communications which you read in our fraternal columns, in each issue, and to the grand officers, who are ever ready and willing to offer their experiences and views on different subjects, in the official pages, we feel under lasting obligations, and say, in all kindness, and brotherly love, we thank you sincerely; if we had more to give it should be yours. How many more will "go and do likewise?" We have thanks enough to go all round to the 15,000 members of the order.

In looking over the list of delegates to the next Grand Division, as far as received, we find that a large portion of them are being re-elected, quite a number having served one, two and three terms. If competent at first they certainly must have gained in wisdom and power as representatives, and it speaks well for the wisdom of their divisions that they have placed the law-making power in the hands of those whom they have tried, and most certainly shows that they have great confidence in their judgment concerning the wants of the members of their divisions.

Judging from the reports already received in the office there will be quite a reputable showing of increased membership during the last year; and from present prospects we will begin the year 1890 under very favorable circumstances. Let every member be zealous and earnest in doing his duty as a member and a brother, raising the standard of a member of the order, and also that of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, a little higher at the commencement of every year, and then see to it that a gradual improvement is kept up. This is what will unite us closer together and bring us nearer the top of the ladder of respectable and honorable members of society.

We are pleased to hear of the promotion of Brother Fred L. Chase, former Chief Conductor of Division 222, Ft. Madison, Ia., and passenger conductor on the A., T. & S. F., then on the C. & A. He has received the appointment of South-eastern Passenger Agent of the Chicago & Alton Railway, with headquarters at Philadelphia. The office, at present, is at Harrisburg, but will be moved to Philadelphia at an early date. We wish to congratulate the good brother on his good fortune, as we are confident he will bear the promotion with becoming grace, and in addition will fill the new position with signal ability, both for his own welfare, and no less for the company he represents. Go ahead brother in the right path and do not stop until you have reached the top of the ladder.

The holidays are now a thing of the past and everyone is trying to get down to business again, and get through so as to enjoy the next that comes along. There are many among our number who will not be here to welcome Santa Clause one year from now. Who it will be, you nor I can not tell; but more especially in the west and south many are in active service who ran the first train on many divisions of the road where they are employed. They are growing old, O, how fast. And some morning their friends will awaken and hear the soft mournful tolling of the church bell, and there will be crape on the door, and mother and children, with moistened cheeks and saddened hearts. Then the hearse will drive up to the door, and the loved one will be taken to the last sad resting place. Sad thoughts, indeed, but true ones. For it has been so and ever will be. Then, let us all be a little more brotherly, a little more charitable, a great deal more earnest in doing the life work that we have promised to perform, then when this work is all over it will not matter so much when we are summoned to the journey from which we will never return, if we have all done the work that was given us to do.

One of the saddest events that has come to our notice for a long time, is the death of Mr. Seth Wheaton, brother of our G. C. C.; a young man of unusual promise, stricken down in the prime of manhood, almost among strangers.

He came to our home in Galesburg some two years ago, from his eastern home, hoping to improve his already shattered health. We had procured for him a position as train dispatcher and operator and he at once entered upon his duties. For several weeks he was with our family and we are perfectly able to judge of what we say when we wish to bear a high testimonial to the worth of this young man, in every stage of life's requirements and duties, with no ostentation whatever in his make up, born to live and act the man in every particular. His friends and society have lost a treasure of great worth.

Some nine months ago he went to Colorado, hoping to still be benefitted by the change of climate, and it was thought that he was gaining ground until his lung and throat disease seemed to take a turn, and that fatal disease "Bright's disease of the kidneys," carried him away so quickly.

It is a sad blow to his poor old father and mother, and to his brother, the Grand Chief Conductor.

Brother C. S. Wheaton wishes to extend his heartfelt thanks to Mr. H. B. Stone, of the C., B. & Q. R'y, Mr. H. G. Burt, General Manager F. E. & M. V. R'y, Mr. Jno. J. Burns, of the D. & R. G. R'y, for kindly favors; also to the members of Division No. 44, and especially to Brother F. P. Silvernail, whose kindness will not be forgotten.

So, we kindly bear a thought of him, who, in the prime of life has been taken away, and trust that the New Home will be fairer and happier than the old one has been.

.

We are, we honestly believe, better prepared than ever before to give you a readable and interesting magazine; no pains will be spared by us to do so; we will try in every manner possible. But we kindly ask each and every one of you to bear in mind a few thoughts that are essential to the life of every magazine. The first class periodicals of the day in which we live are only printed once a month. Their subscription price all the way from $2.00 to $6.00 per year. They have at the end of each year a large surplus fund that they pay out to the most eminent writers of this and other countries to obtain the matter that fills the pages of their magazines. Is it any great wonder that they are interesting? That they are looked for and sought after with eagerness? How much money have we to help in this way? Not a penny. Then we kindly ask all the brothers to do their part. If the reading matter is not up to your standard then you can certainly write a few pages, now and then, that is a sample of what each number ought to contain, and if you are the brother that you profess to be, you can easily loan it to us until we can copy it and we will faithfully return it; at all events act a brothers part in all these matters, and you may some day be surprised yourself, and even wonder that you have as good a magazine as it may yet be. If you really wish it to be meritorious, one communication of 500 words will do more toward making it so than all the sighs of "amens" you can offer because it is no better. We can sit down in our office every day of the week and write down from memory the names of 1,200 members of the order, with whom we are personally acquainted that can write a respectable and worthy communication on any subject that has relation to the railway service, that would be a great help to us, and to you, also. You ask, "They have done it have they not?" No, never written a word. Is this right, brothers? Is it doing as you would be done by? Please think calmly and honestly (not selfishly) of these matters, and "put yourself in his place," in imagination, at least, for the good of yourselves, for the good of the order, for a personal desire to do your whole duty as it comes to each of you day by day and year by year.

That Was Different.

"Can I—I have a word with you in private?" stammered a young man as he stood at the door of the private office.

"Come in!" replied the head of the firm. "Now, what is?"

"You—you are aware of the fact that I"—

"That you have been with this house for four years. Yes, sir, I am aware of that fact. Want to leave?"

"Oh, no."

"Didn't know but you had a better offer. If so, you can go."

"That's not it, sir."

"Oh, it isn't. Want an increase in salary, do you? Well, you won't get it. We are now paying you all you are worth and a little more."

"It isn't that, sir."

"It isn't! Then what are you driving at?"

"I want your daughter Molly."

"Humph! That's different. Go and take her and be hanged to you! I thought you were fishing for a raise of salary."—Detroit Free Press.

The Kind-Hearted Cop.

Policeman—Here, now, move on.

Stranger (who has lost his way trying to get back to his hotel)—I'm no tramp.

Policeman—What are you then?

Stranger—I am a country editor—

Policeman—I see, I see. Poor fellow! Here's a dime.—New York Weekly.

DIED.—Nov. 19th, 1889, Mrs. Grace L. Ohliger.

At regular meeting of Cleveland division No. 14, O. R. C., held Sunday, Dec. 8th, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted :

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Great Ruler of the universe to remove by death the kind and loving wife of our esteemed brother, E. Ohliger, be it Resolved, That we brothers do most sincerely sympathize with him in his hour of bereavement.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the records of our division, a copy sent the bereft husband, and to THE CONDUCTOR for publication.

E. L. PAISLEY,
A. F. CHAPMAN, } Committee.
DAVID GILLMORE, }

HALL OF HOLLINGSWORTH DIV. No. 100, }
COLUMBUS, OHIO, Dec. 8th, 1890. }

WHEREAS, God, in His inscrutable providence, has seen fit to cut down in the midst of life our friend and brother, John T. Harrison : and

WHEREAS, By his death we have lost one of our young members of good and manly principles, a warm supporter of our Order : therefore, be it

Resolved, That we will cherish the memory of our departed brother.

Resolved, That we extend to all the bereaved relatives our sincerest sympathy.

Resolved, That the charter of our division be draped in mourning for thirty days, and a copy of these resolutions be sent the mourning family and a copy sent to THE CONDUCTOR for publication.

Signed, JNO. H. BROWN.
GUS. S. SHIPLEY.

BEERS.—Bro. Amos S. Beers, of New Haven Division, No. 201, died suddenly on Dec. 14th, of heart failure. Bro. Beers was in charge of his train, and while working his train, suddenly felt weak, and while speaking to his brakeman, requested him to go through and pick up his tickets for him, as he felt faint. He died before any help could reach him. Bro. Beers was sixty-two years of age, a valued member of New Haven Division, and father of P. C. C. H. S. Beers, of that division. A delegation of thirty members of

New Haven Division attended the funeral, and Div. 201 sent as a floral offering a thirty-three inch car wheel, the flange composed of white roses, the center being made of carnations, white roses and ivy, with the letters O. R. C. in the respective divisions. The journal was composed of purple immortelles, the whole being a very elaborate piece of workmanship.

In the death of Bro. Beers New Haven Division loses a true and valued member, and no more in our division room will be seen that sight so dear to all our brothers of father and son, both in active service, and both devoted to the cause of the Order and the interests of Division 201.

At a regular meeting of Montezuma Division No. 70, O. R. C. held Nov. 10, 1889, the following was adopted unanimously:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the general manager of the universe to remove from our midst our beloved brother, W. C. Lewis; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while submitting with human patience to the will which has deprived us of his presence in a way we cannot question, we deeply feel the absence of one so long among us, whose many virtues and wise counsel has endeared him to us

Resolved, That our hopes extend beyond this life for his happiness, in a firm belief that there exists a better state in the long eternity towards which we are progressing.

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved relations of our deceased brother, our profoundest sympathy in this their hour of sorrow.

Resolved, That to his immediate associates with whom his daily duties brought him in close connection, we turn our sympathy in the loss they have sustained.

Resolved, That our Charter be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days, and that these resolutions be spread on the records of the division, and a copy sent the immediate relatives, also to the Railway Conductor, and Lajunta and Las Vegas Daily Optic.

IRA BLIZZARD,
H. E. MCGAGGARD, } Committee.
C. E. BAUGHMAN, }

DIVISION MATTERS.

At the next session of the Grand Division to be held in the city of Rochester, next May, the question of Biennial sessions will undoubtedly be brought up for discussion. Whether such a law will ever be adopted or not we are unable to say. But the membership of the Order has become so large and constantly increasing, that there will most certainly be some action taken that will reduce the number of our Grand Divisions or else the number of delegates attending them, and possibly both, so that each division which is now obliged to send one, (if they desire representation), or members of the Grand Division who pay their own expenses, will not be obliged to be taxed as heavily as they now are to perform the work that seems to come as their share, each and every year. It is possible that there will be more than one plan indicated, and which, if any, will become a law is something that time alone will develop. But that there is a general feeling that is rapidly growing, that some new plan should be devised, is well known to us. What form it will take or what the decision of the law making power of the Order will be, is to us unknown.

As, however, it is a matter that, in a monetary view, concerns every division, and, in a lesser meaning, every member of the subordinate division, we wish to call your attention to this subject, so that you can talk it over in your meetings and get the expressions and opinions of every member thereof, on this very important question. It is very necessary that this be done, and not only done, but thoroughly so, in order that delegates, when called upon to record their votes, will be able to know the views of a majority of those members whom they represent and not be entirely in the dark as to their wishes. So we trust that this subject will be called up very often in each meeting, and the members be asked to express their opinions, so that all plans for a better solution of this question may be presented. It is possible and very probable that you may not be able to decide on the best plan. Yet, every delegate can present the various ones offered, and out of the whole there may be one that seems to the majority to be better than the way which the present law directs.

The necessity of something being done in this line, becomes more and more apparent from year to year; and if the Order progresses in the next three or five years, as we hope it will, and have reason to anticipate, our Grand Divisions, whether held yearly or biennially, will become so bulky that they will be hard to manage, and so much time will be taken up listening to individual opinions that the sessions will become so long that they may eventually become a heavy tax as also a tedious burden to bear. While we are of the opinion that in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the Order, the people, or rather the individual members should have a voice, still, it may be well to give a thought to one idea, whether this could be guaranteed in a less expensive method, by states or districts meeting together, where every division could be represented, and they selecting a delegate, so that the Grand Division might be composed of a far less number, and thereby much time and unnecessary expense be obviated. Do not understand that we are, as a member of the Order, at this time advocating this doctrine, or the biennial sessions, in any way whatever. We only intend to place before our readers and members a few of the suggestions that have been offered, and which we believe will be presented in May next; and we believe that it is the duty of the members of every division to discuss them and try to arrive at some decision as to the most practical solution of this very important question.

Of course, our readers will thoroughly understand that we have no right or authority to speak authoritatively, or in any way dictate the policy or express the views of any one or all your grand officers. We have, on the other hand, never had a single expression from any one of them on this subject. But we claim the right, or at least the privilege of calling the attention of the individual membership to those questions that are for your good and for the good of the whole number, as a member and as the editor of the CONDUCTOR.

There are frequent assertions on the floor of every Grand Division that certain matters are brought up for discussion that the members of many divisions, whom the delegate represents, have never heard of; hence he does not feel competent, or at least, at liberty to vote on the question at issue, and in many cases, when called upon to record his vote, it is done almost under protest, or else the subject matter is laid over until another year, then a new delegate is selected and he is no better off than the first, and the important business is allowed to go by default, or keeps dragging on year after year. In our humble opinion the only way to avoid this is in a presentation of the various measures that are likely to come up for consideration, to your division before each succeeding or biennial sessions. In this way the delegate will obtain the views of his division, and can at least pick out which he deems the best on all subjects, without being instructed in any way. If none of them appear to be feasible there will be enough brothers in the Grand Division that will not be so bashful, that they will be afraid to tell him so, and if other and better plans be substituted he can feel perfectly free to acquiesce in their adoption.

The great thing to be accomplished is to in some manner obtain the opinions and wants, wishes and needs of the membership you represent; and this can not be either poorly or well done unless they are brought up for thought, and interchange of opinion in your division meetings. Some may say that it is too early to bring these matters up. It was never, as yet, and never will be too early to discuss any question that is for the permanent benefit of any brother or brothers. The ones who have good, well-paying and comfortable positions, need no special assistance. They are in no present want of either future legislation or help in any way. But there is a large army of our co-laborers and brothers that are today in need of positions, in need of assistance, in need of sympathy, that we must listen to their complaints, make our laws, if not already made, so that they can be protected, (whenever worthy of protection) or else the Order is of little account; and we are of less, as pretended brothers in one common cause.

So, on this account, we are earnest in our request that in all matters pertaining to the individual membership of every division, that each and every delegate to the 22d annual session fully acquaint himself with the needs of his own constituency, bring them up for discussion, and in this way he will represent something besides himself. This is what these annual gatherings are for. If this is not true, then it is far better that all stay at home and enter yourselves in the race where the victor wins the blue ribbon in "the regular go-as-you-please," and at a very trifling expense.

The pages of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR are at your service for a free discussion by every member of the Order who will be contented to write on any of these important subjects in a brotherly manner. Do not come to the Grand Division and say that you did not have an opportunity to express your opinions, for it will not be the truth. Of course if one wishes to deal with the subject too elaborately or go into all the minute details of any plan he may offer, there is no proper place like the division; but the outlines can be given and enough said that will inform the masses of any plan you may suggest, that is for the benefit of the 15,000 conductors of the Order of Railway Conductors of America.

Brothers, attend to these things that we have spoken of. Your stewardship will be rewarded just in proportion to the good that your personal efforts accomplish. The day of talk and bluster and braggadocia has passed. The year 1890 must show a good and clean record. You must help bring this about. One brother assisted, one family made happy by your own personal efforts, is better than all the flowery speeches and false promises of a lifetime. One noble deed accomplished and on record to your credit, is worth more than a two hours windy speech in Rochester. One thought, well defined, one practical resolution offered there that will benefit someone, is worth ten times more than all the grumbling you can do because everything in this world is not just exactly as you think it ought to be. Your advice and sympathy and offerings that you do not need for your own use, if of any good, need not be thrown among the rubbish; if they are of any account, give them to your neighbor and your brother, and at all times in trying to represent the best interests of the Order of Railway Conductors, let your market price be what all honorable men rate it at, instead of marking the goods yourself.

THEY HAVE PASSED.

The holidays have come and gone once more, and again we settle down to the business of another year. Let every member of this Order strive to make the year 1890 the most noble in all its history. To do this we must start out in the right path, thoroughly prepared to overcome every obstacle that comes before us; not in a spirit of oppression to or of any who may have different views or purposes from our own, but each and every one trying to live up to the principles we profess to believe are right. Not vainglorious in our own opinions and deeds, but willing and content to "live and let live;" allowing others the right to hold their own opinions although they may differ from our own. Being charitable in all things and trusting in the thought that if our judgment in any matter of importance is the best, that we may be able in a spirit of kindness and brotherly love, to show to the majority that our plans are the best of all that are offered.

This is the only true and legitimate way to convince those who think differently from what we do. Having as few laws as possible and living in a manner, that not only our brothers, but every member in society who has a care for the good of the public weal, and a desire for the welfare of the masses, will look at our record as the year rolls around and say to us; "You may well be proud of this year's work."

There are scores of labor organizations besides our own; the world is large enough for them all. Some or all of them may deem it their privilege to do, or act very differently from the course we may mark out. This is no concern of ours. Let everyone stand on their own merits; or, if fall they must, it is what concerns them and them alone.

We have plenty of business in the year to come, in helping those in our organization who are worthy and in need. Their condition appeals to to us first and last. They are wards of our own choosing. Let us attend wisely to the mission that comes to us day by day, to the end that the Railway Conductor of America may be improved and his lot made a trifle easier than it has ever been before. This is our business as a society. This is a recapitulation of the work that we see marked out for us to do. Let every one in this year act as if it was to be the last one here on earth, to the upbuilding of all that is grand and noble in our principles, to our manhood, to the good of every one to whom we owe one grain of allegiance, as men and brothers. Let all bickerings and contumely and strife die out with the closing of the last year, and be buried so deep, that the resurrection will fail to find them, and in their place plant the trees that bear the ripened fruits of glorious deeds and brotherly love. This is the right way, the only true life to live. Make your choice even this early in the new year; not alone resolving and re-resolving, but determined to act as wise, not foolish men.

Acting on these principles we will go on to a glorious future not only for ourselves, but also for and to those who shall come after us. Principles properly framed and carried out, that set forth a line of duty when properly carried out, that make our lives happier and better; that make the almost ceaseless burden of life a little easier, and our reward more than it otherwise would be; are the germs of blessings yet to follow that never die, although we may pass off the stage of life ever so quickly. Principles that are founded on the basis of the greatest good to the smallest number, gathering in the loaves and fishes for the few and leaving the crowds for the great army that has the hardships of the battle to fight, are only fancy baubles that vanish in a moment with nothing left to supply their place. And the fall is lamentable, sad and humiliating.

We have, in a few words, presented you the two pictures, so that you can see the portrait of both. One of them you must choose to pattern after; the other you must cast aside. Which will ye have to-day?

Then let us start the year aright and resolve to make this the banner year of our existence, not only to ourselves, but in the interests of the toiling thousands who are longing and waiting for some blessing to crown our efforts, that will make the pathway of the Railway employe who is willing at all times to do what is right, a little easier and pleasanter, with the aid of a trifle more of the needful, that helps so much in the weary days of adversity and trials. Who will commence the New Year aright and so continue to the end?

Bargains in Crape and No Deaths.

Mr. Younglove—Why, my dear, what makes you look so miserable! Is there any bad news in the paper?

Mrs. Younglove—N-no, not exactly bad news; but oh, George, don't you know of any of our relatives who are in poor health? I never saw such bargains in crape in all my born days.—Chicago America.

"Say, Bob, you ain't made no move to pay me dat quarter yet, and I've 'bout concluded to take dat yaller pup of yourn for de claim." "What! dat dorg for a quarter? Not much you won't. Er English syndicate gwyne to buy de boss' mill an' lmberr yard, and I'm gwyne to put dat dorg in for a pile er money. Er quarter ain't no money dese days."

"Oh, brace up, George, and don't make a fool of yourself?" He embraced her more fervently than ever.

LET IT ALONE.

Let what alone? Anything that weakens the brain, benumbs the senses, makes a fool of a man that is otherwise all right, causes good men to lose their situation, brings sadness, woe, sorrow and grief to the home and hearts of those who are all in all to you in this life that is full enough of bitterness without calling on any outside influence to make things worse, than they otherwise would be. Let it alone, and more than all others in this world THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR. It has caused you heart burnings and misery enough in the days that have passed and gone. It has ditched the engine, thrown the coaches down the embankment, piled everything up in one conglomerated mass with the corpse of human beings intermingled. And then to fulfil all that it desired to do, even called on the seething heated flames, to add its last demon-like scourge to finish the battle that was brought on because you heeded not the warning that had so often been given. Let it alone, it never has done you any good. But it has done one thing and did it well. It has robbed you of the dearest and most faithful friends that you have ever known. And it has never, no never returned one particle of the wealth it took away from you. The good friend is gone, all his influence is gone, the kind feelings that once were a treasure have died a terrible death, and all the light and joy that once beamed upon you because he was your dearest friend has gone out, the candle has burned to the socket, all there is left is the poor old candle stick. No light, no joy, no nothing. Everything gone, hope and comfort, conscience and manliness, buried deep in the grave you dug for yourself and nothing coming back to fill the place of disappointed hopes and ruined expectations. Let it alone. O, what wrecks it has caused. And worse than all else, ten thousand times worse, the innocent have been dragged down to the lowest depths of manhood. Those who were in no wise to blame, have been butchered and found an early grave, because, you forgot or at least neglected to do what? Let it alone. It is the same old story. It has been wrung in your ears for a hundred years almost, and when the changes are rung in its dearest strains of music that can be written, there is no pleasant chords that vibrate which lends any charms to you or your friends. I am off of duty to-day and I will partake of a little of the nectar, that enlivens the body and quickens the senses and drives dull care away. One must have a little pleasure, a little recreation, a few hours of solid enjoyment, for I am overworked and I must take a little something, that will keep my spirits up and strengthen me to go out on my run and be able to do my duty. Yes, that is the imaginary idea, but what is the real and the result? The hand that opens the door and punches the ticket, the feet that guide you through the coaches and on to the end of the run, may be comparatively steady, even the will. The purpose may be as strong as ever, but lack a day, it is none of these that run the train. Where is the intellect, the brain power, the element that makes you think and act quickly in times of dire emergency. They have all fled; too much overheated until they are boiled down in the chaldron of excitement, or out in the cold till they are all benumbed and worthless, and when you must call them into action or else be lost, no reaction takes place. You call on every energy of the heart, the mind, the better senses, to respond to your call, but nothing responds only the deep wave of stupid lethargy. Let it alone, it kills, but in turn it never was known to save. O, I can take care of myself. So has sang the brightest lights in every department of the railway service, "I can take care of myself." Is this the truth? Is this the reality? Is this the experience of the many? You can take care of yourself. Yes, have you had a fair trial, or must you ask for one more test, before you are satisfied. You have used up all your own talents and capabilities, exerted all your will-power, just escaped death, listened to the advice of the best friends that God ever gave to you, and He has even tried to keep you out of the burning bush, whose fagots are piled so high around your pathway, that all that is needed is the little match that you can strike and all is gone. What else is there to do? Just one little thing that you have never tried. One panacea for all these ills that you have so often heard about, but disdained to profit by, because it took away your individual freedom. Where can the medicine be found? Where is the healing physician that will warrant a cure? Is it expensive? for I am poor, O how poor, and if I try it, it must be low in price. My friend and my brother, the cure is already in your possession, take no medicine, call in no physician but your own will and determination, write the prescription over the doorway, and for fear you may forget it, put it down in your car book. Brand it deep in your heart so that you will never forget the prescription. Let it alone.

We have just heard of the serious illness (inflammatory rheumatism) of Bro. Millard, of Sioux City. Last advice he was considered out of danger. All will hope he may soon be better.

OGDEN, Dec. 25, 1889.

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR—

Since writing you I visited Division 227 at Lincoln, Nebraska. The unquestioned loyalty of the members of 227 have held the Division together through stormy times and dismal days. I fully believe they now inaugurate a new start with a determination to make their Division second to none in point of efficiency. I then visited Division 246 at Wymore. This is one of our "colts" but being thoroughbred no one need fear but they will get along. With a by no means large membership, they have never missed holding a regular meeting but once. From there I went to McCook to see 99. Had a very pleasant meeting with them and enjoyed my visit very much. I next went to Colorado Springs to visit 244. While there I was very hospitably entertained by Brother Gilmore and wife and had a very pleasant visit with the brothers of 244 who were in. When leaving I met Brother Greer, of 44 and had a pleasant chat with him, after which I embarked via the Rock Island, Captain Fawcett of 226 for Pueblo. Brother Fawcett took me home with him for dinner, after which I proceeded to Trinidad to see 249, another of our "colts." There were not enough of their members present to hold a regular meeting but a very pleasant evening was spent in an informal visit with the members. I was very pleasantly entertained while there by Brother Bateman and wife. Next morning I returned to Pueblo and stopped one day with the members of 36, being handsomely entertained by Brother Fawcett and wife. A very pleasant evening was spent in the division room. Next day I went to Salida to attend the regular meeting of 132, my parent division, where I sat for the first time since my initiation with some who helped to make me a member of the Order. We had a good meeting and in order to fully exemplify the work I gave three candidates the three degrees. After my very pleasant visit as the guest of the division I took the "Scenic Route" for home to spend Christmas with my family, having been away since November 8. I got home at midnight of the 23rd. Arriving here I find many letters on many subjects awaiting replies. Among them are invitations to attend the annual ball of Divisions 81 and 154, including complimentary ticket from 154. I of course should like to attend both and equally of course I could not do so.

My visits among the divisions more and more impress me with the importance of our members attending division meetings. Brothers, you may not be desirous of debating any of the questions at issue, but do you not think you ought to give your officers whom you elect at least the encouragement of your presence, and I assure you one and all, your simple presence will encourage, not only the Division officers, but each one who attends. Another matter of much importance is the transfer of members to those Divisions which they can most readily visit. The Grand Division has refused to make this transfer compulsory, but have done everything possible to make it easy for those desiring to so transfer. The member has only to write his Division Secretary requesting the transfer, and if in good standing, the Secretary will at once fill out and forward, there being no additional expense whatever to the individual member. I hope more of the brothers will identify themselves with those divisions which they can most readily visit.

Immediately after the new year I expect to start on an extended trip, embracing Kansas, Texas and Missouri.

I wish to express through you my sincere hope that the year about to begin may prove to be the most prosperous in the history of the Order, and that at its close we will be able to report great progress.

Allow me to wish you, and through you, each and every member, a merry, merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous new year.

Ever yours in P. F.

E. E. CLARK.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., FEBRUARY 1, 1890.

NO. 3.

A SUMMER SCENE IN THE LIFE OF A BRAKEMAN

THE BRAKEMAN.

The dangers recounted here are those which only brakemen (or those acting as brakemen) have to meet. The liability of all trainmen to be killed by the cars tumbling down a bank, colliding with another train, and a hundred other conditions, is also considerable. The horror which the public feels on the occurrence of such a disaster as that at Chatsworth, Ills., in the summer of 1887, or the half dozen of other terrible ones within the past few years, could reasonably be repeated every month if railroad employes instead of passengers were considered. There are no accurate statistics kept of the train accidents in the country, but the accounts compiled monthly by the Railroad Gazette always show a large number of casualties to railroad men from causes beyond their own control, (collisions, running off the track, etc.), no mention being made of the larger number resulting from the victims' own want of caution. In the month of March, 1887, in which occurred the terrible Bussey Bridge disaster, near Boston, 25 passengers were killed in the United States; but the same month recorded 34 employes killed. At Chatsworth 80 passengers were killed; but in that and the following month the number of employes killed in the country reached 97. In both of these comparisons the number of passengers is exceptional, while that of employes is ordinary. But as already intimated, these dangers and discouragements are distributed over such a large territory and among such a large number of individuals, that the general serenity of the brakeman's life is not much disturbed by them. In spite of them all, he enjoys his work and, if adapted to the calling, he sticks to it.

The brakeman must be on hand at the hour of his train's preparation for departure, and generally he must do his part in fifteen, thirty, or sixty minutes' lively work in assembling cars from different tracks, changing them from the front to the rear or middle of the train, and setting aside those that are broken or disabled; but, once on the road, by far the greater portion of his time is his own, for his own enjoyment, almost as fully as that of the passenger who travels for the express purpose of entertaining himself. In mild weather and in daylight, life on the top of a freight train is almost wholly devoid of unpleasant features, and it takes on the nature of work only for the same reason that any routine becomes more or less irksome after a time. Much of the time there are a few bushels of cinders from the engine flying in the air, which a novice can get into his eyes with great facility, but the brakeman gets used to them. He sees every day (on many roads) the beauties of nature in great variety. Much of the scenery of the adjoining country is 500 per cent more enjoyable from the brakeman's perch on the roof than from the car windows, for the reason that the increased height gives such an enlarged horizon. This education from nature is an element in the railroad men's lives not to be despised. The trainman whose daily trips take him past the panoramic charms of the Connecticut Valley in summer, through the gorgeous-hued mountain-foliage along the Erie in autumn, or the perennial grandeur of the Rocky Mountains in Colorado, certainly enjoys a privilege for which many a city worker would gladly make large sacrifices. But to trainmen, the refining influence of these surroundings is often an unconscious influence, and with the majority of them is perhaps generally so, because of the prosaic round of every-day thoughts filling their minds. There are also some other advantages, not wholly unæsthetic, which a millionaire might almost envy the freight trainmen. Freight trainmen get all the delicious product of the soil at first hands. In their stops at way stations they get acquainted with the farmers, and can make their selection of the best things at low prices, and thus (if they keep house) living on fruits, vegetables, etc., of a quality fit for a king.—From The American Railway, published by Scribners.

ORIGIN OF THE ST. GOTTHARD RAILWAY.

Already in 1830 and the following years the plan of an Alpine railway had been considered, on account of the immense difficulties which the winter months presented to travelers desiring to cross the Swiss Alpine passes, these generally being snowed up for eight months and requiring hundreds of laborers to keep the sledge road open for the diligence. Yet no one thought of boring a tunnel through the St. Gotthard; people set their eyes on lower passes and imagined a railway line passing over one of them.

In 1832, however, Giuseppe Medail presented to the King of Sardinia a plan for the construction of a tunnel through the Mont Cenis, and five years later the engineer La Nicca, of Coire, came forward with the scheme of a Lukmanier railway, which was taken up by the governments of St. Gall, Grisons and Tessin, and led to a political treaty with Sardinia in 1847. This plan remained in its preparatory state, and was no more mentioned until the lines from Rorschach and from Zurich to Coire had been built. Then, however, it was put aside, for the engineer, G. Koller, 1850, in a special report of the Alpine railroads, pointed out the St. Gotthard, and the cantons of Luzerne, Berne, Uri, Schwyz, Unterwalden, Soleure and Basle, (town and country) favorably inclined to this new idea then mentioned for the first time, on the 19th of August, 1853, at Luzerne, agreed to vote a common fund for supporting the railway over the St. Gotthard. In a memorial of September, 1853, they pointed out the advantages of the St. Gotthard over the Lukmanier and tried to obtain of the Swiss Federal Council a vote of support for the St. Gotthard railway. At that time the Engineer Luchini, of Lugano, brought a project which demanded a tunnel of no more than 1850 metres in length, which of course would have been placed higher up the mountain than the present one. This first step had no immediate success, for the Federal Council, in consideration of the railway law, took no active measure. However, a second conference took place June 8th, 1860, between delegates of the cantons of Lucerne, Berne, Zurich, Uri, Schwyz, Obwalden, Zug, Zoleure, Argovia, Basle, (town) and Tessin, as well as of the administrations of the Swiss Central of the East-West railway lines. In the first place, means were considered for the improvement of the high-road leading over the Gotthard, a work that seemed necessary, also with regard to a future Swiss Alpine railway line, evoked by the construction of the Mont Cenis and Brenner lines. On the 15th of September, 1860, the members of some cantonal governments in central Switzerland, and of the board of directors of the Swiss Central railway, joined to form a committee of nine persons. This was subsequently considerably enlarged by delegates of such cantons and companies as took a certain number of shares; thus later were represented in the committee the cantons of Berne, Lucerne, Uri, Schwyz, Unterwalden, Zug, Fribourg, Soleure, Basle, (town and country), Argovia, the Swiss Central, and the French East railway companies, (chemin de fer de l'Est, and the town council of Lucerne. Twelve cantonal governments had participated in a subscription for covering the first expenses, moreover, resolutions had been passed as to participation in the financial enterprise by the government of Uri and Lucerne, the town of Lucerne and the board of directors of the Swiss Central railway company, to the amount of seven millions of francs. Several years later, 1866, Italy presented a minutely detailed account, founded on special study of the Swiss Alpine passes, wherein also, the St. Gotthard was named in preference to the Lukmanier and to the Splugen, the latter having been mentioned too in the course of the past years.

The above named committee caused first, Mr. G. Koller, engineer, and afterwards Mr. Wetli, engineer, to draw up plans and estimates, which formed the ground-work of all further attempts on the subjects. This work consisted of an exact survey to be used as a base for any future tracings, and in the working out of a scheme including two variations with regard to the crossing of the St. Gotthard, between Goschenen and Airolo. According to one plan the Alpine tunnel begins at a height of 1200 metres above the sea, and is 154 Kilometers in length, with two shafts, of which the first has a depth of 166 meters and cuts off 5 Kilometers from the length of the tunnel; the other has a depth of 296 meters, and cuts the tunnel in two nearly equal halves. The second plan makes the tunnel begin at the height of 1415 meters on the one side, and 1500 meters on the other, the latter answering to the situation of Hospenthal. Its length is 9, 8 Kilometers and it may be built by means of two shafts of 268 and 285 meters in depth, with an interval of 5, 1 Kilometers.

The gradual rising of the railway line along the valleys leading up to the St. Gotthard was to be in a gradient of 26 per cent. at the highest, the average gradient of the whole mountain line from Fluelen to Biasca being 18, 4 per cent.

The length of the entire line from Fluelen to Lugano was estimated at 156, 8 Kilometers. Already at that time, several competitors had applied for a concession to build the railway, among others the well-known Dr. Strussberg.

In 1863, the number of cantons and companies desirous of furthering the construction of the St. Gotthard railways was increased by the addition of Zurich, Thurgau, Schaffhausen and Tessin, and of the Swiss North-East railway company. To forward the matter, a permanent Gotthard commission was appointed, with a special committee, and now began a period of great and ultimately successful activity. The canton of Berne tried to raise difficulties, by bringing in a new plan of a line: Berne, Thoune, Grimsel Pass, Bedretto Valley, Airolo. However, it was proved by minute estimates of distances and traffic, that the St. Gotthard was the most suitable of all the Alpine passes in question, and that with a total length of 265 Kilometers, the yearly traffic might be valued at about 180,000 persons and 270,000 tons of goods, with a gross amount of receipts of 13,500 and 34,000 francs respectively, pro Kilometers.

The existing plans and estimates were carefully examined, and weighed by the well known engineers, Mr. Beckh, of Stuttgart, and Mr. Gerwig, government surveyor of buildings at Karlsruhe. Messrs. Stoll, Schmidlin and Koller, men of note in their profession, in an official report set forth the importance of the St. Gotthard railway with regard to commerce; the military and geological advantages of the St. Gotthard over its rival passes were fully debated and every effort was made, to secure to the St. Gotthard the subvention of all the cantons and companies concerned. But as their means were insufficient to bring about the great work, measures were taken, partly by the medium of the Swiss Federal Council, partly by direct appeals, to obtain the participation of other countries, namely: Italy, the Grand-Duchy of Bade, Wurttemberg, Bavaria, Prussia, Belgium and England. The Southern States of Germany, and afterwards Prussia too, were favorable to the enterprise. Great importance was attached to the decision of Italy, where a very careful inquiry, by Stefano Sacini, Minister of Public Works, was made into all the different plans of Alpine railway. The Gotthard line was chosen and Italy expressed her readiness to contribute to the costs and even applied to France for a subvention of five million francs.

In notes of March 31st, 1869, the ambassadors of the North-German confederation and of Italy announced, that their governments, joined by Bade and Wurttemburg, had decided for the St. Gotthard, every other pass being excluded. The Federal Council was invited to take further measures and to have a plan prepared.

According to the suggestion of the council a conference was held at Berne, Sept. 15th, 1869, by the representatives of the foreign states participating in the enterprise. In fifteen sittings the plan of the St. Gotthard railway was considered, the result being the well known political treaty of Oct. 15th, 1869, to which the Swiss Federal Assembly agreed in July, 1870, just as the Franco-German war broke out, and which was also accepted by the newly founded German empire, on the 28th of Oct., 1871.

In this treaty the following lines had been agreed upon: Lucerne, Kusunach, Immensee, Goldau, Brunnen, Fluelen, Goschenen, Airolo, Biasca, Bellinzona, Zug, St. Adrain, Goldau.

Bellinzona, Monte Cenere, Lugano Chiasso, and Bellinzona, Magadino, Luino, with a branch line to Locarno.

Furthermore, it was settled by this treaty, that the total amount of the building expenses—150 million Marks—should be raised by a subvention of 68 million of the three united states—(Switzerland 16, Italy 36, Germany 16 millions) by shares to the amount of 27 millions and by bonds for 54 millions.

The construction of the railway line, inclusive of the tunnel, 14,920 meters in length, was to be terminated in ten years.

It is but fit here to name the men who have merited so highly of this great enterprise, such as Mr. J. Zingg, councillor of the Government and President of the Special Commission of the St. Gotthard; Mr. Welti, Federal Counciller; Mr. Feer Harzog, National Councillor; Mr. Schmidlin and Mr. Stoll, Directors; Mr. Stehlin, Ex-Burgomaster; Dr. C. Stehelin, Mr. Peyer-in-Hof, Mr. Widman, Mr. Koller, Dr. Wanner, recorder. Above all, honorable mention is due to Dr. A. Escher, of Zurich, member of the National Council, who died on the 6th of December, 1882.

Mr. Alfred Escher, born Feb. 20th, 1819, the son of a wealthy merchant, studied the law. Shortly after his return from the University, he entered public life and was soon at the head of the liberal party of his Canton. Already in 1844 he was elected member of the great council, became its President afterward and rendered eminent services in both positions. Wherever a new idea was to be put into execution, he gave it his whole attention and strength; thus he exerted himself with all energy for the foundation of the Federal Polytechnic school and created the "Society of Credit Suisse." It is undeniable that many innovations for which Switzerland has gained the sympathy of other countries, were due to his influence. His country acknowledged this by electing him member of the National Council in 1849, and he subsequently presided at the latter several times. His chief object was a liberal policy in railway matters; upon his recommendation the state railway lines had to give way to free competition.

Within twenty years Switzerland thus got a network of railways which in proportion to the size of the country was surpassed by few other countries. Having retired from government offices at Zurich in 1855, Mr. Escher devoted himself more than ever to railway matters, and at last worked with all his might for the realization of the St. Gotthard Railway line. Being President of the North-East Railway company, which at that time was considered as possessing a model railroad, and being highly prosperous, he turned his energy to the Gotthard line and by untiring efforts brought about its victory especially as he succeeded in securing the raising of the necessary funds of 102 million francs, of which one-third in shares and two-thirds in bonds. It was a great and hard work to be accomplished, studies had to be made, designs to be corrected, great opposition in Switzerland to be overcome, and difficulties arising from the other states concerned, to be removed. It was partly Mr. Escher's prodigious activity that brought it all about. In the spring of 1872 the boring of the tunnel through the St. Gotthard was decided upon, the treaties with Germany and Italy were concluded, and the whole world began with wonder and interest to contemplate the gigantic work. The name of Mr. Escher shown with a lustre, which even the financial calamities breaking in upon the enterprise and for which the people thought to make him responsible, could not darken. It is true that the so-called "Gotthard Krach," (bubble) was a heavy and bitter misfortune for all that had financial relations with it, above all for Mr. Escher himself, who had not only set his whole mind upon it but risked even his health to carry through this gigantic work to the glory of his own country and of all who took a part in it. It will ever remain acknowledged to the honor of his name, that for many years he was the soul of the enterprise, and that he well deserved its final success. Even beyond Switzerland his undeniable merits for the accomplishment of the great task were rewarded, the "Society for the Science of Railroads" at Berlin, proclaiming him honorary member in 1882.

On the 1st of November 1871, the statutes of the Gotthard Railway Company were published, the company, with Dr. Escher as its president, finally constituted itself Dec. 6th, at Lucerne, establishing its head office there, and Mr. Gerwig, of Karlsruhe, was installed as head engineer. The preliminary work began at Goschenen, on the 4th of June, at Airolo, on the 2d of July, 1872, while the board of directors were already negotiating with Mr. Louis Favre, of Geneva, with regard to the boring of the tunnel. On the 7th of August a formal treaty was agreed upon and concluded, according to which the tunnel was to be constructed in eight years, and finally ready by Oct. 1st, 1880, at the latest. As it was supposed that only two-thirds of the interior had to be lined with masonry, the costs were estimated at 55,854,600 francs, Mr. Favre having to give bail for eight million francs.

Louis Favre was born on the 17th of August, 1825, at Chene, near Geneva, being the son of a simple carpenter. He frequented the national school of his native town and afterwards followed his father's profession. In spite of his insufficient schooling, the young carpenter apprentice soon showed signs of an ingenious spirit which manifested itself in his work. At the age of 18 Louis Favre set out upon his wanderings as a travelling journey-man with a knap-sack on his back and 100 francs of savings in his pocket. At last he settled down at Lyon as a master-carpenter. In this capacity he worked at the construction of bridges for the "Mediterranean Railway" line and there invented a new method for driving piles in marshy ground. The most prominent engineers were struck with the simplicity, safety and cheapness of this new method, which was adopted with great success in the place of other very difficult and expensive foundation work. The happy solution of this problem first made Mr. Favre's name known. Other work was entrusted to him and soon he, himself, took part in railway enterprises. In 1872 he undertook the boring of the tunnel through the St. Gotthard and overcame the enormous difficulties of this work by his iron will and admirable perseverance. However, he was not destined to see the triumph of his gigantic work; in the midst of his restless activity death overtook him, and he fell like a soldier on the field of honor. † On the 19th of July, 1879, he was accompanying a French engineer into the tunnel, when suddenly, perhaps in consequence of the oppressive heat, he had an attack of apoplexy. His corpse, accompanied by thousands of mourners, was removed from Goschenen in order to be buried at his home, Chene, near Geneva. Many a word of gratitude and praise was spoken there and the last orator terminated with the following words:

The work of L. Favre will not perish; his faithful fellow-workers will carry it to a happy end. And when at last the first steam-engine, decorated with flowers, will pass through the tunnel which thenceforth unites two nations, may it carry on its chimney a mourning flag in honor and to the memory of the indefatigable pioneer who has won such merits with regard to humanity and may this flag bear the inscription:

Louis Favre of the St. Gotthard!
Ability! Respectability! Activity.

There was no interruption in the working of the tunnel, as had been anticipated on account of the death of Mr. Favre. His heirs had the work carried on in the former way under the guidance of the directors Bossi and Stockalper. Everything advanced so favorably that on the 6th of December, 1874, already the first part of the Gotthard railway—46 Kilometers from Biasca to Bellinzona and from Lugano to Chiasso, and on the 20th of December the second track of 21 Kilometers from Bellinzona to Locarno could be given over to traffic.

The regular advance in the cutting of the Gotthard Tunnel was interrupted but twice: by the riot of the workmen at Goschenen (27th and 28th of July, 1875,) and by the fire of Airolo, which destroyed nearly 200 houses on the 17th of September, 1877. Besides, momentary difficulties arose, firstly from the unfavorable composition of the rocks, particularly on the Southern entrance; secondly from the explosion of the four air reservoirs, (28th of September, 1878) at Airolo and lastly from the bursting in of torrents, all of which, however, were speedily overcome. On the north side near Goschenen, the tunnel runs through granite and dry gneiss rock, on the south side, on the contrary, through fissured mica slate with clay stratified between, through which much wet was able to enter, so that the workmen had for months, to wade through the water up to their knees. Thus in November 1878, (1200 meters from the entrance near Airolo) several big spouts of water rushed out of the rocks with such vehemence that there was no way of walking through them without being thrown down at once. Happily modern technic has sufficient means to lead such refractory elements into well regulated channels.

The undertaking seemed to be more seriously endangered by a deficit proved in February 1876, by a renewed estimate made by the newly elected head engineer Hellwig. The same amounted to nearly 81 million marks, but was reduced afterwards to 32 millions, which were covered by an additional subvention of the three concerned states (Germany and Italy 8 each and Switzerland 6 millions, the remaining ten millions to be procured by the Gotthard Railway Company.

On this occasion some alterations were made in the original plan of site. The main line was traced from Immensee to Pino (175.7 km) and Giubiasco; Lugano-Chiasso fixed at a second line (52 km); thus the total length of the whole Gotthard Railway net, including the branch line of (13 km length) Cadenazzo-Locarno, amounts to 240 km, of which only 97 meters (Erstfeld-Biasca and Giubiasco-Lugano) have to be considered mountain railway. On the line Immensee-Brunnen they moreover altered the traced line and by so doing evaded the expensive tunnel through the fragments of rock and debris in the plain of Goldau. The construction of the part Lucerne-Kussnacht-Immensee and of the accessory line Zug-St. Adrian-Goldau, was for the time being postponed. Nevertheless the construction of the reduced net, which was begun in May, 1879, proved to be extremely expensive. The cost of a meter is about 1000 francs on an average. This is owing principally to the 57 tunnels of a total length of 41423 meters of which each absorbed 1250 francs on an average. The expense for the construction of the whole Gotthard Railway amounts to about 238 millions.

Nearly 50 per cent of the total length of the railway are curves. The highest point, 1154 meters above the sea, lies in the great tunnel the length of which, calculated to be 14920 meters, was afterwards found to be only 14912. To compare figures: The new Anden railway ascends to 4770 meters, the Pacific to 2513 meters, the new Hymalaya Railway to 2255 meters, the Arlberg Railway (height 10270 meters tunnel) to 1302 meters, the Brenner Railway to 1362 meters, the railway through the Mt. Cenis to 1295 meters, while the line over the Semmring only attains a height of 898 meters and the projected Simplon Railway (tunnel 18507 meters, the longest in the world) would only rise 711 meters above the sea.

The entrance at Goschenen being 1109 meters above the sea, the line within the tunnel up to the vortex has to ascend 45 meters and then to go down again to 1145 meters, being the height of the entrance portico at Airolo. From Goschenen the tunnel runs in a straight line for 14787 meters, but after that in a curve for 125 meters. It is situated 304 meters below Andermatt; 1800 meters below the summit of the Kastelhorn 2977 meters, 1843 meters below the Trittthorn (3003 meters) and 1350 meters below the lake of Sella.

London's Water Supply.

Water is supplied to the millions of London by seven companies, which, for the greater part, draw directly from the Thames in the neighborhood of Hampton. The daily delivery is 150,000,000 gallons. This water is purified by more than 100 filter beds, varying in size from three quarters of an acre to over an acre and a half in area. The immense amount of land, capital and labor invested in this work of purification may be understood by noting the following facts relating to the plant of the Southwark and Vauxhall Water Company, one of the seven to which reference is made. These works are located on the Surrey side of the Thames, below Lambeth Palace, the residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

They occupy sixty acres of ground in this crowded part of London, which, at its estimated value of $50,000 per acre, means an investment of $3,000,000 for the land alone. The water is pumped up 140 feet at the Hampton intake and thence runs 15 miles through a three-foot iron pipe before reaching the filtering plant at London. The filtered water is again lifted, by Cornish engines, into a stand pipe 200 feet high and is thence delivered locally. The water is received from the Hampton conduit pipe into two reservoirs, one holding 18,000,000 and the other 28,000,000 gallons, and is from them admitted to the filter beds, which are nine in number.

Each filter bed is in reality a large reservoir with solid masonry walls, containing at the bottom conduits built with open joints for collecting the filtered water. The filtering material (beginning at the bottom) is broken stone of gradually increasing fineness, then gravel and, finally sand. Such a filter may be seen at Hudson, N. Y., and also at Poughkeepsie, but the English build their filters upon a more substantial basis and also use finer sand than those above referred to. The depth of water allowed on the filter is four feet. The maximum delivery ever obtained from these nine filters was 125,000,000 gallons in seven days, or thirty-six gallons per day per square foot of surface. An English engineer usually estimates that a filter bed, in good working order, should deliver somewhat more than twice this amount.

To clean these nine beds a force of twenty-five men is required, one bed being no sooner cleaned than the men set to work upon the next. These laborers receive about ninety-five cents per day, and the average cost for cleaning is about $30 per bed. The rapidity with which the surface of the bed becomes clogged depends principally upon the season of the year. The greatest difficulty is experienced from March to July, when the upper layer of sand becomes covered with fish spawn, which quickly arrests filtration, and renders it necessary to remove the water from the top of the filter by pumping, before the obstructing spawn can be removed with rake and hoe. The loss of time and labor from this cause is a serious item.

From July until October another difficulty, scarcely less serious, is the growth of vegetation, which begins upon the bottom. This, in like manner, requires removal at short intervals. Even the comparatively mild English winters occasionally give trouble—notably that of 1884, when 70 men were constantly employed removing ice. Despite all these difficulties and this enormous expense, public sentiment in England so strongly demands a clear, bright and wholesome water that the practice of filtration is becoming general throughout the kingdom. Even in the case of Liverpool, which is bringing its new supply from Vyrnwy Lake, 50 miles away, in the Welsh Mountains, filter beds are to be used.

It is odd, in view of the superb results obtained in the purification of the supply of the city of Antwerp, that the expensive open filter bed should ever again be constructed. The new Antwerp plant is based upon an American patent, and is delivering 3,200 gallons of water per square foot of surface, as against 80 feet, which was the capacity of the old filter bed previously employed. When choked by dirt the Antwerp plant is cleaned by removing the current. Being covered, it does not admit of the growth of vegetation, and its current is too rapid to suffer from the danger of ice during winter.—W. P. M. in the Troy, N. Y. Times.

BELLOWS FALLS, Vt., Jan. 18, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: The many friends of Bro. J. B. Worthen, will no doubt be pleased to hear that he is still "on deck." James is a hustler, he having sold over 100 tickets for the fair to be held here Feb. 4, 5, and 6. It has to be an extremely cold morning when Cap'n gets left, as will be seen by reading the following from the Montpelier (Vt.) Argus and Patriot, of Jan. 15.

Yours truly,

JACK-ON-THE-GREEN.

"CAP'N JIM."

Most everybody knows Jim, of course, Conductor Jim on the Brattleboro & Whitehall railroad: "Cap'n Jim," as all the old-timers on Lake Champlain and along the Welland Canal, insist on calling him. He is now piloting the accommodation train over the mountain between Brattleboro and Whitehall, N. Y., and when at that end of the road makes his headquarters at the Yule Tree House. After getting into Whitehall evenings, he stores away a hearty supper the first thing, and then retires to the hotel office, where he proceeds to regale those present with tales of his hair-breadth escapes when Captain on a "Canaler," as he calls it, some thirty years ago. To hear Jim tell how he "ploughed the raging main" in a gale on Welland Canal once when the wind was blowing forty knots an hour off shore, and the waves were "running mountains high," and how the storm unstripped his rudder, nearly sending all hands to the bottom, and his being chased by the sharks and being kidnapped by pirates on Lake Champlain, is full as interesting as listening to Jo Cook's Monday Lectures in Boston, or reading Bill Nye's articles in the New York World. The Cap'n is a walking talking vocabulary of nautical phrases, and the habitual use of the same by him while engaged in water navigation, and a long time before he began slaughtering railroad tickets, still clings to him.

One night last summer, when he was taking the St. Louis limited over the Mountain Division, and while descending the other side, he ran into a landslide. During the temporary excitement that followed, and when passing through the twelve or fourteen coaches of his train trying to pacify the passengers, a lady in the Chicago sleeper nervously clutched him by the arm as he was passing her berth, and asked him what the trouble was. "O, nothing, marm, nothing," said Jim, "only the lubber at the wheel didn't luff 'er enough, and she's half her length high and dry on a sand-bar, and we've got to wait for a tug and lighter to haul her off." He came pretty near gettiug a vacation without pay for that, as the person he was talking to proved to be the wife of a prominent colored politician from Thompson street, New York, on her way from Boston to East Dorset, to attend a woman's rights convention. The Cap'n frequently startles his passengers from one end of his train to the other, when approaching Whitehall nights, by singing our in stentorian tones, causing all the car ventilators to open and shut automatically."—All ashore for Ticonderoga, Burlington, Plattsburgh, and Rouses Point! Step lively there, please! Step lively!"

When at the Brattleboro end of the road Jim "ties up" at the Bliss House, where he puts in most of his spare time singing "The Nancy Lee" or whistling "Pinafore," when he isn't entertaining Landlord Bliss and Frank Green with his yarns about the time he was doing missionary work in Central Africa. It rather took him down the other day, though, when Jack Turner, an old salt and former messmate of Jim's, just in from a two-year's voyage to the Sandwich Islands after whale oil, sailed into town about three sheets in the wind, during the latter's absence, and confidentially told Pat Austin and Oscar Willard, as Rob Ross, who happened around at the time, said, that all the missionary work the Cap'n ever did was when he took a cargo of New England rum and West India molasses, an invoice of warming pans, and a job lot of cast iron axes, worth four cents each, in 1853 out to the coast, and worked the whole business off on to the natives in exchange for a ship load of elephants' tusks. Jim has partly atoned for that since then, however, by joining the Dutch Reformed Presbyterians, of which he is now a member in good and regular standing, his rotund form and rubicund features always being the most conspicuous on communion day.

A New Style of Cars.

The Northern Pacific has just received twenty new colonist sleepers from Barney, Smith & Co., that are models of beauty, convenience and comfort, and contain many improvements over the ordinary colonist sleeper, or so-called tourist car generally in use.

Each car has fourteen sections with gentlemen's toilet room at one end, and the ladies' room, supplied with marble-topped washstand and force-pump, in the other. In one end of the car is a Baker fire-proof heater, which heats the cars by means of hot water conducted through pipes. In the opposite end of the car is a cooking range surrounded by good kitchen facilities. Opposite this range is a twenty gallon cooler for drinking water, also a large tank holding seventy gallons of water for general use.

These cars are finished in natural wood,—ash, maple and butternut—beautifully polished, and at night are lighted up with eight Acme lamps, exactly similar to those in use on Pullman sleepers. The sections are divided by sliding beadboards, effecting a privacy not possible in the present style of cars, where the sections are separated by a wire netting. An ingenious arrangement of the seats enables them to be extended flat or with head rests when prepared for bedding, and under each seat is a box in which can be stored bedding or small baggage. In each section there is also provided a movable table similar to those in use in Pullman cars, which is extremely convenient for many purposes. All cars are provided with curtain rods.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Northern Pacific employs a porter to look after these sleepers, all holders of second-class

Montana and Pacific Coast tickets are allowed to use them FREE OF CHARGE. The Northern Pacific has a greater number of these sleepers in service than any other transcontinental line, their total equipment now amounting to sixty-three cars. It is clear that in providing for the comfort of the traveling public, the Northern Pacific, with its new vestibuled dining and sleeping cars and superior accommodations for second-class passengers, leads all its competitors.—The Independent.

Doing Things Well.

"There!" said Harry, throwing down the shoe-brush, "that'll do. My shoes don't look very bright, but no matter. Who cares?"

"Whatever is worth while doing at all is worth doing well," said his father, who had heard the boy's careless speech.

Harry blushed, while his father continued:

"My boy, your shoes look wretched. Pick up the brush and make them shine; when you have finished them, come into the house."

As soon as Harry appeared with his well-polished shoes, his father said:

"I have a little story to tell you. I once knew a little boy whose mother taught him the proverb which I repeated to you a few minutes ago. This boy went out to service in a gentleman's family and he took pains to do everything well, no matter how unimportant it seemed. His employer was pleased, and he took him into his shop. He did his work well there, and when sent on errands he went quickly, and was soon back in his place. So he advanced from step to step until he became clerk, and then a partner in the business. He is now a rich man, and anxious that his son Harry should practice the rule that made him prosper."

"Why, papa, were you a poor boy once?"

"Yes, my son; so poor that I had to go out to service, and black boots and wait at table, and do any service that was required of me. By doing these little things well, I was soon entrusted with more important ones."

Sad Indeed.

Neighbor—"Mr. Skrimp, I have bad news to tell you."

"Farmer Skrimp—"Hev, eh? Whud mout it be?"

"It is very shocking, my friend, and I advise you to be prepared for the worst."

"Wal, go on."

"This morning your wife, in attempting to cross the ford, rode into deep water and both she and the horse were drowned."

"Gret snakes, yer don't sesso."

"Alas, it's but too true."

"By gum, but thet's mouty bad."

"It is indeed a great calamity, my friend."

"Wal, it jest air. It's er awful slam on me, shore. Why, neighbor, I akchly wouldn't er tuck hun'ned dollars for that ere hoss; an' ther ole 'oman knowed hit. It jest nachully do pear like woman folks don't think o' nothiu; n' they're so keerless.—St. Louis Humorist.

A description of the new Croton aqueduct, given in the Century, helps to give some idea of the magnitude of the work by comparing it with railroad tunnels. It is slightly smaller in diameter than these tunnels, but very much longer. The Hoosac Tunnel is 24,000 feet long, the Mont Cenis 8 miles long, the St. Gothard 9½ miles, while the new Croton aqueduct will be nearly 30 miles long. It is a very much greater work in every way than the old Roman aqueducts about which so much has been written, but less is heard of it because it has been built in this day of great things.

A countryman visiting the Surrogate's office, on observing the huge volume of wills on the shelves, asked if they were Bibles. "No, sir," said the clerk, "they are testaments."—N. Y. Ledger.

Baby in Church.

Aunt Nellie had fashioned a dainty thing
 Of Hamburg and ribbon and lace.
 And mamma had said as she settled it round
 Our beautiful baby's face,
 Where the dimples play and the laughter lies
 Like sunbeams hid in her violet eyes:
 "If the day is pleasant and baby is good,
 She may go to church and wear her new hood."

Then Ben, aged six, began to tell,
 In older-brotherly way,
 How very, very good she must be
 If she went to church next day.
 He told of the church, of the choir and the crowd,
 And the man up in front who talks so loud;
 But she must not talk, nor laugh, nor sing,
 But just sit as quiet as anything.

And so, on a beautiful Sabbath in May,
 When the fruit-buds burst into flowers
 (There wasn't a blossom on bush or tree
 So fair as this blossom of ours,)
 All in her white dress, dainty and new,
 Our baby sat in the family pew.
 The grand, sweet music, reverent air,
 The solemn hush, and the voice of prayer

Filled all her baby soul with awe,
 As she sat in her little place,
 And the holy look that angels wear
 Seemed pictured upon her face.
 And the sweet words uttered so long ago,
 Came into my mind with a rhythmic flow:
 "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," said He,
 And I knew that He spake of such as she.

The sweet-voiced organ pealed forth again,

The collection-box came round,
 And baby dropped her penny in
 And smiled at the clinking sound.
 Alone in the choir Aunt Nellie stood,
 Waiting the close of the soft prelude,
 To begin her solo. High and strong
 She struck the first note; clear and long

She held it, and all were charmed but one,
 Who, with all the might she had,
 Sprang to her little feet and cried,
 "Aunt Nellie, you's being bad!"
 The audience smiled, the minister coughed,
 The little boys in the corner laughed,
 The tenor-man shook like an aspen leaf,
 And hid his face in his handkerchief

And poor Aunt Nellie never could tell
 How she finished that terrible strain,
 But says that nothing on earth would tempt
 Her to go through the scene again.
 So we have decided perhaps 'tis best
 For her sake, ours, and all the rest,
 That we wait, maybe, for a year or two,
 Ere our baby re-enter the family pew.

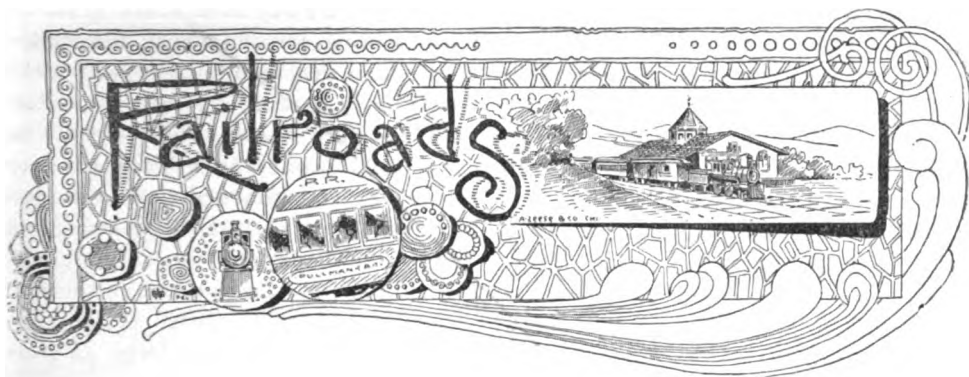

—Selected,

The thousand or more men employed at the works of the Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Co., at Springfield, O., of which the well-known engineer, Chas. A. Bauer, is the general manager, gave during the holidays a very pleasant testimonial of their appreciation of his management, in the form of a bronze statue, symbolical of the business in which they are engaged, and which was quietly left in the office during the temporary absence of the proprietors, accompanied by a letter expressing the kindest sentiments of friendship and good will.

This is something of a departure from the usual program in such cases, and does away with the usual feature of speech-making, which those who have them to make, usually feel are among the things which had better be left unsaid. An additional cause for congratulation in this instance is the recent purchase by the company of the exclusive right to the manufacture of the machinery, which they have heretofore shared with two other concerns; which will, of course, result in a largely increased business.

Andrew Carnegie, it is said, will furnish the money to rebuild the public library destroyed by the flood at Johnstown, Pa. This is a very commendable act on his part, since there are no claims on him for doing it. It must be a satisfaction to a man of Mr. Carnegie's means to unload some of it where he can see it do good while he is living. His heirs will not quarrel over the money that goes to rebuild that library, and it will go right on doing good after he is dead. If men would consider the example of the late Peter Cooper, who was one of the happiest men in New York, there would be more public libraries built from overflowing pocket-books, and fewer from the bequests of wills.

A man desiring to have a pet dog licensed, facetiously asked the clerk if the dog had to make a personal application. "No," was the reply. "You, as next of kin, can take out the papers."—N. Y. Ledger.

Total mileage of the United States and Territories, 161,720 miles.

* *

$200,000 is the estimated loss the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe sustained by the recent flood in California, and the Southern Pacific's loss reached $150,000.

* *

The Grant Locomotive Works have been incorporated in Illinois for the purpose of manufacturing locomotives and other machinery. Capital stock, $800,000.

* *

In 1886 the average number of passengers carried on each passenger train on the Union Pacific Railway was 40; in 1889, the average was 60. Quite a respectable increase for a northern road.

* *

The present fast train on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy is called the "Eli." We understand that arrangements have been made for putting on one that will make the time between Chicago and Denver in 30 hours. Better name this the "Get There."

* *

We notice that Mr. Fred J. Allen, who has for many years been connected with the Engineering Department of the C., B. & Q. Railroad at Galesburg, Illinois, has received the appointment of road-master of the Chicago Division, with headquarters at Aurora: We have been personally acquainted with and socially connected with Mr. Allen for many years. Are pleased to hear of the confidence reposed in him, and feel that he will perform his duties satisfactorily to his employers and himself in the future, as he has done in the past.

* *

From the Indianapolis Journal we learn that 42,204 passenger trains arrived and departed from the Union station in that city during the year 1889, making 320,996 cars. The number of loaded freight cars dispatched and received during the year being 861,991.

* *

The oldest Railway President being is supposed to be Mr. Bonum Nye, living now in his ninety-fifth year. He is President of the North Brookfield Railroad Company, and has been President of this company since it was organized in 1875. He is also a civil engineer.

* *

On March 1st the Chicago & Alton Railroad have arranged to put on a passenger service between Chicago and Denver that will be excelled by none. It is said that they are in conjunction with the Union Pacific, arranging to put on some very handsome trains for this route.

* *

The statement of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, for eleven months ending Nov. 30th, seems to be a very favorable showing for that period. It shows an increase in gross of $2,674,726, a decrease in operating expenses of $1,291,370; which leaves an increase of $3,966,096 on the C., B. & Q. proper.

A special train consisting of the officers of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad made the time over the Southern Pacific, a distance of 220 miles in 222 minutes, actual running time, and they think they could have done much better if the road had not been in such bad condition on account of the recent rains. Next.

* *

From the Railway Age we borrow the following tabulated statement regarding the states that have more than 5,000 miles of railway.

Illinois	10,079	Michigan	6,739
Kansas	8,815	Indiana	6,013
Texas	8,494	Missouri	6,001
Iowa	8,455	Minnesota	5,519
Pennsylvania...	8,417	Wisconsin	5,440
New York	7,762	Nebraska	5,020
Ohio	7,759

* *

Hereafter no freight trains will be permitted to pass any station where there is a telegraph operator until the conductor has gone to the office and received from the operator a written statement, whether he has any orders for his train or no. This does not relieve the operator from displaying the proper signals for any orders he may have for these gentlemen. These are the new rules of the C., M. & St. P.

* *

The resignation of John C. Gault as general manager of the Queen & Crescent route will undoubtedly be the means of furnishing some other first class road with a competent, live, energetic business man. Such men as Mr. Gault are not lying around for any length of time waiting for something to turn up. He has not only been a hard worker, but eminently successful, and some live company will take him up before many days, and his capabilities be noticed in some new and untried field of labor.

* *

The Wabash Railway has treated its bondholders to the greatest surprise of their lives by declaring a dividend of three per cent. on $3,500,000 of its securities for the last six month's earnings. Many a long and weary day have these gentlemen been waiting for the wheel of fortune to stop where they could pick up a nickle. But it really looks as though the "Rubicon" had been passed, and "Moses" had got out of the wilderness. They have seen the loaves and fishes depart from their sight year after year, as if a string were tied to each one and even the crumbs seemed too small for any use, and now the prospect of a little "manna" in the shape of a dividend will look as large as a new sled to a poor boy on Christmas morning.

* *

Once in a while some company gets even with its rival in a very curious manner. For instance, one road gives its patrons the benefit of a cut rate and its connecting lines go in with it. Another opposition line wishes to see it and perhaps go a little better, but upon consulting its connecting lines they see no money in the operation and blankly refuse to be a participant; but the first named not wishing to give up the ghost, meets the cut by carrying the passengers over its mileage for nothing. There is not anything in this world like a firm's doing business, especially as long as it has its sign out. And as "Competition is the life of trade" it must put on an appearance and in some way make up the deficiency on some other fellow. Do business, anyhow.

* *

What a winter for builders of car heaters, snow-plows, and ice-harvesting machines. Something is wrong, either the seasons are changing or else we are being treated to a new dispensation by the weather bureau. In Iowa it can easily be accounted for; the democrats are the ones who are responsible for everything, Grippe and all. But while the manufacturers of car heaters and snow-plows are walking around with their under lip hanging down, there are business men in other occupations who are daily very busy. The undertaker and the doctor, and the man who digs the little graves have been, and are very busy. The old theory that a moderate winter is a healthy one, is, of necessity, broken down by the number of new-made graves in nearly every burying ground. And before the winter months are over, it may have seemed better that there had been more snow, more ice, and less summer weather at the wrong time of the year.

* *

Mr. Francis Cope, general freight and passenger agent of the Mountain division of the Union Pacific Railway, who died at Salt Lake City, Dec. 30th, was emphatically a self-made man. It is pleasant to read the encomiums passed by the acquaintances of one who by a system of grand and noble business acts has, left behind him an honorable name, and whose associates all feel proud to say a few words in praise of a well-spent life. Such men's places are hard to fill; while there are many smart and active, perhaps capable men in the field, who are anxious to occupy prominent positions in railway circles, still it will take quite a little time to gain that necessary qualification which experience alone can give.

* *

By the dispatches that come over the wires we learn that a few editors in the great state of Texas have been indulging in their favorite sport of selling their railway passes to a firm of scalpers at Fort Worth; and the scalpers in order to get even have sold them to tourists after making arrangements with a few of the conductors to accept them. If these men who class themselves as editors can get any particular satisfaction out of this kind of business they are certainly entitled to all the credit there is in it. We do not begrudge them any portion of the honor they may see in the matter. We suppose, however, they go on the principle that all they can get out of a railway company is so much gained. But we heartily wish to be considered as one who has no sympathy with any such proceedings. There is an honest and honorable way of doing business. There are many inventions that never, as yet, have been patented that do not belong to this catalogue.

* *

From recent dispatches we learn that Mr. E. A. Touzalín, late president of the Chicago, Burlington & Northern, who recently died, has left an estate reported to be worth $5,000,000. This is certainly a snug little sum for anyone to leave behind them. But the question will naturally arise in one's mind, of what particular use is it to the poor man who labored so hard to obtain this amount, in the years that are to come. Whether it pays to work hard for forty or fifty years, depriving one's self of many pleasures and comforts to gain a matter of $5,000,000, and then be obliged to leave it all behind, and enter upon an existence, the time of which no man has ever conceived, much less ascertained, is a question that is worth considering. It is always well to pursue a life of activity, and try to gain riches that you may make others as well as yourself, happy with. We have been able to do this to a considerable extent on $80 per month, and find ourselves. But when you come up into the millions, and are obliged to go away and leave it all, we are not prepared to pass an opinion on the happiness that it occasions, and we know of no conductor who is

* *

We notice that some gentleman by the name of Lewis Grissell has sued the Pennsylvania company in the small sum of $10,000 damages, said damages being claimed on account of injuries received from sitting down in a seat in one of the company's coaches and not finding a cushioned seat as he anticipated. What the nature of the offense is we have not learned. There may have been a boil on the seat, and he anticipated that the action of sitting on the cushion would relieve him, or he may have been sitting down at home so long that the seat had become weary and the disappointment made him weary and disconsolate. We are not up regarding railroad law on this particular subject, but we are of the opinion that Lewis will not be able to recover. As to damages, that is another thing, it is possible that the seat being farther off than he anticipated, by not being cushioned, that the SEAT may have received a kind of a paradoxical shock that may hinder the gentleman's seat from being seated in a proper manner. It is evident that all railway companies should, hereafter, use every precaution imaginable to bring their seats as near the seats of their passengers as possible, if they would avoid heavy suits for damages, by having their seats too far from their passenger's. We wait with impatience, to hear how Lewis comes out in his suit.

* * *

It would seem that the great board of railway commissioners in the great state of Mississippi, have taken possession of an idea, and were bound to carry it out in a manner that will cost the state many years of prosperity and improvement that it might enjoy were it not for the immaculate wisdom of these great Solons of this commonwealth. They have usurped the power, as it were, of both state and people, and dictate to different railway companies what and how many trains they shall run; what their rates for freight shall be, with no regard to, or respect for the inter-state commerce law, and dictating in all minor details what each railway company may or may not do. Or, in a word, they decide everything and pay nothing; also cripple every railway interest in the state and afford no relief, but have succeeded effectually thus far, in paralyzing all railway improvements. A board of this kind may injure the business prospects and possibilities of any state, more in one year than she can regain by temperate and wise legislation in five. There is a medium in all things that is, as a rule, very commendable and oftentimes wise, and a sad departure from this, is often fraught with great injury to both state and national prosperity.

* * *

In an address delivered a few days ago before the Senate committee on the location of the World's Fair by Mr. E. T. Jeffrey, we find the following summary of facts. He says: In respect to transportation facilities there are in Chicago in its passenger stations 335 miles of railway tracks; in its freight yards for freight traffic purposes, 580 miles of tracks. The twenty-four railroads which have terminals in Chicago, aggregate 54,411 miles, and tributary to many of these are other lines having traffic contracts with them, which if their mileage were added to the 54,000 mentioned, would swell the total actually tributary to Chicago, to over 70,000 miles, thus establishing the fact that there are more miles of railroad nesting in Chicago and more miles of railroad tributary to Chicago than are tributary to any other city on the face of the globe. To conduct its passenger traffic for 1889, 865,350 passenger cars were received and forwarded. Almost a million passenger cars are required to conduct the passenger travel to and from the city in one year. To conduct its freight traffic, rail exclusively, 4,278,769 freight cars arrive and depart. It is also the second port in the United States. Its tonnage is the second also. In number of vessels arriving and clearing it is the first. In 1888 the street cars carried a total of 140,000,000 passengers. In 1889 there were 163,000,000 carried. The average moved daily being 446,576. There are over forty miles of through passenger cars from Chicago to other cities within the United States.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 13th, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: I have watched the columns of THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR to hear from Division 148. I have watched in vain. We are still living and doing well. We have one of the finest Divisions in the south, in every way, in my estimation. In three years we have failed only twice to have a meeting. The boys are coming up every meeting to get the new work, and they all like it so much better than the old. Our Chief is on his fifth term, and he is a good one. Our A. C. is on his fourth term; our J. C. is on his fourth; our Secretary and Treasurer has that place for life, for he is one of the best, and if you want to raise a racket in the Division, just say something about a change, and they all jump to their feet and with one voice, "No." Our officers are well posted in the unwritten work of the Order; and we have the kickers and I don't think a Division can live without them, for they will bring up a question that will bring out our talent on a dispute, and you ought to be present to hear the boys on a debate. Every member has his say. No one member can run this Division—it takes every member to run it.

Our worthy Secretary is in deep sorrow, his baby is lying at the point of death. He has our sympathy.

Frank Leighton, a worthy brother and a good conductor on the A. G. S., was knocked off his train at Springville by a spout on a water tank and was killed. He leaves a young wife to mourn his loss. Just a few days before, I was after him to take the insurance, but he failed to do so. Brothers if you love your wife and babies, don't hesitate a moment to take the insurance, for it is the best monument we can leave behind us, and then our families won't be left on the cold charities of the world, and there won't be any appeals to other Divisions for help. Brothers, if you have no insurance, make your wife a present of a policy at once, for you don't know what to-morrow is going to bring forth. If this is not thrown into the waste basket I will try again.

Yours in P. F..

LOOKOUT.

Wishing These Lives Away.

I heard a little one to his mother say,

As up to her he ran:

"I am tired of my toys to-day,

I wish I were a man."

A man bought a piece of land to-day.

"For ten years I shall let it lay;

I wish the time would pass away

For then I shall be rich," I heard him say.

An old father and mother, so dear,

Standing by the homestead door:

"I wish that the summer were here

That we could see our boy once more."

Manhood calculating,

The child at play,

Old age meditating,

All wishing these lives away.

HERBERT T. BOLLIS.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 1st, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: As this is the first day of the new year, I thought I would commence it by writing you a few lines and keep you posted as to what we are doing here. Last night was the event of our third annual ball and banquet, and it was not "one" of the events of the season, but "the" event of the season. It is well known here that the Conductors always have a first-class affair, and at 9:30 p. m., the grand march took place, which was led by our general floor manager, Brother C. D. Roberts. About three hundred were in the grand march at the Leland hotel, and the music by Prof. Fero's orchestra was excellent. Just before the ball opened the committee were notified that they were wanted in the reception rooms and some ten of the brothers repaired to that part of the house, where they were met by Mr. A. J. Schevers, who, in behalf of the American Brake Co., presented the Division with a handsome ballot-box and gavel. The hall was beautifully decorated with red, white and green lanterns, flags and other railway emblems, hung on the chandeliers and walls. Supper was served in the ordinary, and was gotten up in the usual excellent manner of the Leland, and embraced everything that could be wished for. The Menu card was in the shape of a coupon ticket, with seven coupons representing a trip over the seven routes that center in Springfield, and good from Raw Oyster station to Ice Cream and Coffee station. The trip was over the Leland hotel route, and the form number of ticket was O. R. C., Divi. No. 206, and embraced the usual rules somewhat modified to suit the occasion, and a description of the holder as indicated by punch marks. The menu was the work of Col. Wiggins, the proprietor of the Leland, and the best ever seen here. After the banquet the party again repaired to the ball room, and at 4:30 a. m. the ball was a thing of the past. Everybody that attended expressed themselves as satisfied, and promised to be at our next. The Springfield Daily State Register, of Jan. 1st, 1890, says: "The Knights of the Punch are royal entertainers and the affair was most excellently managed and was very creditable to those who had it in charge."

The Division wishes to extend their thanks to the officers of the Wabash railway, Illinois Central R'y, J. S. E. R'y., S. A. & S. L. R'y, St. L. & C. R'y, for the transportation which was given for parties attending our ball.

We have moved our division rooms and hereafter will meet over the Marine bank in the A. O. U. W. rooms. At our election of officers on Dec. 29th, the following were elected: W. P. Sheehan, C. C.; Wm. Reilley, A. C. C.; F. G. Schmitt, S. & T.; C. W. Castles, S. C.; E. D. Roberts, J. C.; T. F. Corrigan, I. S.; Chas. Snape, O. S.; F. G. Schmitt, delegate; Wm. Reilley, alternate. Trustee; J. M. Winston.

Wishing you all a Happy New Year, and hoping all will try and make this year a successful one for our Order, I remain

Yours in P. F.,
XIX, Div. 206.

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 31st, 1889.

E. H. Belknap, Esq.,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Cleveland Division No. 14, Cleveland, Ohio, have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: C. P. Hodges, 5 Fairfield street, C. C.; Fred Morwick, 50 Burton street, Secretary. Meet 2d and 4th Sunday in each month at 1 p. m., standard time, in I. O. O. F. hall, No. 52, Public square.

Yours truly in P. F.,
F. A. BUNNELL, Ex. Sec.

HOLLINGSWORTH DIVISION BALL.—The annual ball of Hollingsworth Division No. 100, Order of Railway Conductors, at the City hall last evening was a gratifying success. The hall was handsomely decorated by Messrs. Charles Thornton and C. H. McKean. The walls were hung with pictures loaned by Messrs. Baker and Elliot. A handsome oil portrait of George E. Carr, former general superintendent of the Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo railway, graced the center of the stage. The letters O. R. C. were hung over the stage and suspended from them was a picture of Governor-elect Campbell. The picture of Mr. Campbell called forth varied comments. All the railroad organizations were represented in the decorations. The reception committee was composed of Messrs. Garrett Fox, W. B. Jennings, Gus Shipley and J. W. Brown.

READING, Pa., Jan. 8th, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: The officers elect for the ensuing term in Nicolls' Division No. 229, are as follows:

Louis A. Neiman, 24 S. 2d St., C. C.; Jacob S. Fisher, 225 S. 4th St., A. C. C.; Wm. Boate, 514 S. 6th, S. and T.; H. C. Hedley, 1041, Greenwich, S. C.; Timothy Lynch, 45 S. 2d, J. C.; Samuel Herbun, 839 Greenwich, I. S.; H. Prutzman, 924 N. 8th, O. S.; Wm. Boate, 514, S. 6th, delegate; J. J. Dooley, Potsville, alternate.

I could not comply with your request in getting this to your office before the 5th, as I have been a victim of the grippe, and am hardly able to write yet, but have done the best I could.

Yours in P. F.,

WM. BOATE.

TOPEKA, Jan. 1st, 1890.

Editor Conductor:

DEAR SIR: Topeka Division 179, elected the following officers at their last meeting, and there was considerable feeling over who should be elected, etc. Brother Bobby got on his ear for a little while but finally got cooled off, otherwise the meeting passed off very quietly. But it took all day. I give the names of the officers elected for the year 1890,

Wm. Burnes, C. C.; A. J. Rader, A. C. C.; C. C. Fellows, S. and T.; Geo. Calbert, S. C.; P. M. Laux, J. C.; R. B. Donahue, I. S.; C. Barthman, O. S.; D. I. Furbek, delegate to the National Convention; A. J. Rader, alternate.

Our Division is increasing. We added two members at our last meeting, and have a very good attendance now since we changed our hours from 1 p. m. to 10 a. m. By doing this it gives those brothers running passenger trains a chance to attend meeting and return to Kansas City to take out their respective runs. We have fifty-four members in good standing; we also have several members that have ample time to attend our meetings, but for some little cause they fail to do so. We lost a very good brother from our meeting, J. A. Murray, who has changed to New Mexico Division on account of his health. But success to you Jack, and hope you will gather the friends around you there same as you leave here.

Brother Campbell has been promoted to a suburban train running from Kansas City to West Argentine. Harvey says he thinks he will like the run first rate if they don't hang a chestnut bell on his neck. Brother M. Murray, also assists Harry on this run during his lay-over hours in Kansas City.

This is New Year's day and I hope all Bros. will have a good dinner with a turkey on the side, but for me, I have regular old army beans for mine. I will close for this time, but will try and give a few more items for next issue.

We are having a very nice winter, not cold enough to wear an overcoat.

Yours in P. F.,

BIG DOG.

ALLIANCE, O., Jan. 13th, 1890.

Editor of the Monthly,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: At a regular meeting of Alliance Division 177, Dec. 23d, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

C. W. Garland, C. C.; F. Fisher, A. C. C.; M. R. Mathews, S. and T.; H. R. Bowden, S. C.; O. Duton, J. C.; W. W. Bevington, J. C.; A. Baer, O. S. -Division Committee: J. C. McHenry, F. M. Foster and G. H. McKinley. M. R. Mathews, delegate to Grand Division, 1890.

While our brothers have met with success in the past year and suffered no death loss in our Division, we hope for a continuance of good fortune for 1890, and may our best wishes be extended to all the brothers throughout the land. May God bless and protect them through 1890. Any brother not carrying our insurance, (or some other,) should at once take out a policy and make himself and dear family happy.

F. M. FOSTER.

BRATTLEBORO, VT., January 1, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: Saturday evening, Dec. 28, Bellows Falls Division No. 233, met at Grand Army hall and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: for C. C., P. G. Dawley; A. C., A. G. Carleton; S. and T., W. H. Kiniry; S. C., M. Severance; J. C., T. Allen; I. S., C. J. Knight; O. S., F. A. Amidon. Delegate to the Grand Division, M. Severance; Alternate, S. M. Whitney; Chairman of Executive Committee, W. H. Kiniry; First Ex. Com., James Hayes; Second Ex. Com., H. E. Bean.

This Division was organized April 22, 1888, with a charter membership of 16. We now have 22 members all told. Our regular meetings are held the second Sunday, at 2 P. M., and the fourth Saturday, at 7:45 P. M., of each month. The latch string is always out for all visiting brothers. Bellows Falls being centrally located at the terminus of several railroads, ought to double our numbers, but for some reason or other the Division is lacking in enthusiasm, at least that interest is not manifested that should be in order to make the meeting a success. A little of Dr. Brown-Sequard's elixer of life carefully injected into some of the lifeless members might make a difference perhaps. However, there is a prospect of a "revival" about the first week in February, it having been decided to begin the same by opening with a dance, in addition to holding a three day's fair. Tickets are to be sold, and those who get the lucky numbers will find themselves the happy possessors of either a fancy Portland, state of Maine bang-up sleigh, a lady's gold ring, a ton of coal, a lady's gold watch, a black walnut chamber set, or a gent's gold ring. Everybody is cordially invited to invest "fifty cents a piece all 'round, please." Ten cents a figure for dancing will not be refused, probably. A good time is anticipated. It is intimated that "Senator" Kiniry will deliver an impromptu speech some time during the second evening of the festivities, to be followed by a song and chorus: "Left Foot Forward." Words and music written and composed especially for the occasion, and sung by the Cheshire Glee Club, Brothers Amidon, Hayes, Burpee and Allen. Immediately after this, Bro. Worthen, by request, will endeavor to render one of his new and inimitable bone solos, also a fine imitation of the mocking bird, so successfully given by him in nearly every state in the Union and Canada West, while traveling with O'Brien's Consolidated Shows. Brother Worthen particularly asks, that the friends remain seated during the execution of the last act, as it is an exceedingly difficult part to perform. He especially requests that those present kindly refrain from giving any encores. A large attendance is expected.

McGINTY.

FARGO, Jan. 7th, 1890.

W. P. Daniels, Esq., Manager Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I forward you $2.00 by express for the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for the coming year. I also wish to give you some facts as to my experience in the Order of Railway Conductors. Nineteen years ago, I attended the Grand Convention of the Order held in Cleveland, Ohio, in the month of October, in the above named year.

At that convention I was nominated chairman of committee to revise the Constitution and By-Laws of the Order of Railroad Conductors. Having taken a great interest in the welfare of the Order. I was the author of that clause in our Constitution which strictly forbids a member of the Order from taking any active part, or aiding, or abetting a strike. This was the foundation of our Order, which gained for us the confidence of our fellow-men and the good-will of our employers. I carried this matter through, because experience taught me so. I brought the first four charters from that convention that ever was organized east of the Ohio river, namely, No. 13, in Elmira, N. Y., No. 12, in Scranton, Pa., and No. 5, at Pittston, Pa., and one at Mauch Chunk, Pa. Some of these divisions are in existence yet under different numbers, and yet there is some of the old charter members remaining. Our Order in those days was in its youth, but it has grown prosperous by the active exertions of good and true men. I used to be a fair writer in days gone by, but sickness has moved my brain and I cannot write as I used to. I am slowly getting better since I came to the North West, and I may regain my former health. I could write you many interesting articles about railroading during the late war, as I had a good deal of experience in those times of what was taking place. During that time I have often laid down on the caboose floor to keep clear of the guerilla's bullets, which came out of the woods every mile we run. You can publish this in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR if you wish, for I have many old friends on the eastern roads that would like to hear from me.

WM. F. FALKNER,

920 First avenue, Fargo, N. Dakota.

P. S. I was the author of the monogram which used to appear on the O. R. C. letter paper, which reads:

Let faithfulness to our trust,
Gain for us the confidence
Of our fellow man, and
The good-will of our employers.

—FALKNER.

JERSEY CITY, Dec. 19, 1889.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR: At a special meeting held December 15, 1889, the following officers were elected and installed to serve the ensuing year: C. C., John B. McBurth; A. C. C., John Nicholson; S. and T., J. W. Dent; S. C., P. M. Bryan; J. C., Joseph Gordon; I. S., John D. Dayton; O. S., Wm. A. White; Delegate, H. D. Staats; Alternate, Robert McDonald; Trustee, J. S. Hulick; Division Com., F. W. Branagan, J. H. Dodwell and Jos. Gordon.

Yours in P. F.,

J. W. DENT, Sec.

1890.

Ready again for another year,
Breaking away all doubts and fear.
Higher, still higher! our motives be.

Doing our work persistently.
In "perpetual friendship" we realize Vastly depends the coveted prize.

One great body a unit, moving with might;
One grand object in view, that is, to do right.
Four years hence "perfect service" shall gain

Our equality with others on the same train.
Right is might, and individual worth
Cannot be trampled into the earth.

GEO. J. CHURCHILL, Cor. Sec. Div. 114.
Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 1st, 1890.

ELKHART, Ind., Jan. 14, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: If you will give me space in the CONDUCTOR I want to ask a few questions. Some I may answer myself and if not correct, let some other brother come to the front and correct them:

1st. Will the principles which we have so long advocated ever gain the end for which labor organizes?

2d. Is it not a fact, that railway officials use us as examples when one of us gets into the least trouble, for the purpose of keeping other organizations (or members of them) under partial subjection?

I think they certainly do, as I can bear witness to such facts.

Brothers, I am a victim of a brother's negligence and a superintendent's tyranny, myself. Very little effort has ever been made to right the wrong done. Ah! methinks I hear a brother say "the Order is not to blame for that." And I agree with my brother, it is the individual members that are to blame. Now, brothers, let me warn you, the time has come when we have got to do work that will show greater results than ever before, or our names are Denis. And let me add, I don't believe any great amount can be accomplished by any of your pretty, please talk not alone. It must be done by showing that it is our right, and that justice we are bound to have. We must continue to invite the confidence of other organizations, as we have always done. They have snubbed us and may do it again, but I don't believe they will. The policy that has been followed by some in the past must not be repeated. I believe the time has come, (and I believe every fair-minded man or woman in America will agree with me), when it is the imperative duty of every man who works, to unmistakably array himself on the side of labor's interest. There it goes again, I hear some brother saying, we are not a striking organization, what can we do? How can we work with such organizations? I can answer. If trouble arises, do the work you have always done and no more. One more suggestion and I will close, for I don't suppose this will ever find its way into the journal anyhow. When you have a grievance to adjust and send a committee, don't let them stop at a Div. Supt., neither a Gen'l Supt., but send them to the Directors and President of the road if your grievance is worthy of it, if not don't go at all. I have always done all in my power for the good of the Order, and am willing to keep on to the end if I can get the support and aid from all the brothers of Division 19.

Yours in P. F.,

R. L. MYERS.

[The brother is certainly disappointed once in his life.—ED.]

THANKFUL FOR RAILWAY BANNERS: At a meeting of Lackawanna Division No. 12, O. R. C., held in our hall Sunday, Jan. 12, our members enjoyed a very pleasant surprise, in as much as we were the happy recipients of two beautiful banners bearing the emblems of the order.

WHEREAS, It has been our happy lot to be the recipients of this beautiful present, and as we receive them with due appreciation and with the same kindly feelings with which they were given, be it, therefore.

Resolved, That we tender to Mrs. Bogart our sincere and heartfelt gratitude for her handsome and appropriate gift, with the hope that her life and happiness may long be preserved, and that the kindly interest entertained and manifested by her toward our Order may receive its merited reward, and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mrs. J. B. Bogart, and to the city papers and to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

Samuel Boorrem, M. Devanny, John J. O'Hara, A. H. Masters, David Warrick, committee.

DE SOTO, MO., Jan. 5th, 1890.

TO EDITOR OF CONDUCTOR: At the annual election for officers of De Soto Division 241, held December 15th, the following officers were elected:

C. C., S. S. Johns; A. C. C., Monte Robertson; S. and T., A. A. Comean; S. C., M. M. Kelley; J. C., W. C. Brown; I. S., W. J. Cain; O. S., D. A. Dees; Delegate, W. C. Turner, Alternate, W. C. Brown. Member of Division Committee for three years Bro. Thos. Maguire. This Division has but twenty-three members, all in good standing.

Yours in P. F.,

A. A. COMEAN,

Sec. Pro.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 13, 1890.

E. H. Belknap, Esq., Editor Conductor, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Enclosed please find article relative to the First Annual Banquet, given by the officers and directors of the Railway Officials' and Conductors' Accident Association, of Indianapolis, Ind., to their traveling representatives at New Dennison Hotel, Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 7th, 1890.

Complimentary Annual Banquet and Entertainment, by the Officers and Directors of the Railway Officials' and Conductors' Accident Association, of Indianapolis, Indiana, to their Traveling Representatives, at
New Dennison Hotel,
Indianapolis, Indiana,
Tuesday, January, 7th, 1890,
One O'clock, p. m.

The officers and directors of the association, and about fifty of their traveling representatives, met at the general offices of the company, at 9 o'clock, a. m. After the usual exchange of handshaking and introduction, all went directly to the union depot, where they were met by Col. D. F. Whitcomb, general superintendent of the Indianapolis Union Railway Company, and Capt. J. Q. Hicks, general yardmaster of the Big Four Railway Company. Through the courtesy of these gentlemen, an elegant new coach, and engine of the Big Four Company, was placed at the disposal of the traveling representatives, and their officers, for an excursion around the city by the Belt road. At precisely 10 o'clock, a. m., the train moved out of the Union depot, in charge of Conductor Wm. Hurley, Engineer John Mack, Fireman Edward Zion. Capt. Hicks had charge of affairs, and saw that none of the representatives got left. Stops were made at Brightwood shops, stockyards, and at North Indianapolis. The tile works were also visited, and the many pretty girls employed there voted the representatives of the Railway Officials' & Conductors' Accident Association, a much handsomer lot of men than were the Pan-American visitors. One of the diversions of the trip, was an amateur minstrel entertainment; Messrs. Bellis and Huston, on the ends, and Mr. W. S. Robertson, representative from Sandusky, Ohio, interlocutor. The latter sang several beautiful ballads, and a number of comic ditties. Mr. Robertson has a splendid voice, and is a brother of Mrs. Kendal, the very popular and accomplished English comedienne, who was at that time playing to crowded houses in Chicago having made a great hit through the east. Mr. Charles Foster, editor of the Hoosier, was along, and presented all with a copy of his publication. The excursion throughout was characterized by a singular degree of harmony and good nature, not the slightest occurrence arising to disturb the tranquillity of the party. On the return trip, the following resolutions were presented and unanimously passed by the Railway Officials' & Conductors' Accident Association, and their travelling representatives.

Resolved, That we do most heartily return our thanks, to Col. D. F. Whitcomb, superintendent of the Indianapolis Union Railway Company, and to Capt. J. Q. Hicks, general yardmaster of the Big Four Railway Company, for their magnanimous expression of good-will and liberality of spirit, which has placed at our disposal, a special train to afford us the great pleasure of a few hours in visiting and viewing the industries of their city. All those who participated in the excursion, (not residents of the city,) returned with the most glowing accounts of the trip, and wondering that they had lived so long and had never visited the city of natural gas before. Arriving at the parlors of the New Dennison hotel, at 12:45 p. m. the Telegraph quartette rendered some very beautiful musical selections. The Quartette was composed of Messrs John G. Blake, W. C. Tarkington, W. G. Woodward, and M. D. Butler. At 1 p. m. all assembled in the banquet hall of the New Dennison, where the representatives and guests were addressed by L. D. Hibbard, president of the association, viz:

Gentlemen: It affords me great pleasure to meet so many of you on this occasion. To-day we stand on the threshold of a new year, with its future before us, shrouded in all its dark mysteries. The old year has gone and is a thing of the past. To our association it has brought many blessings, and as we sit down to this banquet table today, should we not, with devout hearts, return thanks to him, from whom all blessings flow, for the many manifestations of His pleasure, that He has showered on us individually, and our association universally. The progress of our association in the past year, has both in the Dominion, Mexico, and the United States, been more than double that of any previous year in our history. With the increase of business throughout the land, has come prosperity to our association, and this prosperity and the prompt manner in which we have paid our claims, has given our members renewed confidence, and an increased active membership. I am happy to be able to say, that our banners now wave from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Canadas to the Gulf of Mexico. Its arms extend to foreign lands, and our influence is felt in the far-away islands of the trackless deep. In conclusion permit me to say, we are about starting out on a new year, and to you is committed the welfare and prosperity of our association? Be careful to represent our association honestly and fairly, and all will be well. Hoping to meet you all again next year, with my best wishes, I thank you for your kind attention.

Response by Mr. W. S. Robertson, when all were seated. The menu, was one of the best ever set by the management of the New Dennison, and was greatly appreciated, as was shown in the commendatory resolution, passed before the adjournment. Mr. L. D. Hibbard was toastmaster, and on either side of him sat the officials of the association, including Chalmers Brown, vice-president, W. K. Bellis, secretary and treasurer; Geo. J. Johnson, general superintendent of agencies, and directors Earhart and Bulman.

The toasts were all informal. Every one when called upon, prefixed their remarks with the statement that they were sick, which caused the representative from St. Paul, when called upon, to remark that he had listened to so many sick remarks from the representatives, that it made him sick. It was a jolly party, the dinner being all the more thoroughly enjoyable for this. The company left the dining room to the music of the song "Keep in the middle of the road," the quartette leading. A carriage ride through the principal streets of the city preceded by a brass band, and a visit to the cyclorama completed the afternoons doings. In the evening a brief business meeting was held at the rooms of the association, an adjournment being had to the Jefferson-Florence performance at 8 o'clock. After the theater, in the club rooms of the association, a concert and jubilee was held. Representative R. L. Willard, of St. Paul, opened the entertainment by telling the story of the Norwegian who "Umped the job," for which the representatives voted him an "Indiana badger," and the boys said Rube had lots of fun with it. To W. K. Bellis, the secretary of the association, the success of the royal entertainment is due; he having worked unceasingly, to please all, and to say he was successful is but little. Representatives present:

Engineers—Chas. T. Brown, Cincinnati, Ohio; C. B. Willard, Van Wert, Ohio; C. M. Henly, Columbus, Ohio; C. E. Smith, Chicago, Ill.

Conductors.—R. L. Willard, St. Paul, Minn.; E. C. Crockett, Knigstown, Ohio; Jas. Buckley, Minneapolis, Minn.; C. W. Dunn, Milwaukee, Wis.; C. W. Little, Minneapolis, Minn.; H. H. McGaffey, J. W. Riley, Tracy, Minn.; W. C. Fox, Jno. Buyers, Chicago, Ill.; Geo. H. Hull, St. Paul, Minn.: F. B. Halmer, St. Louis, Mo.: Jno. Brobst, Indianapolis, Ind.: F. M. Sanders, Minneapolis, Minn.: H. A. Flint, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

J. Q. Hicks, S. A. Boyd, L. S. Houston, John L. Lazarus, J. A. Andregg, M. J. McCowing, E. L. Gwynn, C. A. Manning, H. M. Mounts, J. S. Thompson, L. E. Brown, W. L. Reynolds, A. D. Pendleton, W. H. Harris, I. H. Martin, and others heretofore mentioned. Wednesday morning Jan. 8th. the representatives assembled at the general offices of the association and presented W. K. Bellis, secretary, with a beautiful K. of P. charm, through Mr. Geo. J. Johnson, of St. Paul. Mr. Bellis accepted the gift in the same spirit it was presented and responded in a brief and happy manner

DRAW BAR.

STOCKTON, CAL., Jan. 9, 1890.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR: In the CONDUCTOR of January 1st, Brother Norman Watkins concludes a well written article by declaring "that it is time the Order had a clearly defined standing and a formal and positive recognition."

Many will assert, and with good reason, that the Order has a clearly defined position in its constitution, that, properly carried out, is sufficient to give it standing, but many more are of the opinion that we should have some positive practical objects, calculated to be of certain benefit to individual members of the Order under proper conditions.

For instance, suppose for some good reason, family health, or anything similar, I believe it advisable for me to change entirely my locality. I resign from the road upon which I may be working they perhaps decline to give letters to employees under any circumstances. What is my position? No doubt every member of the Order will assist me to the extent of his power in obtaining employment, the Grand officers if applied to would render valuable assistance and probably ensure employment, but no matter what my experience or capabilities, I am a brakeman again and a brakeman only. If I get rapid promotion I get it while a brakeman and therefore stir up the ill-feelings of a number of men who feel that they have been injured by my promotion.

Supposing the engineer now pulling me is in exactly the same position and makes application to the same road at the same time. If there are vacancies and we get on the same run, he will be running the engine and I shall be braking behind him. The argument may be advanced that there would be more kicking if I got a train to start out with, but I must point out that the fireman would look upon the new engineer as a part of the regular condition of things and while he would not like it, he would find his consolation in looking forward to the time when he may be able to do the same thing. Then why should not the brakeman accept the same condition and be able to see it better for him to brake longer at first; and by so doing get his braking done with for good.

Why is it any more necessary, for a conductor to go braking than for an engineer to go firing. I respectfully submit that a thoroughly competent conductor is as fit to run a train on another road as is a thoroughly competent engineer to run an engine, and who would not rather go over a road a few trips with another man without pay and then take the position belonging to him rather than go on wages for an uncertain time as a brakeman.

If "once an Engineer always an Engineer," why not "once a Conductor always a Conductor."

Is there any strong reason why such a question as this should not be taken up by our Order. Could not good argument be brought to show the management of the different roads that our O. R. C. man of good character and wide experience must be of more value to them than a young man untried. There are other things in the same line upon which the Order might exert itself and no doubt meet with success without ever surrendering our non-strike clause, in fact it will prove a factor to bring such changes about.

Brother Watkins says there is a feeling that we all are in an attitude of humiliation. I think we must admit that we are to some extent in bad odor. I believe that it is undeserved on our part but that does not change the fact. It is an urgent necessity that we should establish a more satisfied feeling through our own ranks and reduce to a minimum the friction between ourselves and other orders.

I do not desire to pose as a kicker and would be one of the very last to change in the slightest degree the vital principles of our constitution, but I feel that there is a lack of harmony that needs attention. Neither do I believe in looking to the Grand officers to right every wrong, probably if the rank and file had worked as conscientiously to the extent of their power as our representatives have done, our Order would be a greater power for good, to-day.

My experience is that the members who rarely attend their divisions are in nearly every case the discontented ones, and are most given to criticism, but apart from them there is in every large organization a number who differ from the majority, and to term them all kickers and straight-way sit down upon them is not the best way out of a difficulty; the rights of the minority has become one of the regular phrases of legislative bodies.

That we shall have bitter enemies there is no doubt, for as one of our greatest historians says, the deserter or renegade ever seeks to calm his own conscience by a most violent and bitter hatred of the principles he used to profess. I do not make any pretensions of ability to straighten out any difficulties that may exist, and the objection will doubtless be raised that my screed is vague and disconnected, but if one of your readers will conclude that any difficulties we may have are caused by our own neglect, and that by attention to our duties, both in and out of the division room, and a decent respect for the general opinions of those who differ somewhat from us, we can get our Order where it belongs, then I am amply rewarded. Now that the CONDUCTOR finds its way into the hands of every member of the Order, and especially as the editors, both past and present, have always shown a willingness to publish any matter written within bounds, there seems to be no reason why any brother with an idea or a grievance, may not give it wide ventilation.

At a special meeting of El Capitan Division 115, called for December 21 by C. C. O'Neil, the following officers were elected for the year 1890:

C. C., G. S. Smith; A. C. C., H. W. Clarke; S. and T., J. E. Dillon; S. C., R. H. Plant; J. C., Albert Hood; I. S., A. M. Post; O. S., A. B. Murray; Delegate, W. V. Stafford; Alternate, W. J. Martin.

Yours in P. F.,
W. V. STAFFORD,
Division 115.

GRAFTON, West Va., Jan. 10, 1890.

Editor Conductor:

DEAR SIR: I find upon a careful perusal of the CONDUCTOR, that there is a part of the pages of each issue devoted to insurance, and being a member of the Mutual Benefit Department, I have taken the privilege of sending you this communication, if by chance it should find its way into the columns of the CONDUCTOR, I promise you it shall not make me vain, and if you should exercise your prerogative and consign it to the waste basket, I shall not be disappointed.

There are several things connected with our insurance that I would like to speak about, but I shall only mention a few of them at this time, and only those which I consider of vital importance to the insurance.

I have often wondered and asked the question why it was, that out of about fifteen thousand members of the Order of Railway Conductors, there are less than five thousand of that number that are members of the Mutual Benefit Department? This being the fact, is it not evidence of there being something wrong? It certainly is, and we should search diligently until we find the trouble, and then use our best endeavors to remove the cause of that trouble.

In my humble opinion, one of the most serious causes of the lack of interest in the insurance that is manifested by members of the Order of Railway Conductors, and one which retards its progress, is the fact that insurance companies conducted upon the assessment plan, have never taken their places in the front rank of insurance companies, while some have been forced to go into insolvency, but I do not predict such an ending for ours, and as I have held a policy in more than one company of this kind, I will say that the Mutual Benefit Department of the Order of Railway Conductors, is the best one in which I have ever held a policy, and I candidly believe that if every member of the Order of Railway Conductors, who can pass a successful medical examination would become members of the insurance, it would do more to place it on a solid financial foundation and make it an assured success than anything yet tried. But as that is something that in all human probability will never be done, we shall have to cast about us for some other means to increase our membership.

One of the things most needful at the present time is a total revision of our insurance laws. There are in the laws that govern the insurance at the present time some inconsistencies that should not be allowed to exist. For instance, turn to Article 12, page 44, of the Constitution, and read it carefully, and you will find that the member who forwards his assessments to the Grand Secretary is held strictly responsible for their safe delivery, no matter if they are lost by accident, theft, or the carelessness of some one into whose hands they have been intrusted, although he has, so far as he can, complied with all the requirements of the laws, and forwarded his assessments in due time to reach the Grand Secretary, before the time for payment expires. This one article, to my own knowledge, has kept members of the Order out of the insurance. And again, there is Article 14, page 44, which Brother Dickson, in the CONDUCTOR of January 1st, has truly said, is a stumbling block, if nothing more, yet I do not define the article just as he does. I have always supposed, that when a member was disabled by reason of sickness from performing any labor, whereby he can maintain himself and family, that he was entitled to his benefits. If he cannot retain his position by reason of sickness, and that sickness is incurable, no matter if he can work a day or two now and then, that will not maintain himself and family, and he is certainly justly entitled to his benefits; but as there are doubts about his getting them, let us have the doubts removed as speedily as possible, and let us have laws that will admit of no doubts as to their meaning, so that when the time shall come, that the member or his family may sorely need the benefits for which he has labored, their expectations shall not be cut off.

There was a set of laws, to govern the insurance, presented to the Grand Division at Denver last May, for consideration, which I think was acted upon without being duly considered; and which I think, if accepted, would have been much better than the ones now in force, for various reasons; but nevertheless, they were promptly rejected by that body, and this brings to our mind another thing that is not just to the members of the insurance and the one thing that I think was the cause of the said laws being rejected, and that is the privilege that is given to those in the Grand Division who are not members of the mutual benefit department of voting upon any and all questions that come before that body for consideration, which alone relate to the insurance department, and to discontinue this practice, I think, is nothing more than even-handed justice to all, although some may say that this would be placing an undue restriction upon the privileges of some members of the Grand Division. But I do not think it is, nor do I see upon what grounds a man could base the argument that he is being deprived of any just privilege when he is not allowed to take part in the enactment of laws to govern an institution in which he has no interest, and I think if this line of policy was carried out we would soon have such wholesome laws that our insurance would be placed upon a solid financial foundation, and become so inviting that the membership would in a short time increase to double the number of what it is at the present time. At any rate I do not think that if any or all of the suggestions that I have made if acted upon would be instrumental in decreasing the membership of the insurance and the fact is that something must be done if we would make our insurance an assured success, and check the growing evil that has become so prevalent among the Divisions, of sending out begging circulars for the benefit of the widows and orphans of members who have forfeited their membership in the insurance. Now brothers, I fully realize the fact that I am treading upon dangerous ground when I touch upon this subject, and I do not mean to criticise the actions of any Division in sending out such circulars, nor do I wish to be understood as being opposed to assisting these unfortunates in any honest or just way, but I do think that this practice is detrimental to the interest of the insurance, as it may encourage some to remain out of the insurance with the expectation that his Division will provide for his family in this way when he shall be no more, and I have even heard it asserted (upon one occasion where it was shown that the benefits derived in this way were greater than if he had belonged to the insurance), that a man was just as well off, if not better, out of the insurance than he would be in it. Can it be possible that there is anyone who intends to try to obey the divine injunction by providing for the members of his household in this way. I hope there is not, but if there is let me tell you my brother that you are doing wrong, and you are showing by your daily actions that you expect others to do something for your family that you are not willing to do for them yourself.

Now brothers, I have not made these remarks with the intention of wounding the feelings of any one, and if I have said anything that is unjust or untrue, I beg pardon.

But if the cap that I have cut out fits anyone I hope he may be compelled to wear it until he takes out a policy in the Mutual Benefit Department.

And hoping that someone who is better qualified and more able to grapple with these subjects will ventilate his opinions through the columns of the CONDUCTOR. I remain yours,

Very truly in P. F.,

Z. C. MARTIN.

WEST FARNHAM, P. Q., Jan. 8th, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: As I read letters in the CONDUCTOR written by brothers from here and there and everywhere, and as they tell about the visit received from some of the officers of the Grand Division, I think it seems too bad that Division No. 80 cannot be thus favored, and we need help so much. But as we are away out here in Canada, I suppose it would be madness to think we will ever see one of the Grand Officers here, so we will have to content ourselves with the thought that we are identified with a body of men that are climbing the ladder of fame, even if Division No. 80. is a little behind of itself.

I don't know as you have ever heard from us before, so I will give you a brief history of our division. West Farnham division, No. 80, was organized in 1886, with a very small membership, and we have struggled along until we have twenty-nine members in good standing and are receiving applications every month now. Although we do not say we are a No. 1 working division, yet I believe our members are as much interested in the work as any division of the Order.

Bro. Y. C. Gale, our Chief for the last three years, and who knows how to manage a division, is about to take a vacation and will spend a few weeks in Florida. We wish him a pleasant trip.

Also our worthy secretary, J. P. Whitney, much credit is due to him, for the able manner in which he has collected our money and paid our debts.

Much more might be said of Division No. 80, if we knew enough to say it. If you have a space that is going to be left blank, chuck this in, if not, throw it in the waste basket.

Yours in P. F.,

S. H. VERNAL.

NOTE: This Division will be visited by A. G. C. C. Bro. Wilkins, on Feb. 9th.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 6th, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: Another evidence so characteristic of the objects of the Order of Railway Conductors is the fact that Bro. John H. Ruse, of Division 114, was on Dec. 11, 1889, appointed trainmaster of the Pittsburg & Western Railroad, between Alleghany City, Pa., and Akron, Ohio, embracing a territory of over 100 miles. Bro. Ruse was formerly conductor on the W. & P. division, B. & O. R. R., but more recently General Yardmaster P. & W. R. R., with headquarters at Alleghany City, Pa. As trainmaster, his headquarters are at New Castle Jct, Pa.

Bro. Ruse is a staunch member of the Order, and all the brothers of Division 114, hail with delight the announcement of his promotion, and wish him unparalleled success in his new departure and upward career.

Division 114 boasts of having three members who now hold the position of trainmaster. Bro. Deitrick, with unprecedented success, having been for nearly two years past, trainmaster of the P. & L. E. and McK. & I. Railroads, and Bro. Dunsmore, recently being appointed trainmaster of the Alleghany Valley Railroad.

Yours in P. F.,

GEO. J. CHURCHILL,

Cor. Sec. Div. 114.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 8, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: The members of Columbia Division No. 215 having honored me with the very high and lucrative position of correspondent, it behooves me, I suppose, to say something. Please take my first letter with no apologies. At an annual election for officers held on Dec. 8th ult, our mighty chief, Brother O. E.

Hughes was re-elected C. C., which is in itself a token of the very high appreciation of his past faithful services. He is our heavy weight, balances the scales at 300 lbs. In striking contrast to him, our devoted little Brother M. B. Green, was elected to the second place of honor. He kicks the beam at 98 lbs. He is brim full of enthusiasm for the Order and whenever called upon to wield the gavel, does so with becoming dignity. Our ever courteous, polite and efficient secretary and treasurer, Brother H. A. Williams, having honorably and faithfully discharged the exacting duties of that office for the year preceeding, has again been placed in charge of our finances. The following additional officers were elected: I. M. Moore, S. C.; I. W. Blanton, Jr. C.; J. C. Wilson, I. S.; E. S. Fekling, O. S. The Division stands well as to members, having a membership of 32. Our treasury is not over full, having had many a heavy drain upon it for charity. And that brings me to the subject of Insurance, upon which I too, must confess that I am a crank. I cannot see for the life of me, how any man can neglect such an important matter, and run the risk of having those dependent upon him thrown out upon cold charity, when such a thing can be so easily provided against. I fail to see any excuse for any man saying that he cannot afford to lay aside ten cents per day to insure his family against want. I do not grant that any member of our Order has the right to presume upon his membership to the extent of consigning to the tender charities of their brother members, a destitute family. None of us, I believe, would ever turn a deaf ear to the needy. But brother editor, charity begins at home and when the calls for help come so thick and fast, it is only natural for those of us who have availed ourselves of the very cheap rates of insurance offered by the Order to ask ourselves why others do not do likewise. I see that my esteemed friend and brother, S. C. Gilbert, of Palmetto Division No. 208, has started the discussion from this locality, and I hope it will be kept up until the next meeting of the Grand Division. I would go so far as to advocate compulsory insurance. I think every member (able bodied) who carries no insurance, should be required to take at least a $500.00 risk upon his life.

I have made this letter longer than I intended, so if you think it necessary, please boil it down to the proper consistency and publish just so much of it as you see fit.

Yours in P. F.,

F. B. F.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Jan. 8, 1890.

Mr. W. P. Daniels, Grand Sec. and Treas.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Having been a member of the O. R. C., and the insurance since assessment No. 43, and when I received my assessment I sent it immediately, with a good heart, knowing that it was to be used to relieve three worthy brothers, or their families. If you wait, and say, Oh it is not due for sixty days, perhaps I will get another, then the brother will say, I think they are coming in pretty thick, and the consequence is that he thinks the best way is to drop out entirely. I have heard some brother say, if I should meet with an accident, my division will make a call on all divisions, and if 9,000 belong to the Order, each will contribute 50 cents. I or my family will get $4,500, and if I belong to the insurance, all I can expect to get will be $2,500. If any brother, when he joins the Order and takes out an insurance should meet with an accident, the next day, I will contribute my dollar just as willingly as I do to the member that belonged to it from the beginning, but not otherwise. Now in the January issue I see that some one claims he can get an insurance for $7.00 a year, and take out two and get double, and so on. I wish that brother so and so, would send along a couple of those policies, I would quit railroading tomorrow and take the agency for that. I would make an independent fortune in one year. When a person gets so much for nothing, the consequence will be that you will get nothing in return. I think our insurance the best and cheapest in the world. Brother W. M. Dickson claims in the same issue that it requires a requisite number of medical men to vouch for you in case of sickness. The same law governs accidents, only in case of accident, if the person loses a leg or arm, any one can vouch for that, as the empty pant leg or arm sleeve will testify for itself, but sickness, for instance, consumption. Did you ever see a doctor that will tell the patient, you will not live only about six months or one year? As a general rule, the person does not want to know it. Now, how can such benefit be paid until the man dies? Of course if he would tell his doctor, now I want to know the truth, can I get well, and the doctor would tell him, candidly no. I do not believe he would have any more trouble to collect his $2,500 than in the accident case, and perhaps he then could embark in some light business, and live for five or ten years. There is where it would do double good, for it would prolong the brother's life. Now if you think this worth publishing, do so. I suppose the proper place for it is the waste basket, but I hope to see every member of the O. R. C. in the insurance during 1890.

Yours Truly in P. F.,

T. H. GARRITY.

ANDREWS, IND. Jan. 15th, 1890.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR:— Being "one who is interested" and a kind invitation being extended to "those interested" by yourself in article on page 45 of No. I, Volume VII, to advance their ideas and present any plans they may have in reference to our Mutual Benefit Department, I wish to present a few ideas I have, and also an analysis of mutual insurance companies in general. I labor under the disadvantage of not having access to a first-class library that I might give the subject a more exhaustive investigation, and be able to give more statistics, and a fuller analysis than I shall from the information at hand. The fact stares us in the face that our Benefit Department has not the support from the Order in general, that it ought to have, or that it is deserving of (?) neither do I believe that it is not open for improvement. When I ask those who are not members to give me a good, candid, considerate reason for their not being members, or those who have dropped their certificates, why they do not keep them up or what is the matter, whether the plan is wrong or whether the officials who have charge are at fault, what replies do I receive. One says "It costs too much," another, "What is the use. If I should be placed in a position to need the benefit my division would issue a circular and our Grand Chief through sympathy would endorse it officially, and I would receive as much as you would, (being placed in a similar position) and cites me to the Campbell case." And right here I am led to this conclusion, that the Campbell case is the precedent established for the issuing of so many circulars for aid. I expect some brother will cite in reply to this, my action as a member of the Insurance Committee of the 19th annual session, in reference to the case of Bro. John Fitzgerald of Division 38, which case speaks for itself in our report; and the case of Bro. Dixon of Division 86, in which, like all human mortals my sympathy was for the widow and five orphans, who were left to the charities of a cold, cold world. This state of affairs will always continue to present itself to any brotherhood and I suggest the plan of throwing them upon the Order in general, where I think they of right belong, yet they will always hamper the Benefit Department. There are but few Divisions but what can afford (as a matter of good judgment and policy) to keep up the assessments for such a brother. We being an incorporated body, our Insurance Committee would place us in such a position in allowing a claim of this nature that we would open a fountain of continual litigation which would cost the department thousands of dollars, and be a cause for the loss of a large number of members in the department.

I know from a personal conversation with Bro. Durbin, a member of our Insurance Department, that such a case has been presented to the Committee while he was chairman, and that he fully realizing the purport refused the claim. I trust he will (while filling the arduous position of member of the Insurance Committee) always bear that case in mind while passing on the merits of each and every claim presented. Let every division look after the welfare of its individual membership in reference to keeping up their assessments and our circulars asking for aid will be reduced to a minimum, and this reason given will avail nothing. Now as to the cost of our insurance. Complaint is made in reference to the plan and also the contents of Brother Daniels' circular, dated November 1st, 1889, which gives a full statement of receipts and expenditures in reference to "expense of conducting the business" of the department. Going into the analysis of this circular it will be necessary to cite the actions of the Grand Division, which has mapped out the policy and plans, and devised the measures and means which shall rule in the government of the Department. I cannot help but feel that the recommendations made by Bro. Daniels at the 18th annual session should at this time be renewed, and meet with a careful consideration. He says: "Our Insurance Association needs additional legislation to place it on a permanent basis and remove it from that class of purely mutual associations which are liable to become crippled by a sudden increase of the death rate to which we are subject at any time. Surely there is some happy medium between the extravagance of the old line life insurance, and the short lived economy of the purely mutual; which shall furnish us a reliable benefit at a minimum cost. Let it be our aim to find that middle ground and plant ourselves solidly there." (The italics are mine). The Grand Division concurred, but nothing was done with the subject by legislation. At the 19th annual session Bro. Wheaton's report on insurance develops this fact: "The time consumed in these cases and in the insurance work generally will amount to not less than two months if all are brought together, and this will continue to increase, etc." At this time the management of and examination of claims required the personal attention of the G. C. C., a great amount of which now falls upon the shoulders of our Insurance Committee. He also recommends that "the insurance department be made to pay its own expenses hereafter."

Our G. S. & T. in his report uses this language: "I earnestly request of all a careful consideration of the matter of a reserve fund, etc."

Our Committee on Insurance (consisting of Bros. Wheaton, Ingram and Sears), recommended a careful consideration of the surplus insurance plan recommended by Bro. Daniels at the 18th annual session." They also recommended "that an amount of not less than $2,000 be devoted to the payment of the assistant in the office whose duty it will be to look after the affairs of this association." The Grand Division concurred in the recommendation that the Insurance Department be made to pay its own expense. The result of which we have Article XXVI. "The Insurance Committee shall order an expense assessment at any time upon application of the Grand Secretary showing that there is less than $500.00 balance to the credit of the expense account."

At the 20th annual session in the reports of the Grand Secretary, he again recommends the reserve fund and bespeaks for it a careful consideration. Also in reference to expense of Department: "The expenses of the Department for the past year have been much larger proportionately than they will be hereafter, for the reason that all appliances had to be paid for from the first expense assessment. The proportion of cost to be paid by the Department on those articles that are used jointly by both the Order and the Department, as well as the proportion of salaries to be paid by it was fixed after careful consideration and conference with members of the Executive Committee, as well as with the G. C. C." The G. C. C. in his report admits taking part in such a conference, or at least was cognizant of it. At this 20th annual session in the report of our Finance Committee (Evans, Esmay, Land, Willard and Hogan) I find the following report:

"We have examined the office fixtures and furniture and find them neat but do not think them too expensive, and would state that the cost was covered almost entirely by the $1000 bonus from the city of Cedar Rapids."

At the 21st session, our G. C. C. reports the necessity of establishing a new department and the G. S. and T. endorses it and reiterates his former belief in a reserve fund. But the Grand Division again votes it down. I can draw but one conclusion, and that is, that it is the sense of the Order in general, as expressed by the voice of its delegates in Grand Division, that the Order wants a purely mutual Association. As to the fallacy of this class, I shall have more to say farther on.

A purely mutual association wants insurance at its actual cost and wants it too cheap, and right here is where the instability of such an association comes in. Are our officers managing our Insurance Department according to the ideas advanced by the Grand Division? I presume they think that they are, while from the circular I think they have received a different impression from what I have received. The circular gives as proportion of salaries $3,500 for five months, or $70 per month. A brother says: "Why Mr. Huntington of the Mutual Aid of Chicago gets but $1,500 for a year."

At the 19th session we get the law for the insurance to pay its own expense. Our G. C. C. said the time consumed in the insurance work generally, amounted to not less than two months, and it must have increased to a great extent to make it necessary to pay $3,500 salary for this work, and if it took but two month's time for a person to do the work, then I am sure our association did not increase to such an extent in membership as to consume five months. But I suppose our Grand Secretary will refer to the 20th annual session (page 195) and say his report to the Grand Division is "by proportion of salaries, furniture, etc., is $3,500." Now, good Brother Secretary, your report to the Grand Division, 20th session and your circular are at variance in this report, basing this assertion on the presumption that "furn. etc.," in the report to the Grand Division, is what you in circular report as "furniture & fixtures," and place the amount in the circular at $1,342.57.

I will now refer you back to the report of the Finance Committee of the 20th session and they report this "furniture & fixtures to be such as meet their approval," and state that the "cost was covered almost entirely by the $1,000 bonus from the city of Cedar Rapids." If such be the case, why charge it to the Insurance Department and place the $1,000 to the credit of the Order and make the Insurance Department bear the burden of furnishing the means for what the Order in general gets the benefit of. In other words, we who are in the Insurance Department must bear a double burden in the support of the O. R. C.

On December 31st, 1887 (from the circular) there is a balance of $8,72.13 and February 1st, 1888 we have an assessment. No. 109, which shows that it cost $372.13 to run the Insurance Department for the month of January as the Insurance Committee could not order the assessment unless, according to Article XXVI there was less than $500 balance.

Now we pay a salary of $6863.06 from January 1st, '88 to October 1st, '89, 21 months, or $326.81 per month. Now what impression did I receive as to this, to me too extravagant a disposition of the funds of the Department. At the 18th annual session our Insurance Committee (Wheaton, Ingram and Sears) reported that $2000 be devoted to the payment of the assistant in the office whose duty it is to look after the affairs of the association. Now I have every reason to believe that this assistant (who I suppose is Bro. O. Saekett) does not receive one-half of this salary. But who shall we hold responsible? I can but quote the language of our G. S. and T., 20th session: "The proportion of salaries to be paid by it (the Department) was fixed after careful consideration and conference with members of the executive committee as well as with the G. C. C."

Now this, to me, extravagant use of funds of the Department has caused a distrust among certain members of our Insurance and hence a decrease in forfeitures, and a waiting for an explanation and a remedy before other certificates will be taken up. I hold a certificate that has never been forfeited, and as long as the Department pays $2,500 and the cost per year does not exceed $40.00, and a claim can be allowed on the grounds the law at present covers, I shall ever try to keep my record in the Department as clear as in the past. But I cannot candidly say to a Brother Conductor we have the best insurance (for what it purports) that there is. Like Bro. Daniels I candidly believe, from as thorough a consideration (as I have the means to investigate) that our whole plan is faulty simply because we have no "Reserve Portion" or as Bro. Daniels puts it, "Reserve Fund". Now that I have tried to point out what is the matter with our insurance it becomes me to offer some plan or idea that from my investigation and knowledge would be better than our present plan.

The following quotation from one of our best writers on insurance will give the members of the Order a clear and concise statement and I believe as correct as one can wish, for practical purposes:

ACTUAL COST OF LIFE INSURANCE.

"Ignorance of the cost of life insurance pure and simple, doubtless leads many members of the co-operative associations to quit them, or give them a faint support. The real cost is the same in all societies or companies. The death rate is the same pretty nearly the world over. Take any number of thousands of persons and at any age, a definitely known number of them will die within the year. At the age of 25, the percentage is 7.71; at 30, 8.93, at 35, 8.51; at 40, 9.29, and so on, as shown by the table below, in the column "Insurance Portion." It needs no jugglery with figures to prove, that if 1,000 persons at age 30 agree to insure each other for $1,000 they will have to pay $8 each the first year. These sums will make $8,000, and will pay $1,000 each to the eight persons, who in the light of experience are bound to die at age 30. This estimate is based on all sorts of lives—healthy and unhealthy. In taking risks, however, the lives are selected with great care, and the actual mortality runs below these estimates. The experience of 30 American companies within the last thirty years shows, that at age 25 in 1,000 well-selected and medically examined persons, only 5.4 per cent. die; at age 30, 5.6 per cent.; at 35, 6 per cent. and at 40, 6.6 per cent. These percentages are carried out more elaborately in the fifth column of the table below, the dollars representing the percentages and the cents fractions.

THREE COMPONENT PARTS OF A PREMIUM.

The following table shows the three main funds into which the premium goes. The table supposes that the amount of the policy is $1,000, on one of an average thousand of lives at the several ages named:

AGE.	Ordinary Premium.	Expense Portion.	Reserve Portion.	Insurance Portion as estimated.	Cost as Shown by Experience.	Straight Life.
25.....	$19.89	$5.68	$6.50	$7.71	$5.36	$15.42
30.....	22.70	6.49	8.17	8.04	5.62	16.18
35.....	26.38	7.54	10.32	8.52	5.98	18.99
40.....	31.30	8.95	13.07	9.28	6.58	21.04
45.....	37.97	10.85	16.38	10.54	7.42	23.85
50.....	47.18	13.48	20.74	12.96	10.05	27.73
55.....	59.91	17.12	25.40	17.39	13.70	33.07
60.....	77.63	22.18	30.60	24.85	19.70	40.50

The first column, headed "Ordinary Premium," is the premium paid for what is called mutual insurance—where dividends are returned to the insurant. The next three columns are its component parts. Columns 4 and 5, show the difference in the cost of insurance as estimated on the mortality tables and the actual experience—or what it would be on ordinary lives, and what it really is on selected lives. This difference is a source of large profit, and goes to pay the dividends to policyholders or swell the surplus. The premiums of "stock," or pure insurance go into the same funds, but the expense and insurance portions are smaller. The premiums charged for this form of insurance are shown in the last column—denominated "Straight Life."

The "Reserve Portion" of the premium is the sum every "old line" company is required by law to keep on hand to meet maturing policies. Invested at 4 per cent., the premiums with their accretions will make the amount insured if the policy runs to the end of the expectancy. The aggregate of this reserve fund constitutes the assets of the company. Co-operative insurance has nothing to do with this feature of "old line" insurance, however. It deals with the expense portion—shown in column 2—which indicates not only the cost of carrying the policy, but the expense of loaning the money placed in the reserve and banking funds and with the insurance portion.

CO-OPERATIVE INSURANCE IS CHEAP.

If an applicant simply wants indemnity for loss by death—such an indemnity, as he seeks against fire—the co-operative societies offer it. If he wants to lay aside something—invest his surplus earnings in a savings institution and at the same time insure his life—the "old line" companies present this form of investment in what is called ordinary life insurance. If this latter person were to insure his life in a co-operative society and at the same time make stipulated annual deposits in a regular savings bank, the general result would be practically the same.

Presuming that a plain indemnity with no banking side issue is desired, the applicant can find in any well-managed insurance society a temporary insurance at cost or less. It is "temporary," because no association in this country has become a permanent institution, nor will until the present mania for organizing new societies has passed."

Now from the information derived, I wish our Jurisprudence Committee at the next annual session, together with the Insurance Committee, to present a plan which will give us the "HAPPY MEDIUM" and a RELIABLE BENEFIT at a MINIMUM cost. The reason I do not give mine is, that the mode of collecting an assessment would not meet Brother Grand Secretary's support, as he will not be responsible for monies handled by others.

Yours in P. F.,

ALBERT H. CUTTER.

[As soon as space can be spared some facts in regard to which Bro. Cutter is misinformed will be given.—EDITOR.]

CINCINNATI, O., Jan. 9, 1890.

Editor Conductor:

DEAR SIR: Allow me space in the monthly for a few remarks. I saw some articles in the CONDUCTOR in regard to insurance and quite a number of other matters of importance; some brothers and yourself wanting to know why there is not a larger amount of the brothers insuring. All I have to say is very short; that is, stop this begging letter, and then your insurance will increase, and not until you do so. It is rather hard on brothers who insure and keep up their insurance, to have to pay for others who have the same chance and would rather spend a few dollars in some bar room, than provide for their wife and little ones at home, depending on charity for them, when the brother could have made them happy by carrying a policy in the O. R. C. For my part, I am going to vote against giving to these letters every time they come up in my Division, just because I keep a policy in the O. R. C. and also in other companies, and I do not intend to pay my own insurance, which amounts to seventy-five dollars a year, and then take the money from my family and give it to a brother who has had the same chance I have and did not improve it. I think if this plan is carried out it will bring up the number in the insurance. If not, it will decrease the number, for I heard a brother say if this begging letter was continued he would draw out and depend on charity; he would receive more that way than to carry a policy. If a brother is not eligible to become a member of the insurance, I would insure him anyhow, and let his Division pay his assessments. I should rather pay it in the way of insurance than to have a begging letter sent out, and the brother or his family would receive the money with better feeling, knowing they were not getting it through charity or begging for it, but getting what was justly their own.

I do not think I am a chronic kicker, but here I come again this time. It is concerning the what-is-it supposed to be the organ of the O. R. C., THE CONDUCTOR, as I see by, my CONDUCTOR of Dec. 15, that beginning with the new year, the subscription will be two dollars. My understanding is, that this book and amount paid for publishing it, was an act of the Grand Division, and do not know where Brother Editor gets authority to make it two dollars, as my understanding is that these laws are made by the Grand Division, and must stand until amended by the Grand Division. I also think it is asking too much and some subordinate Divisions cannot stand it. Look at it yourself, and I hope other brothers will see it the same as I do. This amount makes each member pay grand dues, three dollars a year, local dues five dollars a year, and a brother who is insured, thirty-six dollars per year, making a total of forty-four dollars for one year, which is too much money, when we take into consideration other things, when some of our brothers are only paid two dollars and fifty cents per day for running trains, and perhaps, some less. I take it this way: If a brother cannot subscribe for THE MONTHLY, he cannot pay an extra assessment, and some Divisions will have to make one. My Division consists of 52 members. We had to pay one hundred and four dollars grand dues, then add fifty-two dollars more to that and see what it will amount to. Our local dues are four dollars and when we have to pay three dollars out it will leave us one dollar to the member to meet other expenses.

I hope this law will be repealed next May when the Grand Division meets. I shall do my part to repeal it, as I think it is an imposition on the members of the Order. If you think this worthy you can insert in THE CONDUCTOR, which I hope to see

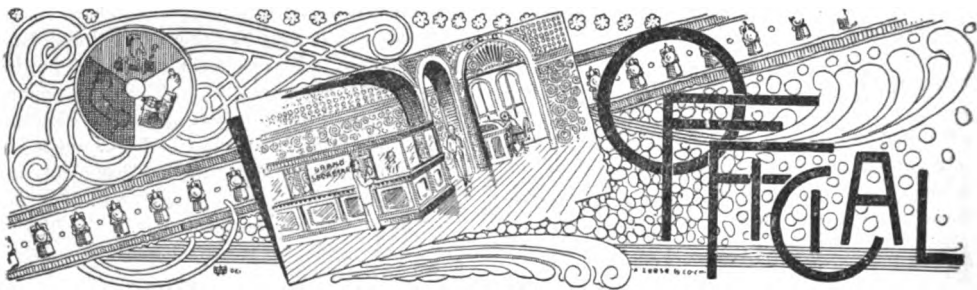

J. J.

If the author of the above article had read THE CONDUCTOR before writing it, he would have discovered that he did not "have any kick coming," or else he would have been compelled to find something else to kick about. THE CONDUCTOR has stated several times that by the action of the last Grand Division, THE CONDUCTOR is sent FREE to every member of the Order whose address can be procured, and that the price of $2.00 per annum is only to subscribers who are not members of the Order. The Grand Division did not fix the price of THE CONDUCTOR at all.—EDITOR.

The American Railway from the press of Chas. Scribner's Sons is a book that should be in the hands of every employe in the train service in the United States. It is a large handsomely bound quarto of 460 pages and within its covers, the brakeman, fireman, engineer, conductor and all other railway employes will find their daily duties described in an attractive and interesting manner. The engravings number over two hundred, of which about thirty are full-page, and have involved an expense of nearly $15,000. The names of some of the artists will indicate how rich the book is on its artistic side: among them are: A. B. Frost, Walter Shirlaw, J. D. Woodward, J. H. Twachtman, Robert Blum, Francis C. Jones, Charles Broughton, M. J. Burns, D. C. Beard, Herbert Denman, V. Perard, W. C. Fitler, and many others. A feature is the series of maps graphically showing the railway development in the United States from 1830 to the present day. Valuable statistics have been specially arranged, with simple diagrams, showing at a glance many phases of railway changes, the development of systems, rates, expenses, receipts, etc., etc.

For the first time there is presented in this book an adequate account of the American Railway, an industry representing over nine thousand million dollars in its one hundred and fifty thousand miles of road. The above enumeration of the subjects which are treated in the volume is sufficient to show its value and importance, and in preparing it nothing has been left undone which might add to the lasting value and interest of the work.

We shall, by permission of the publishers, present some extracts from this book hereafter.

HOUSTON, Texas, Jan. 15, 1889.

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR: Since writing you I spent Christmas and New Years at home, and left there on the 3d of January to visit divisions as arranged in program, given in the G. C. C.'s January circular. There having been called a meeting of the executive committee for the 6th, and my presence being desired by them, my engagements with Divisions 11, 179, and 245, were canceled. I went to Cedar Rapids and attended the meeting of the executive committee, after which I took up my engagements, beginning with 165, at Fort Scott. We had a very pleasant meeting with the brothers here, where I met several whom I had met before and enjoyed my visit with them. In the matter of attendance at meetings and interest in the work of the Order the improvement in this division is marked. Their numerical strength and situation being taken into consideration, they are second to none. Taking the M., K. & T. from Ft. Scott, I arrived at Parsons, where I was met by Brothers Brown and Green, and where I had a very pleasant visit with the brothers of 161, and a very well attended meeting was held. Bro. Maxwell, the C. C., of this division, was on the sick list, but he came just the same. Brothers of 161, you can not too highly appreciate the good qualities of your C. C., and I hope he may always receive the support and encouragement he so well deserves. Again taking the M., K. & T. in charge of Bro. Cannon, I left for Denison, "The Gate City," of Texas. Arriving there, I was met by brothers Knowlton and (can't think of it.) After dinner we repaired to their hall and a largely attended and very interesting meeting was held, matters of importance to all were discussed at length. Some brothers were instructed in the new work and the third degree was fully exemplified. The meeting continued till supper time and after supper another meeting was held, which was also largely attended. The next day was very pleasantly spent by me, I being entertained by Brother Knowlton and other brothers and sisters of 53. I found some of the sisters quite well posted, but a little behind the times, as they have not the new work. If they will only come to Rochester and get the "Oh! My!" they will be all right. From Denison to Fort Worth, via M. K. & T., in charge of Bro. Case, and met by Bros. Tobin and Eaves. We held a rather informal meeting, as the business of the road was such that not many of the members were in. The membership of this division is more widely scattered than most of our divisions, still their meetings are generally well attended. After supper, with Bro. Tobin, I again took the Katy for San Antonio, the beautiful city of historic interest. I was met at the depot by Bros. Jones and Betters and escorted to the hall where the entire afternoon was spent in the meeting, and where many questions were discussed. Division 76 is evidently a very stable, well posted and efficiently officered division. In the early evening I was taken by Bro Humbel for a drive to places of interest about the city.

We visited "The Alamo" where Travis, Crockett, and Bowie fell; the West End, the Springs and the Military post. After supper I was taken in tow by Brothers Betters, Eddy, Humbel and candidate Favier, and highly entertained by being shown various points and places of interest too numerous to mention. San Antonio is certainly a beautiful city, inhabited by a hospitable people. From San Antonio to Houston, via S. P. with sociable Brother Veahy, arriving at Houston at 5:30, I was met by Brothers Archer and Johnson. Meeting having been arranged for that same evening we spent the evening in Division room in a very pleasant discussion of matters in general. The next day in company with Brother Mulvey, Supt. So. Pac., Brothers Johnson and Vosburgh, and Mr. I. L. Skinner, foreman of engines on So. Pac., I looked the town over and spent several hours very pleasantly and profitably, looking through the shops, store-houses and foundry of the So. Pac. Co. This plant is very extensive and one of the most thoroughly equipped and best supplied I have ever seen. Brother Mulvey and Mr. Skinner furnished me an afternoon of unalloyed pleasure. Houston is a fine city, inhabited by princes. From Houston to Palestine, where I will meet with 77 and of which I will write you later. Our Order is strong in Texas and it is my opinion that in no place will be found the principles of Perpetual Friendship and brotherly love exemplified to a greater degree than in the Lone Star state.

While coming over the Union Pacific I had the pleasure of a chat with Brother W. L. Ryder, lately promoted to the Superintendency of the Wyoming division. Brother Ryder has worked his way to his present position, having been employed by this company for many years as a conductor. He has a host of friends and all hope to see him climb higher still.

The weather down here is spring-like. I saw roses in bloom in the yard of the master mechanics' office at Houston yesterday. There has been much rain and in many places the grass is growing as if it were April. My program is pretty fast but I will find time somewhere to write you of the balance of the trip when it is completed.

Truly yours in P. F.,

E. E. CLARK.

No Editorial this issue. You are to be congratulated. No room.

On page 74 of the January 15th number of the magazine, appears the name of W. C. Tulls. It should have been W. P. Tubbs.

By mistake there was no credit given to the very nice article entitled "Plymouth Rock," in the last number of the CONDUCTOR. It should have been credited to W. S. S.

Brother T. H. Earnest, member of Kaw Valley Division 55, Kansas City, has been elected Registrar of Deeds of Montgomery County, Kansas. Success to you.

Brother John Rylands, of New Haven Division 201, has been appointed Chief of Police of the city of Bridgeport, Conn., and entered on the discharge of his duties January 1st.

The cut of the brother of whom mention was made in our last issue has not reached us as we anticipated, but we are in hopes of receiving it in time for the February 15th issue.

Worcester Division No. 237, will please accept our thanks for the receipt of a beautiful invitation to their First Annual Assembly, to be held at Horticultural hall, Friday evening, Jan. 24th, 1890.

Accept my congratulations on the improved appearance of the CONDUCTOR, both inside and out. If I had known that an article from my pen would have made such a difference, should have written before.—C. D. Rossiter.

We are pained to record the death of Brother Hy Shew, of Division 40, St. Paul, Minnesota. He had been in Denver for the last six months, hoping that the climate there might afford him some relief, but that fatal complaint, consumption, had gained too firm a hold, and on Saturday, January 11, he passed away. His remains were taken to Baltimore by the Brothers of No. 40.

After, years of pain and suffering he has passed away, to join the ones who have gone before.

We are requested to state, by a member of the Order, that the price of all division cards is one dollar; said cards to be obtained of the Grand Secretary through your Division Secretary; the price of said card accompanying each request.

Please allow me to congratulate you on the very attractive appearance and make-up of your paper, and to assure you that your so kindly sending it to us is duly appreciated. Many thanks.—W. G. Chamberlin, Sec'y U. P. R. Dept., Y. M. C. A.

In this number appears the advertisement of Jos. P. Wathier. A perusal will repay any conductor who wishes to purchase a watch. Mr. Wathier is thoroughly responsible, and his customers may depend upon his goods being exactly as represented.

Any member of the Order who knows the whereabouts of Brother John P. Dillon, who has been a conductor for years on the M. P. R. & Iron Mountain R. R., will please forward any information they may have to the Editor of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR as soon as possible.

From the Geneva, N. Y. Gazette, and the News Item of the same village, we read of the death and funeral of Mr. Seth Wheaton, brother of our Grand Chief Conductor; each item speaks very pleasantly of his love and respect for his parents and the loss the community has sustained by his death.

"I must compliment you and congratulate the Order on the immense improvement of "THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR," as shown in the issue for January 1st. This will almost entirely stop the criticisms that have been so freely expressed in that direction. Let the good work go on. Success to you, "so say we, all of us," in Division 204.—E. F. McVeigh

The headquarters have been visited during the month of January by the members of the Executive Committee, Brothers Cross, Evans and Clancy; also, by two members of the Finance Committee, Brother Silvernail, of 44, Denver, Colo., and Brother J. McKain, of Division 182, Jackson, Michigan.

**

Perhaps one of the prettiest souvenirs we have received, is the invitation to attend the first Grand Reception and Ball, at Bundy Hall, Friday evening, January 24th, of Elmira Division No. 9, Order of Railway Conductors. We thank you all, gentlemen, for your kindly remembrance, and hope for you a royal good time.

**

Lost, strayed or stolen: one man answering to the name of R. C. Anderson, last heard of in Topeka, Kansas; and another, J. L. Briggs, last heard of in Chicago, Ill. No reward, but any information regarding one or both will be thankfully received by George Elmer, Secretary 117, No. 705 Jewett Place, Minneapolis.

**

We were pleased to see Brother Lund, of the C., M. & St. P., step into the office a few days ago. He is always a welcome visitor. A pleasant gentleman, willing to live and let live, more disposed to be hopeful than disconsolate, a first-class railroad man, and the most essential quality that any one can possess, respected by himself.

**

Frank M. Layton, a conductor on the Alabama Great Southern, was knocked from the top of his train January 3d, by a water tank spout and instantly killed. Brother Layton was a member of 148, a good conductor and much thought of by officers and men. He leaves a young wife to whom he had only been married three months. NO INSURANCE.

**

Brother Charley Weston, Trainmaster B., C. R. & N., at West Liberty, called in to pay his assessment the other day. He shakes hands all around, says "good morning" to each one, pays his $3.00, asks how you are, says "good day," and walks down the stairs and is off about his business. Yet we would miss him very much if he failed to do this much, for he is always a welcome visitor, and in all places a genial gentleman.

**

We are pleased to hear of the promotion of Brother W. L. Ryder, of Division 209, Pocatello, Idaho, to the Superintendency of the main line of the Union Pacific from Cheyenne to Ogden, including the Park City branch. We also learn from our informant, (who is perfectly reliable) that Brother Ryder has steadily worked his way up in the employ of this company to the position of conductor, train master, then superintendent, and lastly, to his present position, by a system of constant attention to business. We congratulate the brother, the officers of this railway and the employes under him. "Go thou and do likewise."

**

From a letter received by the Grand Secretary, we learn that one of our brothers, Mr. F. P. Devoe, growing tired of treading this weary journey of life all alone, betook himself, on the last day of the new year to Ft. Worth, Texas, and was there married to a very estimable young lady. He is the first brother that we have had notice of that has turned over a new leaf, and resolved to commence the new year aright. Success to you Brother Devoe, may you live and prosper, and—and—and may you never have the Grippe.

**

James Stephen Sarvis, once a conductor on the "Pan-Handle," afterward moved west and for a while lived in Ellis on the Union Pacific; since then no word has been received of him or his family, with the exception of a letter from his wife stating that their next address would be Antonito, Colorado. Several letters have been written to them there but no reply. If any brother of the Order knows or can learn of the gentlemen's whereabouts they will confer a great favor by informing his brother Benj. J. Sarvis, Listowel, Ont.

**

Rochester Division, No. 8, has appointed the following Committee of Arrangements for the reception and entertainment of the delegates to the 22d annual session of the Grand Division.

J. O. Spelman, Chairman; J. D. Shults, Sec'y.; D. E. Phillips; Treas.; A. H. Smith, P. F. Keefe, Orange Sackett, G. H. Brown, Wm. Wadsworth, T. H. Kirk, G. T. Parsons, S. W. Kimberly. Headquarters: Livingston House. All communications should be addressed to Brother J. D. Shults, care Livingston House, Rochester, N. Y.

**

"At a regular meeting of the Commercial Travellers' Association of Peoria, Ill., held on Saturday evening, January 4th, 1890, it was unanimously resolved:

"That a vote of thanks be extended to Mr. E. H. Belknap, for his very kind remembrance in sending us a copy of the "RAILWAY CONDUCTOR," and that we wish him unbounded success in his new enterprise, and that the secretary be instructed to transmit to him a copy of this resolution."

Which I now do under the seal of the Association.

Yours fraternally,

J. D. SOULES, Sec'y.

The St. Nicholas for February, opens with an illustrated history of the great storm at Samoa, which is intensely interesting. Space forbids an extended mention, but this last number sustains fully, the enviable reputation of this publication.

.

Members of the benefit department, please note that notice of assessments Nos. 181, 182, and 183, is issued Feb. 1st. If not received please notify me promptly or remit and with your remittance note that you did not get the notice, and give your correct post office address.

.

Members of the Benefit Department should have one of the receipt files for preserving their receipts. Price is only 25 cents, or one will be sent free to any member of the Benefit Department who sends one new subscriber to THE CONDUCTOR at the regular price, $2.00.

.

Queen City Division No. 60, desires information regarding the whereabouts of W. R. Kilpatrick and J. A. Campbell. Anyone knowing the whereabouts of either of these brothers will please correspond with brother B. F. Blythe, secretary and treasurer of Division No. 60, Sedalia, Mo.

.

The grand secretary has just received a draft for $104,000 as the commission on the sale of the C. B. & I. F. cigar for the first three months. If members who smoke would use this cigar and recommend it to their friends who are smokers, we would soon have a large revenue from this source.

.

Brother Cornelius, of Division 58, gave us all a call the other day, he looks hale and hearty. He has been resting for a few weeks but anticipates being in active service in a few days. He is a good member of the Order and a good brother, with the excellent additional accomplishment, a thorough gentleman.

.

The reader of THE CONDUCTOR who fails to read Scribner, for February, misses a treat, and our advice is, economize a little somewhere and take Scribner. It will be worth many times its cost to you. In this connection, note that we furnish all the popular publications to readers of THE CONDUCTOR, at a reduced rate.

.

Hereafter notices of assessment will not be published in THE CONDUCTOR in full, but a notice that assessments have been issued, will appear in the Mentions. Notice of assessments Nos. 178, 179 and 180 was issued Jan. 1st. Members of the Benefit department please take note and if not received, notify the Grand Secretary.

And here comes a record of fast runs on the Wabash: From Randolph to Moberly, 122 miles, in four hours, including a four mile run of 55 feet grade to the mile. The same train on the east side of the river, 312 miles, ten hours and thirty minutes, and recently the run has been made from Randolph to Moberly, 122 miles, with fifteen cars, in three hours and forty-two minutes. We are waiting patiently for the next.

.

Finding myself unable to give the necessary attention to it, I wish to get out of the typewriter business, and to close out the stock on hand, I will send any member or division a Merritt Typewriter for $12.00. The regular price is $15.00, and the Merritt is without exception the best and speediest cheap machine made. It has 78 letters and characters, capitals and small letters, and it can be used in the caboose of a freight train as well as anywhere. W. P. Daniels.

.

Brother Frank Barber, member of 58, and yardmaster of the B., C. R. & N. at this place, dropped in for a few moments only, last Sunday. He came in to inquire if we had had the "Grippe," as he has been gripping with it for a few days, and he felt an interest in knowing that all the brothers had received it. We had been the recipient of these favors so he did not insist on shaking hands, but he stated as he started out that he must see to it that everyone had it before it got away entirely.

.

"Judas Exposed or the Spotter Nuisance," published by the Utility Book & Novelty Co., Chicago, is on our table and the best that can be said for it, is that it contains a little information that may be new to the general public, deftly hidden in a wilderness of words. There is nothing new to the conductor who has been in the passenger service, and in our opinion the author will do well to try some other vocation and abandon book writing. (The editor can make an easier or harsher criticism if he chooses.)

.

We are pained to hear of the serious illness of Mrs. Wheaton, wife of the Grand Chief Conductor. Sometime ago she was stricken down with the malady that takes its victims just as it comes to them, (La Grippe) and partially recovering she was again prostrated and even the third time, and by our latest advices is slowly improving. All will join us in hoping that she will speedily recover from this oftentimes fatal malady. It would seem that once was enough for this traveler to pay his visits to the same one, but he is the judge and the jury.

"The Little Gold Mine" is the title of a little book of 600 pages, published by Laird & Lee, 203 Jackson St., Chicago, and the title is not a misnomer for there is scarcely anything that can be thought of in the every day business of life, in regard to which some information is not given in this little book. It tells just how to do just what you want to do, no matter what it is, from running a locomotive to mending a tin pan; from building a house to making a bird cage; in fact it is just what it claims to be and is worth many times its cost, which is 50 cents and $1, according to binding.

*

**

Brother F. W. Witherbee, Chief Conductor of Division 26, Toledo, O., was instantly killed near Cincinnati, O., on the night of Jan. 17th, while in the discharge of his duty. Brother Witherbee held certificate No. 1634 in the mutual benefit department of the Order of Railway Conductors, and was also insured in the Railway Officials' & Conductors' Accident Association, of Indianapolis, for $2,000; their secretary, Mr. W. K. Bellis, mailed the sum of $250, to his widow the next day after his death, for a funeral benefit, and $1,750 was sent to Sup't. Neilson, of the C. H. & D., to be delivered to her in person.

**

From recent dispatches we learn that the Pennsylvania Railroad company, in order to provide further for the convenience and welfare of their passengers, have decided to place upon their limited express trains a stenographer and typewriter, to accommodate the business men who are the patrons of this road. By this means any business or professional man can attend to his correspondence while on his journey; a compartment will be fitted up on each train for this particular business, and all letters mailed as they are written. This novel arrangement will go into effect February 1st.

**

Brother Frank Butler, of Sioux City paid us a visit a few days ago. He reports that Brother Millard, who has been laid up with rheumatism is able to be out although not entirely recovered. Frank has great and abiding faith in the future prosperity of this city of Electric Railways and electric imaginations, feeling fully assured that its advantages for a rapid and lasting growth are far in advance of any other Iowa city. As Secretary of the Board of Directors of the Sioux City & Northwestern Railway he has opportunities of forming a very rational opinion of the probable growth of this live town.

**

Only one month more of winter and that a short one; the sleigh-bells have been mererily singing as they jingled past our door for a week or so; the young people have had lots of fun and the old people have been pleased in seeing them enjoy themselves. But the pleasure has all been a stranger to many who live farther south, and in place of sleigh bells and snow birds the songs of the robins and blue birds have still continued, and it has been summer or autumn all the year round. First we know spring will be here; all will be glad to welcome it, but many will enquire "where has the winter gone, we have not seen it, and autumn has continued until the arrival of spring.

**

A learned gentlemen (we suppose,) not a member of the Order, undoubtedly imagining that we are in need of some interesting and instructive matter for the pages of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, has written us a three page letter, tendering us his services in the shape of a twenty-five page communication on the subject of strikes, saying that if we desired, it could be divided into three discourses. We must be gentlemanly enough to answer this letter, and will say that we are not engaged in the strike business, neither in the 1st, 2d or 3d edition traffic. Had it been of reasonable length, we might feel at liberty to give it space, but there are very many worthy members of the Order who are very kindly disposed to favor us with communications of at least reasonable length, and we must certainly ask to be excused from the edition business.

**

We wish to call the attention of our readers to the new advertisements that appear in this number of THE CONDUCTOR, and we believe you cannot do better than to patronize those who patronize THE CONDUCTOR. We wish especially to mention the R. O. & C. Accident association; the M. C. Lilly & Co.; the Dueber Watch Case Co.; Wathier & Co.; Giles Bros.; Townsend, Wathier & Co.; the Brazilian Specific Co., and to our lady readers, note the advantages offered by Jordan, Marsh & Co. The above are all reliable and trustworthy, and THE CONDUCTOR has no hesitation in recommending them. Bro. H. H. Moran, of Division No. 159, represents the Brazilian Specific Co., and while we know nothing as to the merits of the Specific itself, we do know that Brother Moran is thoroughly reliable and that whatever he says can be depended upon.

**

"I desire to congratulate the management of the "CONDUCTOR" since its new departure; it has been very gratifying to me, inasmuch as I was a strong advocate of the semi-monthly plan. The New Year number is perfect, and I feel as though the Order had something of which to be proud. I will promise, for one, to do what I can to enlarge its circulation and make it the best labor organ published in the world. There is much that I would like to write about, but this is not intended for publication, just a fraternal letter to you because I feel that you are to be congratulated upon the grand success attained in so short a time. I agree with Brother Daniels in the necessity of amending our constitution so that we can elect officers to correspond with a bi-ennial system of meeting of the Grand Division. I expect to attend this year as I was elected delegate. I will write a short article on our insurance soon for the CONDUCTOR.—A. L. Carey.

We gave a brief description in a late number of THE CONDUCTOR, of a Railway Speed Manual and Wages Computing Tables, published by Craig & Randle, 533 Market St., San Francisco, Cal. Since that time we are under obligations to the publishers for a copy of the book and wish to repeat what we then said in its favor. It is an extremely convenient book for all connected with train service or for any one that has anything to do with wages. With this book an employe can at a glance satisfy himself whether his wages have been correctly computed or not and a conductor or engineer can tell at a glance, just how many minutes are required to run any distance at a given rate of speed. Mr. Craig is a member of the Order and an old train man, and Mr. Randle is an experienced office man and has been for some time past in the general office of a leading railway. The price of the book is $2.00. For further information write the publishers.

A few days ago there came to this office the notice of the death of a respected member of the Order, and in addition the statement that this brother was cut down while seemingly enjoying perfect health. This, to us was sad news; but the saddest information of all is yet untold. This brother leaves a wife and four little children; he had no insurance of any kind and we fear that his wife and children are left almost destitute. Only a day or two later comes the announcement that brother so-and-so was killed yesterday morning; he held policy No. — in the Mutual Benefit department of the Order of Railway Conductors, also $2,000 in the Accident Insurance of Indianapolis, $4,500 in all. Brothers we have no comments to make. Is there any difference in the sadness of these two cases? Think over the condition considerably and calmly, not only for a few moments but constantly until you have done your whole duty in this matter. Then the question will be solved; until then it never will be, to your satisfaction.

We are pained to hear of the sad misfortune that has befallen Brother D. C. Keyes, member of Galesburg Division No. 83, from Galva to Keithsburg. As his train was approaching Aledo he was standing by the side door of his car, and was caught by the coal chutes, knocked out of the car, sustaining a compound fracture of one collar bone, the breaking of the other, and badly bruised about the head and body; he has been insensible ever since; his life was despaired of but his physicians are now in hopes that he may recover. Galesburg Division No. 83 and the Masonic fraternity, of which he is an honored member, are doing all in their power to aid in restoring him to health, while his devoted wife and mother are with him constantly. Brother Keyes is one of nature's noblemen, if such there be; a perfect pattern of the physical man, an honor to any profession or any society. We earnestly hope that he may again be restored to health, while the sympathy of friends, neighbors and brothers will feelingly be extended to him and his family.

A few days ago the birds were singing their hallelujahs as happy as they could be, although it was the middle of winter, the ice men were about to faint away because there would be no glimmering sheen of the lemonade cooler growing on the waters of the Cedar River; the young people were singing a doleful melody because there was no "beautiful snow," to allow the young man and his all-in-all to speed up and down First Avenue to the music of the bells and the belles of Cedar Rapids—but to-day has changed the scene—the ice-men are happy, the Cedar is "frizzed," the lover and the loved can sit as close together as they desire in the cutter that glides over the beaten track of the road that carries them over the happiest part of life's journey, and there is no more wail because December is as pleasant as May, while the thermometer carries from 4 to 16 below zero, and business is better and everybody is correspondingly happy, all on account of a little snow and a little cold weather.

The January number of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR is before us, and a neater or more attractive magazine lies on no reviewer's table. Messrs. Dawley & Metcalf, the printers who have the contract for printing the magazine, are creditably reflected in every well printed page. No other house in town could have produced such an attractive piece of book making. The type is new, the make up perfect, and every mechanical detail executed with exact fidelity to the true traditions of the art. The contents of the magazine are such as to inevitably attract a wide circle of readers who are intelligently alive to the interests of their profession. Under the management of Mr. W. P. Daniels, the publication has reached a high degree of efficiency. Its increasing circulation and the high esteem in which it is held by its readers are the natural results of the conscientious work which has been put upon the periodical, and after looking over the number we cannot well understand how any member of the profession dare do without it.—Cedar Rapids Gazette, Jan. 6.

On Tuesday, January 21st, we received or rather the G. C. C., received a visit from Brother William Bennett, a member of No. 9, and a conductor on the D., L. & W., between Elmira and Buffalo; he was on his way to Rochester, Minnesota, his friends say, for the purpose of having some valuable property that he is liable to fall heir to, transferred to his name. We may not be very correctly informed of the nature of this land-slide, but from some remarks carelessly dropped in our hearing, we infer that it is the same old story, "a lady in the case." We shall probably hear in a short time, as it is the season of the year for invitations, and the brother will surely not be so ungentlemanly as to forget us in a matter of so much importance to both. We tried in every way that seemed practicable, to ascertain the name of the Rochester lady, without seeming too inquisitive, but it was of no avail, so we will have to worry on in ignorance until a later day; when perhaps we may be asked to notice something like the following: "On such a day, at such a place, Mr. William Bennett and Miss So-and-so. No cards." We still believe it would have been better for the brother to have told us all about it, but everyone has their own thoughts.

"It is a long road that has no turning," is an old and trite saying. We can remember when the average railway employe was looked upon by the average inhabitant in other avocations, as a being a little below par in the scale of humanity and common decency. The average inhabitant, we find upon close investigation, has changed but very little; on the other hand we notice that the average railway employe has won the confidence and respect of those who are engaged in other lines of business, and it may be worth the while for everyone to give this matter a little attention and ascertain for their own benefit what has produced this very happy result. Has every employe in the railway service produced this better moral, social and business method by his own personal exertions? or is it true that the influences which have been thrown around his pathway have done much to produce, or at least to bring about this result? It is probable that one answer to this all-important question would be that railway companies require a more perfect service than they did twenty-five years ago. While this is true, let us ask one important question: Which has done the most in your individual case to bring about the reformation, the officers of the system by which you have been employed, or the associates with whom you have been connected, that have endeavored to lend their influence to your benefit, and for your advancement in every way as a first-class railway man. We have neither time nor space at present to answer these suggestive points, but we do honestly believe that they are worthy of the careful thought and consideration of every railway conductor.

We are sitting in the sanctum on a pleasant winter day. Busily writing at our desk in our usual accustomed way. When a knock was faintly given and as quietly was heard. As we hastened to the doorway, though we uttered nary a word.

A little something so foreboding seemed to press against the heart,
As we quietly opened the door, then gave a frightful start,
For the visage standing there, as we looked him o'er and o'er,
Was a stranger to us then, we had never seen him before.

And of all the uncanny creatures that our eyes have ever seen,
He was king of all the demons, either in thought or mid-night dream.
Almost forgetting regal manners, shaking limbs and quaking feet,
We at last came to our senses, and said: "Sir, please take a seat."

He accepted, and in sooth, as he cast an angry frown,
We were thanking heaven for one thing, that he really had settled down.
And of all the uncouth models that were ordered for our sake,
This one took the deep-blue ribbon, and is entitled to the cake.

Every hair was out his head off, and his skin a yellow cast.
Both his eyes were sunken badly, every breath we thought his last.
His portly nose looked like a wood-wedge, his lips a sickly red,
And his mouth would open widely, but not a tooth inside his head.

Terribly scant of any apparel, just a few old tattered rags,
And the few that hung so loosely nothing but worthless, faded tags;
Even his arms seemed all unjointed, hanging limply by his side,
And his shoes were shewed entirely; not one sign of outward pride.

But his voice, O Lord forgive us! but he had not spoken before,
First we looked up to the widows, then gazed at the open door.
Looked around for a crack in the ceiling, looked above, in pity, Oh,
Then we gazed and gazed in wonder for some outlet down below.

What a voice! O Gates of Thunder, ye are weak beside this one,
Rumbling cars and Eastern earthquakes, you are utterly undone.
Then with visage scarcely mortal, raised his arms and cried anew,
"You are my victim, lonely mortal, I am here for such as you."

Seizing hold his fainting victim, says I, "Wherefore, whence you came?
I am going, going, going; stranger, will you give your name?"
Then he wrote it on the wall, nary a letter allowed to slip,
"I have come from Russia's kingdom, and my name is old E. H. B.
"La Grippe."

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., FEBRUARY 15, 1890.

NO. 4.

ABOUT SLEEPERS.

HE first attempt to furnish the railway passenger a place to sleep while on his journey was made upon the Cumberland Valley railroad or Pennsylvania, between Harrisburg and Chambersburg. In the winter season the east-bound passengers arrived at Chambersburg late at night by stage coach, and as they were exhausted by a fatiguing trip over the mountains, and many wished to continue their journey to Harrisburg to catch the morning train for Philadelphia, it became very desirable to furnish sleeping accommodations aboard the cars. The officers of this road fitted up a passenger car with a number of berths, and put it into service as a sleeping car, in the winter of 1836-37. It was exceedingly crude and primitive in construction. It was divided by transverse partitions into four sections, and each contained three berths—a lower, middle and upper berth. This car was used until 1848, and then abandoned.

About this time there were also experiments made in fitting up cars with berths, something like those in a steamboat cabin, but these crude attempts did not prove attractive to travelers. There were no bed clothes furnished, and only a coarse mattress and pillow were supplied, and with the poor ventilation, and the rattling and jolting of the car, there was not much comfort afforded, except a means of resting in a position which was somewhat more endurable than a sitting posture.

Previous to the year 1858, a few of the leading railroads had put on sleeping cars, which made some pretensions to meet a growing want of the traveling public, but they were still crude, uncomfortable, and unsatisfactory in their arrangements and appointments.

In the year 1858, George N. Pullman entered a train on the Lake Shore railroad, at Buffalo, to make a trip to Chicago. It happened that a new sleeping car, which had been built for the railroad company, was attached to the train, and was making its first trip. Mr. Pullman stepped in to take a look at it, and finally decided to test this new form of luxury by passing the night in one of its berths. He was tossed about in a manner not very conducive to the "folding of the hands to sleep," and he turned out before daylight and took refuge upon a seat in the end of the car. He now began to ponder upon the subject, and before the journey ended had conceived the notion that in a country of magnificent distances, like this, a great boon could be afforded to travelers by the construction of cars easily convertible into comfortable day or night coaches, and supplied with such appointments as would give the occupants practically the same comforts as were afforded by the steamboats. He began experiments in this direction soon after his arrival in Chicago, and in 1859 altered some day coaches on the Chicago & Alton railroad, and converted them into sleeping cars which were a marked step in advance of similar cars previously constructed. They were successful in meeting the wants of passengers at that time, but Mr. Pullman did not consider them in any other light than experiments. One night, after they had made a few trips on the line between Chicago and St. Louis, a tall, angular-looking man entered one of the cars while Mr. Pullman was aboard, and after asking a great many intelligent questions about the inventions, finally said he thought he would try what the thing was like, and stowed himself away in an upper berth. This proved to be Abraham Lincoln.

In 1864 Mr. Pullman perfected his plans for a car which was to be a marked and radical departure from any one ever before attempted, and that year invested his capital in the construction of what may be called the father of Pullman cars. He built it in a shed in a yard of the Chicago & Alton railroad at a cost of $18,000, named it the "Pioneer," and designated it by the letter "A." It did not occur to anyone that there would ever be enough sleeping cars to exhaust the whole twenty-six letters of the alphabet. The sum expended upon it was naturally looked upon as fabulous at a time when such sleeping cars as were used could be built for about $4,500. The constructor of the "Pioneer" aimed to produce a car which would prove acceptable in every respect to the traveling public. It had improved trucks and a raised deck, and was built a foot wider and two and a half feet higher than any car then in service. He deemed this necessary for the purpose of introducing a hinged upper berth, which, when fastened up, formed a recess behind it for stowing the necessary bedding in the daytime. Before that the mattresses had been piled in one end of the car, and had to be dragged through the aisle when wanted. It was known to him that the dimensions of the bridges and station platforms would not admit of its passing over the line, but he was singularly confident in the belief that an attractive car, constructed upon correct principles, would find its way into service against all obstacles. It so happened that soon after the car was finished in the spring of 1865, the body of President Lincoln arrived at Chicago, and the "Pioneer" was wanted for the funeral train which was to take it to Springfield. To enable the car to pass over the road the station platforms and other obstructions were reduced in size, and thereafter the line was in condition to put the car into service. A few months later Gen. Grant was making a trip west to visit his home in Galena, Ill., and as the railway companies were anxious to take him from Detroit to his destination in the car which had now become quite celebrated, the station platforms along the line were widened for the purpose, and thus another route was opened for its passage.—From the American Railway.

The New York Central & Hudson River railroad carried 18,000,000 passengers in 1889.

RAILROAD PROGRESS.

SUPERINTENDENT BROWN, OF THE BURLINGTON'S IOWA LINES, TALKS ON THE SUBJECT AT TABOR.

On the occasion of the recent opening of the new Tabor & Northern railroad a number of interesting addresses were made by leading men in the college circles of that town whose doors were opened more freely to the world by the completion of this new line, and by other gentlemen, prominent in railroad affairs. Among the addresses of the occasion that of Superintendent W. C. Brown, of the Iowa lines of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad system, is of especial interest as showing the feelings of men having in charge the interests of transportation lines, and their desire for amicable adjustment of any differences that may yet exist between the roads and the people.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

The wise man hath said: "There is a time for every purpose." "A time to be born and a time to die." "A time to break down and a time to build up." "A time to weep and a time to laugh." "A time to keep silent and a time to speak." Long established custom has marked an occasion of this character as appropriate and proper time for speech.

Sixty years ago last 4th of July, Hon. Charles Carroll laid the first rail, of the first railroad built in the United States. Mr. Carroll was the last surviving signer, of that immortal document which marked the birth of our government, (the Declaration of Independence). Fifty years have elapsed since the promulgation of that sublime declaration of principles, and the venerable patriot may have realized to some extent the tremendous significance the far-reaching and beneficent influence of the drama in which he acted so important a part a half century before, but certain it is that neither he nor any person in the vast assemblage that witnessed the laying of that first bar of railroad iron, dreamed that Charles Carroll was performing for the commercial, and the industrial world, a service similar in importance and significance, to the service he had rendered the cause of humanity and free government, when he with fifty-four other heroes and patriots affixed their names to the grandest document ever conceived by the brain, or presented by the hand of man.

The former gave us our country, the latter furnished the quickening, life-giving currents, making possible the wonderful achievements of the century now drawing to its close.

To appreciate the benefits which followed the building of railroads through sections of the country not supplied with means of transportation, let us look at the condition which prevailed before railroads were built. Sixty years ago the only means of conveyance was by wagon, which was slow and expensive, the journey from Boston to New York by stage occupied a week, and three weeks were consumed in making the trip from New York to Charleston. Upon these routes the travel was greatest, and the service the best, but there was only a tri-weekly mail and this was very irregular.

Freight transportation for short distances was very expensive, for long distances absolutely impossible. The charge for hauling one barrel of flour one hundred and fifty miles was five dollars. Salt which cost one cent per pound at the sea shore, cost six cents per pound three hundred miles from the source of supply. The surplus corn raised in western Pennsylvania, was absolutely worthless, as the cost of transportation over the mountains, was greater than the price at which it could be sold in the eastern market, it was distilled into whiskey, and by thus greatly reducing the bulk in proportion to the value, it was possible to exchange the product of the farm for the merchandise necessary for comfort and to sustain life. The whiskey tax of 1791 was a tax upon the only exchangeable product of the country, and threatened to deprive the people of western Pennsylvania of all commerce with the outside world, and out of this condition grew the whiskey insurrection of 1794. This insurrection has always been and always will be a stain upon the fair name of the state of Pennsylvania, but who shall say how many times and in how many states the same result would have been reached had not the facilities for transportation been improved. From 1830 to 1850 many railroads were built through the eastern, southern and middle states, and in 1853 the first line of railroad was completed to Chicago. As yet no road had been built west from that city and the following extract from a letter written by Governor James W. Grimes, of Burlington, will indicate that while our own state of Iowa had all the fertility of soil which has made her a queen among the agricultural states of the union, yet she was far from prosperous, or even promising, on account of inadequate transportation facilities:

"We have had hard times here, such as were never conceived of in the east. I saw a man to-day who had been keeping a shop. He was obliged to sell out on credit, and he had besides small notes due to the amount of twenty-five hundred dollars; yet he could not raise money enough to buy a bushel of corn meal for his family. I expect I shall be one of the first to go by the board, for my sickness will cost me at least one hundred and twenty-five dollars, which I shall be obliged to pay, as sickness bills and board bills are considered cash articles. As for collecting, it is impossible, for the legislature passed a stay law for twelve months (that is a stay of execution on judgment).

"They thought they would relieve the people, but it serves only to oppress them. The settlers of the town have no resources of capital or credit, and many of them are unable even to pay the government the small sum of a dollar and a quarter an acre for their land. Of course there is no trouble in raising enough to eat, but the fertility of the soil and the industry of the settlers are almost valueless without a market." Another of the old settlers writes of the condition of things as late as 1845: "Land and everything has gone down in value to almost nominal prices. Corn and oats can be bought for six to ten cents a bushel, pork for one dollar a hundred, the best horse a man can raise will sell for fifty dollars. Nearly all are in debt, and the sheriff and constable with legal processes are common visitors at every man's door."

This condition of things was in a section of country as fair and fertile as the sun of heaven ever shown upon, situated upon the bank of the Mississippi river, affording water transportation to St. Louis and other southern markets, which gave it a vast advantage over sections lying remote from that stream.

In the interior counties of the state, even as late as 1850 and until relief was afforded by the building of railroads, land was almost worthless, the products of the farms, (corn and wheat), could be disposed of only by a tedious journey, to the distant market on the river, and butter, eggs, and poultry, which are now so important and valuable a factor in the product of Iowa, had no market value and it was impossible to haul these commodities these long distances without rendering them unfit for use.

In the year 1854 the first line of railroad was completed to the Mississippi river at Rock Island. This was the initiative of the present "Rock Island" system, which extends from Chicago to Denver. The following year the C. B. & Q. was completed to the east bank of the river at Burlington, and the Chicago & Galena, (then the nucleus of the present "North Western") was opened. From 1885 to 1860 various railroads were projected in Iowa and work commenced upon roads leading west from Dubuque, Davenport and Burlington; these roads had been completed to Dyersville, Iowa City, De Witt and Ottumwa, respectively, where the terminus of each remained from 1860 to 1865. 1860-65! The history of these years has been told in song and story, the civilized world looked on while upon this western continent was being determined once and forever, momentous questions of whether or not the people of this nation (or any nation) were capable of self-government, whether a "government of the people, by the people and for the people" could continue to exist; 1865 came; the thousands of soldiers who laid aside the tool of the artisan, left the plow in the furrow, closed the door of the office, and left the counting room to enter the military service of the country, who had followed Sherman from Atlanta to the sea,—had been with Grant as he drew the lines closer and closer around Lee's army in Northern Virginia, and finally passed in that grand review before the old commander in Washington, were returning home to become private citizens of the land they had redeemed and saved. The railroad enterprises which had lain dormant for five years, were taken up with renewed energy and in five years from the close of the war the state of Iowa was spanned by three lines of railroad, and a fourth line was nearly completed across the state. Since that time two additional lines have been completed, making six lines of railway traversing the state of Iowa from east to west, intersected by almost as many lines running north and south. Every township in the state is supplied with a home market better than the distant market was in the early days.

From a military point of view, the railroads of the world have exerted a powerful influence; fifty miles of railroad skillfully handled, would have undoubtedly saved the battles of Solferino and Magenta, to the Austrian armies in 1859, and changed the whole destiny of Italy.

Arnold, in his "Life of Lincoln," says of the time when General Lee was marching northward toward Pennsylvania, and it was expected that a great battle would be fought, that "Now the president, with that tinge of superstition which ran through his character, made a solemn vow to God that if Lee was driven back he would issue the proclamation of emancipation." The battle was fought on the 16th and 17th of September, 1862, and Lee's army was driven south out of Maryland.

The prompt and energetic operation of a railroad in Southern Pennsylvania and Northern Maryland, making it possible to move troops and munitions of war from Hagerstown, undoubtedly saved to the union army, the great battle of Antietam, and five days later the proclamation was issued; which made this nation in fact, as well as in name, the land of the free.

The control and energetic operation of the railroads in 1870, made it possible for Germany to mass her troops at any, and every salient point, and by so doing virtually decided the contest in the first thirty days of the struggle.

For those who lived in Iowa before the days of railroads, no argument is necessary to demonstrate the value of these lines of transportation, in building up and developing the country. Under their beneficent influence, our state has become the garden of the world. Prosperous cities and beautiful villages have sprung up as if by magic, and land that was comparatively valueless, has been transformed into productive and valuable farms.

In a general way we have endeavored to show some of the advantages of railroads in the development of the country, but statements of this kind are necessarily of such sweeping and general character, as to justly be open to the charge of being simply an expression of opinion, and I desire to briefly refer to some statistics to substantiate the claims made.

In the fourth annual report of the Iowa Board of Railroad Commissioners, (on page eight) will be found an extremely interesting table, showing the freight charges, and reductions in the same, on fifteen of the most important lines of transportation in the United States, including the Erie canal and including the following Iowa roads: C. B. & Q., C. R. I. & P., C. & N. W., C. M. & St. P., B. C. R. & N., Illinois Central and the Central Iowa. The period covered by this table is from 1868 to 1878. Referring to this table the report says: "A careful study of the foregoing table will show that fourteen railroad lines mentioned have, almost without exception, steadily reduced their rates in a substantially fixed ratio during all the successive years from 1868 to 1878, inclusive. The few exceptions to this rule, as previously mentioned, show the slight average increase of only nine hundredths of a cent per ton per mile, an increase which bears but a slight ratio to the increase in the cost of labor, supplies and all forms of material entering into railroad use. In the average the Erie canal rates show a decrease of forty-four per cent, from the rates of 1868. The New York Central and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, (which are practically one continuous line of road,) and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, show the greatest decrease in charges, to-wit, sixty-eight per cent. The Michigan Central comes next, sixty-six per cent; the Boston & Albany, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Chicago & Northwestern, the Pennsylvania, the New York, Lake Erie & Western following in the order named. The average per cent. decrease in the Illinois Central charges, as shown in the four years noted in the table, is found to be equal to those showing the largest decrease for the thirteen years of their exhibits, respectively. Another fact prominently appears in this table, which is that the largest ratio of decrease has been made during the last five years; more in the average than during the preceding eight years."

From all these deductions it is evident that the cost of transporting the great bulk of all the food productions, and lumber, coal, manufactures, merchandise and, indeed, of everything moved by rail, is steadily undergoing a marked decrease from year to year, the reductions of the last four or five years being equal in the average to the largest made by any company during the whole time covered by the table.

The chief of the national bureau of statistics, in his report just issued, (1882) uses this language: "It is impossible to estimate the magnitude of the benefits, which the reduction made in charges for transportation on railroads, have conferred upon the interests of agriculture, of mining and of commerce. That the increase in the value of the domestic exports of the United States to foreign countries, from $442,820,178 during the year ending June 30, 1871, to $902,319,473 during the year ended June 30, 1881, has been largely due to such reductions, is evident from the fact that such exports are chiefly the products of the western and north-western states, a large proportion of which is transported to the seaboard on railroads."

Again on page 50 of the fourth annual report of the railway commission, we find the following reference to this remarkable reduction in railway rates:

"It may not be amiss right here to ask what are the results of this steady reduction of railway charges? Some hints of the saving in whole may be gathered from a calculation of the savings of our exports of grain, meats and dairy products. A careful statistician (Hon. Edward Atkinson, of Boston,) puts the grain and meat product for export in 1880, of these north-western states, which finds its first market in Chicago, at eight million tons. The average distance from these states to the sea board he estimates at 1,300 miles. The reduction in rates from 1866 on the transportation lines by which this body of produce was carried to the seaboard, is shown to have been fully one cent per ton per mile. The saving, therefore, is seen to reach the enormous sum of one hundred and four millions of dollars.

But as the rate of 1866 partook somewhat of the high prices of everything for the three or four years following the war, let us take the time from January 1st, 1874. Present rates in the average, from the point of production to the seaboard, have been reduced half a cent per ton per mile, which affords a net saving of fifty-two million dollars on the exported portion of the grain, meat and dairy product of the northwest for the year 1880. The same authority puts the value of these exported products at $389,000,000. The savings in the cost of rail transportation, therefore, at half a cent a mile on this body of exports, amounts to a fraction more than thirteen and one-third per cent. of their total value; we think it safe to say, that one-sixth of this saving passed to the credit of Iowa producers—over $8,000,000 on our exported grain, meat and dairy products for the year 1880.

In concluding this branch of the report, the commissioners venture to assert, that freight is now carried at a rate which no competent railway manager or transportation expert would have thought possible half a dozen years ago. The public everywhere will welcome the facts and from them learn to value the means by which they are obtained."

This was the happy condition in 1880, let us briefly compare the rates at that time, 1880, on the C. B. & Q. from stations in Mills county with rates from the several stations to-day. In 1880 the rate from Malvern to Chicago on a thirty foot car of cattle was $70.00, to-day the rate is $47.50 a reduction of $22.50 per car. In 1880 the freight charges on a thirty foot car of hogs was $70.00, to-day the charges on the same are $37.50, a reduction of $32.50 per car. In 1880 the rates per hundred on wheat, Malvern to Chicago, was 30 cents, making the charge per carload of thirty thousand pounds, $90.00, the present rate is twenty-five cents per hundred, making the charge upon the same car $69.00, a reduction of $21.00 per car. On corn, oats and other grain the rate in 1880 was twenty-five per hundred, the present rate is twenty cents, making a reduction of $15.00 per car upon a car load of thirty thousand pounds.

In addition to the actual reduction in rates of freight, the shipper has been greatly benefitted by the great improvement in the quality of the service rendered, stock which in 1875 to 1880 was from forty-eight to sixty hours in transit, requiring never less than one, frequently two, and not infrequently three feeds en route, now reaches Chicago inside of twenty-four hours, and frequently inside of eighteen hours, doing away entirely with the delay and expense of feeding. These results have come, not from legislation (for no legislation has been had which materially affected interstate rates) but from competition better facilities for doing business, and a larger volume of traffic, making it possible to do the business at lower rates. From every material point of view, the railroads are a factor of inestimable value to the country they are built to serve, and while the railroads have exerted a powerful influence in building up and advancing the material wealth of our land, their influence in promoting and advancing the cause of religion, civilization and education, is none the less marked and important. It has been well said that "The three great civilizing instrumentalities of the age, moral, mental and material, are Christianity, the press and steam, which respectively bring together into closer touch and more intimate relations the hearts and minds of men, the press becomes the speaker, with the civilized world for an audience, and the railroad and its accompanying telegraph is the medium through which the written and spoken truths, reach those for whom they are written and spoken. As the building of the little road, the completion of which we celebrate to-day, will extend the enlightening and moral health-giving influence of Tabor college, so in a thousand communities, and to the lasting benefit of millions of the youth of our country, have the improved facilities for communication proven a boon of incalculable value.

In the early days, when the railroad was so eagerly looked for, as it was extended (all too slowly) across the state, and was so warmly welcomed when it came, there was a bond of sympathy existing between the people, and the management of the road. Each took an interest in the welfare of the other, each realized that anything calculated to work an injury to one, must of necessity, to some extent damage the other. The railroad was the tie which connected the new with the old home, and loved ones back in the east! The whistle of the locomotive was the cheering announcement of the coming of new pioneers, to share with those already come, the blessings of this goodly land.

During the years which have elapsed the railroad has engrossed the attention of its management, perhaps too much to the exclusion of all other considerations, the people have been improving the farms, building up the cities and villages and gradually the people and the railroads have drifted apart; unscrupulous men, to further selfish and personal ends, have taken advantage of this condition to foster and promote discord where harmony should prevail.

There should be no conflict between the railroads and the communities they are built to serve; the best interests of both demand harmony and hearty co-operation in all efforts looking toward the improvement and prosperity of the country.

"The axiom that 'a house divided against itself cannot stand' is of divine origin, and the experience of the ages has confirmed its truth and emphasized its importance.

No section of country (whatever natural advantages it may possess) offers an inviting field to the business man or the farmer looking for a location if there is a conflict between the people and its lines of transportation, characterized by a feeling of such bitterness, as to prompt or permit the comparison of men engaged in business which has done so much for Iowa as have the railroads of the state, with "robbers and pirates" who "ravaged villages and unfortified places." The railroads protest that they do not desire more than a just and reasonable compensation for services rendered. The people concede that this is equitable and right, and the whole question is reduced to the single problem of ascertaining what is a reasonable rate. Calling hard names will never solve the problem, the solution must come after all prejudice and passion have been eliminated—when each party are willing to give the other credit for honesty of purpose and when each is actuated by a sincere desire to do exact justice to all interests involved.

The principle of governmental control of railroads is definitely and finally fixed, and has been accepted in good faith by the roads. It has been decided by the general government and by a majority of the states, that the most satisfactory results can be had by delegating this power of control to a commission, elected by the people, or appointed by proper authority. In Iowa we have decided to choose the commission by the vote of the people. The people of the state have clothed this tribunal, in its control of the railroads of the state, with powers limited only by the restrictions imposed by the constitution. The railroads have accepted the situation and only ask that this tribunal shall be composed of fair-minded, conservative men, actuated by an earnest determination to carefully and impartially investigate every case submitted, and an equally earnest desire to see that no injustice is done either the individual or the corporation, by the ruling made.

In an important state paper submitted to the last legislature, and in connection with the recommendation that the powers of the railroad commission be largely increased, we find the following suggestion as to the duties of that commission: "This board has been looked upon by the railroads as a tribunal clothed with judicial powers, and charged with the duty of protecting the interests of the people, and those of the railroads alike. This, however, is an erroneous conception of their functions. The railroad commission was created to be a committee of the people, obligated to advocate their rights. Organized capital can safely be trusted to defend itself."

Almost simultaneous with the enunciation of this interpretation of the duties of the commission, the control of the revenue earning capacity of the railroads within the state was transferred from the management of the various roads to the board of railroad commissioners, who were admonished by the highest authority in the state that it was no part of the duty of the board to consider the interests of the railroads. Clothed with the absolute power to decide controversies, from which decision there was no appeal, still this tribunal is instructed to consider itself the advocate for one party to the cause, and to ignore the interests of the other. Is it strange that citizens of the New England states who had invested their money in Iowa railroads, viewed the situation with apprehension, as to what the future might have in store for them?

The statement of the case, demonstrates clearly to any fair minded man, that it is not entirely just to the railroads of the state.

While the people of Iowa are jealous of their rights and tenacious in maintaining them, they respect and hold sacred the rights of others, and are careful to avoid infringing thereon.

Second only to the inalienable right of life and liberty, is the right to own and enjoy property honestly obtained, subject to proper and reasonable regulation by the state; to render this right of property insecure is to remove all incentive for industry, frugality and thrift, and to put a premium upon idleness and improvidence. This right should be rendered none the less sacred and secure by the fact that the owners of property in Iowa have their homes in other states.

With a confidence born of a citizenship in the state of more than thirty years, I know that the people of Iowa are not disposed to deal harshly or unjustly with any interest, believing as I do that continued discord and hostility between the state and her railroads will result in disaster to both, I appeal to every good citizen, to strive to heal the wounds which passion and prejudice have made. When differences arise (as difference will arise in the transaction of any business) let the individual and corporation through its proper representative, come in a spirit of fairness and reason together, each willing to give as well as to take, each actuated by a desire to do what is right and just between honorable men; when this is done there will be little use for courts or commissions for the adjudication of this class of questions.

The growth and development of this goodly state of Iowa during the past thirty years has exceeded the expectations of the most sanguine and enthusiastic of the early citizens, but with all the varied interests of the state working harmoniously for her upbuilding and prosperity, who may predict the result of the next decade. Thousands of acres of fertile but now uncultivated land will be transformed into productive farms, comfortable farm houses, overflowing barns and granaries, herds of cattle upon the hill-sides and in the valleys shall tell the story of contentment, happiness and prosperity. School houses and church spires on every hill-top and in a thousand of beautiful villages, shall testify to the Godliness, the culture, the enlightenment of our people.

Peace shall be the hand maiden of plenty, and harmony shall be the harbinger of prosperity, such as our state has never known. Then, indeed, may it truly be said of this glorious state of Iowa: "The affections of her people like the rivers of her borders flow on to a perpetual union."

BORING OF THE GOTTHARD TUNNEL.

Respecting the enormous work of boring through the great tunnel, the first top gallery of seven meters was not done by work of hand, but with the assistance of ingeniously constructed machines, according to the system Ferroux at Goschenen (on the north side) and after the system MacKean (improved by Mr. Seguin, engineer at Airolo) on the south side. These machines were driven by compressed air, according to the plan made by Prof. Colladon of Genf (Geneva); the compressed air not only being able to transmit the power to great distances, but at the same time acting as ventilator for the men at work in the tunnel. For the purpose of compressing the air and keeping it in reservoirs for use, it needed many apparatuses and interesting mechanical arrangements outside the two tunnel ends, for the movement of which the water of the Reuss at Goschenen, the current of the Tremola rivulet and the Tessin (from the Bedretto vale) at Airolo were conducted to the place partly in long open channels, partly in iron tubes, as moving power to the turbines. These quantities of water coming down vehemently from considerable heights rushed with a force equal to 1100—1500 horse power on large fly wheels, the winches of which gave a pushing movement to the piston rods of iron cylinders placed before them and in this manner produced the intended compression of air (of 2.5 atmospheric pressure). Both waters taken together have contributed to the completion of the work for about 3,000 days with an average of 2,000 horse power daily (24 hours) all in all a day's work of 7,500,000 horse power.

When the air tight piston of a cylinder is drawn back by the fly wheel winch, there forms in the interior a vacuum which is opened immediately by valves and filled by atmospheric air pouring in from without. Immediately after the same winch rod pushes the piston again into the cylinder, the valves shut and keep the air from escaping, the latter being thereby forced to enter a narrow tube leading to an air-holder (reservoir). By this proceeding the air is strongly compressed, up to the twentieth part of its volume.

When the reservoir becomes filled up, the compressed air enters the main pipe and thence the large boiler-like airkeepers placed before the tunnel entrances.

From these reservoirs the compressed air was conducted to the place of work in the tunnel and there set agoing the boring machine placed before the rocks (end of gallery). The cylinders of the boring machine were of bronze, in shape like a mortar barrel. Out of these projected a sort of steel bayonet, the end of which formed a chisel. The boring machines—sometimes six being at work simultaneously—were supported by an iron frame (boring car) running on wheels so as to be moved forwards or backwards. The steel chisel of about two inches in length (borer) was now, by means of the piston, in a revolving motion pushed with such vehemence against the rock, that sparks sallied forth, and in a few moments a deep hole was made. Even the hardest granite could not resist the furious attacks of the steel borer. A workman continually watched the progress at the hole, made the boring machine advance by means of a screw, took the dust away, and poured water into the holes to prevent the borer from becoming too hot. When the borer had entered the rocky wall to the depth of a little more than a meter, the machine was drawn back in order to advance again for a new attack. After 16 or 20 holes had been made by four or six machines, the frames were removed, the workmen withdrew, and but one remained in order to fill the holes with dynamite cartridges (subsequently Gelatine was employed) and to light the fuse attached to them. Some minutes later the fire reached the blasting material, a tremendous thunder-clap resounded, the end of the gallery had retired by about a metre, and the ground was covered by scattered pieces of stone. Immediately after, the cock of the ventilating pipe was opened and the force of the outstreaming air chased at once all the smoke out of the tunnel. The detached rocks, (rubbish) were hastily taken away, the track for the frames was advanced to the new point of attack, the boring machine advanced to the new point of attack and the monotonous work began afresh.

The compressed air, however, was not only intended to work the boring machine but also to bring up fresh air for the lungs of the work people. Partly the gas produced through blasting, partly the height of the temperature increasing with the size of the mountains, required an extra ventilation, if the working power of the men was not to be reduced by the heat. This ventilation was produced by the boring apparatus releasing the air employed as good air; besides fresh air was introduced through direct communication (cast tubes) with the reservoirs, into the tunnel, so that the quantity daily consumed in one part of the tunnel amounted to about 120,000 cubic meters atmospheric tension. Notwithstanding the temperature gradually rose up to 34 Celsius which made the workmen suffer tremendously. After the first cutting through the rock the situation improved considerably as there happened alternatively to be currents from the north to the south and vice versa according to the current of air prevailing on both sides of the Alps.

Besides the boring machines, the working locomotives that brought trains with material in and trains loaded with rubbish out of the tunnel, were also moved by compressed air (pressure: 12 atmospheres).

The atmospheric wagon has, like the locomotive, a funnel, gives whistle signals, but instead of steam thrusts out a thick air saturated with water. The tender has the shape of a long boiler and carries for the production of the moving power not coals and water but compressed air. If the tender wants a supply on the road it can be got from the air pipe in the tunnel by means of cocks fitted into it. A hose is fastened to such a cock and connected with the tender and when the tender is filled, the cock is turned off.

The tender through another hose, introduces the necessary quantity of air for working the engine into the latter.

The excavation of the tunnel in its entire height and width was naturally not done all at one time, but gradually.

The boring began under the roof of the future tunnel and as this first cutting ran close under the upper longitudinal line, it was called "top gallery." Whilst this gallery was progressing it was, behind, widened to the right and left. At a later period the construction of a so-called gallery split was extended at first to one half and finally to the whole depth of the proposed excavation. For greater security the tunnel was totally vaulted with cuneated blocks of granite. The mountains as well as the numerous erratic blocks furnished the material. The space left between the vault and rock roof was filled with stones. When the rock on the tunnel sides proved solid, the vault was built on it, if not, mured abutments (spring-walls) were erected which supported the top vault. Very soft rock required the construction of a closed tunnel tube.

Much time and money was spent on the so-called "blowing passage," (nearly 2,800 meters from the entrance at Goschenen) and on a central downpressing mass at 7,400 meters. At these places a soft rocky mass consisting of remains of phylitic gneiss destroyed by the influence of the atmosphere, pressed continually down into the tunnel and destroyed not only the strongest wooden supports but even stone abutments. It was finally found necessary to form cylinder vaults of enormous granite broad-stones. The fixing of the tunnel axle was done trigonometrically. In examining whether the proper direction had been kept the most important thing was to measure a straight line of the greatest possible length. Into the slope of the valley opposite the tunnel entrance a small gallery was pushed and thence a light in the tunnel was gaged; afterwards the same proceeding was continued in the interior of the tunnel by using the so-called pit theodolite. This gallery was called the directing gallery.

The final cutting across of the tunnel took place (at a distance of 7,795 meters from the north entrance) on the 29th of February (intercalary day and very rare fifth Sunday in February) 1880 at 11 o'clock a. m., after the borer on the Airolo side had pierced the rock on the previous evening and the photograph of Favre had been handed through the aperture. The happy long-wished for event was not only celebrated in Switzerland by shooting, music, flags on the houses, bonfires and inevitable banquets, but also welcomed in Germany and Italy by sympathetic demonstrations. From the Emperor William, as well as from Count Bismarck and also from the King of Italy congratulating telegrams arrived on the day of the solemn festivity. The workmen, too, were thought of; they had a banquet prepared for them and according to the length of time of their employment they got either silver or copper medals. In order to be just to the names of the dead there was money collected for their remaining families.

On the 2d March a connected line was already established through the tunnel on which the engineers and officials from Goschenen drove on trundles to Airolo. The first passage through the Gotthard took three hours and thirty minutes. On the 21st of December, 1880, the first mail bags were taken through the tunnel from Airolo to Goschenen, by two post conductors; on the 28th of December, 1881, the tunnel, intended to be made with two tracks, but for the beginning only provided with one line, was totally finished and from the 1st of January, 1882, passengers and goods trains passed regularly through it. On the 1st of June, 1882, the traffic on the whole line Lucerne-Milan was open, after the portion Giubiasca-Lugano (Monte Cenero) had been opened to the public.

In 1883 a second track had been laid in the tunnel. The passage through the tunnel takes at the present time not more than twenty-five minutes.

The cutting of the Gotthard tunnel took seven years and five months. There have been 1,800,000 kilog. of Dynamite employed, 320,000 holes bored and 1,650,000 borers used up. 2,400 individuals were employed daily on an average (18,428 during the whole time of working) doing together about eight million working parts called "Einmannerschicht," (one man's day's work.)

The above quotations refer only to the roof gallery; the complete bracking out and lining with stones, etc., took nearly two years more, so that the construction of the whole tunnel took nine years and three months in all and was finished only one and one-half year after the time originally appointed. The cutting and building of the tunnel cost 56,808,620 francs.

At the conclusion of this chapter the author of this little book considers it his sacred duty, to mention the heroism with which the poor workmen—mostly Italians—fulfilled their mission. They had to endure great hardships. Looking at the working people within the tunnel one could not but be struck with anxiety and astonishment. These half naked figures covered with perspiration, with their suffering yellowish faces, ghastly lighted up by a dull lamplight, their blackened hands convulsively strained, their difficult breathing being occupied day by day since for many weeks, months and even years at their eight hours' work in this modern Tartarus, in a heat of 22 to 34 degrees C., deserve our deepest compassion. Scattered on a line of 150 kilometers, 2,000 meters under ground, each with his little lamp by his side, they might be seen, either sitting in the oppressive vapor, or standing, cowering, breaking out, charging the dynamite mines, occupied in clearing the rubbish away, taking out and in the trucks, wading through water and mud,—truly an affecting scene.

Added to this, the clamor of locomotives and wagons, of horses and drivers, of thousands of hammers and spades at work, the terrible hissing noise of the boring machines, the roaring of the dynamite explosions—who would be able to give an approximate description of all that?

Numerous workmen died in consequence of the unhealthy air, of over exertion, of anchylostomum (intestinal worm producing inanition), or of colds. Besides, many accidents during the construction of the tunnel cost the loss of 200 human lives (of these about 30 in 1880) and 431 workmen were wounded; the whole construction of the railway thus causing 310 deaths and 877 hurts. May all the happy people hastening through the tunnel in a railway carriage leaning on soft cushions, not only rejoice at the grand acquisition but also remember the poor people who sacrificed life and health to the work.

Thus the rough north and the mild south shake hands finally like brothers, in a tunnel, the two parts of which met exactly together during the act of cutting. Goschenen and Airolo are joined by an iron embrace and the traveler who passed the night at Lucerne may dine at Milan, though, according to the custom at Italy at rather a late hour, or take his supper at Genoa. Through the line Bellinzona-Genoa opened on the 4th of December, 1882, the chief manufacturing parts of Germany at last are brought into immediate connection with a principal port of the Mediterranean.

"Good luck" to the Gotthard tunnel and "hail" to the fraternization of nations, established by such great works of peace, which at the same time proclaim the triumph of the human mind over matter.

A STORY, BUT A TRUE ONE.

Charley Gregg walked into the train-master's office on one of our western railroads, some years ago, and standing outside the picket railing that divided the waiting room from the main office, gazed intently at the gentleman who sat at the little desk inside, busily engaged with a huge pile of correspondence that comprised the morning mail, and he wondered whether he would ever muster up courage enough to address the one who seemed all absorbed in reading the correspondence that was piled up on his desk.

The young man who stood in waiting, although poor, and his clothing of the cheapest make and appearance, had been blessed with a good mother, and had been taught that it was only good manners to wait until the gentleman had finished the work that lay before him, but it seemed almost an age to him who was so anxiously waiting to gain an interview.

Finally the man of business suddenly glanced toward the door, and seeing a young stranger standing there, asked, in his customary bluff manner, "Well, young man, what can I do for you?"

The tone seemed harsh and bitter, as they sounded in that corner of the little room, for the one who uttered them, although the possessor of a warm and kindly heart, had that gruff and positive way about him that drove the youth a little further into the corner than his diffidence had before placed him.

"I came in here, sir, to see if you wanted any brakemen," said the boy in a respectful manner, although the words came near choking him to death. The man of business laid by his letters, and taking a comprehensive view of the unexpected caller, said:

"And you want to be a brakeman; Well, I wonder what will come next."

Then taking a second view of his early visitor, he said, "How old are you, my boy?"

"I my sixteenth year," answered Charley.

"In your sixteenth year and you want to be a brakeman; the idea of putting you on the road to get killed. Young man," said he, "you are too young to do any service in our business, and I should feel guilty to put so young a boy as you, to work in so dangerous a position, if I was ever so much in want of help."

The lips quivered and the tears came trickling down the pale white cheeks, as he turned to go out the door, when the busy man called him back, and opening the wicket door, bade him step inside.

"Sit down," said the stern but tender hearted man. With a faint heart, a trifle reassured, he did as he was bid.

"Where is your home, my lad," said the trainmaster.

"I have no home, sir," he replied.

"Your father and mother—where are they?"

"I have no father or mother." And then he told the busy man of his childhood days away off in that eastern home; of his father and mother, when they lived on the little farm. How his father had sickened and died; and when he was 15 years of age, his good mother was laid down by his father's side, in the little burying ground, and he was left an orphan; no brother and no sister, even, to care for him. How he had worked for one of the neighbors for six months, to earn money enough to buy his ticket to the far, far west, and here he was, asking for work of a stranger in a strange land, with no home nor friends, nothing on earth but a resolute will and a face that told his honesty, with the manners of a boy who has learned all the traits that characterize a noble youth.

As he told his sad story, the gruff listener, (to all appearance) gave an attentive ear, and when the story was finished he said, "What is your name, young man?" "Charley Gregg," was the answer.

"Well, Charley," he replied, "I am very busy this morning and have not time to spare for anyone, but you come around here at two o'clock this afternoon and I will see if anything can be done for you."

So the orphan boy kindly thanked him and walked out of the office, scarcely knowing whether it was right to feel encouraged or no. The trainmaster again turned his attention to his work, still unfinished, and the usual routine of business and the duties of one in his station, were gone through with, until the whistle sounded the hour for dinner. This over, he returned to the office, and after transacting a little of the routine, everyday business, he, as usual stepped into the superintendent's office, to counsel with him on a few matters of importance. They sat together for an hour or so when the train-master remarked to the superintendent: "I had an application from a young man for a position as a brakeman, this morning."

"Are you in need of any more?" asked the superintendent, whose manner was even more abrupt than the officer under him.

"Yes sir, I might give work to one or more of them."

"Why did you not hire him if you need more men?"

"On account of his age," replied the other, "he is not yet 16 years old."

"Better go home to his mother and wait till he grows," answered the great business man; "If such a one should come around me I would tell him so too quick. What did you say to him?"

"I told him to call again at two o'clock and I would talk with him."

"Told him to call at two o'clock, a boy 15 years old. When he comes again send him in to me; I will make short work of the lad, and he will not have to call again. I tell you, Hardy, you are too soft-hearted to be at the head of a lot of railway men—more especially boys."

"So Hardy went out and resumed his duties in his own department until two o'clock, when, upon looking up once more, there stood the boy who had called in the morning, with hat in hand and offering a courtly bow, merely remarking, "I called again as you requested me to do."

"O; yes, I remember; well, Charley, you just go out the door into the hall, and go along until you find room No. 3, there you will find the Sup't and see what he will say to you."

The youth hesitated a minute, his heart almost sinking within him but mustering up new courage he walked out into the wide, lonely hall, and looking at the numbers on the doors he saw one with the figure 3 painted on the glass, and walking in stood in the presence of the superintendent of a railway company of one of our Trunk lines of the western country. Looking up from his desk, where he sat writing a letter the great man fully prepared to settle the question at issue as he readily guessed who the visitor was, turned around in his chair and addressing the pale young boy whose limbs were tottering with fright, he said: "Well, young man, what is your business here?"

With a firm voice, but trembling slightly, the boy replied; "I am in search of work, good sir."

"And what do you want to do?"

"I called to see if I could not get a situation as brakeman, sir."

"Well the best situation you can get is to go home and stay with your mother until you are old enough to go away from home."

I have no father or mother, neither friends nor home, sir," replied the youth as a few tears trickled down each cheek, but he never took his eyes off the superintendent of the western railroad.

And the great, strong, gruff man that the people said had no heart in him coughed a little and gathered his breath a second time, then took out his large silk handkerchief and wiped away the first tears he had known for many a year. In the five minutes that the pale youth had spent in relating his story, the man of iron nerve and kingly bearing had lived over the whole of his life. He remembered when only two years of age he had lost his father, and at the age of ten his good old mother died, and the world was cold, and sad and dreary to him until he was seventeen years old, when some kind gentleman took an interest in him, befriended him far beyond any anticipations of what a friend might do, and he grew up to be a man; prospered in business and in life, and now with a beautiful home and a lovely companion, at the age of forty-five he was superintendent of a large corporation. And the pale lad who stood before him, the same one whom he was going to send away from his presence in an instant, was told to be seated, and the stern man of business sent for the train-master, telling the boy to inform him that he wished to see him immediately. This individual had a good idea of what the word "immediately" meant and hastened to the presence of his superior officer.

"Sit down, sir," he said, addressing Hardy.

"My little friend," said he to the lad, "can you write a good hand?"

"Yes, sir, I think I can," was the answer in a firm, decided tone of voice.

The superintendent wrote a few words and attached his signature, then handed it to the boy that he was going to send home to his mother less than an hour previous, and said, "Just take this pen and copy what I have written, signature and all."

So the youth sat down in the easy chair and did as he was requested to do, when he had finished arose, and handing the pen back to the owner, quietly remarked, "I think I can do much better after a little practice." And the proud, stern man took up the paper and looked at it, then handed it to Hardy and the gruff train-master only remarked, "That is better than I can do," while the superintendent said nothing, well knowing that it was a copy by the side of his handwriting, and the train-master was told that he, the superintendent, would see to the lad, and he could be excused for the present; and Hardy walked out of the office, mumuring half to himself and half aloud, "I guess the boy settled the old man instead of the old man settling the boy," and the Train-master never uttered a truer saying in his life than this.

As soon as the two were left alone the superintendent turned to the young man and said in a kindlier tone than he had been master of for a long time, "You are too young and frail, my little man, to enter the service of any company as a brakeman, it is too dangerous a position for one of your years. But I am in need of some one to do my writing and attend to the work around my office, and to-morrow morning you may commence, and if you will do as well as I have hopes that you will do, you will never regret that you asked me for a position as a brakeman."

Years have passed since then. Charley Gregg is a fictitious name, but the story is a true one in every particular, and to-day we could take you into the office of the General Manager of one of our Trunk lines introduce you to the gentleman whom we have called "Charley Gregg," and when he reads this story he will recall the incidents of his life that we have related to you.

E. H. B.

* *

Thd two greatest women of the age appear to be Miss Nellie Bly and Miss Elizabeth Bisland; one having traveled around the world in seventy-five days or a little less, and the other in seventy-five days and twelve hours. We are not so particular in regard to the excitement that their trip has produced, but are in hopes that the future will be productive of some good, as we may be able to read in the paper and magazine that sent them abroad, the report of their trip and also their ideas of the countries they have visited.

"Nellie Bly" opened her eyes when she sailed away; "Jules Verne," you've lost your turn, Nellie's here to stay.

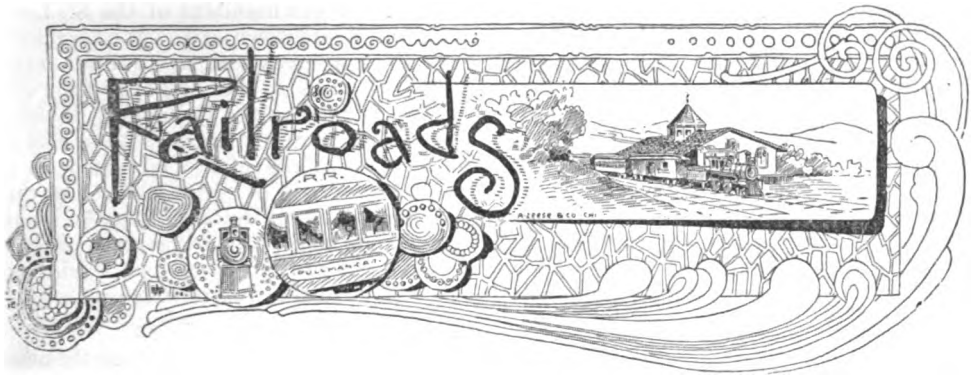

And it's heigh, Nellie! ho, Nellie, ain't it very grand Riding sixty miles an hour over this happy land?

* *

Ho! ye that thirst, and take to the cup, or look upon the tangle-foot when it is red, go ye not into the wine press to quench your thirst, neither be caught hanging around the portals of the beer guzzler, for it calls for Justice! Lean ye not up against the fence post, neither have thy face flushed when thou wearest the blue and the tinsel; let thy breath ne'er smell of the brain destroyer, neither breathe forth the essence of cinnamon or cloves. For if these things occur, for thy first offense thou shalt hear the sound of the tocsin of remorse ringing in thine ears, and when thou doest these things the second time, there will be written in the book of names opposite thine own one simple word, "Dennis." C., B. & Q.

* *

The proposed Pan-American railway route, from a Wathington dispatch to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, seems to be a thing among the future possibilities. It says: The first thing to do is to make a survey of a section of country 200 miles in width, which has never been crossed, and its range is of great height, and at present is held by hostile Indians. To make a survey will necessitate the use of an armed corps of engineers, and upon their report will depend the solution of the question as to the route across the continent of South America. It would start at Cartegena, a once famous Spanish port, and the thoroughfare would pass through the most fertile portions of South America. It would connect and bring to the Carribbean sea 11,000 miles of railroad, now built, or under construction, within three days, by fast steamer, of Tampa, Mobile, New Orleans and Galveston. It would open a wonderful rice and coffee country. But there are great difficulties to be overcome. Along the Pacific coast there is a rainless belt of 1,500 miles in length; then again, a long distance that has the greatest rainfall in the world. But some day the road may be built, notwithstanding the great obstacles to be overcome. A survey fund of $200,000 is already being raised by a wealthy company to procure the survey.

Union Pacific shops at Cheyenne, Wyo., to cost $3,000,000! Whew!

* *

Mr. Charles F. Adams, president of the Union Pacific, is enjoying a rest in the Island of Cuba.

* *

The legality of collecting the extra ten cents has been sustained by the Supreme court of Pennsylvania.

* *

The land commissioner of the Central Pacific railway sold in 1889 153,000 acres of land for $548,954, being an average of $3.75 an acre.

* *

The snow blockade in the far west has been tremendous, with fifteen and twenty feet of snow; and now comes a report of terrible floods in the valleys of California.

* *

The New York Central railway has commenced the use of the trough system of taking water. The whole cost of the system is said to be $20,000.

* *

A railway bridge is to be built across the Arkansas river at Cummins, midway between Pine Bluff and Arkansas City. It is to be 1,200 feet in length, with four spans and a draw of 300 feet.

* *

Another 2 per cent. quarterly dividend has been declared by the Pullman Palace Car Company, which has been a regular practice for a number of years, to which every stockholder says quietly, "Amen."

* *

Thirteen feet along the Colorado Midland Railway, and the rotary plough keeps moving and thus far has been very successful in keeping the road at least passably clear, without much delay to their trains.

* *

The Northern Pacific now has 4,450 miles of railroad, extending from Lake Michigan to the Pacific coast. Only ten years ago it had 530 miles, and sadly bankrupted at that; but last year its earnings were $21,753,000.

* *

Is it well worth the small expense to any conductor to purchase the Jan 25 issue of the Railway Age, and carefully peruse the article entitled "Car Ventilation," on pages 66 and 67, as it is a subject that concerns every conductor.

* *

$2,191 Miss Nellie paid for her ticket from California to Chicago, or rather, this was paid by those in whose interest the young lady was traveling. A pretty good price, but after all, considering the accommodations, it was not so excessive.

* *

It will take $20,000,000 to build the Pacific Shore Line from Sioux City to Ogden. There are now five corps of engineers in the field at an expense of $10,000 per month. $20,000,000 for 1000 miles of road. Read, reflect and build.

* *

The American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents hold their next meeting in the City of Mexico, March 18th. They are to ride in a special vestibule train over the Chicago & Atlantic, St. Louis & Iron Mountain, the Southern Texas & Pacific and the Mexican Central roads; there are to be elegant dining car attachments. The party of gentlemen will undoubtedly, as the boy said when he had been to the circus, "have a high old time."

At the funeral of Mr. E. H. Graves, late superintendent of the Hastings & Dakota division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, which was largely attended by both officers and employes, among the beautiful floral offerings, the Order of Railway Conductors contributed a floral coach five feet long, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, a locomotive and tender, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen a broken brake-wheel, the superintendents of the Northern Divisions a broken column.

* *

We learn that Mr John C. Gault, who recently resigned as general manager of the Queen & Crescent system, has consented to remain with that company until the 1st of April. It may be possible that the Queen & Crescent route may see fit to continue Mr. Gault with them, for a much longer time than this. We had always supposed that he stood in the front rank among railway managers. He certainly understands what is commonly termed "railroading," from the bottom up, having passed through all its stages and being intimately acquainted with the intricate portions of such work, we have always considered him a first-class railroad man.

* *

We learn, just before going to press, that Mr. E. Bignall has been made superintendent of the northern division of the Burlington & Missouri River road, vice D. E. Thompson, resigned; also, that General Manager Holdrege has announced that Mr. D. E. Thompson, having requested to be relieved as superintendent of this same division, is now appointed general agent, with headquarters at Lincoln, Neb., and a circular from Mr. Calvert announces that Mr. J. R. Phelan will act as superintendent for the line west of Ravenna, known as the Wyoming division, with headquarters at Alliance; and Mr. Holdrege also announces the appointment of Mr. Geo. H. Crosby as general freight agent of this company, taking the place of Thomas Miller, recently appointed general freight agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy syetem.

* *

Our old friend and companion, Mr. A. F. Hilton, has resigned his position as Superintendent of the Galesburg division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad, his resignation to take effect Feb. 1. He will be succeeded by Mr. E. M. Herr, at present superintendent of the St. Louis division, Beardstown, Ill. We earnestly hope the employes will so conduct themselves as to win the respect of the new superintendent on the Galesburg division, and just as earnestly hope that he may so conduct the affairs of the company as to win the good will of those under him that they will deem it but a pleasure to do all that is right and proper that they should do. To the retiring official we tender our best wishes for his future success.

* *

A sad accident that in Chicago the other day where a funeral procession ran into a railroad train. We do not speak of this in any jesting manner. But it really seems to us, from the information so far gained that this is a truthful statement of the facts. When will the public ever learn to use even ordinary precaution when driving over railroad crossings.

* *

In the new order recently issued by J. D. Besler, general superintendent of the C., B. & Q. railroad, there is nothing that can be rationally said against it and so much that can be said in its favor that comment seems almost unnecessary, yet there will be some in all departments of the railway service that will meet together by the wayside and argue about curtailing a laboring man's appetite and drink-a-tite; also, the oppression of railway officials. There is, however, one thing, boys, that will naturally be the effect of this order, if its provisions are thoroughly carried out: those who are displeased with it, and who would be affected by it, will have a much larger bank account on Dec. 31, 1890, and their families will be a great deal better off and a thousand times happier, (many of them); they will be much more respected by society at large, and respect themselves far more. The time they now spend in these saloons and by-places, if allotted to reading and the pleasures of a goodly home, will furnish a fund of useful information and home comforts and pleasures that time will never efface. Railway accidents will be far less numerous. Many who are now gentlemen when sober will be gentlemen at all times. This portion of the world, and the railroad men who are in it. (both officials and employes) will be a great deal happier. So, if this be true, you need not wonder that we find no excuse to say aught against this edict of the C., B. & Q.

A HANDICAPPED MAN.

Whenever a horse enters a race carrying more weight than his competitor, it is a tacit or open admission that the horse so discriminated against is supposed to be the better animal. To equalize the chances, in a spirit of fairness, to the owners, handicapping is the method. The view the handicapped horse takes of the matter is not considered. Because he is stronger and fleetier than his opponent he must pay a penalty. His superior condition may be the result of painful exercise, careful dieting and hardship exercised toward him on the part of grooms that superfluous flesh may not counterbalance acquired fleetness. Undergoing such treatment until a probable winner. Sporting justice? by replacing horse flesh with human flesh, makes the probable only possible. Outside of interested parties the handicapped horse has the sympathy of lovers of the sport. Yet, should he lose the race, more or less of a cloud rests upon his name. The fact he lost not why, is paramount. A cloud once placed upon man or beast seems sufficient to offset all else, hence the proverb "Give a dog a bad name and hang him."

The railway conductor of to-day is a handicapped man. He must submit to a course of training often long, painful and full of risks, before securing the place. His training qualifies him to observe closely and estimate accurately. His mental capacity and clerical ability, resulting from his experience qualify him to, honestly, compete with other salaried railway servants he comes in contact with on equal ground. Here the spirit of railway fairness steps in in the interest of—let us say discipline—and handicaps him. The youthful agent, just from the telegraph office, not only tells him what to do, but advises how, with the alternative of "reporting" if unheeded, in which case long years of service seem not to weigh in his favor.

The traveling Auditor, although some young accountant, smart and capable, etc., nevertheless young, brings terror or awe to every agent along the line whenever he appears. Why? The atmosphere of the general office pertains to and hangs about him. That's enough for the average agent to make him obsequious, while that same agent gets back his dignity so lowered by the unusual display of respect by proceeding to snub the first Conductor he comes in contact with officially. He believes, whether justly or otherwise, to report a Conductor to the general office, will pass as legal tender, and never neglects to offer such tender whenever he wants to strike a balance with said "Con." And with some agents that is daily.

Some "car inspector" of three week's experience, may in his mature wisdom, condemn a car in a train, no matter how late or how important time is to that conductor or his ten or twenty year's service, which says the car may safely be taken to destination, is not admissible, the mature (?) inspector marks it to "set out," and knowing some more "legal tender" will be offered unless complied with, the car is "set out," and the train's "laid" out in so doing. The traveling public also seem to understand how to proceed. If the aforesaid public take exceptions because the car is too warm, too cold or too dusty, or too shady, it will majestically, with pencil in hand, ask your name and number of train, threatening to offer more "legal tender" unless you comply with their demand, which being utterly impossible in many cases, it is frequently offered and the conductor called upon to "explain."

The traveling passenger and freight agent, are accorded, when on the road, all due respect. Why? Because of what they represent the general office and the approval of the general office.

Does any one know when the general office approves the conductor? The majority of the communications he gets from there begins with "why?" and ends with "explain at once." In the various departments of that office are many clerks, not simply clerks, but general office clerks. Although not like baby McKee their "grand-pa is not President," they partake of the governmental authority and while under the same authority each one, in the line of duty may use the name of the "head" of his department whose authority he is under, the passenger, auditor, freight and car service departments, under cover of their "heads" through some clerical youth therein may administer a written rebuke or castigation to the common recipient, the conductor, without fear of consequence to himself, since the authority and name of his "head" of department protects him.

If the indignant conductor, wrongfully accused, through lack of care on the part of the clerk who accuses to ascertain who to accuse, should reply by letter, it must be couched in respectful language, regardless of the tone of the one received, because not of its sender, but of the "head" addressed, which head, doubtless, never sees the query or reply. Accusations have been made at random, and when the accused conductor personally replied, proving himself innocent, the answer has been "was trying to find the man."

It is said when a fight occurs at a Donnybrook fair in Ireland, the rule is to hit a head wherever you see it, so you fight. Likewise since the conductor represents no one but himself, every official, servant, and the railway public seem to think, since he is the only common head "hitable" with impunity, they will keep themselves and the conductor in practice, they believing the scriptural injunction, "It is more blessed to give than receive," the conductor realizing "to them that hath shall be given." Is he not like Ishmael, apparently: "Every man's hand against him." Do you wonder he is of a suspicious nature? hard to approach? and chary of his confidence?

The handicapped horse, as I observed in the beginning has the sympathy of parties not interested. But the handicapped man has generally only the sympathy of his kind, and each one is so busy attending to his own business he has time only for a passing glance at his fellow sufferers.

This is not written in a spirit of morbid feeling, but I venture the assertion that a canvass of the subject would prove my picture the rule more than the exception. I have only touched upon the matter. Many other methods of handicapping than those named are demonstrable. Let us keep training for the result sure to come, if true to ourselves and the teaching of the Order. Occasionally a man may be found who admits the difficulties we labor under. If we can make a possible winner's showing, carrying our present "weight," in the time to come we, or those who come after us, will be able to run a better race, then, for the efforts made, though handicapped, to run successfully, now.

S. E. F.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Jan. 27, 1890.

FOR THE CONDUCTOR: The 25th inst., Elmira Division No. 9, received an official visit from the A. G. C. C., C. H. Wilkins. To say we were pleased with his visit is feebly describing it. Brother Wilkins is thoroughly posted in the new work and has a faculty of explaining that few are master of. We all feel that it was good for us that we were present, and those who were necessarily absent, missed a great treat. Brother Wilkins was present at our ball, on the night of the 24th inst, a full account of which appears in the Elmira Sunday Telegram, of January 26, 1890. I herewith send clipping.

T. B. HEWITT.

THE CONDUCTOR'S GRAND BALL.—The pleasantly anticipated ball of Division No. 9, Order of Railway Conductors, occurred Friday night at Bundy hall, and as was expected the affair was a magnificent success. The Order of Railway Conductors is one of the strongest organizations of train employes in the United States. Its membership is very large and embraces nearly all the freight and passenger conductors in the country. Elmira Division, No. 9, is composed of 134 members in good standing, and nine-tenths of the conductors on all railroads centering in this city are enrolled as members. The great popularity of the division is an assurance that whatever is undertaken by the lodge will be successful, but the most sanguine member of the local branch could hardly have thought, that the attendance at the first annual ball would be so large. The scene in the ball room was strikingly beautiful. For days before the night of the ball, a hard-working committee, under the direction of a decorator and designer, had toiled early and late in the ball room, and as a result of their labors, beautiful Bundy hall looked like a bower in fairy-land on the night of the dance. Hundreds and hundreds of feet of evergreen rope gracefully clung to the side walls, shape from the ceiling. Beautiful colored lights peeped out here and there from silver-plated lanterns, festooned with flowers, and in front of the partially concealed orchestra an archway of evergreens and flowers rose over the portrait of the good-looking Grand Chief Conductor of the Order of Railway Conductors, C. S. Wheaton. The flag of the nation was proudly elevated above the arch, and silken banners, the property of Division No. 9, hung in the front part of the hall. Mrs. C. S. Wheaton, who was present in the early part of the evening, accompanied by her sister, brought with her a beautiful basket of rare flowers, which were accepted by the brotherhood committee with many expressions of gratitude, and placed on a stand beneath her husband's portrait. Numbers of the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and of the Brakemen's Brotherhood, were present, and when Conductor Thomas W. Keefe, of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western road, and C. S. Whitney, of the Northern Central led off the grand march

AND SWUNG IN SEMI-CIRCULAR

TO THE INSPIRING MUSIC furnished by Casady's orchestra of eight pieces, fully 400 handsomely attired ladies and well-dressed gentlemen, followed the two popular railroad men through the intricate evolutions of the opening promenade. There was twenty-four numbers on the dance programme, and at the completion of the first half, an intermission was taken for supper, which was served at the Arbor. C. H. Wilkins, Assistant Grand Chief Conductor, who is a member of Division No. 41, of Chicago, Ill., expected to be present, but his train failed to make connections. The Grand Chief Conductor C. S. Wheaton, was also unavoidably absent. The ball was a success in the full meaning of the word, and a finer body of ladies and gentlemen never assembled in a ball room. The toilets of many of the ladies were grand, and all the maids and matrons assembled were handsomely attired. Stalwart and good-looking the railroad men appeared, and courteously and hospitably did they entertain their guests. Every one was made to feel at home, and as one of the young misses remarked, in the bearing of the reporter: "These nice looking conductors are as gracious a set of gentlemen as ever I met. They won't let a girl be a wall flower if she wants to. Every girl I know has her programme filled." Among the visiting members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, were John Dennis and lady, Ben Doolittle and wife, M. Cantlin and lady, Tom Demorest and wife, Robert True and wife, Tom Bazan and wife, Michael Cotter and wife, Dan Keefe and lady. T. B. Hewitt, Chief Conductor of Division No. 9, did yeoman services as a member of the floor committee, and C. E. Stickles, Assistant Chief Conductor of the Division and grand floor conductor, covered himself with glory in the estimation of his brother conductors. Mr. Stickless worked industriously to insure the success of the first ball, and the splendid result of his and the committees' labors, must give the division great satisfaction. The ladies' souvenir programmes were really beautiful and many an exclamation of delight, surprise and pleasure escaped from the lips of the fair ones who received them. The floor committee was composed of Chief Conductor, C. E. Stickles: aids, M. C. Slattery, T. B. Hewitt, W. S. Whitley, T. W. Keefe, J. T. Walsh, M. A. Walsh, C. Lippincott, M. P. Holleran, E. C. Osterander. The following letter of regret was read from William P. Daniels, Grand Secretary and Treasurer:

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA, Jan. 16, 1890.

C. A. Wood, Secretary of No. 9, 209 Gillinan street, Elmira, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I am in receipt of your kind invitation and complimentary to the first annual ball given by No. 9. I regret very much that I shall not be able to be present and avail myself of your kindness. I know by the past something of the hospitality of No. 9, and know what I shall miss by not being able to be present.

Yours truly in P. F.,

WILLIAM P. DANIELS,

Grand Secretary and Treasurer.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DDAR SIR AND BROTHER: With your permission I will give you the new officers of T. H. Division No. 92: R. J. Lee, C. C.; J. W. Caskey, S. & T.; F. L. Campbell, A. C. C.; C. H. Arthur, S. C.; R. J. Harshman, J. C.; B. R. Dunn, I. S.; A. J. Hordesty, O. S. G.; L. Helmer, Delegate; C. H. Arthur, Alternate. The members failed to elect any one to the position of "General Kicker."

H. M. Kearne, late A. C. C., has been made extra passenger conductor and looks fresher than a "No. 3," mackerel and finer than split silk in his new uniform.

Col. A. Black, one of the "two orphans," has been made extra passenger conductor to the extent of taking the pay car west, and some of the knowing, say if you had a red apple for him, you would have to give it to him with a long stick. Such is life, and none but the wealthy can enjoy such luxuries.

Terre Haute division is prospering, and has a solid front, and don't you forget that some day the few who have failed to take membership with the Order, will find that they have waited too long. No, No, boys! When you want to use the Order you will find that the thing wont work. Every good, sober, honest and moral man can have membership with us, who has served the requisite number of days as a conductor, and in return for his having taken brotherhoodship with the Order, you have a standing with all first-class railroad companies, that otherwise you cannot acquire, then the insurance for a man filling the extra hazardous place of freight conductor is good, and cannot be duplicated with any accident insurance company doing business in any state today. Doubtless many can call to mind some poor mother and little ones who are today in want, from no other cause, than the one they was dependent on, failing to do his full duty in providing for such a contingency.

Yours in P. F.

"VERITAS."

LOGANSPORT, Ind., Jan 25, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: I take pleasure in informing the Order generally, through the columns of the CONDUCTOR, that Logan Division No. 110 has two correspondents this year instead of one, as heretofore. This state of affairs was brought about particularly on account of your humble servant, who, I must acknowledge, was clamorous for office, and to be plain, I did make a brilliant fight for out side sentinelship, but got in the soup. So to keep things harmonious in the division, they created the place for me which I now with dignity hold. Bro. Finrock, my colleague, pulls his end of the rope at Richmond, where he had it stretched to suit his convenience and the vigorous jerks he gives it at times, when writing in his usual earnest and logical way, proves that one of 110's correspondents at least, believes in earning his salary. Our worthy chief, Bro. F. F. Barnett, was elected by acclamation, to succeed himself in the chair which he has held for the past five years; also our worthy secretary was re-elected. Those two are really the most important officers, and it is with pleasure and satisfaction all around that the result of the, balloting left them where it found them, and we all join in saying God bless old Commodore and save a little for Bluebeard (Alexander.)

At this writing about two hundred and fifty (250) of our Pan Handle employes are down with the La Grippe, about two thirds of this number are train men and I might add that I had a chunk of the aforesaid.

Passenger business with us is rather quiet at present, while the great volume of freight going over our lines, taxes our transportation facilities to its uttermost; taking everything into consideration we can not complain, and those that will murmur in the face of all the good things they fall heir to, we send them to our gray haired chief who tells them to look at things philosophically and be glad they are no worse.

Yours in P. F.,
L. M. D.

GALESBURG, Ill., Jan. 25, 1890.

DEAR EDITOR: Will try and acquaint you with all I know about the Q. We are all a suffering community with the "Grippe." Train master Kimber says, 40 men, brakemen and freight conductors are down, and he finds it difficult to make up trains, for lack of crews.

Bro. Cal. Dickerson is very sick at Quincy, Bro. Tom. Moline went there to take care of him. Bro. M. H. Mount has been very sick, but is better and will soon take his run. Others, too numerous to mention, are in the same boat.

Our latest news from headquarters is the resignation of our old friend and benefactor, F. H. Hilton, from division superintendency. The boys all feel bad, as Hilton was one much loved and respected by all railroad men.

Supt. Herr, of St. Louis division, will take Galesburg division, and Mr. Throup goes to St. Louis division. He was late road master of the Chicago division, and his vacancy will be filled by Mr. Fred Allen, of Galesburg division, civil engineer of the Q.

Our late Bro Kimball, is said to be a passenger conductor on the U. P. Good for him. He is a good one, good enough for any of them.

Bro. J. M. Peck is drilling the men on the book of rules. J. M. is "up to snuff" and what he can't make, the boys understand there would be no use of any other conductor trying.

The road is in very good operation, and everything is running smooth.

One thing more. If a brother, when reading this, should know of the whereabouts of Bro. Boynton, and would be kind enough to notify Division 83, he would confer a great kindness on me. Bro. B., was last heard from on the West Shore line.

Yours in P. F.,
Bro. J. K. HOWLAND,
Division 83.

There is a model and novel railroad in Pennsylvania near the Cornwall ore hills, called the Mt. Gretna Narrow Gauge.

Starting at the entrance to Mt. Gretna Park, a noted resort for picnic parties and encampments of the National Guards of Pennsylvania, and running four miles to Governor Dick, a station of the United States coast and Geodetic Survey and the highest point of the South mountain.

The average grade is 233 feet to the mile and the heaviest grade is 265 feet. Gauge of road twenty-four inches.

The locomotives are the American pattern of passenger engines and are as complete and handsome as the best "standard." The cars are of the observation style and seat fifty-two people.

The road opened on the 23d of June, 1889, and closed for the season on Oct. 31st. Over 20,000 passengers made the round trip between the two dates above mentioned, and about 600 more were carried on the Rifle Range Branch during the week in September that the rifle teams of the National Guard practiced.

During the coming season, the whole of the National Guard, of Pennsylvania, about 8,000 strong, and about 1,500 regular troops will encamp at Mt. Gretna, at the same time, and then, the sturdy little two footer will make a showing that plenty of "Standards" would be proud of. R.

BROTHER EDITOR: After quite a long vacation Champion Division 227, has gathered around the standard once more, and on Sunday, Jan. 19th, we had a good meeting and started the year 1890, with renewed hope and determination. Bro. E. Clark visited us a few weeks since and at an informal meeting gave us many words of kind encouragement, and we believe today that the future of Division 227 is all O. K. The brothers of Division 227 are scattered far and wide, yet we are proud of this fact, that with very few exceptions they have been true to us in every hour of need, and often during the year passed have expressed their loyalty in a manner that admitted of no doubting. We have lost two of our most worthy brothers, G. E. Ford and F. Friberger, who have taken cards to join at Ellensburg, W. T., and Horton, Kan., our best wishes go with them to their new home. They are worthy a place anywhere in the ranks of our army.

We have had several accessions by transfer of late and welcome to our division Bro. Ward, from Des Moines; Bro. Weisman, from Omaha, and Bro. Bennington, from Wymore. We were more than willing to extend to these brothers the right hand of fellowship, because just now we need them in our business. The door of 227 is still open for more of our brothers away from home and in need of a mother's watchful care. Hand in your cards, brothers, while the spirit of adoption is upon us.

We wish we could say today, that prosperity and happiness attends many brothers of Division 227, but memory takes us to the home of our aged Brother D. Williams, of Nebraska City, who has been confined to his house for the past year by the loss of a part of his foot. Bro. Williams had no insurance and this long siege of time lost, and additional expenses make him an object of our especial care just now. Bro. Williams' case is an argument in favor of insurance, that we wish could be impressed upon the mind of every man who follows the calling of a conductor. We are circulating a paper for Bro. W., and hope to be able to lift a share of the burden he is called upon to carry just now.

We have put the reins of government for the year in good hands, as the following will show: C. C., T. J. Lyon; A. C., C. S. Raney; S. & T., O. S. Ward; S. C. Hardey, J. C., A. K. Waldron; J. S., A. K. Day; D. O. Shea, Delegate; E. Whyman, Alternate, with J. T. Wereman, executive committee for three years. And so once more we are headed for the front and look out for us.

And now Bro. Belknap, if your good judgment does not consign this to the waste basket, I'll set 'em up next time we meet.

Yours forever in P. F.,

L. 227.

MARTINSBURG, January 24, 1890.

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR: For the first time since our organization I have the pleasure to communicate relative to the business on the B & O. It is simply immense. They do not have sufficient rolling stock to move their traffic or freight. Their yards are full east of the Ohio River, especially in Grafton, Keyser, Cumberlred and Martinsburg. Their greatest effort is made on Sunday. More trains are moved on the Lord's day than any other day in the week. They either borrow or contract with the West Virginia Central, G. & C. C. and C. P. on Sunday for their engines, as these small roads do not work on Sunday and what a blessing that is. It is with sorrow I have to send to you the intelligence of Bro. S. Rockwell's sudden demise. It should have been sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR a month ago. It was a misunderstanding between myself and the Secretary. I now send you the resolutions of respect for publication. I desire it to appear in the first journal in February. I remain

Yours, in P. F.,

WM. W. DARBY.

BINGHAMTON, January 27, 1890.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR: Permit me through the columns of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR to inform the brothers of the O. R. C. that I have associated myself with Mr. N. Schubmehl, of Binghamton, manufacturer of the C. B. & I. F. cigar and am hustling and doing all I can to introduce and place on sale this famous brand of cigars.

And as all brothers who read the CONDUCTOR are aware that the Benefit Department of our Order receives $1.00 per thousand for every thousand sold I trust that all brothers will do what they can to further the sale of this cigar.

And, brothers, I am convinced that with your co-operation and with diligence and hard work on my part a nice revenue will be created for the benefit of our noble Order.

Yours in P. F.,

GEORGE VINCENT,

Thomas Dickson Division, No. 171.

JACKSON, Michigan.

Editor Railway Conductor.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of Wolverine Division, No. 182, Monday, December 6, the undersigned were appointed Division correspondents by acting Chief Conductor C. Cooper. We have had considerable experience in the correspondence business, being regular contributors to "Our Train-Master" and "Lost Freight Agent" with an occasional paper to "Our Superintendent."

Wolverine Division is in fair condition, the only fault being that the boys do not attend meetings as regularly as they should, there being only about twenty present at the last meeting, when there should have been forty. Brothers Lockwood and Slayton were given the new work in an able manner by the new officers, and Conductor Dave Sweeney was given the work of the first degree and the Division closed until the next regular meeting.

Bro. Campbell is taking a vacation from punching tickets on the Sagnaw limited.

Bro. C. S. Loomis is laid up with the "Grippe," as also is Bro. Harris.

Bro. Dave Danaher is on the Santa Fe.

Bro. H. L. Emans is running freight on the Wisconsin Central.

Bro. Stephens has got a dose of the La Grippe.

Bro. Charles McClary was in town a few days this week. Charley is just as fat and jolly as ever and relishes a visit with the boys just the same.

Brother Dan Campbell has returned and gone on his run.

D. H. Hurst, for some time assistant train-master of the Saginaw and Mackinaw Divisions, has been appointed train-master of the same, thereby relieving Assistant Superintendent W. J. Martin of a part of his duties.

A new passenger house is going to be built at Chesaning, and it is a nice one, too.

The following statement of Wolverine Division, No. 182 shows it to be in a healthy condition, but does not show the improvement it would if all the brothers would take a little more interest and bring in new members. There is plenty of material if you would only use it.

At another time I shall say something of the M. B. Department.

One item here every member of this Division should be ashamed of. I know I am and shall try my best to mend it. Average attendance at meetings 11, only 1 in 6. Certainly this can be raised and your attention being called to it is all that is necessary, I know. If you are going out or have just come in, call at the Division and stay a few minutes. You then know what is being done and can understand what is being done.

W. A. S.

Statement omitted.—Ed.

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 24, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I see so many names of the old Grand Division of 1880 and St. Louis that the ordinary desire to shake that has possessed me for ten years has culminated in this infliction upon your time, etc., and I want to pat myself on the back a little for being one of that body who first elected C. S. Wheaton, our present Grand Chief and re-elected W. P. Daniels as Secretary and Treasurer. Also congratulate the Order and succeeding Grand Divisions upon the wise course of having retained them.

I wonder if the boys have forgotten our trip to Texas and return. How, after completing the actual business of the G. D. and discussing the excursion some one offered a resolution prohibiting the carrying of any intoxicants on the train, and which was unanimously carried. (Good place to stop.) How Morford Ferris demanded his immediate attention. Prof. Wilson had to return to duty. Sadd. looked so. Southwick forgot to pay me that 25 cents, or contracted the debt—was a little rattled myself. No excursion before or since came so near falling through. I think Ex-Grand Chief Morford hinted that his wife was a steady drinker or carried the bottle for one and that it would be unsafe to make a change of climate with her, etc., etc. The fact soon developed that all the ladies were to a man steady drinkers. The resolutions was amended to the effect that stimulants might be carried for medicinal purposes. Things looked better and we started. Right here is where Russia is knocked out and right there is where the epidemic "La Grippe" started. Every Con. in that train had it, and every it had its remedy in it. How, during the first day the ladies, headed by Mrs. Pop. Wilson came for, won and collared the most modest and retiring Cons. (No occasion for laughing on the back seats. That was ten years ago) and took them back to get acquainted. I was not collared, but have cultivated modesty from that day. Our flying trip to Hot Springs, on which by the way, our only casualty occurred. Some broad-gauge man struck the narrow-gauge for the first time, have forgotten the name, but he was tried, convicted and sentenced then and there, and penalty paid, and we smoked. Our dedication services in No. 59's hall, the delightful hop at Texarkana, under the then new electric light, that was out often enough to make the husbands cuss, which did not count for much, and right here is the first and only time I ceased to regret the absence of my wife during the trip. The Gulf, San Antonio Division and good-byes, well boys I have never ceased to be proud of having belonged for one short week to one of the largest and happiest families in existence.

I have made three trips north and east, over to New York and back through Canada, Chicago and St. Louis, but met none of that family but Uncle Pop Wilson. He was busy and I was sleepy, and I find it is against human nature to love any man's wife dearly and dote on him at the same time, so I retired with a God-bless-him and his kind hearted lady, to find myself off of his division and in America once more. Shake.

Yours in P. F.,

W. C. MORRILL,

Division No. 53.

P. S.—The man that offered that resolution has never been heard from since and the recollection of that "dull, sickening thud" is associated in my memory with that of a noble duty, well and faithfully performed. M.

SEDALIA, Mo., Jan. 24th, 1890.

Editor Railway-Conductor.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Queen City Division No. 6, will give the first ball since its organization on Feb. 21st, 1890, eve of Washington's birthday, Sicher's park, this city. Will also hold a union meeting on the 22d and 23rd of same month. This is the first union meeting our Division has attempted to hold. We are centrally located, surrounded by many Divisions of the Order, and a large attendance is assured. The 22d annual session of the Grand Division is near at hand; live issues of vital importance to the conductor of to-day will be presented and discussed at this union meeting. Much has already been done for the conductor's of the Order; there yet remains much more to be done. We are becoming sluggish and inactive in the work. The day has come when every conductor of the Order must be up and doing, if we would make the Order what it should be—a protection and benefit to its members—the more union meetings we hold the better qualified and prepared are our delegates to legislate for us at our grand conventions. Let us meet together and discuss our needs, exchange opinions, and thereby devise some plan, or course of action that will result in a benefit to us as individuals and as an Order. Our Grand officers will be present at this union meeting, and a pressing invitation is extended to every member of the Order to attend. Come on the 21st in time for the ball. We will give you a hearty welcome, and a royal entertainment. Bring your wife (you who are fortunate in having one) and we will guarantee you a joyful time.

Yours in P. F.,

QUEEN CITY DIV. No. 60.

The Sunday Question.

We notice a disposition in some localities to seek relief from Sunday labor through the aid of legislation.

This we believe to be an unwise movement, and will result in no benefit to the employee, not that we think legislation will be difficult to procure, on the contrary the railway is a favorite topic with the average jurist, but when he is allowed to prescribe the duties of manager or operative, a very "pretty mess" he usually makes of it.

The experience of railway employes with legislation, has never been satisfactory, and until more practical railroad men are found among our law makers, that experience must continue to be unsatisfactory.

We believe that much better results will be obtained through a co-operation of officers and men than will ever be the case with legislation.

That Sunday labor can be curtailed to any great extent is an impossibility, when the demand is constantly increasing, as seems to be the case at present. For though ministers may preach, and editors write in opposition to the subject, the fact remains, that the people at large are constantly calling for more, and more accommodations on the Sabbath, and the granting of these, means an increase of labor.

Instances are not rare, where a newspaper has, in its Saturday edition, assailed the management of a railway for its ungodliness, in compelling its employes to work on Sunday, and in its Monday issue, has accused the same management of being unfit for its position, in that it failed to provide enough accommodation for the Sunday traffic.

Ministers have been known to exchange pulpits, and to save hotel bills, have remained at home until Sunday morn, and taking a convenient train ride twenty or thirty miles, to deliver a thrilling appeal for the better observance of the Lord's day, returning home (via. the railway) the same evening, and while these lines are being penned, the telegraph informs us that the ministers of Milwaukee have, on this Sabbath evening, each of them, a public hack at their service, that they may more effectually denounce Sabbath desecration.

It is a well-known fact, that Sunday has for some time past, been the day of heavy traffic on all the lines of transportation, in and around the city of New York, and that traffic is constantly increasing.

We are informed that this is the case throughout the country, but we speak particularly of New York, because more advisedly, and because we believe, that in this, as in all lines of business, New York sets the pace which all others aim to follow.

Sunday in New York is the day of extra trains on the elevated railroad; the day of crowded horse-cars and stages; the day of enormous crowds, "via," all rail and boat lines which lead to any of the popular resorts.

It is a significant fact, that when a certain transportation line in New York city, was purchased by a wealthy resident of the city, for the sole and only purpose of stopping Sunday traffic on that line, it became the victim of a boycott, so relentlessly enforced, that it showed a large deficit in revenue for the first six months, followed by a still larger deficit in the next six months, and it is now proposed to curtail the privileges of the line by legislation, unless the owner shall agree to restore the Sunday traffic.

Merchants and business men, (many of them prominent in the church, and themselves strict observers of the Sabbath,) demanded for their merchandize a more speedy transportation than was accorded passengers, but a few years since, and they promptly withdraw their patronage from those lines which refuse to grant it.

In view of these facts, which prove conclusively, that a large majority of the public demand more, rather than less accommodation on the Sabbath, Any attempt to curtail those accommodations by legislation, must result in a compromise, in which politicians will attempt to please all parties, and as usual will satisfy no one, but will succeed in embarrassing the railway managers, and as experience has proved, will add to rather than diminish the labor of the employee.

The men on a certain line running out of the city of New York, some time ago recognized the necessity for Sunday labor, and casting about for some relief, consulted with their officials and succeeded in formulating a plan, which after two years trial, gives as satisfactory results to both officers and men, as it seems possible to arrange, so long as Sunday labor must be done.

A sufficient number of extra men are employed to give every man who works on Sunday, one day in each week, the extra men themselves working but six days a week.

As each man receives the same day off each week, the extra men have their regular week's work, and in this way more men are provided with employment than would otherwise be the case.

The oldest men in the service are the ones exempted from all Sunday work, taking that consideration as one of the perquisites belonging to long and faithful service. This, we believe, is the best arrangement that can be made, and results more satisfactory to all concerned, than can ever be the case with legislation.

This arrangement, we believe, can be made with any management if approached in a proper manner and the matter fully explained.

Yours truly in P. F.,

A. S. OSTRANDER.

"California on Wheels."

SEDALIA, Jan. 27, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: Our first letter ended with our departure from Houston, for New Orleans, stopping en route at Orange, Lafayette and New Iberia, thence through to the Crescent City. We were again fortunate to have some of the O. R. C. boys call for our transportations and I can assure you it took only a few moments for us to find out whether they belonged to the Order or not, in fact we believe we can tell by the looks of a conductor, whether he is one of our kind or not. May that be as it will, we found all of them kind and accommodating.

Being under the care of F. Farnsworth, of Houston, Division No. 7, into New Orleans, we found him a most agreeable and courteous gentleman. We were next taken in charge by Conductor Jackson on the T. & P. Railway, from New Orleans to Boyce and from there to Shreveport under the genial W. D. Derby of Division No. 57.

While at Marshall we had the pleasure of meeting Brothers C. Sheftall, Division No. 57; J. A. Starling, Division No. 59, and C. F. Goodudge, Division No. 89. All these gentlemen looked so cheerful that I was at a loss at first to understand the real cause, but shortly discovered that they all had cards from their division in their pocket for the new year. So, brethren, pay up your dues, get your cards and look happy. I have made up my mind to do it; for I feel real cheap when the boys show their cards and all I can do is to display one for 1889, but I can promise you I will be loaded for bear after this, at least, as soon as Sec. J. E. Dillon can send me one for this year, then I give you all fair warning, the man I meet, that has not one, will be made to feel, as I do now. Well, I have entirely gotten off my subject so will return: From Texarkana to Little Rock we were in charge of C. C. Gass, Division No. 131, where we also met one of our old friends, W. T. Kelly, who used to run trains opposite me on the U. P. Railway, in early days, but who now fills the position of division superintendent of the St. L. I. M. & S. Railway, and all the boys sing his praise as being one of the best, again proving my theory that none but old conductors will make good superintendents. Also met a number of the O. R. C. boys at Memphis, but cannot find their cards, having mislaid them.

We were taken into St. Louis by Bro. J. H. Daté, of Division No. 31, and a host of the O. R. C. brothers called on us while in St. Louis. But at no place on our journey have we had such a pleasant surprise as was given, at this place yesterday afternoon; was sitting at my desk in the car, thinking we were strangers in a strange country, when a rap came at the car door and in walked a fine looking gentleman who introduced himself as belonging to Division No. 60, of this place, Bro. J. H. Doyle. He informed me, that a brother was waiting on the outside to see me, but imagine my surprise, when stepping out on the platform, there at the end of the car were eighteen brothers, waiting to welcome us, involuntary the expression rose to my lips, as stepping from the platform and grasping the hand of each of these knights of the punch and lantern, God bless the Order of Railway Conductors, and may every member of it enjoy the peace, comfort and happiness they so richly deserve. We immediately adjourned to the Exhibit car San Antonio, and held an informal meeting, in which I fear, I did the most talking, but know you will forgive me when you stop to think that I was away from home and was very much pleased to meet those who came, proving the principles of our Order. I say with all fervor, God bless the boys of Division No. 60, and may their welcome be as cordial to all strangers as to me.

Brothers, to our city of the Golden West, (El Capitan Division No. 115,) we bid you a hearty welcome and hope it will be our good fortune to, some day make you all feel as happy as you did your humble servant on Sunday last.

Having already taken up too much of your valuable time, will now say good bye.

Will drop you a line, if you desire to hear from us while on this ramble.

"WANDERER."

"Drop"—Ed.

CONNEAUT, Ohio.

TO THE EDITOR: Nickel Plate Division, No. 145, Conneaut, Ohio, will hold its sixth annual reception at Lincoln Opera House on the eve of February 21, 1890.

The division extends a cordial invitation to all brothers. Would be pleased to make this a grand reunion as well as a ball. To the brothers afar who might chance to be near by just give us a call and enjoy yourself by skipping the light fantastic toe. To the brothers of divisions near by, please lend us your presence to make this a reunion as well as a ball, and we will guarantee to all our brothers that on this eve we will be wide-awake and will not be caught napping on duty.

Remain yours, in P. F.,

NICKEL PLATE DIVISION, No. 145,
Conneaut, Ohio.

AURORA, Ill., December, 26, 1889.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR: As I mentioned in my last letter my orders were "imperative" in regard to "writing something" and as you were good enough to make place for my first article in the CONDUCTOR I will in this letter endeavor to give the names and runs of the conductors in the passenger service of the C., B. & Q. R. R. running out of Chicago.

I will however first say that all passenger conductors out of Chicago are under the immediate supervision of Mr. L. D. Howland, Assist. Superintendent, himself an old conductor of many years standing, who yet looks back with pride on his long and honorable record, and has always a good word for any deserving one. With an acquaintance extending from old Vermont to the Pacific Slope, ably assisted by Mr. J. H. Putney, who, although young in years, is fast climbing to the top of the ladder. Of these two gentlemen I make this brief mention wishing that all conductors had the pleasure of working under as pleasant, agreeable officers.

On 7 and 8, the fast mail, we find Bros. Poole and Cone of 96, and Brother Frank O'Neil of 83, who has the misfortune of looking like some one else. On 13 and 14, Bro. Frank Murray of 96 and Scott Dewey, an old timer, whose hair has grown gray in the service of the "Q". On 5 and 6 Bros. Tom Hartman of 96, and J. A. Ripley and Uncle Henry Powell, all three pleasant, painstaking gentlemen. On 15 and 16, the K. C. Eli, Bro. C. F. Johnson, of 83 and Neal Ruggles, who most every body knows. For years he has held down his end of the train, always the same, rain or shine, one whom 'tis a pleasure to meet and a sorrow to part with. On 3 and 4 we find Bros. F. H. Reese and E. H. DeGroot, of No. 96, and Conductor J. H. Collivar; on 1 and 2, the Denver Express, are Bro. Weirs, of No. 31 and Al. Taylor and Frank Hughes, who is always ready with advice to younger conductors and likes nothing better than to sit down and tell how we used to handle things when I run the way freight on the Quincy branch; and lastly, on 9 and 10, Conductor O. S. Williams who holds down, and still keeps the run as popular as in Billy's time.

On the Aurora runs are Brothers P. B. Crance, Tim Chase, J. T. Downey, C. D. Rosetter, all of No. 96, and Conductor C. F. Babcock; on the short, Downer's, Grove and Clyde runs, Bros. Frank Kieser and Jack Hawks, of No. 96, and Conductors J. Rutherford, Cal. Rhea, Harry Thurston and Chas. Walters; on the C., B. & N. runs are Bro. Tom Flynn, C. C. of No. 96, Bro. J. W. Meek and George Wheeler, of No. 96 and Conductor Sam Killum.

Thirty-seven miles west from Chicago we strike Aurora where several branch lines diverge from the "Q," and on the F. R. line, Aurora to Streator, sixty miles, Bro. Bob Childers, of No. 96, on the night run, who with his able side partner, Conductor Wm. Richards, assist in making a ride over the branch one of pleasure and enjoyment. Running in connection with these runs out of Streator over the "scenic route," the I. & N., is Bro. Ben Reynolds, No. 96.

On the C. & I. between Aurora and Rockford, Forrester and Dubuque, are Bros. Nig. Ward, Wm. Clancy and Dave Kelley, of No. 96, acting in concert, with Conductor Sam Dean, and on the Clinton branch, Mendota to Clinton and Fulton and Rock Island, the old reliable stand-by, Bro. Jack Dano, with his accomplished assistant, Bro. Wm. Tobin, both of No. 96, faithfully hold the fort there, are all the conductors in the passenger service of the "Q" out of Chicago, and this Division on regular runs. On the extra list are Bros. H. A. Mahone, C. D. Judd, A. A. C., J. F. Trahey, S. C. of No. 96, and Conductor Tom Hillman.

I cannot close this letter without mention of Bro. B. F. Boynton of the Rock Falls branch. Doc. stands to-day the oldest conductor in the employ of the "Q;" the records in the Superintendent's office at Aurora shows him commencing service in 1852. How many can beat this?

With the annual report of the Secretary of Division No. 96 I close this letter, and some time will give you the names of the conductors in the freight service of the Q. Yours, 96.

To Officers and Brothers of Belknap Division, Number 96:

I herewith submit for your approval my first annual report of the finances, and of work performed by this division for the year 1889. Although the year has been very prosperous in many ways, yet there were times when it was impossible to meet our obligations, as our expenses far exceeded our income and our surplus funds were not available. During the year we have added seven new members to our rolls, six by initiation and one by card, and rejected two petitions, and have transferred three brothers to other divisions and one brother has withdrawn from the Order, and I am sorrow to say that we have suspended two brothers for non-payment of dues, and expelled one for violation of obligation, leaving sixty-four members in good standing. We have had but two visitors during the year and an average attendance of seventeen, which is not a very good showing for a division of sixty-four members. I take pleasure in calling your attention to the record made by some of your officers. Your C. C. has attended every meeting during the year; S. & T. eighteen; J. C., eighteen; I. S., nineteen; O. S., eighteen, and your A. A. C. and S. C. have attended but two, as it was impossible for them to attend owing to their removal from this city.

It has been my sad duty to record the death of our late Bro. F. E. Rand, who in life proved himself worthy of the love and esteem of all Bro. Rand was insured in the Benefit Department of the Order and I think it would be well if more of the brothers would follow his example in this respect, and right here let me ask some of the brothers that are insured if it cost any more to pay your assessments when received than it does when the time has about expired. As we are liable to meet death without a moment's warning, did you ever stop to consider the position that such an event would place your family in, by thus letting your assessments run. Four brothers have forfeited their insurance this year, and I would like to ask the brothers if they are doing justice to their families or themselves in forfeiting their insurance because they have had bad luck, when by letting the division know their circumstances their assessments could be kept up until such times as they were enabled to do so themselves and not let a little false pride stand in their way. Some of the brothers may think that I am putting it pretty strong, but I for one do not think so. If more of the brothers, not of this division alone, but of all other divisions throughout the country would consider this matter more seriously there would be fewer appeals for assistance, and less suffering on the part of helpless women and children. During the year we have had twenty appeals for assistance, which I am sorry to say, owing to our financial condition we have been unable to answer but two. This, alone, speaks volumes for the necessity of the brothers being prepared for a rainy day, which is liable to befall any brother. Since becoming your Secretary and Treasurer I have handled of your money as follows:

Jan. 1, 1889, cash on hand, $868.71; Dec. 15, 1889, dues and fees, $313.15; rent for hall, $50; division cards, $16; widows' and orphans' box, $8; borrowed for six months, $50; interest on money, $62.73. Total, $1368.59.

Dec. 15, 1889, Grand Division dues 1888 and supplies 1889, $109.10; rent of hall and gas, $161.73; janitor's fees, $38; fees and dues returned, $17.50; sick benefits, $255; appeals for aid, $8; delegate's expenses, $85.50; miscellaneous expenses, $56.61; floral design, $71.50; note and interest paid Dec. 2d, $54.10; money loaned for six months, $50; Cash on hand, $462.05. Total, $1368.59.

During the year I have tried faithfully to fulfill the duties of my office. If I have been in error, it was of the head, and not the heart. With many thanks to the officers and brothers for their kind assistance, and the prompt manner in which you have paid your dues, thereby saving your secretary an unnecessary amount of trouble, and hoping that the ensuing year will be a pleasant and profitable one to all, I remain

Yours in P. F.,

W. E. LINDSAY, Sec.

CONDUCTORS' RECEPTION ON THE COAST.

Some time has elapsed since the meeting of the "Old Reliable" Conductors' 22d Annual Convention, which met in San Francisco, October 22nd, 1889. Yet we believe it will be of much interest to the railroad employes to know how royally their co-workers were received by the railroad companies, their employes and the citizens of the Pacific States. Our party, numbering one hundred and seventy-five conductors and wives, left St. Louis on the 15th, by special train, composed of eight Pullman, one coach and one baggage car. They were presented with an unique time card with compliments of the Missouri Pacific Railway, who gave free transportation over their line. At Jefferson City, Mo., a stop was made for dinner, where the entire party were presented with bouquets of fresh cut flowers and other souvenirs by the employes of the Missouri Pacific. At Kansas City, Missouri, we were tendered a magnificent banquet on the evening of the 15th. We breakfasted at the Millard in Omaha, on the 16th, and had a few hours to look about the city. The entire party were given free transportation over the Union Pacific to Ogden via Salt Lake City. The ride to Grand Island was over one stretch of undulating prairie, covered with luxuriant corn fields and fine stock farms. At Grand Island we took a halt of thirty minutes, for dinner. At 8 o'clock we arrived at North Platte, a town of about six thousand inhabitants, situated in the Platte valley. Here we stopped long enough for supper, and were sorry we could not prevail on the conductor to halt long enough for us to call on Buffalo Bill, whose ranch is only three-quarters of a mile distant. When he assured us the honorable gentleman was across the water, we desisted. At daylight on the morning of the 17th we reached Sherman, 8,274 feet above sea level, the highest point reached on the trans-continental line between the Missouri river and the Pacific ocean. Here is located the Ames monument, a pyramidal granite structure sixty-five feet high, with a base of sixty feet square, which was erected by the Union Pacific company to the memory of the Ames brothers, to whom the completion of the Union Pacific is largely due. Near by is Hippopotamous Rock, one of the points of interest in this vicinity. Just beyond Sherman we came to Dale creek bridge, one of the most remarkable sights of the overland trip. It is an iron structure, and stretches from bluff to bluff, with a 650-foot span. The train passes over it 127 feet above the creek, which looks like a little brook below. We reached Laramie for breakfast, a town of about six thousand inhabitants, situated 7,149 feet above the sea level. From the car platform we had a good view of the United States penitentiary, located here; also, of the territorial fish hatchery, at Soldier Springs. This has a capacity of hatching half a million trout at a time. We reached Rawlins for dinner, a place of perhaps five thousand inhabitants, situated on a wild, barren region, abounding in sage brush. At 5 p. m. we reached the busy, stirring, bustling mining town of Rock Springs, whose population numbers not less than five thousand. On the morning of the 18th we awoke in Salt Lake City, having made the trip in the night, part of the time flying over the road at the rapid rate of seventy miles in seventy-four minutes. We decided to walk up town to breakfast, but found that a walk of five blocks in Salt Lake City means more than in an ordinary city. The streets are 132 feet from court to court, and laid out in uniform style in blocks of ten acres each. After breakfast we were shown over the city, under the guidance of a Mormon, who first drove us to Temple Square, where the great temple is building. It is constructed of granite, brought twenty miles, from the Wahsatch mountains. It has been thirty-one years building, and will take six years yet to complete. When finished it will be one of the finest churches in the world. It is not intended for preaching services, as is generally supposed, but is intended for holy rites, such as baptisms, marriages, endowments, funerals, etc. In the same square stands the Tabernacle, the old Mormon place of worship. It is an oblong-oval, and called the house of many doors, having nineteen outside exits. Its seating capacity is 12,000. Its roof, with one exception, is the greatest self-supporting roof in the world. It ranks third as the greatest whispering gallery in the world.

The Assembly Hall is near by, and is also built of granite. Its seating capacity is 2,500.

From here we were driven to Brigham Young's grave. He had selected, laid out and fenced the grounds before his death. His will stipulated that his grave should be four feet deep, and unmarked by inscription of any kind; should have a plain iron fence enclosing it, and a plain marble slab lain over the grave.

In the afternoon the Union Pacific put on a special train—the trains having been taken off the week before—to carry the party to Garfield Beach, eighteen miles distant, the only sandy beach on great Salt Lake. Notwithstanding the bath houses were closed, and the water too cold for bathing, we all enjoyed the trip and came away with bottles of water dipped from the dead sea of America.

In the evening we attended the Mormon theater in a body, and found it very much like any other.

On the morning of the 19th we bid adieu to the Jerusalem of the Latter Day Saints, reaching Ogden for breakfast. Ogden is a Mormon city, laid out by Brigham Young after the same style as that of Salt Lake City. It is the terminus of the Union Pacific. The division headquarters of both the Union Pacific and Central Pacific are located here. Its population is about twelve thousand, and it is gaining all the time.

After passing Truckee, thirty-four miles of snow-shed, and more than six miles of tunnel, shut from us the beautiful scenery of the Central Pacific. We had a good view from the car window of Donner Lake, situated on the mountain 6,000 feet above the level of the sea. It is a beautiful fresh water lake, three miles long by a mile and a half wide, with no visible inlet, but supposed to be fed by numberless mountain springs in its bed. It takes its name from the Denver party who in 1848 were making their way to California and winter overtook them here, all but three having perished. Stumps of trees twenty feet high show where they cut wood when the snow was on the ground.

This being Sunday, in the afternoon, we gathered in the car "Junietta," and held Gospel services, conducted by Rev. French, of Cumberland, Md.

We reached San Francisco the morning of the 21st, and took up our quarters at the Palace hotel.

The traveling conductor of the Central Pacific, who had accompanied us from Ogden, and issued passes to the entire party, left us at Oakland. At San Francisco we were received by Mr. Wells, traveling conductor of the Southern Pacific system, who conducted us over the city, showing us all points of interest, among which was a visit to the Cliff House, Sutros Gardens, Ocean Beach, City Park, the famous Diamond Palace, United States mint, Chinatown, etc. We were received by the Board of Trade and shown the products of California, which surpassed anything we had ever seen. Before leaving we were surprised by being invited in another room, where tables were loaded with fruits, nuts and wines of California, where all fared sumptuously.

On the 23d we were notified by the genial Mr. Wells that the Southern Pacific had arranged for us a free excursion south as far as Monterey. Soon after leaving San Francisco the ladies of the party were presented with bushels of flowers cut from the governor's private grounds and sent to the train in baskets. We stopped for dinner at San Jose, at the Hotel Vendome, a magnificent hotel surrounded by beautiful flowers of all kinds, and a great variety of palm, pepper and magnolia trees lining the walks. After dinner, at the expense of the press, we were driven over the beautiful little city, and thence to the depot, where we took the cars for Monterey, reaching the Hotel Del Norte for supper. It is the greatest tourist hotel of the Pacific coast, situated one mile from Monterey. Rightly is it called the Eden spot of America. Flowers! Flowers! Flowers! California seemed to be one vast bed of flowers. Monterey is conceded to be the most delightful resort south of San Francisco, and its natural beauty has been heightened by a great expenditure of money in hotels, parks, drives and baths. On the morning of the 25th we were given a free drive through Pacific Grove, Cypress Point, Moss Beach and Chinese Cove, what is best known as the eighteen miles drive; and little is said when it is asserted that this is the grandest drive on the continent. Pacific Grove sits in the shadows of the countless pines which cover the peninsula; and the hoarse rumbling of the breakers which rush headlong upon the rocks is heard above the gentle wooing of the pines. Beyond this is Moss Beach, where the varied colored pebbles are found. Here, at the end of the peninsula, the restless ocean has an unrestricted swing; and the tall breakers hurl themselves with prodigious force upon the rocks and sands. Now and then clouds of spray are thrown high into the air, and the thundering of the waves adds awe to inspiration.

The morning of the 26th we started for Santa Cruz, where we were received by the Board of Trade, and driven over the beautiful, smiling town of 8,000 inhabitants, thence along a wild and rugged beach for twelve miles, passing the light house, natural bridge, spouting geyser and other points of interest. We were then given a sumptuous repast at the Ocean Villa, Pope House, Sea Beach, Riverside and Wilkins House. Strawberries and raspberries, fresh from the gardens, and bouquets of fresh cut flowers for every guest, graced the tables.

At 1:30 p. m. we took the train for San Francisco, stopping on the way to see the Santa Cruz big trees. It is not justice to say Santa Cruz knows how to entertain, and never does anything by halves. The mayor, Mr. Bowman, accompanied us to the big trees, where we spent a half hour with "The Giant," whose circumference is only fifty-two feet, and "Gen. Fremont," named in honor of the famous general, he having made its trunk his headquarters during the winter of 1846. Forty-three of our party walked in this spacious room at one time, and there was room for more.

The scenery on the Narrow Gauge from Santa Cruz to San Francisco is grand. After leaving the mountains we came into beautiful valleys, abounding in orchards and vineyards.

The 27th we spent in San Francisco, leaving there the next morning for Portland, Oregon, via Mount Shasta route. We breakfasted at Sacramento, and were then shown through the capitol building and grounds.

We followed the Sacramento river for 275 miles, crossing it nineteen times. It is a beautiful mountain stream, and as we near its source, comes rushing madly over rocks, through deep gulches, ravines, making its way to the great waters. We passed through beautiful valleys covered with luxuriant vineyards, pear orchards, and almond groves. At 6 o'clock we came to Vina, where is situated the great winery of Northern California, this vineyard alone containing 3,500 acres. At 10:00 o'clock we arrived at Redding where the party were given a magnificent banquet by the conductors of the Southern Pacific Railroad. About 10:00 a. m. on the 28th, we came in sight of Castle Rock, where the train stopped for us to take a good view of nature's architecture, with its many spires towering far above the main structure. After a short ride we came to Upper Soda Springs. Here the railroad company have built a beautiful fountain and trains are stopped for ten minutes that the passengers may drink of its water. Near by is Mossbrar Falls where numberless springs spout forth from the mountain side and let fall their spray, which comes trickling down over the moss of varied colors, slowly we ascended the mountain, being pulled by two engines, reaching Malt, where we could look hundreds of feet below and see the two tracks over which we had just passed. At Sisson we stopped for dinner, from which point one gets a good view of "old" Mount Shasta, the beautiful snow capped peaks, with his imposing head as the central figure of attraction for miles around.

For miles we traveled through the sublime scenery of the Siskiyou mountains, up whose rugged sides we climbed at a grade of 174 feet to the mile, run at right angles to the Cascade and forms a natural geographical, as well as artificial state line between California and Oregon. We took breakfast at Albany, a town of five thousand inhabitants, and very rapidly growing. An hour's ride brought us to Salem, the capital of Oregon, with a population of 12,000. At Oregon City we had a full view of the Cascades of the Willamette river, and the costly system of locks by means of which the boats of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and other lines reach the fertile Willamette valley. We reached Portland about noon in a drenching rain. Mr. Wells bade us good bye, having been our companion and guide, all over the Southern Pacific road traveled. Never were people more royally received than were the "Old Reliable" by the Southern Pacific Company, its employes and the citizens of the Pacific states. The following morning we left Portland via Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, accompanied by their traveling conductor, who also issued us passes on the train. All day we passed through scenery of perfect grandeur. Twenty-seven miles from Portland on the south bank of the Columbia river, stands two conical, picturesque basaltic rocks, called the Pillars of Hercules, and are sometimes called the "Gateway of Wonderland." One of the grand sights that met our gaze was the Oneonta Gorge of the Columbia, but the exclamations of delight and wonder when we came in full view of the Multnomah Falls, situated a few miles below the Cascades. The water falls in a long graceful sweep nearly to the bottom. A shelving rock intervenes, upon which the water strikes, and runs out to its edge and then takes another plunge. The total distance of this fall is 824 feet. Rooster Rock can be seen from the train. This basaltic structure rises abruptly from the water on the south bank of the Columbia. For miles along this beautiful river we passed immense salmon canneries, fish traps and fish wheels.

At Huntington the traveling conductor left us, and we took the Oregon Short Line to Denver, reaching there the 3d of November. From there, we took the Rio Grande to Pueblo where we had supper and thence a direct line via Kansas Pacific to St. Louis, where the party disbursed, all promising to meet in convention next October, at Chattanooga, Tenn., where "Georgia" promises we shall be shown the other half of the world.

Much credit and many thanks are due the Missouri Pacific, Union Pacific, Central Pacific, Oregon Railway & Navigation Company and other lines, for the favors and courtesies extended the conductors and wives of the "Old Reliable."

Right royally were we received everywhere with no accident to mar our trip of over ten thousand miles. We would urge the conductors to join the "Old Reliable" and meet us in convention next October.

MOORMAN.

A Year's Record.

The appearance of the new year is calculated to inspire serious thought and cause us to form new resolutions. We cannot see the machinery that causes the wheels of the universe to revolve, but we can see the hand of time, recording the years of our allotted number, faster than we wish. It would be well to take a retrospective view of the past year of our life, and see if the evil would outnumber our good deeds. How many unkind words would we recall, and sinful thoughts erase if we could. God has provided us with inexhaustible sources of happiness, and with his presence and promise we can bear up under anything, and should pass on, and never falter or fear; he intended us to enjoy the blessings which he has provided, and not go through life wearing funeral-faces, but show in our work that we can be happy and be dutiful, use this life as a means of attaining another and a higher one. The fact is, life is undervalued by a great majority; is not made half so much of as should be. Many pass through it without even a consciousness of their surroundings or what they are doing, not realizing that every act is recorded by the registrar of the mind, memory. How many dark blots in this page? How many times we have yielded to temptation instead of overcoming it. Life is short and full of responsibilities. Approach the old man on whose brow the glistening snows of almost a century have accumulated and whose form begins to bow beneath the weight of time, and say, "Father, tell me of the many achievements or the light thy life has shed upon the world." The aged sire will shake his drooping head and reply, "Life is too short to achieve much, I haven't had time to benefit my kind. I have just left my cradle, and now I must die." The morning and evening of life are almost blended. A narrow strip of time is all that divides infancy from gray hairs and eternity. The leaves upon the trees lose their freshness and yellow with age fall to the earth to be trampled upon. The rosebush, too, is striped of its adornments, and stands naked amidst the scattered leaves of the fragrant glory which it brought forth. Life has its winter and the man has reached it. The brief year has passed, bringing him to the verge of the grave with but few accomplishments. Failures are many and successes few; to some, God in his providence has seen fit to give full measure of human prosperity and happiness. Let us rejoice in the enjoyment of these blessings and take all the rational happiness Heaven designs for our good; but let us hold our theme sacred to prayer, and worship as a precious link to purity and God. Every heart knows its secret sorrows, and every hearthstone beholds its vacant chair. Sorrows are life's shadows and appear when least expected, oftentimes are constant guests; to some they come like meteors, quickly flash and speedily vanish, others count them in single file, as one departs another follows. Smiles conceals many severe ache and sore pangs; pride wears them to cover the heart's deep stab. There is a pleasant side of life, some who are so light-hearted that even amid sighs and tears they are buoyant and elastic—can meet trials and troubles with a brave fortitude and strong courage, encountering them with a natural ease and composed mien. Since our earthly life is so brief, let us strive to make the record of the new year a better one than the past, for at the close of three score years and ten, when we sit down to strike a balance, there is little for the best of us to be proud of.

A CONDUCTOR'S WIFE.

A Glance Backward.

BY LA CROSSE.

An old fashioned spelling school! Did any of you ever attend one? Equal to a modern caucus for creating jealousies and feuds, that many a time, long weeks after, culminated in black eyes, bloody noses and broken heads. Many a time the victory meant not only that the victor was the best speller within a radius of five miles, but meant that he took a "header" on the main line to some country belle's affections; who had been wavering between John and Rob for many a week. But the title of "best speller in the country," turned her decision in favor of the victor.

Hard earned victory, I can assure you, for spelling in those days meant hours of dull, uninteresting study without regard to the meaning of the words. And such good times, if the school house stood near enough to a hill, for the combatants to cool their ire and forget their defeats and mortifications in the soul exhilarating fun of sliding down hill. Such a fluttering of girl's hearts for fear the right one would not ask her to ride on his sled; and throbs of some other-wise stout heart for fear the girl of his choice would prefer some one else to him. Then after a merry half hour, back to spelling and choosing sides; for be it known to the uninitiated, two captains were chosen at the beginning of the evening, and first one and then the other, alternately chose such as they considered the best spellers, until all were chosen, good or poor, and the spelling match goes on until all are spelled down by the lucky one, and then hurrah! boys and girls for a merry sleigh ride home. If you are not tipped into a snow-drift before you arrive there, you are lucky. Gay voices in song and laughter, mingle pleasantly with the tuneful chiming of the bells and crackling 'neath the runners of the crisp ice and snow.

Merry and happy days that never come but once to us, as the years go speeding by; but we never realize it until too late. And are apt to lay too deeply to heart, all of the petty annoyances that cross our path, until youth's sunny days of freedom have passed, and our feet have strayed on until the dawning light of our Father's home, begins to light our pathway and teach us to lift our eyes and feet aside from the stumbling blocks of life's weary ways, and to press onward and upward to a better and fairer world than this.

COLUMBUS, O., New Year's eve.

Knowing that there are some, at least, who watch with interest the 'ladies department', and eagerly devour all it contains regarding the auxiliary to the O. R. C., we are glad to contribute our little mite, on the strength of this fact. There are some things connected with the division here at Columbus that are worthy of note, the first of which is, never before has it breathed so hearty an existence as at the present time. The kindly feeling that exists between each and all of its members, and the social intercourse we all enjoy, is marked indeed. Petitions for membership are coming in right along, three having been presented at our last meeting, also one initiation. This certainly is encouraging, and is proof evident that the brothers are interested in us. At the close of the year we presented our president, Mrs. G. S. Shipley, with a handsome wicker chair, as a token of the esteem in which she is held. Mrs. Shipley is a Christian lady and is deeply interested in the auxiliary, which interest has been strongly manifested during this, our first year. Our object is for the bettering of us all, charitably, morally and socially, and we are glad to acknowledge the work of the past year has liberally rewarded us. In the Dec. 1st, number of THE CONDUCTOR, the question is asked, whether we have traveling cards, pins, grips, and pass word. Well, we have neither cards nor pins, but have a pass word, also a grip, which is a hearty shake of the hand, that will make you feel quite at home and know that you are welcome. Another question I see in the same article is, "What would be the circumstance, should a conductor suddenly make a slight change in his vocation, would it change the good or bad qualities of his wife?" We will answer this question by asking one. "Does it change the good or bad qualities in the conductor?" "Does a change in his business, necessitate his removal from the Order?" I think I hear you say no. Then, as long as he is a member of the O. R. C. his wife is quite welcome to be a member of the auxiliary.

The more we see and know of the Order of Railway Conductors, the more we realize what a grand cause it is and what it has accomplished as an organization.

On Sunday afternoon, Dec. 22d, Hollingsworth Division No. 100, installed their officers, and the brothers kindly invited their wives and families to be present. This invitation was graciously accepted, as was plain to be seen by the goodly number that responded. I dare say there is not a brother in the Order who can fully understand how impressive this service is to us. How beautiful in its teaching, and how truly for the advancement of their own personal welfare in its admonition.

We thank the brothers for these invitations to meet with them occasionally, as it helps to strengthen our interests in their Order, and if we can read human nature, it does them good also. From the spirit that seemed to pervade the entire meeting, no doubt, many was the resolve, to make the future atone for the past, for it is now the time of year when most people indulge in serious reflection and sober thought. Thoughts as to what the past year has been and what the future one has in store for us. What have we sown, something that when we reap it, will bring disappointment and remorse? Or has it been the contrary, from which we will reap joy and happiness and a consciousness of having done some good? The latter, we hope, is the experience of most of us. Yet how often we fall short and our good ideas, and intentions flash into existence and perish ere they are rightly matured. Except we clothe them in their most fitting garments and start them into action impelled with all the force of model example, we cannot expect to reap benefits therefrom. Our hearts are often filled with good intentions, but days glide into weeks and weeks into months, and yet our good resolutions are not carried out, and we see no good resulting from them. Need we take any credit to ourselves, or look for praise from others, or approbation from God for mere intentions by which no one is aided? Let us then be ambitious, for we all have a duty to perform which no one can do for us. Each kindly spoken word and worthy action done, will cause one more star to shine in our immortal crown.

MRS. CHAS. RAGON.

Thinking a short account of the late excursion of the Railway Passenger and Freight Conductors' Mutual Aid and Benefit Association to New Orleans, might be of interest to some of the readers of your valuable publication, or perhaps meet the eye of some one who had the pleasure of participating, and recall pleasant recollections, especially, the party who occupied sleeper "Harpers Ferry." I will try and give a crude account of our outing. Through the courtesy of the I. C. R. R. and the P. P. C. Co., we were furnished with a special consisting of three sleeping cars and a baggage car, and started from Chicago, Saturday evening, November 30, and after a good night's rest found ourselves ready to do justice to an elegant breakfast at Cairo. On our arrival at Milan, Tenn., we caught the first glimpse of what the Sunny South had in store for us. The ladies eagerly took the little sprigs of palm and magnolia leaves, and carefully treasured, as their first souvenir of the South. Arriving at New Orleans early Monday morning, we were driven to the St. Charles hotel, and after breakfast we prepared for sight seeing, not in a body, but individually, as the spirit moved us. Our party went first to the custom house, from there down on the levee, where we saw them testing sugar and molasses by the acre, which was quite a novelty to us Northerners. We then took the ferry across the river to Algiers and visited the jail and third city court. We met Judge Edward J. Bermudez, who related many incidents in connection with the building, which was at one time a planter's home. It was built over eighty-three years ago; the timbers being rough hewn, and are still in a perfect state of preservation. There is a wide gallery that extends entirely around the house; some of the ceilings are of wood and have a very quaint effect. On the ground floor are the cells. There were five prisoners, one of them a boy, who was sentenced to imprisonment for twenty years for misplacing a switch. A severe sentence, one might say, but reflect for a moment how many homes he might have made desolate, how many hearts wretched, by loss of life or limb; can you say it is not just. From there we went to the depot grounds of the S. P. R. R., where we first saw roses in full bloom in the open air. There is here a profusion of beautiful flowers and plants, where we are least accustomed to look for them, around shops, round-house and depot grounds of a railroad company.

Returning to New Orleans, we took the S. P. transfer steamer "Enterprise," one of a fleet which this company keeps in continual use transferring cars and passengers across the river. In due time we reached the hotel, where we found many of the tourists who were as fatigued as we were. Sight-seeing had only commenced, and it would not do to give up easily, so we started out, and our next point was the Spanish fort, which is historical; it was built by the Spanish, and is on lake Ponchartrain. It now used as a summer resort, having a large casino, open air theatre, alligator pools, zoological garden, &c., maintained by the railroad company. There are four white birch trees on the grounds, which were planted over the heads of four Spanish officers, killed in a duel. A short distance from there is a pond or grotto, where coral is growing, and over the rock, ivy with its clinging tendrils added beauty to the scene. We have the warmest thanks in our heart for Bro. Salmon, who did everything possible to make it pleasant and entertaining for us. On our way back, he stopped his train and kindly cut for us some beautiful specimens of palmetto leaves, which grow in great profusion beside the track. In the evening, a number attended the French opera, it being the first appearance in this city of M. Guille, a celebrated tenor, who is to sing with Patti, on her next appearance in New York. Youth, beauty and wealth—Ah! such a display. My descriptive powers fail me when I attempt to depict it; with regret I leave and pass on to the next day. After breakfast a number of the party went out to Carrollton; it contains many fine residences, most all surrounded by gardens filled with flowers and tropical plants. Farther on we came to an embankment, from which we had a fine view of the Mississippi and sugar plantations in the distance. Upon our return we found an excursion had been planned by Brothers Murray and Owens, of Division 108, to visit Chalouette, they having chartered the steamer Ella Andrews for this purpose. We had a delightful ride and found it a very impressive city of the dead. It is a National cemetery, and contains the bodies of about fourteen thousand U. S. soldiers and sailors, and I believe the only cemetery around New Orleans where they bury in the ground. We are particularly impressed with the contrast in the care of the last resting place of our heroic dead, north and south. Here the cemeteries receive the same care and attention that is bestowed on the grounds of the most wealthy or the finest public parks. From here they took us up the river about fifteen miles, affording us a better insight into the amount of commerce carried on this great river than could be obtained in any other manner. The dream of my childhood was realized when I caught a glimpse of a steamer laden with cotton. It recalled memories of "Huckleberry Finn" and "Old times on the Mississippi." It was quite dark when we returned to the city, delighted with our days entertainment. Our good Brothers of 108 were on hand early the following morning with an invitation, to visit a sugar plantation and witness the process of sugar making. Through the courtesy of the officers of the S. P. R. R., we were furnished a special train, which we greatly enjoyed. It was all so new to us, a great many procured samples of the sugar to bring north, no doubt to show their grocers and impress them with its purity. No sand in theirs, after this. It was an interesting sight to see them cutting cane. In the field they employ negroes and in the sugar-house, Italians.

After a ride through the fields, Bro. Neuhauser called "all aboard," and we were soon back to the hotel ready to do justice to our supper, as we had forgone the pleasure of dining for the greater one of visiting a real southern sugar plantation. The indefatigable trio did not fail us the next morning they were on hand with Tally Ho coaches and gave us an opportunity to see many places of interest. Audobon Park which was the site of the World's Exposition. Horticultural Hall is the only remaining building of that vast affair. Upon entering which we were greeted by a beautiful sight. Species of the rarest topical vegetation, one tree alone having been brought here at an expense of forty thousand dollars. After passing through Bros. M. and O. kindly invited us to partake of what they called a southern lemonade, it was refreshing as we can testify to. On our way back we stopped to look at Margaret Statue, dedicated to a noble charitable woman. It recalled to my mind thoughts of home and a dear one who was not unlike her. She has gone beyond; but her many kind deeds still live. The next day we were driven through the French quarter, took a hasty glance through the mint, from there to the Parish prison, where the officials showed our party every attention, even to locking some of us up in a dark cell. We were in there but a few moments, but it seemed an age. From a gallery extending in front of a tier of cells we could look down upon the prisoners walking to and fro, glancing up at us with eyes full of curiosity, evidently envying us our liberty. Our guide told us there were seventeen murderers confined there. Mitairie cemetery was our next point of interest. It is the most beautiful of any in the south. Formally a race course, it was bought by Chas. T. Howard, founder of the Louisiana State Lottery, and turned into a resting place for the dead. We were treated with the utmost courtesy by the superintendent who opened for us the tomb of a celebrated general. Well may the south say:

"No country e'er had a truer son, no cause a nobler champion,
No people a bolder defender, no principle a purer victim,
Than the dead soldier."—Albert Sydney Johnson.

It having been decided to start home Friday evening we all experienced feelings of regret at leaving a place where we had been so hospitably entertained. After entering the train each lady received a most agreeable surprise by being presented with a beautiful bouquet, bearing a card with the following inscription:

With the compliments of Crescent City Division, No. 108,
Order of Railway Conductors,
New Orleans, La.

Brothers, good-bye. Our hearts turn to you in grateful remembrance for your many kind and thoughtful attentions.

We retired early and awoke in Memphis refreshed. We took breakfast at the Grayoso house, celebrated for General Forrest's raid. Some of the party visited the cotton presses. We went to hear Emma Abbott sing in the opera of Romeo and Juliet. Noticing that my better half was getting uneasy fearing we might get left, we returned to the hotel, anxiously looking for a familiar face, but none were to be seen. Hurrying to the depot, to our consternation, we found our train gone. One of the train men helped us out of our dilemma by telling us it had been transferred to the L. & N. depot, and would leave at 5:20. It was now 5 o'clock, so it was necessary to get across the city, over two miles, in twenty minutes. We were fortunate enough to find a carriage, which we engaged and persuaded the driver to "get there," which he did to our great relief. Our appearance was hailed with joy by the rest of the party, that is if one could judge by the exclamations, "Here they come," "here they are," "been visiting a cemetery," etc, etc. Homeward bound. I wonder if we all may meet again. Genial Bro. McDonald, loving, care-taking Finch, studious Bro. Chaplin, and ever generous Cooper, with their lovely wives and children, their faces I carry in my heart a sunny spot that can never be blotted out, is the memory of our trip to the Crescent City.
AUXILIARY 83.

She Had Given Her Mite.

(On the way to Sunday school)—Mamma, you haven't given me my five cents yet to send to the heathen.

"I have just given it to the heathen myself, Tommy. The conductor charged me full fare for you."—Chicago Tribune.

Can any brother give us the address of Brother Wm. Herrick, member of Division 212.

We are pleased to know of the promotion of Brother B. E. McGurk, member of Division 175, Memphis, Tenn., recently appointed trainmaster at Birmingham, Ala., for the Kansas City, Memphis & Birmingham Railroad.

A very modest invitation and programme of the eighth annual reception and ball, of Rochester Division No. 8, at the New Osborn, Jan. 22, 1890, came to us a few days ago. Brothers please accept both our thanks and regrets.

In the issue of Jan. 15th, the notice of the annual ball of Harvey Division No. 95, McCook, Neb., was made to read Feb. 25th. It should have been Feb. 14th. All lovers of this fine art in that section of the country will be governed accordingly.

From a reliable source we learn that Brother George E. Lemon, Jr., member of St. Louis Division No. 3, has been appointed trainmaster of the Gulf, California & Santa Fe company, with headquarters at Temple, Texas. Success to you, say we all.

We learn that Brother Harry McCourt, member of Division 93, Ft. Dodge, Iowa, will, in the near future, take charge of the station business of the Illinois Central, at Cherokee, Iowa. Instead of announcing "All aboard," as before, he will now exclaim, "All on."

By permission we are allowed to give to our readers the excellent address of Mr. W. C. Brown, and we hope that all will read it, for they cannot but be benefitted, and all railway officials who may chance to see the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR will find an hour well spent in perusing this interesting address.

The readers of the CONDUCTOR, as well as the editor, are indebted to Brother Samuel J. Kelly, member of Nicolls Division 239, for the very interesting articles in the three last numbers regarding St. Gotthard mountain and tunnel. They are all worth keeping for reference and information in years to come.

From an article in the Ft. Dodge Chronicle we learn that Conductor J. A. Shipman, member of Sioux City Division, has taken a vacation, and that he, with his wife, will visit Portland, Oregon; also, that the gentleman has, in speculation in Sioux City suburban property, become almost a millionaire. Success to you, Jack.

Monday, Feb. 3, we received the following: "Sixth Annual Concert and Ball of the Providence Division 151, Order of Railway Conductors, Infantry Hall, Thursday Evening, Jan. 30, 1890." On account of the date received, we must say that we hope that Providence, (Rhode Island) favored them with a jolly good time.

We have just received intelligence of the death of the little child of Brother R. B. Stegall, of Chattanooga, which died Jan. 15th. This was the fifth in their family who have been afflicted with the measles, and we are happy to say that the rest are improving. The brother and his wife have the sympathy of everyone in this, their sad affliction.

From a letter received by the grand secretary, from Brother C. X. Smith, of Chicago Division No. 1, we learn that his good wife has been sick for a long time, even very dangerously ill. The members of the Order will all sympathize with this very worthy brother, and all will hope to hear a favorable report, and trust that she will soon be restored to perfect health.

To all Members of the Order of Railway Conductors: On account of the great increase of fraternal correspondence, we are obliged to make the following request: That in writing all fraternal communications, you will endeavor to make them as short as possible, and thereby convey the information you desire to give, so that everyone who desires to do so can find a little space in the magazine. When writing, think of this, as we are crowded for space in every issue.

Universale," or more familiarly known as "La Grippe."

The Railway Officials and Conductors' Accident Association are well to the front in the early payment of those claims which are justly due, as evidenced in the two cases of Brother Witherbee and Brakeman Herrick, of the C. M. & St. P. We can not but believe that the conductors of this country may feel safe in the fact that they have cast their lot with a company so prompt in paying their claims.

At a regular meeting of Licking Division No. 166, O. R. C., held on the 26th inst., it was unanimously resolved, that a vote of thanks be tendered our G. C. C., for his prompt and efficient assistance to the committee of this Division, in their adjustment of grievances with the officials of the B. & O. R. R., and that the Secretary be instructed to forward a copy of the same to the G. C. C. and to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, for publication.

We wish to call special attention to the date of the union meeting, at Sedalia, Mo., under the auspices of Division No. 60, which will occur Feb. 22 and 23. A general invitation is extended to all brothers, of the west especially, and to all others of every section, who can do so, to be with the brothers of this division on this occasion. A large attendance is expected, and a meeting that will be beneficial to all will undoubtedly take place.

Among the victims of the unhappy Russian malady we can hear of no one that has been more sorely afflicted than the excellent wife of our Grand Secretary, Brother William P. Daniels. Among the first to be taken down with it, and in its worst form, a little better, for a day or two, then nearly as bad as ever again, the winter days look still more gloomy by being obliged to keep her bed. We are pleased to know that she is gradually growing better, and all will hope for a speedy recovery.

We learn from one of the Hamilton (Ont.) papers that Brother James Ogilvie has become a respected member of the Societie Universale. This is a new order which has recently sprung into notice within the last three months in the United States and Canada. It is a trifle after the pattern of the old-fashioned Know Nothing party; that is, after one has joined it, he knows far less than he ever did before; yet it has gained more members since it has been started than any other society ever known. Brother Ogilvie, we learn, has taken all the degrees. The name is "Societie

Some of the writers who so kindly favor us with their communications, write to us complaining, because their essays do not appear in the number that they expected to see them in. To all such just a friendly word; you can not get any more into any magazine after every available space is filled. We have tried it and utterly failed. One writes to us: put this in the February 1st number, sure. We received this request two days after the issue was printed. Another did not see his communication in the last number. Readers, you can not get a load of hay, that is a large load, on to a hand sled; and when your magazine is full of communications, as they come in regular order, (whether the editor is full or no) someone is obliged to wait, unless you will send post paid, a recipe that will remedy the matter.

We are in receipt of a souvenir which was presented to each of the merry dancers who attended the annual ball of Elmira Division No. 9. This takes the cake with the balance of the bakery donated. We took it home to our better half and asked her what it was. She used to dance before she had the grippe. She gave us the Chatauqua name for it, and we were correspondingly happy. When we opened the package at the office, we supposed it was a combination pillow, head rest, pen wiper and grocery list, with a pencil attachment, but when we were told what it really was, we realized how little an editor knows. One of them must have looked real pretty hanging on the breast of the A. G. C. C., as he warbled his feet to the tune of "We won't go home till morning." But we will return our thanks just the same, for the beautiful present and kind remembrance of the members of No. 9.

Once in a while some good brother, whose heart is twice as large as his discretion, writes an able and excellent article on some worthy subject, and in order to appear a little odd or different from the majority of writers, signs himself "By Thunder," "Ox Tail," "High Flyer," "Jack A. Napes," etc., etc.: now, good brothers, out on the road, or in a private letter, or for a joke among a party of friends, this is not so bad, but we kindly want to ask if you really believe, that after a real good article has been perused and the reader looks to see who wrote it, which would leave the best impression; to see it signed "Hog Eye Charley," or simply, plain "Charley?" People or correspondents, who write no better articles than you do for other magazines, do not indulge in such luxuries; then why should we? Let us all be as gentlemanly in our words as others are, to our credit and our own good. We are not growing cranky, although our hair is growing gray. We write this not for our own aggrandizement, but simply refer to it for your own personal good.

The grand secretary has handed us a very beautiful card, all covered with marguerites or daisies, at all events they have yellow centers and white petals, with the name of Lena Fitzgerald at the left hand corner, and on the right, Patrick J. McNamara. On the inside you are requested to attend the marriage ceremony of Lena Fitzgerald to Patrick J. McNamara, Wednesday morning, Feb. 12th, at 8 o'clock, at St. Andrew's cathedral, Little Rock, Arkansas, 1890. P. J. McNamara, 1102 Third street, on a smaller card. What this means we have no idea. It is evident that Lena and Patrick are going to church at 8 o'clock, a. m., so whatever transpires, his brothers of the O. R. C. can only wish them much happiness in the years to come, and truly hope that their lives may be as pure as the emblem of flowers on their wedding card.

A beautiful card just received from the brothers of Barker Division No. 113, giving the announcement of their second annual ball, at Mozart hall, Michigan City, Ind., Friday evening, Feb. 14th, 1890. The frontispiece, shows a long train of cars coming down a steep grade around a sharp curve, with the poor one legged conductor walking beside the engine. If he were not a cripple we might imagine it to be the chief conductor of 213, but as it is a night scene we cannot tell definitely. His coat is a little short but it has all the insignia of official honors on the breast and sleeves, and it will probably be longer before he gets another. The fellow on the other side is draped a la Bloomer. It is the first railroad we have ever seen, where the whole train, engine, track, ties, station house and everything, were painted with a coat of gold, and out of the smoke you can see great nuggets of gold as they drop to the ground. It is undoubtedly a first-class engine, but like the Dutchman's cow which he was trying to sell; the poor cow had had bad luck with her teeth, and had hard work masticating her food; the buyer noticed this and spoke to the Dutchman about it. Yah, dot ish so, but I told you she ish pooty healthy if she dond shew her cud all mit der bieces. We bespeak for you all a very enjoyable time.

The Century for February, is rich in interesting and rare reading matter. "Abraham Lincoln," by Nicolay and Hay; "The Relm of Congo," "Washington and Montana," by Francis Newton

Thorpe; "The Merit System versus the Patronage System," by Theodore Roosevelt, are a few of the choice things in this number.

February St. Nicholas: "The Story of the Great Storm at Samoa," "Schoolmates," "The Girls and Boys of China," "May Bartlett's Stepmother," "Two Ways of Having a Good Time," and too many others to mention, but all are good.

We have on our table the January issue of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen's Journal. We are unacquainted with Mr. Rogers, who was chosen at their last annual meeting to be its editor; but from its general appearance and general tone, we can readily see that the gentleman is no novice in the editorial business, and what he writes bespeaks a clear head, and what is best of all, natural good sense. We bespeak for the gentleman the hearty cooperation of the members of this organization in aiding him in his work, and sincerely trust that he may find his position, although a busy one, both pleasant to him and profitable to the brotherhood he represents.

The National Magazine for February will contain an interesting article by Prof. Schele de Vere of the University of Virginia, entitled "How we Write," giving many curious historical facts. Rev. J. C. Quinn, LL. D., will contribute "Biblical Literature." F. W. Harkins, Chancellor of the National University, will continue his essays on Shakespeare. Agricultural readers will be especially interested in the announcement of a New Year's gift to this University of farm property, estimated at $25,000, which will be utilized by its agricultural department to teach improved practical farming to needy young men who desire to earn their expenses while at college. Other articles are by Dr. Flavel S. Thomas and eminent divines. Published at 147 Throop street, Chicago, Ill. Sample copy 10 cents.

The Democrat and Chronicle.

Among the great papers in New York state, there is none that is more widely recognized in its especial field than the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle. A special department is set aside for railway news and all the doings on the "lines of steel" are recorded accurately and faithfully. Railway officials in all parts of the country daily peruse the columns of the Democrat and Chronicle and find interesting news on railway matters. The high standing of the Democrat and Chronicle attests to its popularity. The paper is published every day in the year, Sunday included, and is sent by mail to all parts of the world. It also publishes a very large weekly edition.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR:—I notice under the head of "Insurance," in your first issue of the CONDUCTOR for January, 1890, an article signed "Yours Truly," which wonderfully amuses me, as I am somewhat interested in insurance myself, trying to support a small wife and a large family upon the proceeds of my labors in this direction. But I was unfortunate in not engaging myself with the company spoken of by "Yours Truly," in the issue referred to. I could do a large business, I think, if I only had a company that paid $20, and all doctor bills in case of death, and $4 a week as long as you are dead. But it is very evident that "Yours Truly" does not know what he is talking about in the matter of insurance. The rates he speaks of, and the benefits he refers to, are all imaginary. Any person trying to work any insurance, will find all kinds of rates quoted, and they are all better in some other company. The trouble, and the whole trouble, is any excuse on earth rather than to carry any insurance now. They will all ask you how long you are going to stay, and when you are going to come again, all of which are to no other purpose, whatever, than to put off the time for making the move and beginning to pay assessments. There are dozens of families to-day that I can name, who have put off this matter of insurance until just too late. This is an important matter of the present—not the past or the future, but now. If you have not already done so, begin at once, and I will say for the insurance in the O. R. C., that I have failed to find any insurance that covers all the points that the O. R. C. does, that does not cost more; but I will say to all readers, carry some insurance. If this does not suit you, get some that does, and don't let a subscription paper be passed around headed: "For the first time in the history of ——— Division, we are obliged to ask for aid for Brother ———'s family. Brother ——— died suddenly, and carried no insurance, because he thought (without knowing) that the O. R. C. insurance cost too much."

INSURANCE.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., Jan. 28, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: In reading the proposed laws governing the Mutual Benefit department of the O. R. C., in your issue of Dec. 1, 1890, I have given it a great deal of study, and have come to the conclusion that it will give the Insurance Department now in vogue a set back, because there are so many that I, personally, know of, who would, if they could, take but one share in the B class and let the A class drop. Their reason given for doing so, is that it will not cost so much. Now, this seems to be the great point, and is being picked and tossed about until it is threadbare; but it is a fact in many cases. I know of conductors who do not average over $50 a month the year round. On the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad the conductors on the coal trains between Kingston and Scranton are now not making but from thirteen to fifteen days a month. Now some of these same conductors have large families to support. They attend church, and that is one thing we all should give freely to. Some belong to other secret societies, as well as to our Order, and I, although wanting to see all conductors who are eligible become members of our society and of the Insurance Department, would not urge them to let the others drop, as I would not do so if in their place. I do not wish to be understood as saying other societies are better than the Order. I expect this will not hit some in the right place, but it is my sentiment.

Now, Mr. Editor, my plan, if feasible, would be that we make it as it is—one class, but make it so if any wanted a higher insurance they be given two shares, that is, a $5,000 insurance, and then to make your proposed class B come in, issue half shares of a $1,250 insurance. The ones taking a half share would pay one-half as much, or say $18.50, for the year 1889, the ones taking one share paying $37, while those taking two shares would have paid $73. Then you could not hurt class A, but would, I think, make it lighter all around. I do not think but that our assessments would be less by 20 per cent a year, if done this way.

I cannot explain myself in this matter as I would like, and should, but if you will give it a place in your RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, it might be answered by some one who will open my eyes in another way. Whatever you may make it, I want to still be in it, and would ask all other brothers to join. Think of the ones you would leave behind, and the condition you would leave them in, if you should be suddenly called away and not be insured.

Well, Mr. Editor, I will close, as I imagine I can hear some of the boys here asking if Mack has got the grippe, or what is the matter with him.

I want to ask you one question, and please answer it in full, so others may know as well as myself: In case I should die, must my wife keep the assessments paid up, if any come after my death, until she gets the insurance money from the Order? The reason I ask this is that Brother M. Ratchford's widow was informed that the assessments due after her husband's death would be taken from his insurance money, and I have thought it strange, that after a man was dead he could be assessed. Yours in P. F.,

MACK, of Division 160.

Carrier of Passengers—Injury—Examination—Amount of Recovery. In an action to recover for personal injuries received while attempting to board defendant's car, Held 1. That where the evidence is conflicting as to the manner in which the accident happened, it is a question of fact for the jury, and their verdict is conclusive thereon.

2. That it was negligence in defendant if the car was started so as to throw plaintiff from the steps while attempting to enter, whether by the act of the conductor or engineer.

3. That plaintiff was entitled to recover, not only for the injury she had suffered up to the time of the trial, but for what would probably afterwards follow.

4. That plaintiff could properly refuse to be examined by physicians to ascertain the extent of her injuries, other attending physicians having already testified as to that fact.

McSweeney vs. B. & S. A. R. R. Co., N. Y. S. C., Nov. 7, 1889.

Contributory Negligence—Warning—Assumption of Risk. The appellee entered a car at the rear end of a freight train. He was rightfully received as a passenger. After remaining in the car a short time, he walked out on the rear platform, and while standing there, the train was started with a sudden jerk, and he was thrown to the ground and injured. The evidence tended to show, that he was requested by the conductor to leave the platform and enter the car, but he disregarded this request or order, and remained on the platform. The trial court ruled, that he was not guilty of contributory negligence and gave him judgment. The company appealed.

Held, that a passenger who remains on the platform of a car at the rear end of a long train of freight cars, after being warned to leave it, assumes the risk of injury caused by the jerk with which the train starts. Judgment reversed.

Louisville & N. R. Co. vs. Bisch, Ind. S. C., Nov. 1st, 1889.

Brakeman—Master and Servant—Negligence—Defective Appliances. 1. A railroad company is responsible to its brakemen for injuries caused by such a defect in the coupling machinery of a foreign car used upon its road, as could be discovered by ordinary inspection; and where it brings upon its road, cars with bumpers of different heights, it does not fulfill its duty by simply furnishing coupling links which might be used safely on such cars, as it is not the duty of the brakemen to inspect the cars to ascertain whether the coupling appliances are safe.

2. Where an accident occurs when the cars are moving slowly, the fact that when the cars are moving rapidly such an accident might occur, though the car was in good order, does not bring the accident within the ordinary risks of the brakeman's employment.

3. That in such case where the brakemen only discovers his danger at the moment of the accident, the question of contributory negligence is for the jury, and the latter might properly infer, that there was no contributory negligence upon the part of the injured employe.

Judgment affirmed.

Goodrich vs. New York Cent. Ry Co., N. Y. Ct. of App., Oct. 22, 1889.

NOTE:—The court was not unanimous on this decision. In order to give plaintiff the benefit of the doubt, the court was compelled to overrule a previous decision on the same question, see 37 Hun. 642.

Station Lighting—Negligence of Passenger. Where a passenger alighted from defendant's train at a station in the evening, there being four flights of stairs leading from the platform, and three of these were sufficiently lighted while the other was in the dark. Plaintiff knew the premises, and passengers were accustomed to use any of the stair-ways indiscriminately, he passed the three stairs which were lighted, and missing his calculation in approaching the others, fell and was injured.

Held, That he did not exercise ordinary care and no recovery could be had.

Bennett vs. New York, N. H. & H. Ry Co., Conn. S. C., Sept. 9th, 1889.

Carrier—Injury to Passenger—Weight of Evidence. Where a female passenger, while attempting to board defendant's train at a station, fell between the platform and the car step; and she testified that the brakeman rushed ahead of her, and reached a higher step, thus preventing her from getting on the car and causing her to fall. The brakeman denied the statement, and said that she fell while he was behind her, and without any interference on his part. From a verdict for $10,000, the defendant appealed.

Held, That the evidence was sufficient to submit to the jury on the question of defendant's negligence. That the brakeman's evidence was equal to that of the plaintiff, and that it was error to presume, that there was evidence sufficient to charge, that the brakeman pushed or jostled plaintiff, and caused her to fall. Reversed.

Philadelphia etc., Ry Co., vs. Akord, Penn'a. S. C., Oct. 7th, 1889.

Note:—"Could not negligence be presumed upon the part of the brakeman, in his suffering a lady to fall when he was directly behind her."

Scalper's Ticket—Agency—Discriminating Methods.

In an action to recover damages for a vexatious delay, annoyance and mortification in being ejected from a railway train by a conductor, who refused to accept from complainant a ticket purchased of a "scalper." On appeal, the court Held, that a ticket purchased from a "scalper" is valid, and must be accepted from a passenger, if it is attested by the company's agent. That the "scalping" business is much more reputable than the discriminating methods, which make it possible for tickets to be purchased by those who know how to procure them at less than the regular rate. The tickets are obtained, at first hands, from the company, and if the prices at which they have been sold are lower than they should be, the company alone is at fault, and it should not, of course, be allowed to repudiate such contract.

John Doe vs. Railway Company, Olin S. C., Nov. 16th, 1889.

Special Railway Ticket—Contract—Complying with The Terms—Ejection.

Plaintiff purchased a round-trip ticket from Chicago to Hot Springs, Arkansas, the ticket not to be good on the return trip, unless stamped by the ticket agent at Hot Springs. Plaintiff signed his name to the ticket and accepted the conditions. He did not, on leaving Hot Springs, present the ticket to be stamped, but showed it to the baggage-man, who checked his trunk, and to the gate-man, who permitted him to enter the train, neither making any objection to the ticket not being stamped. The conductor of the train, however, was more strict, and ejected plaintiff from the train because his ticket was not stamped and he refusing to pay fare. In an action for damages in an Illinois court, alleging a breach of the contract, the company having agreed to transport him between the places named. The court ruled against plaintiff and he appealed.

Held, That the only contract between the parties was an express one, signed by plaintiff himself, as well as by the company's agent at Chicago. Plaintiff having assented to the contract by accepting and signing it, was therefore, bound by the conditions expressed in it, whether he did or did not read them or know what they were.

Held, That the actions of the baggage master and the gate-man, does not change the status of the case. Judgment affirmed.

Boylan vs. Hot Springs Ry Co., U. S. S. C., Nov. 11th, 1889.

Carriers of Passengers—Agents Declaration—Fare—Conductor.

The plaintiff alleged that she applied to defendants ticket agent for a ticket to "R," a point seven miles distant, but was refused on the account of the train not stopping at "R." She was then directed by the defendants servants to board the train and pay her fare, and the conductor would put her off at "R." She did as directed, the conductor passed through the train and collected 25 cents, the fare to "R." The conductor, however, stopped the train at an obscure place called Wallace, some four miles short of "R," and put plaintiff and her three months old babe and clothing off. It was dark and in consequence, she was compelled to walk to "R" and carry her burdens, as there was no place at Wallace for her to stay. On appeal Held, 1. That a railroad company is not bound to stop its trains at a point other than a station, where its trains are not accustomed to stop, unless it makes a special contract to carry to that point.

2. That where a ticket agent refused to sell plaintiff a ticket to "R," because "R" was not a stopping place, and where plaintiff then entered the train and told the conductor that she wished to go to "R," he collecting 25 cents and told her that the train did not stop at "R," and where 25 cents was the prescribed fare for any distance not exceeding eight miles, and where Wallace, the nearest stopping, and also "R" were within eight miles of where plaintiff entered the car, held, that there was no special contract to carry to "R."

3. That declarations made to plaintiff by the ticket agent, that she might board the car without a ticket, and pay her fare, etc., are not admissible, and no recovery can be had.

Wells, Alabama, G. S. R. Co., Miss. S. C., Dec. 11th, 1889.

Alighting from Moving Train—Negligent Conductor.

Plaintiff was a passenger from W. to W. and during the passage fell asleep. When the train arrived at W., he did not wake up in time to leave the train while standing. But just as it was leaving, the conductor came into the car, awakened him, and said: "You want to get off, and get off quick." The conductor conducted him to the platform of the moving car and "urged" him to be in a hurry in getting off. The conductor helped him down the steps and by a push, assisted by the lurching of the train he fell, or was pushed of and injured. The trial court gave plaintiff judgment, defendant appeals.

Held. 1. That it was negligent and unwarranted conduct on the part of a conductor in charge of a train, to notify or advise a passenger to leave the train while in motion, under the circumstances, likely to expose him to accident or injury.

Held. 2. That unless a train is moving very slowly, and the circumstances are especially favorable, it is prima facie negligence for a passenger to attempt to alight or jump from a moving train. The circumstances may, however, be such as to render the question a proper one for the jury. He may be justified in any particular case, in relying upon the superior knowledge of the conductor as to the speed and movements of the train, and other circumstances, and in following his directions, particularly, when notified to act promptly, to prevent being carried beyond a station. Judgment affirmed.

Jones vs. Chicago M. & St. P. R'y Co., Minn., S. C. Dec. 20th, 1889.

Note. It has generally been held that a passenger leaving a train while in motion, does so at his own risk, notwithstanding his instructions to do so. Prudent men do not do imprudent things, even under instruction, and this decision announces a departure from the rule. It is evident that the court did not believe plaintiff to have been pushed off, but simply required to leave the train while in motion. See the case of railroad company vs. Crunk, Ind., S. C. 21 N. E. Rep. 31, and railroad company vs. Williams, Tex., S. C. 8 S. W. Rep. 78.

Contract of Carriage—Provisions of—Neglect to Comply—Fare—Amount of. Action for damages resulting from an alleged breach of contract. The plaintiff purchased a ticket containing an express provision that it should be stamped and signed by defendant's agent at the place of destination, before it would be good for return passage. This, he neglected to do, and upon an attempt to return, was ejected, after refusing to pay fare. On an appeal it was held,

1. That where plaintiff made no attempt to have his ticket stamped, and absolutely declined to pay fare, the fact that the conductor did not inform him of its amount is immaterial. That the unstamped ticket gave him no right to a return passage, and absolutely refusing to pay the usual fare, there was no contract in force between him and the defendant for a return passage.

2. That no damages can be recovered direct or consequential on account of the expulsion, neither can the consequent injuries to him or his business be assessed against defendant.

Boylan vs. H. S. etc., R'y Co., U. S. S. C., 1889.

NOTE.—It is just as essential for a passenger to comply with a contract as it is for the carrier. Provisions in contracts of carriage will be enforced alike with both parties. In England it was recently held that where a railroad company requires every passenger to obtain a ticket before entering the train, and to show and deliver up his ticket when ever demanded. But when a plaintiff took a ticket for himself, as well as a ticket for three horses, and three boys attending them by a particular train, which was afterwards divided into two, in the first of which the plaintiff traveled, taking all the tickets with him, and when the second train was about to start, the boys were asked to produce their tickets, and, being unable to do so, were ejected along with the horses. Plaintiff recovered damages on the ground that the company contracted with him only, and delivered all the tickets to him, and hence, the company failed to comply with its part of the contract.

Ejection of Passengers—Return Passage—Tender of Fare. Where plaintiff purchased a ticket from A., to J., and failed to notice the requirement that to make it regular, he must have it stamped and signed at J., before it would be good for the return passage, and having started on the return passage and traveled five hundred and fifty miles of the six hundred miles necessary to reach A., and having presented said ticket to three or four conductors, all of whom either detached coupons or punched the ticket and made no objection to it; and where the last or fifth conductor refused to honor the ticket and demanded fare for the entire return trip, which was refused by the conductor, who, with the assistance of the brakeman, ejected him; and where the ejected person immediately reentered the train and tendered the fare from the place of ejection to his destination, which was refused by the conductor, and the person ejected a second time and held by the brakeman until the train could be started, but the conductor subsequently relented and stopped the train, took him on and accepted the fare for the remaining distance. In an action for damages, Held. That a railroad company may refuse to accept fare after its train has been stopped to eject a passenger for non-payment, and may again eject him if he returns to the train.

Pickens vs. Richmond & D. R. R'y Co., et al. N. C. S. C., Dec. 16th, 1889.

NOTE.—The above was a civil action and was directed against the company, the conductor and brakeman jointly.

Train Service—Injury to Passenger—Impatience of Conductor—Time to Alight. Action for damages resulting from personal injury. Plaintiff had judgment, defendant appealed.

Where the plaintiff's evidence was to the effect that as soon as defendant's train, on which he was riding, stopped, he arose from his seat, near the front door of the car, and proceeded to leave by that door, that when he had placed one foot on the lower step, and was proceeding to step off the car with the other foot, which was on the step above, he released his hold of the railing, and by reason of the impatience of the conductor, who had ordered the train started, and with a sudden jerk, he was thrown to the ground, causing serious injuries.

Held. That the trial court was justified in finding that defendant was guilty of negligence, and plaintiff free therefrom, as the conductor was bound to give him reasonable time in which to alight.

McDonald vs. Long Island Railway Co., N. Y. C. A., Dec. 26th, 1889.

Carrier—Legal Tender—Ejection of Passenger. In an action to recover damages for an alleged unlawful ejection, the court Held. Affirming the lower court; that a genuine silver coin worn smooth by use, not depreciable diminished in weight, and distinguishable, is a legal tender for railway fare, and, if ejected for refusing to make other payment, the passenger has an action for damages.

Morgan vs. J. C. & B. R'y Co., N. J. S. C. Nov. 13th, 1889.

At a meeting of Cheyenne Division 128, O. R. C., held in December, 1889, the following resolutions were adopted :

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Almighty Ruler of the universe to remove from our midst, by death, our beloved brother, J. D. Tremaine, who by his unassuming and quiet manner, had endeared himself to us all ; therefore, be it Resolved, That in the death of Brother J. D. Tremaine we have lost a true and worthy member of the Order.

Resolved, That we extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved wife and family of our brother and commend them to Him who doeth all things for the best, even though they seem to us sometimes hard.

Resolved, That these resolutions be engrossed upon the minutes of our division, and a copy sent to the wife of our deceased brother ; also, a copy sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

Resolved, That being desirous of showing our respect for the memory of the deceased brother, J. D. Tremaine, it is ordered that our charter be draped in mourning during the next thirty days.

L. H. WOODMANSON,
C. D. ROBERTS,
A. J. SCHILLING,
Committee.

PENGRA, WM. F.—At a regular meeting of Battle Creek Division No. 6, O. R. C., held in their hall, Sunday, Nov. 24, 1889, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted :

WHEREAS, God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to take from our midst our worthy brother, Wm. F. Pengra.

WHEREAS, It is befitting for us on this occasion to offer our tribute of respect to our departed brother and tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved widow and orphaned children.

Resolved, That by the death of Brother Pengra, Battle Creek Division No. 6 has lost an earnest and worthy member, and his mourning family are deprived of a kind and indulgent father, whose vacant seat in our division will ever remind us of the dangers that surround us, that "In the fullness of life we are in the midst of death."

Resolved, That to the widow and orphans we offer our heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of affliction, and tender them our aid and protection in a time of need.

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days ; that these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this meeting, and that a page in our minute book be dedicated to his memory ; that a copy of these resolutions be presented to the widow and published in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

A. S. PARKER,
C. C. RICE,
N. E. RETALICK, } Committee.

ST PAUL, Minn., Jan. 19, 1890.

At a regular meeting of St. Paul Division No. 40, O. R. C., held on the above date, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted :

WHEREAS, We, the members of St. Paul Division No. 40, desire to express, in a fitting manner, our profound sorrow at the sudden death of our brother, Hy Shew, whom God, in his unsearchable wisdom, permitted to be taken away from his labors ; and,

WHEREAS, While we deeply grieve for the loss of our companion and brother, we bow in submission to His will, who giveth and taketh away, well knowing what to us is an irreparable loss is to him infinite gain ; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death we have lost an earnest and most devoted member, whose character, combining in it many of the elements of true manhood, made him worthy our sincere regard and appreciation.

Resolved, That in his faithful devotion to duty, and above all his Christian life, commend him as an example worthy our imitation.

Resolved, That we shall ever remember our brothers of Denver Division 44, who so kindly assisted him during his stay at that place ; also, who have shown their brotherly love by their kind attention to him during his last illness, and the interest manifested in securing transportation for his remains to Baltimore, where his family reside. We also feel grateful to the different lines of railroads over which transportation was secured, and the Wells Fargo Express Company, for the courtesies extended by them.

F. M. SANDERS,
R. L. WILLARD,
Committee.

Died, at his home in Collinwood, O., Jan. 18, 1890, after a long and painful illness, Brother James H. Wood, in the 36th year of his age.

Brother Wood was a worthy member of Division No. 20, O. R. C.; also, an active member of the A. O. U. W., in which organization he held a policy of $2,000, payable to his wife, who, with a little son of eight years, is left to mourn the departed husband and father. To them the brothers of Division No. 20 extend their warmest sympathy in this their great affliction.

Gone, but yet he "in example lives;" and while friends sorrow for the departed brother and a good man lost to us for a time, he has passed the bounds of suffering, and we know that we are no sorrowing without hope.

In manhood's glorious prime,
At noonday's glittering hour,
When all the chords of time
Were coiled with wondrous power,
The messenger of death drew near
To steal away the joys of life,
And let thy perfect spirit share
The sweets of heavenly birth.

M. N. HYDE.

Collinwood, O., Feb. 2, 1890.

At a regular meeting of Wayne Division 119, held Jan. 26, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God, in his infinite wisdom, to remove from the home of Brother Frank Hockady and wife their little daughter, Minnie, and in so doing has taken a bright child of nine years from their fireside, she being the only child makes it doubly sad; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Wayne Division 119, extends to Brother Hockady and his estimable wife its heartfelt sympathies in their hour of affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions appear in the minutes of this division, and a copy be sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

B. F. STONECIPHER, }
J. P. JACKSON, } Committee.
JAS. C. CRAIG, }

At a regular meeting of Lackawanna Div. No. 12, O. R. C., held Sunday, Jan. 12, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The Grand Chief Conductor of the universe, in His infinite wisdom, has removed from our midst our beloved brother, M. B. Schoonover;

WHEREAS, In the death of Brother Schoonover this division loses one of its most worthy members, and one of its most faithful brothers; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved widow of our deceased brother our profoundest sympathy in this hour of sorrow;

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days, and that these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the division, and a copy sent to the bereaved widow; and that they be published in The Scranton Truth, the Republican, also THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

S. BOORREM, M. DEVANNY
J. J. O'HARA, A. H. MASTERS,
DAVID WARRICK, Committee.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.—At a regular meeting of Berkeley Division No. 234, O. R. C. held Dec. 16th, the following resolutions were adopted in memory of our worthy brother, Samuel Rockwell:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Grand Chief Conductor, and First cause of the universe, to permit death to enter our division and remove from our midst, so suddenly, our worthy and beloved brother; therefore be it

Resolved, That in his death we feel as a division and as individual members thereof, that we have met with a loss that never can be repaired. Our brother had endeared himself to us by his strict adherence to the grand principles of our Order, by the faithful discharge of his duties, by his pleasant and genial manners, and his kindness and sympathy in distress. Though his death was sudden and unexpected; we do hope that he has entered the perfect felicity. We shall miss him in the division room and the common walks of life. We shall see him no more; but we hope to meet him in the presence of the Most High Chief Conductor, who doeth all things well.

We do heartily extend to the family, brothers and sisters, our sincere sympathy in this their great loss. We trust is his everlasting gain. We would say to them, "Be ye faithful unto the end" that in heaven you may meet the loved ones gone before; also that the charter be draped in mourning for thirty days.

That this article be recorded in this division; that it be published in each of the city papers, and a copy be sent to the stricken relatives and published in the Railway Conductor.

G. V. RATHMAN, W. W. DARBY.
C. H. SHIPLEY, W. H. KELLER.
F. KESLER,

Committee.

On the evening of Jan. 17th, 1890, as the shades of night were fast casting o'er the earth their robe of darkness, the people in the suburbs of Cincinnati were startled by an appalling accident on the C. H. & D. Railway, by which, while in the full discharge of his duties assigned him by his employers, Bro. F. W. Witherbee lost his life, Toledo Division No. 26, its worthy Chief Conductor and the Order an earnest and conscientious member. While it is a duty of extreme sadness to chronicle the death of our highly esteemed and worthy brother, yet we believe that his spirit has returned unto Him who gave it and who doeth all things well.

Bro. Witherbee was a man to whom too much praise cannot be given. He was an earnest worker among those of his own division and for the past year was A. C. C., discharging the duties of the office to the entire satisfaction of all. At our last election of officers he was elected to the highest office of a subordinate division filling the chair but once, before being called from among us. The features of his death were most appalling and would send a chill of horror through the stoutest heart.

While his train was running at the usual rate of speed, through the carelessness of certain ones, the limited vestibule was allowed to pass a block signal, and running at a higher rate of speed than the preceeding train, ran into rear end with terrible force, causing a fearful wreck, and burning the body of our lamented brother beyond recognition. Bro. Witherbee's friends and acquaintances were many, and none have been heard to speak of his death, but with sadness and regret. He was universally liked and respected by all who chanced to become acquainted with him. About eight years ago he became connected with the C. H. & D. Railway, and discharged his various duties to the entire satisfaction of the company, who, in consideration thereof, had recently promoted him to the conductorship of a passenger train.

Bro. Witherbee was a member of the Third Presbyterian church, and fully trusting in Christ his Savior, was, we believe, fully prepared for the coming of the Angel of Death.

He was a kind husband, son and brother, and was ever ready to extend the hand of helpfulness and aid to the needy, and speak words of kindness and love to the troubled and distressed, and refer them to God as their only sure refuge in time of need.

The funeral services were held at the church of which he was a member, on Tuesday, Jan. 21st, and from there the funeral cortege wended its way to beautiful Woodlawn, where, under the burial services of the Order, all that remained of Brother Fred was deposited in the narrow house appointed for all the living, there to remain till the sounding of the trumpet, to dwell forever in the heaven of eternal life, which God in his infinite wisdom has prepared for the coming of his children.

The floral tributes were very elegant and consisted of a passenger coach of rarest flowers, for which Cincinnati Division 107, and his associates of the C. H. & D. are highly commended and thanked. A beautiful cross of cut flowers by the Y. M. B. A. of which he was secretary. A pillow of beautiful flowers from Division 26, all of which were tastefully arranged in the church, while the seven links of the chosen friends of which he was a member, were beautifully arranged on the top of the casket.

The members of the Yardmasters Association attended the funeral in a body and with the Order, followed the remains to the grave and paid their last sad rites to their departed friend and brother.

WHEREAS, Almighty God in His infinite wisdom has taken unto Himself our highly esteemed chief conductor and brother;

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Witherbee the deep and heartfelt sympathy of the division go out to the bereaved widow, mother and sister.

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved brother, Toledo Division loses a noble member, a proficient officer and a kind and considerate brother.

Resolved, That while words of sympathy cannot assuage the deep sorrow placed upon the bereaved widow, mother and sister, we can only refer them to Him who doeth all things well, as their only comfort and refuge in this sad hour of their deep affliction.

Resolved, That our charter be draped for a period of thirty days, in memory of Him who has crossed the dark valley and entered into the brighter realms of an eternal home.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the minutes of our next meeting; published in the daily papers, and a copy forwarded to the bereaved widow, mother and sister of our departed brother.

(Signed.)

F. B. ROCKWOOD,
N. B. DANDENBURG,
R. KIRKBY.

Committee.

MRS. JOHN BROWN.—At a meeting of Atlantic Division No. 120, O. R. C., held at their hall Jan. 5, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, God, in his all-wise providence, has seen fit to afflict one of our well-beloved brothers by removing, through sudden illness, his dear and loving wife; and,

WHEREAS, In such removal by death we feel that it not only afflicts our brother and his children, but also every member of our Order, and that it is but just that a fitting recognition of her many virtues and merits should be had; therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Mrs. Brown our brother, his children, and the community at large, suffer an irreparable loss, which only time can alleviate.

Resolved, That it is but a just tribute to the memory of the departed, to say that in her removal from our midst we mourn for one who was in every way worthy of our respect, affection and regard.

Resolved, That we sincerely condole with our brother and family on this severe dispensation of providence, in thus taking from them a tender, loving wife and indulgent mother, and commend them, in their great affliction, to Him who "binds up the broken reed, and tempers the wind to the shorn lamb."

Resolved, That this heart-felt testimonial of our sympathy be published in the Huntington daily papers, spread on the minutes of our division, published in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, and that our hall be draped in mourning for thirty days.

W. S. CARR,
J. M. SEWELL,
W. C. ROLL.

HALL OF LOOKOUT DIV. NO. 148,) CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. Jan. 5, 1890)

Bro. Frank M. Layton, of this division, was struck on Jan 3d, at Springville, Ala., by the spout of a water tank, and knocked from the top of his train and instantly killed.

At the regular meeting of Division 148, held this day, it was Resolved, That in his death the Ala. Great Southern Railroad, has lost a faithful and an efficient conductor, his young wife of three months, an affectionate husband, this division an earnest member, and each of us a friend and brother.

Resolved, That we tender to Mrs. Layton our sincere sympathy in her great and sudden sorrow.

Resolved, That our charter be draped for thirty days in respect to his memory.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mrs. Layton and to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

W. E. RAPE.
WM. FERRIS.
R. B. STEGALL. } Committee.

WILLIAM TOLES.—At a meeting of Atlantic Division No. 120, O. R. C., held at their hall in Huntington, Jan. 5, 1890, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, God, the almighty ruler of the universe, has seen fit to remove from our midst one of our oldest members, our well-beloved brother, William Toles; therefore, be it

Resolved, That, sympathizing with the afflicted relatives and friends of the deceased, we express an earnest hope that even so great a bereavement may be designed for the highest good.

Resolved, That we, his brothers in fraternity, do sincerely sympathize and condole with his bereaved wife and child, and commend them to Him who orders all things for the best, and whose chastisements are meant in mercy. Be it further

Resolved, That our charter and altar be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days in respect for our esteemed brother, and these resolutions be spread on the records of our division; also, that they be published in the Huntington daily papers and the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

W. S. CARR,
J. M. SEWELL,
W. C. ROLL.

At a regular meeting of Wayne Division 119, O. R. C., held Jan 26, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted in memory of our late worthy brother, John Mangan, who was killed by falling from his train while in the discharge of his duty, Jan. 3, 1890, at Wheeler, Ind.

WHEREAS, It has been the will of our Heavenly Father to permit death to enter into our division and remove from our midst our worthy brother; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Mangan we, as a division, have met with a great loss. Though his death was sudden, we may hope his is perfect rest. We shall miss him: we shall meet him no more on earth, but we hope to meet him in the presence of the Most High, who doeth all things well.

Since the death of Brother Mangan an only sister has passed away, leaving the widowed mother childless, to whom we extend our heart-felt sympathy in this her double bereavement. Her loss, though great, we hope is their gain. "Be ye faithful unto the end, that in heaven you may meet with loved ones gone before."

This article is to be spread upon the records of this division, and a copy sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

L. W. BLAKESLEY,
J. N. VAN SLYKE.
L. A. HANAGA.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., MARCH 1, 1890.

NO. 5.

RICHARD LOVE was born in Canada, in the year of our Lord 1844, in the month of April, the 10th day. His father lived on a farm, and he received a fair and liberal education, little dreaming in those youthful days that in the years to come he would stand as a gallant and famous representative of two important industries in the then new and unbroken wilds of the two great states that to-day are typical examples of the energy and perseverance of the Sucker and Haykeye settlers of the early days.

Born amid the rocks and hills of that cold and rugged climate, 'mid the sturdy yeomanry, who, after years of toil and toiling, have made that country so near like the states that lie just over the beautiful river, that to-day the traveler could scarcely tell the dividing line by any change in the manner of their living, or the looks of the country he was passing through. Although this Brother was distinctively Canadian at that time, he is to-day just as much an American, by adoption, and had he always remained across the border it may be that this story would never have been told.

We have before spoken of his having become a representative man, in two important vocations of life. By this we mean the place he has reached among his fellow men as a railway conductor, and as the greatest and most skillful fisherman of the Cedar and Des Moines rivers.

At the age of 20 the subject of our discourse found himself in the city of Galesburg, Ill., having come all the way from Canada on foot, fishing along the streams, lakes and rivers, not as a work of necessity, by any means, but only for diversion and the comfort he could take in this, to him, pleasant pastime. "Isaak Walton," in his day, was considered the most famous veteran of the angler tribe; but alack-a-day, he died before realizing that his theory was all wrong, and lived in an age of the one-idea system, that in order to get a bite one must keep as still as a mouse, and sly up near some eddy or pond, and then throw in the hook and bait, and in a manner, as it were, fool the timid dwellers of the rivers, taking them by surprise, and gaining their confidence by the allurements of the little worm, or the more capricious fly, induce the innocent and unsuspecting representative of the finny tribe to cast his fortunes in the hands of the gay deceiver, who stood out of sight, just over the bank.

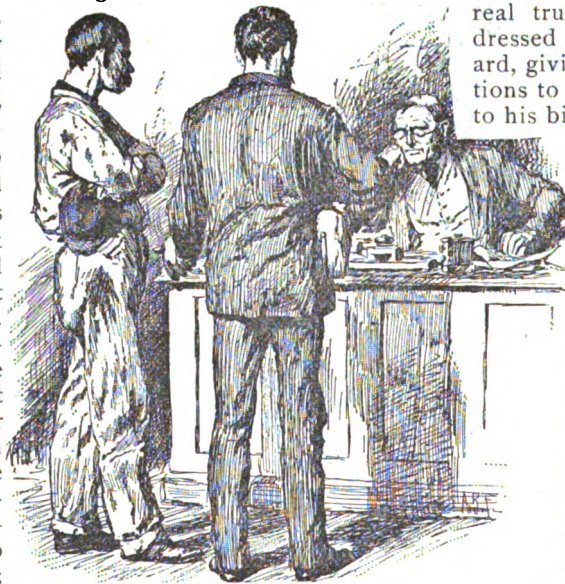

But not so with Richard. He, first of all, initiated a more humane and noble method that not only insures to himself a monopoly of this branch of the finny traffic, but also gives to his life a zest that few, if any, possess to any great extent. His method is simple, yet thousands have tried it, and no success has followed their vain and futile efforts. It is all accomplished by the seeming act of kindness. The majority of the sportsmen of this country, who wish to catch anything, (we now have reference to fish) will quietly drop down near some little curve in the river, or lake, noiselessly throw in the line, and trust to their good fortune by keeping perfectly still and quiet, and in the language of the youth of the day, "just fool them." Not so with our brother; he takes his line and rod, and walks boldly down to the stream, sits down on a stile, or a log, or if he chance to have one, a camp chair, and with a smile and a grin, begins to tell the inhabitants of the water a STORY. He commences first with one of his exploits while braking on the "Q," when he and Horace Dodd were partners. He used to go down to Spoon river and pull out cat fish that weighed 200 pounds, and minnows that were too large to carry home. One might naturally imagine that these little fellows he was talking to way down in the water would grow uneasy and swim away, but not so. He captivates them with his beautiful way of telling these facts and life experiences, until he has gained their good will, and got the better side of their nature. Then he throws in the subtle hook and line, and he has told some of his intimate friends that he has great and abiding confidence in, those he knew would never tell anyone on earth, (some of his brothers of the O. R. C.) that he has pulled out at one time as high as six black bass that would average at least sixteen pounds. This may seem incredible, but some of his warmest friends, who never contradict him while stating these facts, just as thoroughly and candidly believe it to be true as he does; and, in fact, it would be very unkind in them to believe any different. His theory is that he gets the fish so interested in his story that he seems to have perfect control over them, and they lie idly on the surface of the water at his mercy.

We have heard two or three of his comrades, who live in Marion, Iowa, whom we suppose are a trifle jealous of his success as an angler, (such as Jim Janes and Charley Mitchell) say that he tires the fish out, and they are willing to give up and die, and be eaten, if they can only have a moment's peace and quiet, for he has been known, so they say, to sit right there for twenty-four hours, if they did not give up before. We hardly think this is correct. We do not mean to say that these two Brothers would prevaricate in any manner, but Brother Love told us a few days ago, in our office, in the presence of three responsible witnesses, that Jim Janes could not tell a fish from a bale of hay. You see Brother Love came into our office this same day a trifle mad.

A few weeks ago the Grand Secretary of the Order of Railway Conductors, (we will not give his name, for if we did we presume he would be just as mad at him as he is at us) told us that if we would write up a truthful story about Richard, and his great success at fishing, he had a small cut that he would let us use for an initial heading. We told him that we would, but that we lacked a little information that we needed to make the story real truthful, so we addressed a letter to Richard, giving him a few questions to answer in regard to his birth place, when he was married, etc., etc., (although we had lived neighbor to him for many years). A few days after this he met a Brother, and old him he had received a letter from us, with the aforesaid request, but he would be a fish before he would do it. The Brother came and told me of this. It may be that we might have unintentionally prevaricated a trifle when we wrote him for said information, for if our memory serves us correct, we as much as told him we were writing, or were going to write, or intending to write, or might some day think of writing, a book giving the history of the old Chicago, Burlington & Quincy conductors, and we wished to get them all in, and as he was one of them a long time ago, we wished to at least be courteous toward him. Well, after the Brother told us that Richard would not give us the desired information, we addressed him another appeal in our most lavish style. This fetched him. So, on the day before recurred to, he walked into the office all alone, with the exception of a big black dog, and throwing the letter which contained the necessary information on the table, said :

DICK AND HIS DRIVER "DANCE ON THE CARPET."

"There, my brother—"

No we are wrong, and must tell the truth. He said :

"There, you old fool, is what you wanted ! I would never have given it to you, but me and my wife talked it over, and concluded that if we did not give you some facts there would never be any in anything you said of us."

As we mentioned, previously, Richard did not feel very good natured on this day. He asked us where we lived. We told him "out in Central Park." "Well," said he, "I thought you lived there three or four months ago." We told him we did—that we had not moved. "You don't say so!" said he. "Well, how strange ! You used to move every three months when you lived in Galesburg." Then he said that we must live so far out in the timber that the landlord had not got there yet, but we took no offense whatever. It was nothing particular that he had against us. He was only practicing one of his new stories, so that when the ice goes out of the Cedar, he will have a new one to captivate the fish with.

After he went out in Brother Sackett's room, he told him of an old train dispatcher who used to be on the Q., when he was a yardmaster there. This dispatcher used to work nights, and brought his lunch to eat, about one o'clock. Richard went into the office one night to see about the trains as the dispatcher was about to eat, he took down his basket and commenced and in less than five minutes there was twenty-five mice, running up and down his arms and shoulders; pet mice, that were his nightly friends, and he (Richard) threw a book at one of them and killed it, and received a long lecture on the subject of cruelty to animals. This is also one of the stories that he tells to the innocent fish, when he fain would catch them and gain their confidence. In the heading of this story, you can observe him sitting on a stile, with his usual smile, telling the mouse story to the finny tribe below. In the next act, you will observe a picture, true to life, as he appeared in 1881, as he and his engineer were discerned, when dancing on the carpet before the superintendent. He is in the act of speaking to his engineer, as he remarks in a whisper, "O ! listen to his tale of woe."

And now, we have portrayed the bright and sunny side of a conductor; but we would be doing a good and worthy friend an injustice, if we did not say a word of the other side of a busy life of a railway conductor. Coming to the C. B. & Q., when twenty years of age, in 1864, and only one year engaged in braking before he was given a train. Then a conductor there for nineteen years; leaving there to take a position on the C., M & St. Paul, having been with them for seven years; married in 1869, to Miss Jennie De Spain, their home made bright and happy with the smiles and joy that a fond and loving daughter gathers around the circle, that is so dear to them all, almost ready to graduate at Mt. Vernon college, then perhaps to leave them to make bright and joyous the home of somebody else. And thus you find this bold fisherman a man among men; at all times fond of his lovely wife, proud of his loving daughter, jealous of his coal, black dog, the pet of the household. And may they live yet, many years, to be a comfort to themselves and their many friends all around and about them, is the wish of one who was obliged to write a story of this bold fisherman, who never allows a chance to pass, when he can tell a good story on the other fellow.

A TRIP TO THE COAST.

Leaving the main line of the Northern Pacific railroad at Livingston, Montana, you take a train on the Park branch, which is operated by the Northern Pacific, a ride of two hours and a-half up the beautiful valley of the Yellowstone river, which comes rushing down from its home among the snow capped mountains, over huge boulders, which makes the clear sparkling water foam and boil, throwing its silver spray high in the air as it rushes madly on until it finally loses itself in the placid bosom of the muddy Missouri, and you are at Cinnabar, the end of the railroad, where you will find Mr. E. M. Ray, superintendent of the National Park transportation line, a very pleasant and courteous gentleman, awaiting you with a fine and easy riding coach, drawn by four large powerful horses. You start up the beautiful valley hemmed in on either side by high mountains, and wind around through beautiful glens, over a low range of mountains or foot hills, and you are in the valley of the Gardner river, which comes tumbling down through a great gorge, which seems to have been rent apart by some terrible upheaval of mother earth, and left just wide enough a part for this beautiful stream of water and a royal roadway for Uncle Sam to show its grandeur, which is beautiful beyond description. Its great volume of water, leaping down over great rocks in this mighty chasm; falling over great precipices far down between these mighty walls of rock, the royal bird of our country, with its nest perched hundreds of feet above the boiling, surging water, rearing its young in this grand solitude; up by beautiful cascades, over another low range of mountains and you are at the Mammoth Hot Springs hotel, the first one in the park. It is a fine, large frame building, 420 feet long, four stories high, and contains 150 large, well-ventilated rooms, with veranda extending across the front and both ends; put up at a cost of ninety thousand dollars, and under the management of S. B. Todd, who knows how to run a hotel and give you all the luxuries to be found in any eastern city hotel.

This is also the headquarters of E. C. Waters, general manager of the National Park association, who is a fine appearing gentleman. This association has leased from the government, ten acres of land at each place of interest, and built hotels for the accommodation of sight-seers.

G. W. Wakefield, general manager of the National Park transportation line, will also be found at this hotel, ever ready to make it pleasant for his patrons. He can take care of two hundred people a day, and keep them all moving over hill and dale, in his fine coaches, drawn by from four to six splendid, large horses. The company have 240 horses, and coaches enough to move two hundred people a day very comfortably.

Uncle Sam has some buildings overlooking the Mammoth Hot Springs, and a company of regulars stationed there, to keep poor Lo from coming into the park hunting, fishing and taking pale face scalps to hang on his war belt. They were very kind and courteous to us, escorting us every place we went, keeping an eye open for our safety, and also for the park, that we did not carry off any of the hot springs or geysers.

After a splendid supper, we started out to look at the Mammoth Hot Springs. On our walk we pass Liberty Cap, a great rock, sixty feet in circumference, perfectly round, and standing thirty-five feet high, capped by a fine crest, resembling the crown of our statue of liberty. We are now at the foot of the most beautiful formation of terraces and fret work of different colors, interwoven as delicately as the finest lace. We go up, step by step, like going up the steps of some palace or mansion. This formation is about fifty feet high. At the top you look at a perfect lake of boiling water, covering about two acres. There are hundreds of boiling springs, the steam escaping from them makes it look like a miniature lake of fire. Off to the right of these wonders, another series of beautiful steps of this grand formation of different minerals, that have been thrown out of the springs, and you see a great ridge some thirty feet high, that has been heaved up by some great unseen power, extending back from the Mammoth Hot Springs a half a mile or more, to the foot of the mountains. The top of the ridge has been rent apart, and there is a small stream of boiling water overrunning the full length of it, boiling over in many places, and trickling down on either side, forming beautiful little rivers, that sparkle in the sunshine like diamonds of the purest water. A little to the left of this great elevated canal of boiling water, is another great ridge, heaved up and cracked open, leaving great oval shaped openings many feet deep, extending far down into the bowels of the earth. The largest one of these extinct boiling springs is known as the Devil's Punch Bowl, and is forty feet deep. We were down in this one, and indeed, it would seem a fitting place for the devil to mix his toddy, for it was terribly hot, making the perspiration roll off of us before we got half way to the bottom. It would seem that the devil had quite a claim on this part of Uncle Sam's domain, from the many places he has to amuse himself. We were shown the Devil's Toboggan Slide. A great pathway, eighteen feet wide and over two thousand feet long, extending down the side of the mountain, hemmed in on either side with a mighty wall of great, jagged rocks, standing at a sharp angle, sloping to the east. In fact we were shown three of these great slides of the old boy's. Hell Roaring Mountain and Hell's Half Acre, and the whole region, continually remind you, that there has been a terrible rumpus here some time and an awful shaking up, as it were.

Leaving the Mammoth Hot Springs, we go up through the Golden Gate, a mighty gateway of rocks, on the right, towering hundreds of feet heavenward; on the left, a great rock, many feet high, standing like a silent sentinel to this mighty gateway in the mountains; on, up by the beautiful falls of the Gardner river, which pitches down over the rocks some seventy-five or eighty feet, lashing its waters into a perfect fury, as it rushes through this awful gorge of rocks.

Proceeding on up Gardner river canyon, we soon reach a lofty plateau, from which you get a glimpse of some exceedingly grand mountain scenery. Electric Peak, Cinnabar Mountain and Bunnison's Peak; three lofty, perpetual snow capped peaks, standing upwards of ten thousand feet above sea level. Here is a beautiful lake of clear water, nestled in between these great mountains.

Leaving this grand scenery, we wind down around the rugged mountain road by the famous Obsidion cliffs, a mountain of almost pure glass, of nature's own manufacture. It is of different colors, red, brown and black, black being the predominating color.

Leaving this wonderful pile of volcanic formation, we soon reach the great falls of the Gibbon river; here we alight and pick our way down the side of the mountain, along a very difficult and dangerous pathway, to get a glimpse of these beautiful falls, and we were richly repaid for our trouble. To see three great sheets of water, leaping out over the rocks, and falling over one hundred and sixty feet to the basin below. But we must not tarry here. So we climbed back, and again we start down the mountain and soon cross the Gibbon river, pass on up by Clear Springs, Bijo Springs and Beaver Lake, and reach Norris' geyser basin, at 11 o'clock, a. m. Here we are confronted by a pine building, 150 feet long, one and a half stories high, containing twenty rooms, and under the management of F. B. Riley and his estimable wife.

A good dinner strengthens the inner-man, and we feel so much refreshed, that we start out afoot, in order to have more time at the wonderful springs. A few minutes walk and we are right in among a perfect fire hole of boiling springs and geysers. Here we see the Monarch, a powerful geyser, that spouts every evening, at 8 o'clock, making the very earth tremble, when it shoots its great volume of boiling mineral water, over 250 feet in the air; and here we see the Minute Man, spouting every minute; the mud geyser, growling, sputtering and shooting its dirty, thick mud up into the air every ten minutes, and the Emerald, the most beautiful spring mortal eyes ever beheld. Looking far down into its clear, sparkling depths, the sides seem to be lined with the purest of emeralds. The Whirlwind, constantly rumbling and lashing its boiling, seething water into a perfect fury, as it forces its way up through some great subterranean passage.

After spending a couple of hours among these wonderful vent holes, we reluctantly leave, thinking that we have seen the wonder of wonders, but in this we are mistaken, for after bowling along over the rough roads, at times getting out and walking up some steep, almost impassable road, up one side of the mountain and down again on the other side, we cross the Fire Hole river; a great stream, whose waters are almost boiling hot, as it is formed by these great boiling springs, or miniature lakes of boiling water, and reach the lower geyser basin, just in time for supper, which is served by J. C. Callahan and a corps of willing assistants. The hotel at this point is a commodious frame building, containing sixty rooms.

After a good night's rest, we start on our journey at 7 a. m. feeling much refreshed. A drive of one hour brings us to the famous geyser basin, and we were fortunate enough to reach this part of our journey just in time to see one of the large geysers in active eruption, and it was the grandest sight we had ever witnessed in our lives, to see this great monster spouting its great volume of boiling water 250 feet high, spreading and falling like a heavy spring shower, creating a beautiful fountain of different colors, covering the space of a couple of acres or more. A little to the left and on up higher are the famous paint pots, a series of round, oval and oblong openings, filled with a boiling substance of different colors—red, green, yellow, brown, pink, etc., about the thickness of paint. They are continually boiling and spluttering, mixing and remixing. The most curious of these mud springs is called the churn, as it resembles the old fashioned barrel churn in shape, and makes a noise not unlike that useful implement of domestic use. Here the guides reminded us that the time was up, so we started again, driving close to the world renowned Excelsior geyser, the largest geyser in the world, that takes six years to gather up strength and power for its powerful and wonderful eruption, which makes the very mountains tremble when it shoots out its great column of angry hissing water. On a little farther, and we alight from our cramped position in the coach, cross a rustic foot bridge over on to Hell's Half Acre, and whoever donated it was very liberal, for there are five acres or more of miniature boiling lakes and springs, and among them is the wonderful Prismatic lake. Looking down into its clear, sparkling and mysterious depths, you see the most beautiful shapes and beautiful colorings of wonderful and delicate tinge. The sides, as you gaze down into the wonderful, boiling lake, sparkles like precious stones. To the left of us, and nearer the bank of the river, is a much larger lake, that continuously boils over and shoots its hot, seething, foaming waters into the fire hole river. The steam rising from this awful fire hole is so dense that you can not see much of its wonderful formation, that is tinged with the most delicate colors of the sea shell. Back across the boiling river and on up along its many windings, and we soon reach the wonder land, the upper geyser basin, which contains the largest assemblage of powerful geysers in the world, besides nearly five hundred boiling springs. Here we see the morning glory, and a glory it is, too, for it is of unsurpassing beauty. Gazing down into this most beautiful of springs, you see the azure blue of the sky reflected in all its glory and all the delicate tints of the rainbow. Farther on we see the Bee Hive geyser, a small geyser, having a formation resembling the home of those industrious insects, and the Riverside geyser, which has formed a top or covering with a hole in the side next to the river, and, when in action, shoots its angry waters straight across the river; and then the Teakettle, the Punch Bowl, the Lion and the Lioness, two powerful geysers, whose formation reminds you of those powerful beasts when lying down, and two smaller ones near them called the cubs; the Giant and the Giantess, that make the very earth tremble with their awful power as they belch forth their fiery elements and send them almost three hundred feet high; the Grotto, whose fanciful shape is far superior in beauty to any artificial structure ever made by human hands, the castle, built by unseen hands, is wonderful, with its unique corners, nooks and tiny spires of beautiful colors, the beach, wafting its tiny waves out from the center as it boils up from unfathomable depths, forming the most beautiful of coast lines; the three sisters, entwined in loving embrace, smiling up at you with their sparkling waters, clear and pure; Specimen lake, with its beautiful deposits of mineral; the Coffin, with its foreboding and gloomy look, reminding you that in the midst of life we are in death, and then "Old Faithful," a grand old geyser, who goes faithfully on year after year, every sixty-five minutes, hurling its huge column of boiling water and minerals 250 feet high, falling and building up layer after layer, until it has formed a great mound fifty feet high around its huge crater, and has covered the earth with a beautiful deposit of different colored minerals all around it. We had the pleasure of seeing this grand old geyser display its wonderful and awful powers four times, and then, after having taken dinner with B. F. Wilty, manager of the Upper Geyser hotel, who, assisted by his wife and a corps of colored waiters, served us a dinner fit for a king, (or a free born American citizen, which is just as good.) The hotel at this point, is a story and a half frame building, containing fifty rooms. We are now ready to leave this enchanted land of wonders, geysers and hot springs, and wend our way back to the Lower Geyser hotel, to stay all night and dream of the wonders of this fairy land.

After a good night's rest we resume our journey, and start for the grand canyon of the Yellow Stone. We cross the Fire Hole river six different times in going six miles. In many places it had dams built clear across, by those industrious animals, the Beaver. After crossing many beautiful mountain streams abounding in the finest trout, and passing many extinct geysers, up the side of a very steep mountain, by a beautiful lake nestled in among the mountain tops like some huge reservoir to supply the valley below, down a rugged road with many a crook and turn, winding down the mountain side, and we reach Paradise valley, past the spring with the coldest water in the park, down through a lovely valley, and we are at Trout Creek station, where we take lunch with Davy Matthews, a jolly son of the Emerald isle, whose sparkling wit and good cheer made us relish the splendid lunch he set before us.

Leaving the beautiful valley or ancient lake bed, we cross another range of mountains, down through another beautiful valley, over two sparkling mountain streams, up by Sulphur mountain, a great mountain of almost pure sulphur, with two huge boiling springs at its base, boiling and bubbling, making a terrible rumbling noise, emitting their fumes of sulphur and steam, down across Alum creek, whose waters have almost the exact taste of alum, we found the turbulent and rushing waters of the Yellow Stone, and following down its winding course we reach the Grand Canyon hotel in time for supper.

This hotel is a one story frame building, two hundred feet long, containing forty rooms. The association is building a new hotel some distance east of the old one, on a high spot of land commanding a fine view of the surrounding country. The new building will be two and a half stories high, 250 feet long, containing 160 rooms, and will cost $80,000. A few minutes' walk from the hotel brings us to the Upper Falls of the Yellow Stone, where this beautiful river makes its first great plunge of 165 feet to the rocky bed below, and with a terrible roar rushes on down through this mighty chasm of rocks only to make another awful leap of 365 feet, a little farther on, and tearing its way through the solid rock, it rushes madly on making music, a fit accompaniment for this grandest of all grand scenery. We follow a narrow bridal path, cross a rustic foot bridge, where the beautiful crystal falls of the Cascade creek, pours its limped waters into the Yellow Stone, falling 140 feet like a beautiful bridal veil, so thin and gauzy are its sparkling waters, on down the rugged pathway through a heavy growth of fine timber and we soon reach Point Lookout, a prominent point of land and rocks extending far out into the grand canyon, affording you a splendid opportunity to view the grandeur of this wonderful watery way. Looking up the river from this point, you are overawed by the beauty and stupendous power of the magnificent falls. Looking down the river you are charmed by the great variety and grandeur of the scenery, gazing down to the bed of the stream you will see the proud bird of our country with its nest perched upon some high pinnacle of rock, hundreds of feet below you, looking like a mere speck, standing as you do, two thousand feet above the river bed, the river looks like a ribbon winding its way down through this grandest of all grand canyons. We pick our way on down the narrow path until we reach Inspiration Point and it is with a feeling of insecurity and timidity that we clamber out onto this lofty pinnacle of rock. The sun was just throwing its golden rays over the distant mountain tops into the grand cathedral of nature's own architecture, lighting it up with all the brilliant colors that delight the eye and please the senses. Enraptured we stand and gaze at these giant walls so gorgeously painted. Imagine, if you can, standing on a dizzy height of rocks jutting out over this mighty river, with twelve miles of these wonderfully painted walls of rock spread out before you, the sun streaming into every nook and corner, bringing out the most delicate colors, the roar of the great falls reminding you of their great power, with Mt. Washington's fine snow-capped crest with its dazzling brightness reflected back at you, the surrounding country all broken by a succession of lofty mountain peaks and rugged rocks, and you have the picture of this grand amphitheatre of natural scenery. Very reluctantly we leave this inspiring place and wend our way back to the hotel, stopping ever and anon to take another look at this, the grandest scenery in the world. Leaving the grand canyon our road takes us by numerous extinct boiling springs, over a lofty plateau covered with a heavy growth of pine and cedar, down by the Vergenia cascade, a beautiful series of falls and rapids through the winding canyon of Vergenia creek canyon, and we reach

Norris hotel in time for dinner, and then we are homeward bound over a very rough mountain road to the mammoth Hot Springs hotel, which we reach at nightfall. A bath in the wonderfully invigorating water of the mammoth Hot Springs, and a refreshing night's rest, and we leave this enchanted fairy land and start on our homeward journey, feeling richly repaid for our time and expense.

Yours in P. F.,
R. S. KAYLER.

EARLY RAILROADING.

There are many people, yet on the face of the earth, who were here when the rise and progress of railroading became a remarkable phenomena; still there are those who refer with a gratified memory respecting the days when the stage coach and the canal packet were the only means of rapid transit. They tell of the pleasures they had in rocking over rough roads on the old time thoroughbraces of the coach, the sound of the shrill tin horn of the driver, as he neared the country tavern and rounded up for dinner, to the admiration of the landlord and a half a dozen loungers and boys, who were ever present, to be present upon the only exciting event of the day. So, also, do the old travelers recount the days they rode on the canal packet, with its home comforts and rapid, quiet gliding through the placid waters of the narrow ditch. The meals they had served on board, and the narrow shelf on which they divided their repose, between the mosquitos and the rattle of the setting pole of the man on deck. Those were the best methods known in those days, and they who adopted them thought of nothing better, unless it be a private carriage, coachman and out-riders.

When railroads were adopted, they were expensive, but nice. They were slow of construction, but when completed, everyone wanted to take a ride and not "wait for the wagon."

When Stephenson, the Scotch engineer, was explaining his theory of railroads to the House of Lords, in England, one thoughtful member, thinking to non plus the theorist asked, in a very lordly way: "Now, sir; tell me, when your road is in operation and the engine comes along, as you say, at the rate of ten or fifteen miles to the hour, suppose a cow should be found upon the track, what then, sir?'

"It would be very bad for the Coo," was the quiet response.

The writer, hereof, had his home in western New York, at the time when there were no railroads in that section, and when the people began to accept the fact, that iron ways were the coming means of travel, they began to cast about for means to carry the project to its ultimate result. There had been a railway from Albany to Schenectady, and the people towards the west longed for a longer line, and when the legislature granted a charter to several different companies, extending to Buffalo, it appeared as if there was no other impediment in the way of a continuous line, from the lake to the river, no thought entered the head of the most exacting, that there could be need of a line of railway, when such perfect water communication as Lake Erie and the Hudson river offered. But the people must come forward with money if the road was to be built. Now the benefits of the road were acknowledged to be supreme, and about every person wanted it to come close to their habitation, and when the line was surveyed between Geneva and Canandaigua, the men of Vienna (now Phelps) could not see the way clear if they invested their money, if the road did not make a detour and reach their village, and so it was, that instead of a direct line of fifteen miles, the road circles around to the extent of twenty-two, in order to be generous and get the needed stock. Time proved, that those thriving villages could not always remain on the main line of travel from east to west, but they can never be deprived of the blessings which fall from the moving car of advancement.

Grave, thoughtful men have declared, that steamers could never cross the Atlantic by steam alone, because they could not carry fuel enough for the voyage. Men of good judgment, have in times past said, that there would never be uses for lines of railway, close to, and parallel with our great navigable waters, and as to Lake Erie, and Ontario, as well as the Hudson river, although the short time they were frozen and not navigable, it was but a slight inconvenience, and people could make their calculations accordingly.

The people on the Ohio river, and below it, and the people on the line of Lake Erie, wanted better means of transit, between each other, than the Ohio canal offered. Sandusky was the first to open the ball and go on with the dance. She had been left out by the construction of the Ohio canal, when Cleveland got the plum, but she was bound to make her city the metropolis of the lakes, and a road was built over her flat prairie to Bellevue, with a wild longing to extend it to Columbus. She had a strap railroad, and a single passenger car, and two locomotives, equipped for travel, some twelve or fifteen miles, and it was on a road thus equipped, that the writer first enjoyed the luxury of a railroad ride. The stately engine, the palace car, and all appearing so nobly advanced, that they held out inducements to abandon a trip by steamer to Detroit, for which the pursuer had been paid, and to Bellevue we went steaming, as much after the style John G. Saxe relates in rhyme a railroad ride; but, at times, we halted on the broad face of the prairie, to spike down a snake head, and again to increase the lessening of steam, but we got there all the same, had dinner and got back to Sandusky in time for the steamer, the following day, for Detroit.

Chas. Dickens made his first trip to America in 1842 and in his American notes gives his experience as he makes the journey across Ohio, from Cincinnati to Sandusky. In the light of today it would appear that he indulges more in romance than reality. He was mightily troubled in about all he met in this country and nothing could compare with good old England, you know. From Columbus to Tiffin he had no other means of travel but a stage coach, which set himself and wife, at times in distraction. He says he had to stay over night in a log hut with two doors opening out into the black night.

Dickens says that at Tiffin he took the railroad at 2 p. m., the traveling on which was slow, its construction being indifferent, and the ground wet and marshy, and arrived at Sandusky in time to dine that evening. We put up at a comfortable hotel on the bank of Lake Erie, lay there that night, and had no choice but to wait there next day, until a steamboat bound for Buffalo appeared.

In the later published works of Dickens he appears to have expurgated much that he was evidently ashamed of, for it is distinctly remembered that in his first letters, giving accounts of his American travels, he was rather rough on his hotel and landlord at Sandusky, for he once wrote that he could not find enough water in his rooms to wash himself. He must have been awful filthy, he was in plain view of a lake full of water, but Sandusky bay does not always have the appearance of clean water.

At this time, Cleveland could not boast of any sign of a railroad, unless a wooden tramway from her public square through Euclid street to Doane's corner, built to transport building stone from the quarries to the city. It was a short lived enterprise, had a single passenger car, drawn by a single horse and is said to have had a single passenger.

When it became apparent that Cleveland must have a railway extending toward the Ohio river, a charter was obtained, which, like New York, did not bear with the assurance of a built road. Hard work must be done, assurance must be held out to men of money that it would pay, in order to raise the means; it was slow work, enterprising men put their shoulders to the wheel, but they could not move it with any degree of rapidity. Men of money held back, men who would be benefited by the road in the advance of property, would not risk money on the venture. The road hung fire for years, at least the enterprise remained a dead letter, but something must be done or Cleveland might as well be fenced in. A public meeting was called, the cause well stated, ample speeches made and the condition of the city held up to the people in case the project failed. Alfred Kelley, the president of the road, in his quiet and convincing way, presented the advantages of a road to the business of the city, and closed his remarks by saying if the project of a rail road to Columbus failed, Cleveland hereafter would be recorded in all the gazeteers as a small town on Lake Erie about six miles from Newburg, where steamboats sometimes stop to wood and water. This brought down the house, in fact it brought down more, it brought down the needed cash to go on with the work. The people came forward and put down their names to the subscription books of stock, and Cleveland has to this day felt the good of railroads, and has not held back her hand to help any like enterprise, until she prides herself from being a little village six miles from Newburg with six thousand inhabitants, to one that has embraced Newburg and holds fully a quarter million of human souls.

When the fate of her Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati railroad was vibrating in the balance, it was regarded as necessary to hold her charter that a show of work should be made on the surveyed line, therefore, the President, Secretary, Treasurer and some of the Directors made a display of initial work, and on the flats south of Cleveland this party got themselves together, and the president did absolutely fill with a shovel, a barrow with earth and dump it, no matter where, but it was dumped, and in contentions a single son of Erin labored in the same line all one winter, only taking a respite after a siege of sciatica in consequence of reclining on the snowy ground at lunch time.

All roads have had their troubles but to-day the Big 4 is a host in itself, holding a wide range of iron (steel) rails and swaying a vast influence in the grand system of transportation.

The writer had the historic pleasure of taking a trip on the above named road on her first run over the first twelve miles completed. We had one flat car for our comfort and convenience, a car that was used in construction. There were four passengers and we went to the woods south of Rocky river near Berea and had a nice time standing on our feet all the way. There was on board one man from Emerald Isle persuasion, that declined to disburse the amount of a quarter to reimburse the road for the outlay, claiming that he was one of the employes of the road. The conductor, Jim Laughery, could not see it in that light and ordered him off, which he declined to obey, a tussle ensued while the car was in full motion, and it would appear that both conductor and passenger would be waltzed off the car. A halt ensued, the engineer shut off, and at a halt of the train the impecunious passenger reluctantly jumped ashore, and the train moved on, not until the conductor had received a blessing or otherwise from the irate individual who declared he would pay him for that. Jim responded that such was all he asked, and if he did he could ride to the end of the road.

GEO. F. MARSHALL.

AT HOME, }
BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Dec. 28, 1889. }
Wm. Reilly, Chairman ; W. P. Sheehan,
Chief Conductor ; I. G. Schmitt, Secretary, Division No. 206, O. R. C.

GENTLEMEN : — I have delayed until the last possible day answering your kind invitation, which I found here on my return from Europe, hoping that I might be able to accept it and attend your ball and banquet, on the 31st, which I very much desired to do.

Before my return I agreed to meet some parties at such time as they might fix, about the holidays, and they have fixed a time that will prevent me from attending your festivities.

In addition to the pleasure I would receive in meeting so many faithful workers, with whom I had labored in the railway service, I hoped to have had the pleasure, in a formal way, of expressing my appreciation of the practical working of your organization, and the great benefit and assistance derived by me from it during my management of the Wabash.

The merit — the true worth of your Order—is, I think, known to every manager ; yet it is evident to all that you have not always received that recognition to which you are evidently entitled, and this failure has been due almost, if not entirely, to the pressure of other matters, or the presence of circumstances over which the managers had no control.

I know at one time, when matters in the interests of the conductors, were under discussion, so far as the merit went, no man questioned the propriety of improvement. The question was not : "Shall it be done?" but was : "How can it be done?" and failed from lack of power to secure simultaneous and uniform action among all roads interested, some being unable to act.

While I believe that great improvement can, should, and I doubt not, will soon be made in the relations of the conductors to the roads, their terms of service, duties, pay, etc., beneficial alike to the roads and the conductors, yet I cannot but congratulate you upon the much better position and relations occupied by you than that of the "Guards" of the roads in Europe, who perform some of the duties that are performed by conductors in our country, and whose duties come nearest to that of our conductors.

In respect to the certainty of the holding of their positions, they, I think, have an advantage over the American conductor, save on a few of our roads, where special rules exist.

There the guard seldom, I think rarely, if ever, loses his place except for some grave offense wilfully done, or for gross negligence, or such negligence as shows incapacity, or for apparent incapacity after fair trial, in which case they are taken from their position and put in some lower one, that they are competent to fill.

Dishonesty, when clearly proven, which is generally determined by a criminal prosecution before the courts, and when not, by a committee of officials of the road, after a full and fair hearing of the accused, and of any evidence that he may offer, or explanation that he may make, not only results in dismissal but practically excludes the man dismissed from further engaging in railroad service. No man is dismissed, degraded or disciplined except for cause averred and proven after fair hearing.

Such, at least, I found to be the prevailing rules, and such I believe would be good rules for the railroads of this country.

In my opinion, the better condition of the conductors of this country over the guards of Europe, is in a great measure due to your Order.

This difference it is difficult to realize without an actual experience. In comparing the different workings, a few leading points may be named:

To begin with, the pay of the guard is about one-third of that of the conductor. His hours of service are as long, or longer, but his responsibilities are not so great, or his authority, or power, so extensive, and his position not so dignified or manly. Indeed, he is nearer like a head porter, directing the men who black the boots and move the baggage, and who are on the alert for a "tip;" and he, too, in many, if not in most, cases is willing to take a fee from the passengers for a service, or a courtesy, expecting not less than a shilling where a sixpence would satisfy his subordinate.

It was a source of satisfaction, and I think commendable pride with me, to be able to assure English, Belgium, Dutch, German and French railway officials that such a thing as a conductor receiving a "tip" was unknown in America; that it was true here, as it was there, among men entrusted with moneys (guards do not handle money), that occasionally a man was charged with "knocking down spending money," but that I never heard of one being charged with begging for it, and claimed that ours was the lesser of the two evils, as the pilferer took the money of the company while the beggar took the money of the passenger, given that he might get what the company was paid for by him, and that in each case a downright act of dishonesty was committed, for which the delinquent should be dismissed.

Fancy the predicament of the passenger who starts out on a day's journey, locked up in a compartment, with seats crosswise of the car, barely far enough apart to allow two rows of passengers to sit facing each other, without closets, water or opportunity to move or stretch his limbs, with ladies and gentlemen often mixed indiscriminately together, and you will see at a glance that it behooves the passenger to "stand in" with the guard, the man with the key to that door, and the power of starting the train from the stations, and you will, I think, not wonder why the "Pilgrim" unaccustomed to the ways of the country, is generally liberal in his contributions to the train men.

At one place, after a long ride, an announcement was made, which I afterwards learned was that the train would stop four minutes. There was a general rush for the closets, which were of insufficient capacity, the doors of entrance side by side, the ladies' and gentlemen's apartments separated by a partition. Two lines, one of women and one of men, were ranged side by side, elbow to elbow, awaiting their turn of admission to their departments. When it became apparent that the time allowed was not sufficient, one gentleman in the rear announced to some friends in front, in English, with American accent, that they need not feel any apprehension, that he had subsidized the guard for a half dollar to hold the train until he got on board. It was held, and started the moment he was ready.

It is usual to find ladies' and gentlemen's closets near together. It is, however, common to find a charge of a penny for admission to the ladies' departments, and at one place it was necessary to "drop a penny in the slot" when the door opened for one person.

It may be said in a general way, that the roads of Europe, more especially those of Great Britain, are worked by two classes, viz: officers and servants, which, there, is too generally understood to mean gentlemen and menials. The dignity (?) of the first, in a great measure, prevents them from coming in contact with the passengers or the public, except on extraordinary occasions, and the mendicancy and grasping propensities of the latter quite often result in a neglect, or refusal, to perform ordinary duties, or practice common civilities, except where a gratuity is given or expected.

In comparing the pay of the conductors with that of the guards, I do not want to be understood as saying that the former is over or the latter under paid. On the contrary, it is, I think, or at least it should be, universally conceded that in the increase of the compensation of officers and employees, in the development of the roads of this country, and the methods of management, the conductor has not been kept abreast of the others, while the value and importance of his service and responsibility has undergone as great an advance as any other. While the compensation of the guard is much less than the conductor, compared with the service rendered, it is not relatively out of proportion. Where one is not familiar with the lack of it, it is quite impossible to estimate the value to a road of the service of a gentleman in authority who can be seen and conversed with by every passenger upon its trains. It is certainly worth more than the difference between the pay of the conductor and the guard.

On one of the main lines, between two of the great capitals of Europe, I was struck with the magnificence of the roadway, and appliances, and the extravagant expenditure of money to meet the demands of an enormous passenger traffic, together with the multitude of employees, whose very presence in such great numbers, seemed to me a hindrance where intended as a help, and the train service of the whole line presented the appearance of a stampeded army, where all were stragglers, and at a safe distance from the enemy, where every man was engaged in a leisurely effort to take care of himself. What I saw was not exceptional on the occasion of an unusually great crowd, but was a daily occurrence in caring for the regular daily business of the road.

I was not surprised, when in conference with a gentleman largely interested in such matters, to hear that there was a large per cent. of the amount actually invested in the road upon which no interest or dividend had ever been paid. When asked my opinion as to a remedy, I suggested that an American railway superintendent, with American conductors, not guards, and train men, be employed, and that the best might be secured, at least double the salaries given in America; to substitute real American cars for their lock-box carriages, and gave it as my opinion, in which I am clear, that in six months the road would pay interest on all the money invested in it.

There is a fertile field over there for the missionaries of your Order, yet, as I know, there is also very much left at home of good for you to accomplish. Where ever you may labor for the advancement of the principles and purposes of your Order, appreciating, as I do, the goodness of your intentions, and the practical and substantial results already gained, you will always have my best wishes for your success and prosperity.

Greatly regretting my inability to be with you, I am very truly yours,

JOHN McNULTA.

The Chinese Minister's Ring.

The Chinese minister wears an enormous diamond ring on his thumb. This stone is of immense size and very brilliant. The setting, instead of being gold, is of dark wood. The wood from which the ring was made is very old—said to be 1,000 years—and its rarity makes it more costly than gold.

Lula Lake.

On the top of Lookout Mountain,
 In a calm, sequestered spot,
 Where the rocks in magic grandeur
 Form a weird, romantic grot,
 Where glides a purling brooklet
 O'er its bed of rocks and sand,
 E're it dashes down the pathway
 Carved for it by nature's hand ;
 Where the ferns in summer verdant
 Cluster neath the oak and pine,
 And the flowers bright and fragrant
 Make a scene complete, sublime,
 You will find the fairest lakelet
 That e're rippled in the breeze,
 Or reflected back the shadows
 Of the over-hanging trees.
 All around its rocky margin,
 Flowering cliffs rise high in air,
 And upon its crystal bosom
 Chase each other dimples fair.
 As you view this fairy mirror,
 With its frame of rugged stone,
 Your mind perforce will wander
 To those days long past and gone,
 When the Indian warrior paddled
 O'er this lake his bark canoe,
 To meet some dark-eyed maiden,
 And his loving vows renew.
 To the banks of this lone lakelet,
 Eliza, the Indian maid,
 Flew with the child of the thirty murdered,
 And her father's vengeance stayed,
 By climbing to the summit
 Of the crags that gird its shore,
 And vowing that in its waters
 She would sleep for ever more,
 Before the savage rabble
 That awaited them below,
 Should have one golden ringlet
 That clustered round his brow.
 How sublimely grand the picture,
 With her wind-tossed, pretty hair,
 Eyes darting back defiance,
 Showing a will to do and dare,
 While closely to her bosom
 She clasped the captive child,
 Battling for the right, and bravely,
 Midst scenes so stern and wild.
 Full many are the legends,
 Hovering round its rocky range,
 Filled alike with pride and sorrow,
 Of the pre-historic days.

[This child was the only survivor of a boat laden with a band of thirty pioneers, going down the Tennessee, which was taken by Terapin Ross, a half-breed chief of the Hill Tribes of the Cherokees, and all on board murdered except this child, whose life was saved by Eliza, daughter of the chief, in the manner described.]

LOOKOUT.

The World's Prayer.

O, almighty dollar, our acknowledged governor, preserver and benefactor, we desire to approach thee on this and every other occasion with that reverence which is the superior excellence, and that regard which shall ever be cherished for exalted greatness. Almighty dollar, without thee in the world we can do nothing, but with thee we can do all things. When sickness lays its paralyzing hands upon us thou canst provide for us the tenderest of nurses, the most skillful of physicians, and when the last struggle of mortality is over, and we are being borne to the resting place of the dead, thou canst provide a band of music and a military escort to accompany us thither, and last, but not least, erect a magnificent monument over our grave, with a living epitaph to perpetuate our memory. And while here in the midst of misfortunes and temptations of life, we perhaps are accused of crime, and brought before magistrates ; thou, almighty dollar, can secure to us a feed lawyer, a bribed judge, a packed jury, and we go scott free. Be with us, we pray thee, in all thy decimal parts, for thou art the only one altogether lovely and the chief among ten thousand.

We feel there is no condition in life where thy potent and all-powerful charms are not felt. In thy absence how gloomy is the household, and how desolate the hearthstone ; but when thou, O, almighty dollar, art with us, how gleeful the beef-steak sings upon the gridiron, how genial is the warmth that anthracite coal or hickory wood diffuses throughout the apartment, and with an exuberance of joy continues to swell every bosom ; thou art the joy of our youth and the solace of our old age ; thou canst adorn the gentleman and feed the jackass ; thou art the favorite of the philosopher and the ideal of the lunk-head. When an election is to be carried, O, almighty dollar, thou art the most potent argument of politicians and demagogues, and the umpire that decides the contest. Almighty dollar, thou art worshipped the world over ; thou hast no hypocrites in thy temple, or no false hearts at thy altars ; kings and courtiers bow before thee, and all nations adore thee ; thou art loved by the civilized and savage alike, with unfeigned and unfaltering affections ; we continue to regard thee as the hand-maid of religion and the twin-sister of charity.

O, almighty dollar, be with us we beseech thee, attended by an inexpressible number of thy ministering angels, made in thine own image, even though they be but silver quarters, whose gladdening light shall illuminate the vale of penury and want, with heavenly radiance, which shall cause the awakened soul to break forth in acclamations of joy. Almighty dollar, thou art the guide of our footsteps and the goal of our being. Guided by thy silvery light, we hope to reach the golden gate, triumphantly enter, while hands harmoniously sweep the golden harps as we enter the golden street.

Almighty dollar! thy shining face
Bespeaks thy wondrous power;
In my pockets make thy resting place,
I need thee every hour.

And now, almighty dollar, in closing this invocation, we realize and acknowledge thou wast the god of our grandfathers, the two-fold god of their children, and the three-fold god of their grandchildren. Permit us to possess thee in abundance, and of all thy varied excellence, is our constant and never-ending prayer.

[We give this article space by request of a member of the Order.—ED.]

A Redman's Wedding.

Powhattan tribe had two unpropitious nights for their entertainments at the theater, last week, but all who attended Saturday evening were well paid for their trouble. The rendering of the play, "Brown's Exposure," was a good burlesque on the initiation ceremonies of the order, and those taking part performed their allotments in good style. The music was good, and the tableaux very pretty, but the receipts were not up to the expectations. However, the tribe believe that their well-carried-out program will insure them better success when they again appear before the public. An interesting, and the closing part for Saturday evening, was the marriage of Conductor Joseph Bedford and Mrs. Rose Bessey. As the curtain rose on the Indian camp, Rev. A. E. Wilson was found to be the center figure. Mrs. Bessey and Mr. Bedford, dressed in Indian costume, were called, and entering from either side of the stage, were united in the bonds of matrimony by the minister. After congratulations, colored lights, a burst of wedding music from the orchestra, and the fall of the audience retired pleased with the novelty of witnessing the first wedding in the Metropolitan theater, with a goodly number of Powhattan braves as witnesses.

[This new Powhattan is a member of Division 45, Onenota, N. Y.—ED.]

The following is from one writer to another:

The airing you are giving the credit companies and commercial agencies is the best thing of the nineteenth century, in justice to all concerned.

Now, if you should go after the snide detective agencies who put men out on the road to watch conductors, and make false reports in order to hold their own jobs, you would be an angel. You can see the same rule holds good with the detective, or spotter, as in the case of the soliciting agent for the credit companies; the object is to make a record themselves, without reference to the honesty of the report. However, the Northern Pacific is very good about giving their men a fair chance to clear up these reports, but if something could be done to compel these rascals to suffer the consequences of false reports, better service could be attained, and what is still better, if our great railroads would pay their passenger conductors the amount in salary that is annually set aside for detective service, I believe great good would be the result.

A train on the Rochester portion of the Erie road, with Bro. "Ed Sackett, a brother of Orange Lemons Sackett," in charge, with Engineer Milliman, at the throttle, engine No. 127, (a mogul) rolled into Rochester a few days ago, containing the officials, passenger and freight, of the Erie road. The train consisted of two cars, a beautiful parlor car and a magnificent hotel car. This party left Jersey City at 8 p. m. Monday night, stopping at different points to make an official inspection; stopping over night at Binghamton, from Binghamton to Elmira, from Elmira over the Tioga Railroad to Tioga Junction, thence via the Fall Brook line to Corning, the next to Bath then to Hammondsport over the Bath and Hammondsport R. R. to Conesus, thence to Rochester. The run from Bath to Conesus thirty-seven miles was made in thirty-four minutes. The officials seemed well pleased with the road traveled over, and all its appointments. Good for the Sackett family.

Traveling Agents Association meeting at Buffalo, N. Y., Tuesday, Aug. 19th.

* *

Ten new engines for the Chesapeake & Ohio Co., built by the Richmond Locomotive works.

* *

Eleven new engines for the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Co., from the Baldwin Locomotive works.

* *

American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents, in the City of Mexico, Tuesday, March 18th.

* *

Eleven hundred thousand tons of new steel rails has been contracted for by the management of the Big Four system.

* *

Mr. J. E. Childs has been appointed general manager of the New York, Lake Ontario & Western, and assumed his duties Feb. 1st.

* *

Ten consolidated and ten switch engines from the Roger's Locomotive works, Patterson, N. J., for the Louisville and Nashville Company.

* *

A company with a capital stock of $250,000, is being organized at Atlanta, Ga., which proposes to erect car works and build and repair railroad cars.

* *

Peter L. Dudley, erst-while General Passenger Agent of the Cincinnati & Lebanon road, according to a telegram, has been found short in his accounts in the amount of five thousand dollars. He is no relation to Brother Ed. Dudley, of Galesburg Division, No. 83.

Mr. J. Westinghouse, President of the Westinghouse Manufacturing Company, of Schenectady, N. Y., died Jan. 17th. He was the eldest brother of George Westinghouse.

* *

Hurrah for the brakemen employed on the D. & H.! Five dollars per month advance since Feb. 1st. This will help many a poor fellow, and all have worked for too small wages for many a year.

* *

We learn that Mr. F. H. Britton, Superintendent of the Chicago, Baltimore & Ohio, will probably be appointed General Superintendent of the Trans-Ohio divisions, Mr. W. W. Peabody having resigned.

* *

A company has been formed in New York to manufacture and deliver soup in bottles the same as milk; the milk will be all right, but those who buy the soup had better examine it carefully for there may be many a poor railway employe in it.

* *

Two thousand five hundred freight cars on the Lehigh Valley, are soon to have the Westinghouse quick action freight brake applied to them. We learn that the Pennsylvania Railway has about ten thousand cars fitted with the same brake.

* *

There appears to be some prospects that the New York Locomotive works, of Rome, New York., will be removed to St. Louis, Mo., as the Merchant's Terminal Bridge Co., have donated a large tract of land on which to locate the works.

* *

In a former issue we stated that John C. Gault had retained his position as general manager of the Queen & Crescent until April 1st. We were mistaken and hasten to make correction, as Mr. Carroll has the honor of being general manager of the Queen & Crescent.

* *

Twenty-five more moguls of the mother Hubbard style of fire-box, from the Dixon Locomotive works, to run between Scranton and Hancock, Pa. We were nearly scared to death at the last named place, when a boy, as it was the first place that we ever saw a locomotive of any kind.

* *

It seems that the gripe, from current reports, has played sad havoc with the volunteer and relief associations of several of our trunk lines, and while it is certainly a good thing for the employes, it is rather a costly kind of a grip, that has taken hold of the relief associations of this country.

* *

An Old Men's Christian Association: we certainly hope it will be organized. There is undoubtedly as much necessity for having an Old Men's Christian Association as there is of having a Y. M. C. A. Of course we could come nearer getting into this than the other, and perhaps that is the reason we approve of the Old Men's Christian Association.

* *

President John Newell, of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, has gone to Europe. If he has pocket money enough to pay his expenses on this journey, we have no doubt but what he will have a pleasant time, and we sincerely hope that he has. If it were us we might possibly get to Europe in the hull of a vessel, but that would end it; we never could get back.

* *

The irrepressible George Francis Train proposes to make the trip around the world in sixty days. Success to you, Francis, whether you make the trip a success, or not, so far as hours and days is concerned, we hardly know, but of one thing we are certain; the public, who are very generous in their expressions regarding such undertakings, will no doubt be amused when the history of your travels is written.

* *

A little girl, whose parents were killed a few days ago, being run over by a train on the C. & N. W., has been paid the sum of $7,500; not only paid this sum, but the act was voluntary on part of the company.

We are glad to hear of this act on the part of this great corporation, as it is a beneficent one on their part, and will no doubt come very handy to the little girl who is left an orphan.

* *

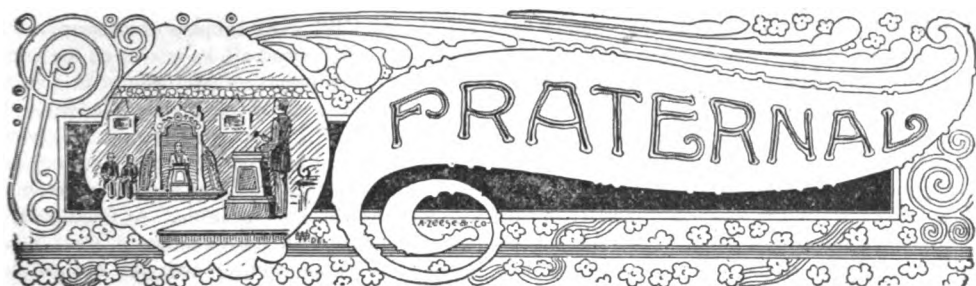

The great Northern Railway line embodies the roads which have been operated under the titles of St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba, Eastern Railway of Minnesota, Montana Central Railway, Willmar & Sioux Falls Railway, including the Duluth, Watertown & Pacific, soon to be completed, which constitutes a system of nearly three thousand three hundred miles, with appropriations for increasing the extension of this line to the Pacific coast. We are glad that this statement has been made in order that all may know definitely what the right name will be hereafter.

* *

We learn that prior to his departure for Egypt, Africa, and other foreign countries, the retiring superintendent of the Burlington & Missouri River road, Mr. D. E. Thompson, was remembered by the officials and employes, and presented a valuable pair of binocular field glasses and a magnificent upholstered mahogany chair. This was a very kind act on the part of the officers and employes who were under Mr. Thompson, and if all who were participants in this gift can truly feel, that Mr. Thompson has been as kind to them as they have to him, then we have nothing to say in regard to the acts of the donors, or the acts of Mr. D. E. Thompson.

* *

From the Railway Age, of Feb. 15, over the signature of the superintendent, we learn, that there never was any order issued by him, whereby any employe was forbidden to wear a beard, if he had a mind to. We hasten to correct the few remarks we made a few weeks ago on this subject, and place this superintendent in a proper light. However, we must do justice to the employes who received this order or notice, as they supposed, as we do not wonder, that they thought they must cut their beards all off, and had they understood that they must cut their heads off, it would not have been anything extraordinary, as, after reading the manifesto of the superintendent, we have tried to make out his name, and if his circulars are a prototype of his signature, we can not wonder, that not only the employes but the public have been misinformed.

BRATTLEBORO, VT., Jan., 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: For one, I am glad to see the question of running Sunday trains brought up again for discussion. The subject cannot be agitated too much nor too often. It is a question, in fact, that interests every person, whether directly or indirectly associated with railroads, either in the capacity of employer, employe or patron. I wish each and every member of the Order, would express himself freely and without restraint. Let us have the sentiments of the Order as a body.

Brother Wadlaugh, of Greenfield, Mass., has some peculiar ideas in regard to what he is pleased to call the "Sabbath." He still insists on confounding the two days, Sunday and the Sabbath, without knowing the difference. He totally ignores the fact, that the Sabbath of the bible, comes on Saturday, the seventh day of the week, and Sunday, the day set apart by Constantine, a ruffian and a cut-throat, on the first. To suppose God is angry with a man because he reads a Sunday paper, or runs a train on that day, is stuff and nonsense, and how any man of even mediocre intelligence can for a moment believe it, is entirely beyond my comprehension. The day Brother W. has so much to say about, if he will take a little pains to post himself up, is directly traceable to Paganism. Worcester, in his dictionary, says, "Sunday, so named because anciently dedicated to the sun, or its worship." All authorities admit that Jesus was publicly branded as a Sabbath-breaker. Did he not pluck the ears of corn on that day? Did he not say, that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath? Is it any worse to run trains on Sunday than horse cars? What is the difference? Is not the work on the Monday morning paper done on Sunday? Rev. Mr. Talmadge's sermon is reported, the short-hand notes transcribed, and the matter set up and published on Sunday, and the next morning sent broadcast over the land, is it not? On the other hand, is it not true, that all the work on the Sunday paper is done the day before? Do not the clergy earn their salaries on Sunday? Does not nature perform her work as well and faithfully on that day as on any other? Do not the birds sing as sweetly, and does not the sun shine as brightly on Sunday as on Monday? Are not people born on Sunday, and do they not die on Sunday? Is it not a fact, that Sunday here, comes on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, in other parts of the world? Suppose Brother Wadlaugh should be suddenly stricken ill on Sunday, and in that condition remain unconscious until Friday. Would he know when he came to his senses again, whether it was Friday or Sunday, the day for worship or for work, without asking some one, or consulting the calendar? I am afraid not. To talk about great nations being overthrown because they "disregarded my Sabbaths," is folly. There is no genuine authority for such an absurd statement. It isn't reasonable, much less, common sense.

Such a thing as the "day of rest," is unknown in Berlin. There all classes of society, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, say to themselves, "Now, for a day of pleasure." During the summer, extra trains are run on Sundays, and early in the morning, the railway stations are crowded with men, women and children, loaded with baskets, glad to escape from the narrow, suffocating streets into the open country. It is so in Boston, New York, and other large cities. Yet, our Christian Brother, would prevent such things if he could. Possibly he might be inclined to resort to inquisitorial methods. Even here in Vermont, a dastardly attempt was made last November, to wreck an excursion train run on Sunday to accommodate mechanics and their families, who could not get away any other day during the week.

One of the objectors to the running of the train, poured oil on the rails, but it was discovered in time to prevent any trouble. Had it occurred on the mountain side, where the grade is 204 feet to the mile, and not been discovered, the consequences might have been fearful. If that is Christianity, the good Lord deliver us from any more of it.

Would Brother W. like to reverse the wheels of progress, and roll them back to the time of Cotton Mather? Is it his desire or the desire of any person, except a bigot, to see the old Connecticut Blue Laws put in force again, laws that made it a crime to walk out on Sunday, a misdemeanor to smile, and an offense for a man to kiss his wife and children on Sunday? Is Brother W. so dull of comprehension, that he cannot discern the intents and purposes of the so-called Blair "Sunday-Rest bill?" Were there any sincerity in such a proposed measure, I would gladly say, God-speed the passage of the bill, but there is not. If it was really in the interest of the laboring man, I would willingly strike hands with Brother W. in trying to to secure its enactment. To any one, however, who is not blinder than a bat, the object of that bill is to compel everybody to attend church on Sundays, to saddle a law upon us, that shall prohibit our enjoying ourselves as we choose, a law, that shall stop the running of every train in the United States on Sunday, making life a burden and existence a bore. That is the gist of the whole matter. Deny it if you can!

This childish notion, that Sunday is any better or more holy than any other day, is all gush. Is there any man with even a common school education, that really believes that it makes a particle of difference whether a man rests on Wednesday or Sunday, so far as physical recuperation is concerned? The stress laid upon what one or two railroad managers say about working their men on Sunday, has no particular significance, one way or the other. If a man is worked twenty-four hours out of the day, as some of them are, it is no wonder that they are good for nothing at either the beginning or ending of the week.

I believe in making Sunday a day of pleasure. a day of joy, a day, as my friend Col. Ingersoll says, "To get acquainted with your family." I believe in granting to every man, woman and child, the same privileges I would ask myself, but I don't believe in 80,000 men dominating sixty or seventy millions of people, as to how they shall spend the Sabbath or Sunday. In the words of Patrick Henry, "If this be treason, make the most of it."

Yours for the good of humanity,

M. SEVERANCE.

Pine Bluff is modest and slow-going, but like the mills of the gods, when she arrives at her objective point, both pedal extremities are liable to be with her.

The latest honor bestowed upon her is the appointment of one of her citizens, Mr. W. C. Hazeltine, superintendent of the new Stuttgart & Arkansas River road. No young road has ever made a better selection. Mr. Hazeltine has been for a long time a conductor on this road, being the oldest conductor in the service, but one. He is thoroughly grounded on all subjects of railroad work, and above and beyond all, he is one of the most popular and courteous railroad men of this state. His appointment took effect last Monday. In conversation with a reporter, he said that work would be pushed from next Monday morning, and this road would be running from Pendleton to Stuttgart as early as possible. At Pendleton, it would connect with the Arkansas & Gulf road, and by this road connect with the Huntington system for New Orleans. This will give the Cotton Belt road a more direct route to New Orleans than she has at present, without touching anything but anti-Gould lines, and this road will be in the closest harmony with the Cotton Belt road. As soon as possible, a line will be run to Kansas City, and this will give the road all the northeast and northwest country to feed from. The outlook is exceptionally bright for the Stuttgart & Arkansas River road and congratulations are in order.—Pine Bluff Commercial, Jan. 18, 1890.

[Brother Hazeltine is Secretary of Pine Bluff Division, No. 251, Pine Bluff, Arkansas.—ED.]

BOSTON, Feb. 5, 1890.

DEAR EDITOR: While I do not wish to be considered a critic, I would like to offer a few suggestions that materially interest the members of the O. R. C in this section of overgrown jurisdiction.

New England Division No. 157, has had a phenomenal growth, but its growth has been only commensurate with its location. We have had, and still have, a large material to draw from, within a radius of fifty miles. We have one thousand conductors who are eligible to membership in the O. R. C. Within that radius are four divisions, located as follows: Two in Boston, one in Providence, R. I., and one in Worcester, Mass.

New England Division No. 157, has been organized about six years, and during that time we have been visited but twice by any Grand Division officers. Now, we do not wish to find fault with the grand officers, for we think they are doing all they possibly can for the best interests of the Order, and its members. But can they satisfactorily attend to the necessary details of 260 divisions, with some fifteen thousand members? Division No. 157 loudly says "No!"

At the last session of the Grand Division a step was taken in the right direction in providing the Grand Chief Conductor with two assistants, and I think we can congratulate ourselves upon securing two brothers so eminently fitted for the positions they occupy, as Brothers Wilkins and Clark. But is the present number of grand officers adequate to the success of the Order, considering the development of the Order within the last three years? If not, how can the direct supervision of subordinate divisions be accomplished without much greater expense to the Order.

It is the unqualified opinion of a majority of the conductors throughout this section of the east, that our subordinate divisions should be visited at least once a year, and oftener, if possible, by some representative of the Grand Division.

I am indirectly informed of certain circumstances, which, if true, are in direct violation of the statutes, but was done through a misconception of the laws, which shows plainly the necessity of a local authority. It can be accomplished, and I certainly think it of vital importance to the future welfare of the O. R. C., to divide the Order into separate jurisdictions, each jurisdiction to have a deputy grand chief conductor, his appointment to be provided for in some suitable manner, which I will not now discuss. He shall visit all the divisions in his jurisdiction at least once a year, and shall be in receipt of the work of each division in his jurisdiction, after each meeting, and he shall make a report each month to the grand chief conductor. The expenses of the deputy, (which would be almost nominal), should be borne by the divisions in his jurisdiction.

I certainly think it of the utmost importance, that each and every division should have its accounts and books looked after by some representative of the Grand Division, once a year.

The Grand Division makes laws, but let me ask how they know these laws are obeyed? The question is frequently asked, what good is the O. R. C.? While a majority of the members recognize the benefits accruing from membership in the O. R. C. there are a great number who do not. There is a great feeling in New England to overcome, which does not exist in the west, and I speak from a knowledge of the Order in the east and west. The Order is comparatively young throughout New England. Previous to the organization of New England Division No. 157, which now numbers 220 members, there was but one division in existence in New England, and that No. 122, Boston division, with about twenty-five members. The existence of the O. R. C. was made known to us during the session of the Grand Division in Boston, in 1884. We have grown rapidly. Our railroad officials are beginning to know of our existence, as an organization, and naturally they want to know its objects and benefits to members. The O. R. C. is more of a stranger to railroad officials in New England than in the west, and we wish to show by our deeds and actions that we are in accord with each other.

Our desire is to establish the fact that one of the objects of our Order is to make members better men and better conductors—men who will be faithful and subservient to themselves, and by so doing be faithful to the interests of their employers. If there are black sheep among us, weed them out. Occasionally a conductor is discharged. If that conductor is discharged for misdemeanor, or conduct unbecoming a gentleman and conductor (and the two should be synonymous), and if it is proven against him, he is unworthy of membership in the O. R. C.; and if we establish that fact among conductors and railroad officials, we, as an organization, will have accomplished that which will redound to our credit and success. Let us not lose sight of the fact that our success depends upon our actions, whether we be in the discharge of our railroad duties, or enjoying the social privileges of life; that the O. R. C., as an organization, does not make the man, but the man makes the O. R. C. what it is, and what it will be in the future. The value of institutions like ours, consists in their usefulness. They are not an end in themselves, but a means for attaining good results. Then let us one and all set an example of such conformity to the principles inculcated in our Order, as to elevate the O. R. C. as an organization, and make better men of its members.

W. R. MOONEY,
New England Division 157.

GREENSBORO, N. C., Feb. 7, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: The members of Charlotte Division, No. 221, having honored me with the very high and lucrative position of correspondent, it becomes me as a conscientious and faithful servant, to say something.

We have a very good division. Some of the boys don't seem to be interested, like they should be, while others have their heart set on the welfare of the Order.

Many of the divisions sent their mites to us in answer to our call for Mrs. Wooton's benefit, all of which were received with many thanks.

We all like the new work.

New members are coming in every month.

The CONDUCTOR is liked, and read carefully, by most of our members.

We will be glad to see Brothers Wilkins, Daniels and Wheaton, or any of the other grand officers, at any time,

Our meetings are not as well attended as they should be, but I think there will be more interest taken now than has been in the past, by all the members.

Brothers Joe Lattimer and Geo. Ely are passing by here occasionally to look after the comfort of passengers going over their respective lines.

Brother J. E. Dick has left the N. C. division of the N. D., and gone to try some of the lines west. Should his eye fall on this, he may rest assured that we often think of him, and hope that success may follow him wherever he goes.

Brother W. S. Witherspoon has been promoted to a passenger run from Raleigh to Keysville.

Brother G. N. Wait is running on the S. N. branch.

Capt. T. J. Brown is running the mail and express between Greensboro and Goldsboro.

Our division has a bright future before it. There are some faithful workers among us, and much can be accomplished. Our Order is a noble one, and we can do much toward removing many of the barriers in our way now.

Yours in P. F.,

C. B. GUTHRIE.

STERLING, Ill., Feb. 1, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR: As I am at home with la grippe, and in looking over your magazine I see that most all O. R. C. lodge meetings are held on Sunday, while at the same time they are clamoring for the discontinuance of Sunday trains, and other Sunday work.

Now, the most of us who have families, want to stay at home that day of all others of the week.

Some have runs that take them away from the place of meeting.

Now, at our last election, we lost the service of a grand good man as chief conductor, because Sunday was the only day he could have with his family. And many others are like myself, must ride a long distance, and be away from home the only day we should have with our families.

Most of the men are in the city from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m., so if meetings could be held during the week, many could attend who now are debarred that privilege. I, for one, feel as if it would be better for the members, as well as the Order, to change the meeting day.

Hoping my idea may meet the approval of some of the brothers, and also the editor, I am truly yours in P. F.

W. H. B.

TRENTON, Mo., Feb. 2, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

According to the Grand Chief Conductor's circular, our division made arrangements to meet Brother E. E. Clark, by calling two special meetings, on Tuesday, Jan. 28, the day set for his meeting with us.

Several of our members met Brother Clark at the depot, and helped him carry his grips to the Evans house, where Brother Reed holds despotic sway, where a good dinner was in waiting. After dinner, we repaired to the hall, where, after an introduction to all the brothers present, the division was called to order.

The afternoon session was devoted entirely to general instruction. There were several questions of importance that had come up in our division, from time to time, that we were anxious to have a ruling on, and we found Brother Clark just the man to give us the desired information. Brother Clark is well posted, not only on the ritual, but on all the laws governing the Order of Railway Conductors. There was not a question asked that he was not able to answer and explain to the entire satisfaction of every member present. There was considerable time spent in talking over the condition of the Order as it now is, and the probable outlook for its future. We found Brother Clark's ideas on this subject almost identical with our own.

Our afternoon session took a recess from 5:30 to 7:30 o'clock, when Brother Clark was called to the chair, and the brothers present submitted themselves as candidates for the three degrees. The three degrees were gone through with, and each one clearly explained. Much valuable information was gained, as this is one place where our division is weak. The division closed at 11:10 p. m., every member declaring himself well pleased with the meeting, and glad to think that all our technical points were explained away, and our own members once more on the right road.

The Grand Division at Denver surely deserves great credit for electing Brother Clark to the position he now holds, as he is surely the right man in the right place. His gentlemanly and courteous manner not only make many friends for himself but the order in general.

Yours truly, in P. F.,

THEO. HEWES,

C. C. Div. 42.

BRainerd, Feb., 3, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Without referring to any one in particular, I must say I am just a little disgusted with the remarks I hear, and sometimes read, emanating from members of the Order. They seem to be hurt because a few ignorant "blatherskites" are throwing slurs at us. In my fifteen years' experience at railroading, I have often met these pusillanimous creatures, and in every case I could easily prove them to be devoid of manly principles by the very ones who we naturally think should be their best friends.

Once and for all, are we going to stand by our principles, and uphold them, or are we going to surrender? I say, surrender, never!

It is not wise to keep up contention and strife. Especially is this the case when men are associated together in doing work, as a train crew are. Be a gentleman, and treat your crew as such, and they will look upon you as a gentleman. Do not force an argument for the sake of putting your opinion up against some one else. Do not take offense at every thoughtless, silly remark that is made in your hearing; but if you are assailed, have the courage and manhood to stand by your convictions.

The Order has not yet reached that state of perfection that we would like it to have, nor do we claim it has; but we are on the right road, and we don't want to get to branching off on some other road just because we may find more company. The thing is to forge ahead, and go up, not down.

And now I wish to give a little attention to Brother Myers, of Elkhart, Ind. He propounded two questions. In his first question he asks: "Will the principles which we have so long advocated ever gain the end for which labor organizes?" The ostensible end that most labor organizations have in view is to hold the employer in subjection to the employee. If this is what Brother Myers has referred to, I say no, most emphatically no. Neither will the principle of any other organization on the face of the earth do it. They may produce a state of insurrection and reign of terror, for a time, though I do not believe that even this is possible in our country, where every citizen is a sovereign, and interested in preserving order and enforcing the laws. If, however, he means what it is really intended to gain, the inculcation of true manhood, the respect of all decent-minded officials, and due regard for the rights of our members by those in authority over us, I say yes, all other things being equal. We must ever bear in mind the fact that these principles must be exemplified in our own person. You cannot make a man believe that a tree is a peach tree when he sees it bear apples; and so we are judged by what is seen of us and not what we say we are. We can do more to win respect for our Order by our own individual efforts than by a fine display of principles on paper. I will admit that great injustice is done our members sometimes by narrow-minded officials. I know this to be a fact. But is it not just as true that very often some brother meets with deserved punishment through his own indifference and disregard of the rights of others? I have never yet seen a case of this kind that the brothers did not stand ready to assist him all they could to make a new start, if he showed the proper disposition. Any reasonable man will admit that to take every such case as this up before the superintendent, and ask him to overlook his fault, for no other reason than that he was a member of the Order, would, if successful, only encourage the brothers to continue in the same way, which would certainly not benefit him, and if persisted in would eventually bring the Order into disrepute and destroy its influence.

I do not want Brother Myers to think I am casting any reflection on him, for I have myself suffered from an uncalled for and arbitrary decision of a former superintendent, from which I have not yet fully recovered.

As I would be taking up too much space to enter into the second question, I will defer it to another time, when I may have something more to say.

Hoping I may hear from Brother Myers again, as well as some others on this subject, I am

Yours in P. F.,

JAS. B. GAUSS,
Division 34.

RICHMOND, Va. Feb. 7, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I offer a reward of ten dollars in old confed for the correspondent of Richmond Division 152, and hope I will have the pleasure of paying it soon. As correspondent of 152 cannot be found, I will try and let the readers of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR know that we are in the land of the living.

No. 152 held a special meeting Dec. 29th, 1889, for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year. I am glad to say they made a grand selection with the exception of secretary and treasurer. We have between eighty-five and one hundred members, all good workers, but am sorry to say, like all other Divisions, we do not have the attendance we should. I will call the attention of our members that we have a Benefit Department known as the O. R. C. insurance. I hope to see every member take a part in it before the grand division makes it compulsory, which I hope it will do next May. I do not see why every member cannot be a member of the insurance.

Yours Truly in P. F.,

C. D. GOODWIN.

BUTLER, Ind., Feb. 9, 1890.

Editor Conductor:

FRIENDS AND BROTHERS: I notice you have a run posted, made from Randolph to Moberly, 122 miles, in three hours and forty minutes with fifteen cars. Very good. I will give you a run made by engine 87, a small engine 16 by 24, from Butler to Detroit, 114 miles, in three hours and thirty minutes, with twenty-two loads and with several trains on the road.

Butler Division 207 is prospering, we have an initiation about every meeting.

Bro. Newton Richason met with a severe accident in getting his hand between draw bars, losing one finger.

We are very busy here, when the boys get in they are first out; rush and push at the present; every man who can read a way bill is running a train; our business was so heavy that they were compelled to run local freight crews which they doubled the road on Sunday. Hoping we will get to hear of some more fast runs soon.

Yours in P. F.

RUSH AND PUSH.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Feb. 5, 1890.

Mr. E. H. Belknap, Editor Conductor:

DEAR RIR: Elmira Division No. 9, held their first grand ball at Bundy hall, Elmira, N. Y., Friday evening, Jan. 24. It was a great success both socially and financially. About 350 couples followed in the grand march, which was led by Bro. Thos. Keefe and Bro. W. S. Whitley, the march was led in the letters of the Order, O. R. C. Great credit is due Brother's Keefe and Whitley for the manner in which they led the many couples. There was twenty-four dances on the program. At the end of the twelfth dance a most elegant supper was served at Max Height's Arbour, which was enjoyed by many, when dancing was resumed and continued until the early morn, when all went home highly pleased with the evening's entertainment. The ladies' program was the finest souvenir ever given in this city. The hall was most elegantly trimmed, the orchestra was partially hidden by a thirty foot arch trimmed with heavy evergreen and the letters O. of R. C. across the top with our G. C. C., C. S. W.'s picture beneath, and a basket of flowers, presented by Mrs. C. S. Wheaton, rested on a pillow of evergreens. Beneath his picture, the walls were hung with evergreens in droops, circles and semicircles. Across the hall there were wreaths festooned with flowers, with red, green and white lanterns hanging in them. The hall was pronounced by all as being the finest trimmed hall ever seen. The music was furnished by Cassady's full orchestra, composed of eight pieces, which was the finest music that could be had and was greatly appreciated by all. All went home declaring not to miss our next annual.

Elmira Division No. 9, wishes to extend a vote of thanks to Mrs. C. S. Wheaton for the most elegant basket of flowers presented to the committee, and also extend their thanks to Mr. James Lonergan and Elias Smith, of the D. L. & W. Railroad, for the engine bell and lanterns which they so kindly loaned them.

Bro's. Asst. G. C. C. Wilkins, Jno. Lenard and C. H. Lenard arrived on a late train, but were in time to get acquainted with some of our eastern girls. How is this. Bros. Lenard?

On Saturday Jan. 25th, Elmira Division held a special meeting. Asst. G. C. C., C. H. Wilkins in attendance. The new work was taken up and gone through with in the forenoon and afternoon sessions. The members were very much pleased with the remarks of Bro. Wilkins and the way he handled the new work.

Hoping, Mr. Editor, I have not taken too much of your time, and that this will find its way into the monthly, as it is my first attempt at writing, I remain,

Yours Truly in P. F.,

M. C. SLATTERY,

Elmira, Division, No. 9.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 10, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Since my letter in December's issue of the CONDUCTOR, I have seen nothing from West Philadelphia Division No. 162, which is probably due to our correspondent Bro. W. J. Maxwell's labor in his extensive workshop. He promises to soon change his residence, we trust to a location adjacent to that of Bro. Post, who, we learn, has arranged to assist the brother in his labors. Bro. Post will superintend the heel and sole department, which we trust will place Bro. Maxwell in a position to comply with the will of the majority, viz: to write for the CONDUCTOR.

It is with regret we learn that our worthy Bro. A. H. McCauley, who has faithfully performed the duties of division secretary and treasurer, since the organization of Division No. 162, has found it necessary to resign his charge, owing to his intended removal from the city, which is the result of having been promoted to the position of assistant train master on the New York division of the P. R. R system. The members of Division No. 162, wish him success in his new avocation.

We are advised that Bro. Lewis has been duly elected to fill the office of secretary and treasurer, vacated by the resignation of Bro. McCauley. Bro. Lewis may be a mess, but we feel assured he will be a success. We trust he will not allow his sympathies to stand in the way of promptly collecting dues and other moneys, as also calling the division's attention to the names of the brothers who seldom, if ever, visit the division, unless to get the new work. I trust the brothers will pardon us if we give the names of some of the non-attendants, viz. J. M. G., A. M. A., A. H., S. C. M., S. W. W., W. V., T. J. M., and many others. The aforesaid brothers should visit the division and note the new circulars issued from time to time.

We have just learned that Bro. White, has turned his attention to the sale of jewelry, we also learn that he has visited the families of our brothers in the southern section of the city, where he has made some extensive sales. Brother, why not pay West Philadelphia a visit, our wives and daughters appreciate the beautiful, (especially diamonds.)

We are also pleased to learn that Bro. William Bingham, has been rewarded for his faithful service as conductor on the New York Division P. R. R. system, by having been promoted to the position of assistant yardmaster at Mantua. The officers of this division are alive to merit in their employees. From our personal knowledge, we know Bro. Bingham has been a faithful servant to his officers, and a good member of his division.

We also learn that in addition to the duties of running a train, Bro. Meekins has been furnished with a key to the way scales at Thurlow. We trust the brother will give honest weight, (and again merit has been rewarded.)

We learn there are a number of brother members of our sister division who do not appreciate the efforts of the editor of THE CONDUCTOR to make the journal a success, while the brothers admit they have not lent any of their talent in the direction of that success complained of. Brothers this should not be, (condemn not while you assist not, and be generous.) If any of those brothers should by chance, take THE CONDUCTOR from their postoffice, I trust the above will meet their eye, and possibly some one will be induced to assist the editor in accomplishing a good work. Brothers, write, if only to give your opinion of the writer of this. As passenger business is booming on our division, it is only by an effort and a great loss of rest, that we can visit division meetings, but we promise to give attention to the proceedings of our next and also give THE CONDUCTOR the benefit of what we see and hear.

We learn the following brothers have expressed themselves as knowing who "Listener" is, viz. Bros. Meekins, White, Bingham, Hughes, McCauley and Jones.

I trust the brothers of No. 162 will not criticise our composition. Should Bro. D. F. F. criticise, we will tell what we saw in a Nineteenth St. horse car on Feb. 5th.

LISTENER.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Feb. 5, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

THE CONDUCTOR of Feb. 1st, was a surprise to the boys that they had a correspondent. Well, I will try again.

I was in Nashville Jan. 27th, and met with Rock City division. They had a good meeting; gave the new work to three of the brothers, and put a victim through the first and second degrees, and then suspended him for two weeks for burning off a journal.

We had a good meeting here on the 2d and had the talent of several of our brothers brought out on debates.

Our worthy secretary and treasurer has lost his baby. The brother and his worthy wife have our sympathy.

Business on the roads here is heavy and the only complaint is, give us M. T. cars, we need them bad. If I was a monied man, I would put up a car shop and build cars to lease to the southern roads. We have seven railroads running in here. Besides, we have the U. R. R., it runs around the city and to the suburban towns. They have fifty miles of track and run four passenger trains, making 100 trips. You can ride anywhere for five cents. They have five freight trains and they are kept busy, and we have the broad gauge up Lookout Mountain, runs from Union Depot to Point Lookout on top of the mountain, thirteen miles, fare 60 cents round trip, and is one of the grandest views you ever saw as you climb the mountain from the valley to the top. When you get to Point Lookout, if the day is clear, you can see into seven different states, and if you want to see something grand, be on top of the mountain when the clouds are hanging low and it is raining in the city. You are above the clouds and the day is bright, you look down on the clouds below you and it looks as though you was standing on the bank of some ocean. They have a hotel nearly completed, which has only 600 rooms. The veranda around it is just one-fourth of a mile long. There has been over 400 houses built on the mountain the last year. It is becoming quite a summer resort. This coming summer they will have plenty of water on it, the water company here is going to pump the water from the Tennessee river onto the mountain. The Lula Lake and Lula Falls are seven miles from the hotel on the mountain and it is grand. Rock City is something grand. Now, worthy brother, come down and see us and we will take you around and show you some of these wonderful sights. All we can talk of, we have a good division, a fine city and a grand mountain.

Yours in P. F.,
LOOKOUT.

Federation of Railway Employees.

NEWTON, Kas., Feb. 10, 1890.

At the present time so much is said among railroad men on this subject that it seems a fit topic for calm survey. As we understand it, it means to bring all classes of employes together under one head or board, having the power to act as the emergency (in their judgment) may require, and all persons who may be members of the bodies so federated are bound, by the action of the supreme board of control. This, we understand to be the plan proposed, and by it the interest of one becomes the interest of all, or "injury to one the concern of all," as others put it, and in this connection we are led to remark, that if this is the plan, would it not be better for all classes to join the Knights of Labor, and save expense, accomplishing at one stroke and avoid cumbersome machinery which causes delay, and dissatisfaction, and leads to dissolution. What has the above association taught us on this same line, (and being fair men we ought to profit by the experience of others) we find that one by one the trades have drawn out and gone by themselves. Why? Because their interests are conflicting. Have we any reason to think that any other federation will reach a better position? Take for example the B. of L. E., the oldest railway organization. They operate with the B. of L. F., their associate organization. It is to the interest of the B. of L. E., to keep all of its members in employment as engineers, isn't it? And it is to the interest of the B. of L. F., to have as many of its members better their condition and become engineers; both can't rule, for their interests on this point are certainly not identical. The same is true of the conductors and brakemen. It is to the interest of the Order of Railway Conductors to keep its members employed as conductors, while it is to the interest of the B. of R. B., to push their members forward as fast as possible. They arrange with the railway company that no conductors shall be hired, but brakemen shall be promoted, &c. Can they federate and still do the work they have outlined? The B. of L. E. occasionally find it to their interest to have one of their members put on a train as conductor. Can this be done and still preserve the peace. An engineer is sometimes made a yardmaster and sometimes a conductor is appointed. Can this be done and still retain the sympathy of the switchman? The above situation, is the case on many of our railway lines. Now, with these facts before us, are we willing to enter into partnership of this character? Farther, are you ready and willing to leave a profitable employment for an unprofitable idleness? Are you willing to put your own best interests, that of your wife and children, your home, society, everything you hold dear in life into the hands of any other man or men. Think these facts over and decide for yourself what you want to do and act for yourself, after a calm survey of the whole field. Make up your mind which path you choose, for upon you, and you alone, must fall the final responsibility.

ANTI FEDERATION.

BALTIMORE, MD, Feb. 12, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

I take the pleasure of asking if you will be kind enough to listen to a few words from old Collins Division, No. 5, in old Baltimore. Please do not throw our letters in the waste basket, but if you do, of course we won't get angry.

Well, in the first place we have had an election of officers, and all installed. Have elected as Grand Delegate to represent Collins Division No. 5 at Rochester in May, Brother Geo. Dewey, our S. and T. His pleasant and smiling face will do you good when you see him. He is used to that kind of work, as he has been there before, and the best of all, he don't get angry when you set down on him.

Well, we have commenced the new year with three new members, and the prospect of a good many more, of good material too. We had the misfortune last year to expel one for violating his obligation.

Well, again I have some good news: Brother P. Allen, one of the old time B. & O. passenger conductors, that has been running from Baltimore to Wheeling, for years, was one of the favorites on the railroad, so much so, that everybody liked to ride on his train, has been appointed, some time ago, as assistant train master from Baltimore to Keyser, W. Va. We wish Brother Allen success, hoping he will climb to the top of the ladder before long, for he is worthy of any position on a railroad, and is esteemed by all in general.

Brother Geo. Propps, of No. 5, a passenger conductor, was promoted to depot master in Washington, D. C. But Brother Propps has been very sick for some time. We wish him safe recovery and success, as he is a bright railroad man.

Well, there is our good old-time passenger conductor on the Penn. R. R., that runs from Washington to Philadelphia, Brother Mewshaw, of No. 5. We don't see his face in the division very often, we know he can't get there, but his heart is with us. They tell me, that the children beg their parents to ride on his train out of Washington. As Brother Mewshaw is a jolly good natured and tempered conductor, and is polite, that is what pleases the public.

Well, I can't go back on Brother H. Long, of Division 184, on B. & O., (through passenger conductor.) He is very popular and dear to us all. Also the old-time and popular conductor from the snake hunter's division, the old 3d, of the B. & O., is running a through train from Baltimore to Wheeling, Brother S. Taylor, of Division 183. The company made a good selection that time, as Brother Taylor is as sharp as a steel trap, both on the railroad and in the division room. He came from where they can take a rifle and hit a snake in the eye, with a .45 calibre ball, two hundred yards away. So look out brothers, he is a sharp-shooter in a division. Brother Rutter, a through passenger conductor on B. & O., past C. C., of Division 5, has just been promoted on a through run. We wish him success; also Brother A. L. Wilson, who runs a local passenger. A milk train in the morning and a passenger in the evening. The company knew he was a good judge of milk, as he has drank quantities of it. He also suits the country people, as he knows all about farming. There is Brother Clay, who went to farming about a year ago. He has come back again on the B. & O. The company is glad to get such brothers. George wanted to get back to where the O. R. C. is, and we are glad to get him, as we need all good men in our household. We wish him success.

Division 5 has no regular correspondent. If we had, possibly he would have written less, but I am a new beginner and will send you more next time.

Wishing you and all brothers success this year, I remain,

Yours in P. F.,

H. MORRIS.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Feb. 4. 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

At our last election of officers, we elected a Corresponding Secretary. Since that time I have watched the columns of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, to see if Division No. 99 was represented. Watching in vain and not seeing it represented, I fear a brother has fallen from the ranks, and I would like to call Brother Corresponding Secretary of Division 99 into line, through the silent medium of the pen and the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

Yours in P. F.,

J. M. ROBINSON.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Feb. 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

We have all had the blues, on account of the loss of our Superintendent, Mr. J. H. Averill, of the S. C. Ry, he having accepted a position on the Central railroad of Georgia.

The Order of Railway Conductors never had a better friend—in fact he was the builder of 208.

The aid he gave this division when organized, placed it in a very enviable position, both numerically and financially. We are disposed to think our present officers, however, may prove friendly to the Order.

I send you some clippings from the Charleston World. This will give you an idea of the esteem in which he was held, not only by the railroad employes, but the citizens of Sommerville as well. I regret not sending them sooner.

Yours truly in P. F.,

S. C. G., 208.

A HANDSOME TESTIMONIAL.—Col. J. H. Averill, formerly superintendent of the South Carolina railway, was pleasantly as well as strikingly reminded yesterday, of the falsity of the old adage: "Out of sight out of mind." About fifty of the employes of the road, met him at his residence in Sommerville, and presented, through that faithful veteran, Capt. J. W. O'Brien, (who is, by the way, one of the most popular conductors on the line,) an elegant set of one hundred pieces of a silver service, and a china dinner and tea set, consisting of one hundred and twenty-five pieces. This testimonial was gotten up by the employes of the transportation, machinery and other departments. Messrs. H. V. O'Rourke. T. M. Doar, W. J. Cormier and J. W. O'Brien, deserve the thanks of the employes for their interest and activity in soliciting subscriptions, and for the very remarkable good taste of their selection.

Capt. O'Brien in making the presentation said:

"Col. Averill: I have been selected by my fellow employes of the South Carolina railway, to present to you, on their behalf, this silver service, as a token of their esteem and affection. It is with unfeigned regret, that we contemplate your departure from our midst, and I assure you, that in the new field of duty to which you are called, none will hear of your success with more pleasure, or more earnestly desire your happiness and prosperity, than the men of the "Old Reliable."

Col. Averill, in accepting the present, made a very feeling address, which the lack of space only precludes its publication. He thanked them for their generous testimonial, spoke of his long connection with the road and his affection for its employes, and the valuable assistance they had given him in performing his duty. He expressed regret at leaving them and his comfortable home in Sommerville, and he closed as follows:

"I will wish for your future success, and you may rest assured, that I hope that the powers which now control the road may see, as I think they will, that no truer, no better set of employes could be found, and that you will be allowed to remain, and I think you will remain quietly in your positions. My friends, let me thank you once more for your remembrance, for this appreciation of my services to you."

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., Feb. 6, 1890.

EDITOR RAILWAY CONDUCTOR: Although not a member of the insurance department, yet myself, with others, are very much interested in the solution of what may be called one of the problems of the day.

There seems to be more or less apathy in our Order at large, in regard to attending division meetings. Now, it seems to me a very simple matter, to arrange our manner of being insured, to a very satisfactory manner to all, and at the same time do our Order a world of good.

Let the fact of being insured, depend upon the member keeping his dues paid up in his own division, and being in good standing in all respects.

There is no doubt as to there being cheaper insurance than the Conductor's Insurance Department affords. For example, the Hartford gives $4,000 for $30 per year, with a $25 weekly indemnity for twenty-six weeks, and the Standard and Pacific Mutual, I think, even do a little better. And right in the back of our own Journal we advertise an association which does business cheaper than we do ourselves.

Now, in my belief, there is no reason why a man who attends to his daily vocations, be it as trainman or otherwise, should not be allowed the same privilege of insurance as those who can stand an examination. So much for those who cannot pass muster. And now for those who want cheap insurance. My recollection is that our Grand Division report, shows a membership of 15,000 in good standing, which, allowing all in good standing as above, to be insured, an assessment of twenty-five cents per member would be $3,750, four assessments being equal to six premiums. Now, I believe under the present plan, there are about 5,000 members of the insurance department, with an average death rate of three per month. That being the case, $1.50 per month paid by each member, would cover the nine deaths, allowing the average to be more for the greater number, and each one pay in $2.00 per month, would make the sum of $30,000 and pay twelve premiums, which would undoubtedly be a very large average, and no doubt there would be a surplus at the above rate. Thus insuring every member of the Order, at a personal cost of $24, as against $36, on the present plan of the select 5,000. Should the death ratio only average ten or eleven per month, then there would be a sinking fund, from which deduct expenses for disbursement of claims, the balance, if any, to accumulate for a period of one or five years, and at the end of the time decided upon, it may be drawn upon to pay premiums until exhausted, or by a vote of all divisions, be devoted to some perpetuity. This plan would certainly have a tendency to draw us closer together as an order, make our division meetings more effective, brothers would keep their dues paid up, stop the frequent calls for charity, and forever settle the question of insurance, particularly as there are at this time other questions of as great, or greater importance to us as a body.

There have been of late several articles of importance upon the advisability of federation, and while I, with a large number of others, oppose federation upon any basis, while again some favor it, it is a subject which should be very carefully and liberally discussed, as under the present existing circumstances, we cannot afford to lose the opportunity of protection, one way or the other, and unless the railroad managements give us undoubted assurance under our present principles, our course is very plain, we can ill afford to be a "cats paw" for any one.

And now comes the question, as to how to reach the railroad managements? I think it can be done, and in a way they will appreciate, and at the same time, be satisfactory to the Order. There is no doubt but in a general way, our presidents, directors, and superintendents, favor our Order. But they overlook the fact of their trainmasters, dispatchers, and others, who have trainmen in their charge, who are, while not belonging to any association, at heart, in sympathy with B. R. C., & B. R. B. men, and thereby giving them preference in promotion over O. R. C. men. Now, the plan I propose is this: Let our Grand Chief Conductor issue a circular letter, with the seal of division attached, to all general managers, superintendents, and trainmasters, defining our position and requesting them to undisputedly give preference to O. R. C. men, where all things else are equal. Ought not the fact of our being compelled to serve an apprenticeship of two years, as a conductor, before we are eligible to membership in the Order, be a recommendation above all others of our capability as an organization? There is one thing certain, the very fact of the railroad managements recognizing and giving preference in any way to men belonging to other organizations over O. R. C. men, is the cause of more dissatisfaction than any other one thing, and it is high time, before we are engulfed in the whirlpool of federation, that we call the attention of those interested, to the facts in the case.

There is one more matter I wish to speak of and then I will "let go." I notice so many brothers, when writing to THE CONDUCTOR, substantially consign their communications to the waste basket. Don't do it, brothers! THE CONDUCTOR is our organ, and through it we arrive at conclusions of the various subjects under discussion. So write what you have to say, however trivial, some one may be benefitted thereby.

Yours in P. F.,
S. P. MADEIRA.

COLUMBIA, S. S., Feb. 1890.

EDITOR CONDUCTOR:—I will start out by saying, that I am not better "qualified" or more able to "grapple" the subject of life insurance than Bro. Z. C. Martin, still I have no hesitancy in expressing my views on this subject, for it is a matter that we all should be interested in.

The companies conducted on the assessment plan, my brother says, "have never taken their place in the front rank of life insurance "companies." Some have even gone so far as to speak of them as a fraud and a snare." For the past ten years I have insured in none but assessment companies. I am not well enough posted on insurance to say which is managed the best, but I do know this much about them, I can carry more insurance for less money in them, than any other companies in existence, and defy any one to prove to the contrary.

I belong to the Mutual Aid of the United States and Canada, Knights of Honor and Benefit Department of the O. R. C. I agree with the Bro., that there is objections. I do not like the manner of forwarding assessments, still I prefer it to any of the others I belong to. And now as to the article that the brother refers to on page 44, Article 14. I admit it has been confusing to all who have read it, for a brother who is disabled and can only work a few days occasionally, certainly cannot support his family, and still he is not totally disabled. Now, as I understand it, our Order claims that its foundation is charity. Now let us prove that it is not only so in name. By striking out the word totally, it would then read any member of this department becoming disabled, &c.

And now in answer to another question of Bro. Martin: "Why is it that out of fifteen thousand members of the Order, less than five thousand are insured." I will say, that the freight business of most of the southern railroads is of such a nature, that a great number of the conductors do not run as such, regularly, more than six months in the year. The balance of the time they only catch what spare running they can; thereby not averaging more than forty dollars per month the year round. Now, how is it possible for this class of conductors to keep up a twenty-five hundred dollar policy? The result is, they go into other organizations where they can get a smaller insurance: for instance, several members of 208 are insured in the K. of P., and it is only natural, that they become more interested in the organization where they have the most at stake.

I fully agree with Brother Martin, that our insurance laws want revising, but they want to be revised in such a way as to try and keep our members from straying into other organizations. And the only way you can do it, is to give them a lower insurance, for every member who insures, you are very likely to get them to take more interest in the Order.

And now, Mr. Editor, I beg to apologize for trespassing so much, and if you have no room, throw it away. I am afraid I will never be able to convert any one to my views, but will console myself with T'is better to have labored in vain,

Than never to have labored at all.

Yours in P. F.,
S. C. GILBERT, 208.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb., 11, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

MY DEAR SIR: I have watched, and read with much interest, the articles both for and against the Insurance Department of the O. R. C., and am pleased to note the able manner in which some of our members are grappling with this important branch of the work.

I am not certain that you care for the ideas or expressions of one who is not at present a railway man, or in other words, "one of the boys;" therefore, let me preface my letter by assuring you, and through you all brothers of the Order, that my love and kindly feeling for the Order, and those who are eligible to be members of it, is just as warm, and just as sincere, as it was at any stage of my railway career, which covered a period of over sixteen years.

I notice in your No. 3, of February, 1, an article from Brother Martin, of Grafton, W. V., and must agree with him that it is something to be wondered at that our Order, with its fifteen thousand members, most of whom enter upon the discharge of a hazardous duty every day of their lives, and yet the benefit department has only about one from every three of our membership. Is it possible our good brothers have so far forgotten themselves, and their obligations to a loving wife, an aged parent, or a happy group of children, as not to see and feel the need of throwing around them, while they may, the strong arm of protection? Do those who are married remember the vow once taken, to cherish, protect and defend, and do you believe that you have fulfilled your vow if you neglect this all-important factor for the present, with perhaps a solemn promise to yourself that at some future time you will become a member of the benefit department? Alas, my brother, you well know your life is in your hands; this may be your last trip, and one of our best rules, as we all know, is this: "In all cases of doubt, take the side of safety." It may be possible for you to pass a medical examination to-day, while it may not be to-morrow, and ere the morning dawns you may have been called by the "Supreme Conductor" of the universe to that bourne from whence no traveler returns. Therefore, let me add my appeal, do not delay this important matter.

When a man proposes to a lady, he asks much more than he thinks at the time. He asks her unreservedly to leave father, mother, and it may be, a comfortable home—possibly the dear home of her childhood, where comfort and plenty were provided, and to join with him in making another home; in short, to enter upon an unknown future. Considering all the sacrifice he asks, and the risk she assumes, what does he owe her for that earnest love and devotion? If he be a true man he will give her a substantial assurance by placing in her hands an insurance upon his life, and thus guarantee that not only now, but in the future as well, she will be protected in case of his untimely death. Is it not true that a thoughtful, wise man will consider the chances of death as well as of life? One is a certainty—the other an uncertainty. How important, then, to provide against this certainty of death. And I maintain that the head of a family is under a most solemn obligation to provide for his own household. If he does not he is declared to be worse than an infidel. He is expected to make this provision, and his true manhood asks, "How shall I best provide?" If life be spared he will provide, but if he has a policy, that is a cash reserve. It is money in the bank—yes it is even better, for it cannot by any legal process be diverted from its intended use. No process of administration can consume it. It is a monument that time cannot efface, and that moths cannot corrupt. It will complete unfinished business, pay honest debts, doctor's bill and funeral expenses; clear up the little mortgage on the home, settle the estate, etc., without loss, delay or inconvenience. It manifests prudence and sagacity, and is the cap-stone of business affairs, thus to keep on hand this ready cash provision. The man who thinks that death relieves him from all moral obligations and protection, as has been indicated, is neither a true nor a wise man, and the effects of neglect are felt and seen all around us. Daily and hourly families of widows and orphans, who only a few short months ago were blest with plenty and happiness, are now in want, ignorance, vice and disgrace. Would you have sure blessings for your household, husband, father? It is possible to-day. Why, then, delay until to-morrow, when by disease, sudden sickness, or death, it is forever beyond your reach?

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, recently in one of his sermons, said this: "Some of you are making a great swash in life, and after a while will die, leaving your families beggars, and will expect us ministers to come and lie about your excellencies, but if you send for me I will make this my text: 'He that provideth not for his own, and especially not for his own household, is unworthy the name of man.'"

And now, Mr. Editor, is there anything so helpless as a woman whose husband has just died? With a family of children at her back, she goes out to fight for bread. Shall she become a menial servant in some one's household? Ah, no! Not she who has depended on you all these years, and who has been filling your house with joy and light. And how any man with no surplus of estate, but still able to meet the assessment or premium on a life policy, can refuse to do so, and then look his children in the face, say his prayers and retire expecting them to be answered, is a mystery I have never been able to fathom.

And what amount of comfort, of education, of moral and spiritual advantage, is represented in the simple statistics, that in this country there has been paid to the families of the benefit, seventy millions of dollars, and in five years they have paid three hundred millions of dollars, and are promising to pay and stand ready to pay, those now holding policies, two thousand millions of dollars.

Stop, consider. My brother, a part of this work is yours, a part is mine. And may God in His infinite wisdom and love, make it a pleasure, not a duty, for us to ever be found on the right side of this question, and may it never be necessary for a circular to go out in our behalf, but let us assert our manhood in a manner which speaks louder than words, is more powerful than pen can write, by associating ourselves with some order. But let me say, I am now a member of seven different orders, am not a railroad man, probably will never be again, but I have no reason to regret, the fact, that I carry the protection offered by our noble Order, and find it less expensive than all others—with one exception; and hope while I live to remain loyal to the O. R. C., and in conclusion, let me beseech those who are not members of the benefit department, to become such just as speedily as possible. Remember the old maxim, "Never put off till to-morrow what can be done to-day."

Now, Mr. Editor, you have a perfect right to use this as you choose. You are the judge and the jury, and you know better than I, the size of your waste basket. I am not sure, but the division of which I am a member, (Buffalo Division) has a correspondent, if so, I ask his pardon, and hoping these few lines may aid in leading some brother to a full fledged membership in our benefit department, and pledging at all times my earnest efforts in behalf of our Order, I remain,

Yours in Perpetual Friendship,

U. L. UPSON.

CORNING, N. Y., January 24, 1890.

EDITOR: I presume that if I do not prepare a communication for the CONDUCTOR I shall receive a polite invitation to do so, and, therefore, will proceed to detail the movements of myself during the interval between this and the last letter. After making the trip as far east as Norfolk, Va., I attended a union meeting at Peoria, Ill., in company with the G. C. C. and G. S. We had a very pleasant meeting, although not as well attended as I had expected it would be. The business brought before the meeting was thoroughly discussed, and I believe was fruitful of good results. The presence of several brothers from divisions located in the state of Texas testified to the fact that the interest in the Order and its workings is felt by these divisions, when brothers come so far to attend a union meeting and it did me a great deal of good to meet them all. My time since the union meeting, has been spent in the general work of the Order, most of the time until January 18th being spent at the office while the G. C. C. was absent. On the 18th I left Chicago for an extended trip east, to visit the divisions located in that part of this jurisdiction. This trip will occupy my time until the last day of February and during that time will visit all the divisions in the states of Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, also Canada, not previously visited, as well as part of Pennsylvania.

On Sunday, January 19th, met with Division 17 at Toronto, Canada, and had a very pleasant meeting, the brothers turning out very nicely. I was treated very cordially by the brothers there, and all who were at Toronto in May, 1888 can testify that they can do it.

On Monday, the 20th, visited Division 8, at Rochester, N. Y. and had a very nice meeting, although only a small number of brothers could get away to attend. The brothers of No. 8 are making great preparations for the entertainment of the Grand Division and I feel satisfied that they will succeed in the undertaking by the way in which they tried to make my stay with them pleasant. I am also satisfied that the Grand Division at Denver acted wisely in selecting Rochester as the place of holding the 22d session. On Tuesday, the 21st, met with Division 200, at Bradford, Pa. The hall being in use we had to wait until the K. of P. lodge finished their labors and it was 10 p. m. before we went to work and we closed about 2 a. m., having held a well attended meeting, as well as one of interest to all. During the day I was taken in hand by Brothers Langworthy and Landon, and the mysteries of the oil business explained to me. We also made a short trip on the narrow gauge, while not equal to the D. & R. G. was an item of interest. I regret to learn that Brother Langworthy, who has been in the service of the Erie Company for twenty-five years, has been called upon to sever his connection with that company. Instead of something being wrong with the conductor, I think there is something wrong higher up, when a railway company will continue a man in its service twenty-five years and then tell him that his service is not satisfactory. It would look as though the management was a little dilatory in the performance of its duty, in that they were so long finding it out. It is possible for a person, no matter in what capacity, to learn a lesson too late, and it is also possible that it will be realized in the future by those who at times believe that they have learned it all. On Wednesday, the 22d, visited Division 163 at Oil City, Pa., and while no meeting was held I spent a very pleasant time with several of the brothers in conversation relative to the Order. On Thursday the 23d, visited Division 225, at Hornellsville, N. Y., and had a nice meeting during my stay. Was hospitably entertained by Brother A. J. Loftus, C. C. of the Division, and his estimable wife, who did all they could to make me feel at home, and that they succeeded needs no words from me to any that have the pleasure of Brother Loftus' acquaintance. I very much regret my inability to express my appreciation and thanks for their hospitality and would like nothing better than an opportunity to reciprocate. On Friday—well as this is Friday, I will be compelled to stop, for I have just arrived here and expect to meet with Division 176 this evening. I don't feel like closing without saying a word with regard to brothers doing their talking in the division room. That is certainly the only place to do it, and as it is getting close to the time when the Grand Division meets it is essentially necessary that what you have to say with regard to the workings of the Order be said in the Division room, in order that your delegate may act intelligently upon measures that may be introduced at that time.

Yours in P. F.,

C. H. WILKINS.

OTTAWA, Ont., Feb. 7, 1890,

Editor Railway Conductor:

Since writing you last I have visited several divisions, beginning with Division 176, at Corning, N. Y. During the evening we held a meeting, which was fairly well attended, and at which we were pleased to have the presence of Brothers T. P. and John Leonard, of St. Paul Division 40, T. P. having just returned from Baltimore, where he had been with the remains of our late Brother Hy Shew, who was also a member of No. 40. After the meeting, which occupied some three hours, we took a train for Elmira, to be present at the first annual ball given by Division 9. To say that it was a complete success, both socially and financially, would be but to reiterate the expressions heard on all sides. The hall was beautifully decorated with evergreens, and the colored lanterns of the railway service. The picture of the Grand Chief Conductor was a prominent feature, as it was suspended over the stage. A beautiful basket of flowers, the gift of Mrs. Wheaton, sat directly beneath the picture.

On the 25th a meeting was held with Division 9, both a forenoon and afternoon session. The forenoon was spent in communicating the work, and the afternoon in its exemplification.

On the 26th a meeting was held with Division 10, at Waverly, N. Y., which was well attended, taking into consideration the fact that several members of this division are so situated that they are not able to attend the meetings, as they do not reach Waverly on their runs at all. The second and third degrees were worked, and the time spent in a full discussion of matters of interest to the members of the Order. Our good brother, Milo Hoadley, was present.

On the 27th we visited Binghamton Division 154, and while only a few of the brothers at this place were able to be present, the meeting was enjoyed by all. The second and third degrees were exemplified, and the work explained to the satisfaction of all. During the evening Brother Howard Evans, of the executive committee, put in an appearance, and I had a very pleasant visit with him. I also met Brother Geo. Vincent, of Division 171, at Troy, who is at present engaged in putting the C. B. & I. F. cigar on the market.

On the 28th a short ride of fourteen miles took us out of New York and into Pennsylvania, and we were in the hands of a committee from Great Bend Division 129. This is a truly good division. A unity of feeling exists among the members that is more noticeable than at any place visited. They are not large in numbers, being composed of less than forty members, but they are well off in the feeling that pervades their membership. They have something over $200 in the treasury. We had present one or two brothers from Scranton, and three or four from Binghamton, in all about thirty-three members being present, and the best meeting held so far on the trip was had. The work was fully exemplified on three candidates. I take this opportunity of thanking the brothers of 129 for their kind and cordial treatment of myself, and those who accompanied me, on this visit. They certainly succeeded in making us all realize that we were among friends, and I can assure them that it was appreciated by all.

On the 29th, I left for Oneonta, to visit Division 45, putting myself in charge of Brother Harrold, of the D. & H. C. company, and after a ride of 130 minutes arrived at the home of No. 45. On account of their inability to get their hall, we were compelled to hold a merely social meeting in the hotel. Nothing of the secret work was gone through with but a full discussion of business that is of interest to Division 45 was had. After about two hours spent in this way we parted, better acquainted than when we met.

Returning to Binghamton, en route for Syracuse, I found myself in the company of Brother Bolles, of No. 155, with whom I had a very pleasant visit. At Syracuse we were compelled to part company, Brother Bolles to finish his trip to Oswego, while I was to take the N. Y. C & H. R. for East Syracuse, or, as it is called on their card, Dewitt. I found myself not alone, as Brother Weisz was also on a visit to Division 43, where we arrived in short order. Only a very few brothers were able to be present, but two hours were spent very pleasantly, and I believe very profitable.

Division 167 having cancelled their date, I went direct to Watertown, to visit Division 25. On this trip I also found myself in charge of another brother, Geo. Donovan, of Division 167, who was delegate to Denver, and is also returned to Rochester. During the forenoon Brother Pat. Redmond, secretary of No. 25, accompanied me about the city, trying to make my stay as pleasant as possible. During the afternoon a meeting was held, at which the work was explained. A very pleasant hour was spent in this way.

Taking the R. W. & O., en route for Ottawa, Ont., I found that Brother Fred Britton was the Captain, and also a member of Division 25. Owing to the fact that the ferry had stopped running at Morristown, I was compelled to go to Clydenburg, and as the train was over four hours late the ferry having stopped until Monday morning, so that I was in a predicament, but was fortunate enough to get out of it on Sunday. I tried to find some one to row me over the river, and finally succeeded in doing so. We were compelled to walk about half a mile on the ice, pulling the boat with us, and then rowing the rest of the way, about a mile. We succeeded in reaching the shore and were met by a custom officer, who was successfully passed. A hotel was hunted up, and we found that we must stay in Prescott until 12:20 a. m., before we could get a train for Brockville, where I expected transportation over the C. P. R., and which I may add, I found on reaching Brockville. Leaving via the C. P. R., at 6 a. m., we reached Ottawa at 9:10 a. m., and were met by Brother Dixon, the delegate to Denver, and Brother Cadigan, the Chief Conductor of Division 29, while I had been fortunate enough to have had the company of Brother Wright, the secretary of No. 29. The train was in charge of Brother Moore, also a member of No. 29. We were driven directly to the hall, but on account of the Brothers not putting in an appearance we went to Hotel Windsor for dinner, and held a meeting in the afternoon, which was not very well attended, but through no fault of the brothers. There are so many sick, and the business of the road is such that it was impossible to get any great number of them together at once.

In company with Brother Colbourn, I left Ottawa for North Bay, at 12:20 a. m. Ottawa is 250 miles farther west, and is reached only by travelling through a very rough and unprepossessing country, for a portion of the way, at least for a short distance out of Ottawa the country is, however built up, and some fine towns lie on the line of the C. P. R. At 10:15 a. m. we reached North Bay, which is located on Lake Nipissing and from which Division 242 takes its name, Brothers' Hugh and Washburn, the Chief Conductor and secretary, met us at the station and conducted us to the hotel, where we were soon nicely quartered. Being unable to get a quorum we could not hold any meeting, and we were compelled to stop over a day, after telegraphing Division 223, at Chapleau, and finding that no meeting could be held there. The C. P. R., is doing more business now than ever before, and the Soo route is crowded, so that the crews from Chapleau have been transported to North Bay to handle the business. There are about fifty-five crews running out of North Bay, and they have hard work to get the necessary amount of rest. They are fortunate in having a superintendent who is their friend, and that they realize it can be proved on every hand. I met the gentleman, and found him a gentleman, in every sense of the word, and one who is fair-minded with regard to the men under his charge. He did all he could to get the men in to attend the meeting, holding trains to enable them to be present. Of course this is almost beyond what might be expected, but I can assure him that it was appreciated by all.

After the meeting a social evening was spent with the brothers, and one which I shall never forget. We were fortunate to have with us Mr. J. White, the solicitor for the C. P. R., who, if he fails to keep any company in the best of spirits, none other need try. Leaving North Bay at 4 a. m. in charge of Brother Cadigan, we reached Ottawa at 2:15 p. m. and as the Dominion parliament is in session, and I had no meeting until Saturday, I concluded to stop over and visit the house of commons. The evening was spent by taking an observation trip through the buildings, visiting both houses; also, the library, as well as the different rooms throughout the buildings, under the guidance of Mr. J. Wood, member from Brockville, also deputy speaker of the house. Mr. Wood was very courteous in his treatment, and it was fully appreciated by those whom he had in charge. But this visit was only a taste, and so my stopping off at this time is attributed to the first visit. We were furnished with tickets, without which no one can enter, and were conducted to seats in the gallery. The Franchise Bill was under discussion, and the motion having been made to repeal the act of 1885, some very able arguments were introduced by both the conservative and the opposition. As it had been under discussion for a day or two previous to our visit, and would be continued another day, we could not tell what the outcome would be. It was quite a treat for me, and one which I may never have the pleasure of hearing or seeing again. Both the conservative and liberal party leaders were present, but did not discuss the measure.

I leave this evening for Montreal, P. Q., where I expect a large meeting may be held. I am prepared to believe that these visits, even though only slimly attended, are fruitful of much good. It creates the idea in the minds of the brothers that they are not forgotten, and it enables them to exchange their views on the questions that are of interest to the Order, and by so doing, know what others think, as well as themselves. These visits are for the purpose of giving the members an opportunity to tell the Grand Officers just what they want done, or what they want not done. This is their right, and I only regret, that so few avail themselves of it.

The new work, I find, is fully appreciated by the membership throughout the country, and it is creating renewed interest in the Order, which will go a long way toward putting the Order where it belongs—in the lead of all organizations in the country.

I am somewhat—yes, a good deal—surprised to find the feeling that exists, almost universally among the membership, as to the necessity of doing something, to put us in a position to receive that respect to which we are entitled, but do not receive, and methinks that the sentiment of the membership, expressed through their delegates at Rochester, will be the means of putting this matter in a different light before the railway managers of this country, and they may say that it was ill-advised, but they cannot say that it was hasty. Twenty-one years of existence, certainly ought to be enough to find out whether we are standing in our own light, or not, and if we find that we are, the very men who may deprecate any such action will have the consolation of knowing, that it is directly attributable to themselves.

Yours truly in P. F.,

C. H. WILKINS.

Feb. 13th, 1890.

DEAR BRO. EDITOR: Since writing you, I have visited Divisions 77, 116, 51, 59, 30, 60, 212, 28, 226, 141, 42, 238, 194, 39, 49, and 188.

If at any place meetings were not held, the excuse was good, as I found that nearly all the roads had a rush of business, and the boys were all busy and making lots of time.

I was very pleasantly met and entertained.

At Texarkana, I enjoyed a very pleasant visit with the Brothers, among whom were Carmichael, (old reliable) Bro. Paul, train master on T. P., and Brother Woodward. At Springfield I fell in with a crowd of thoroughbreds, too numerous to mention; shuffle them all up and deal, you are sure to get a flush. At Sedalia I found one of the most energetic, enthusiastic and nicest working divisions in the Order. I spent a very pleasant evening at the home of Brother Blythe, and we had a well attended and interesting meeting; my ink and your space will not permit of my naming all the pleasant acquaintances I met. We had an elegant supper with Brother Bernard and wife. If any of the boys go to Sedalia, remember Bro. Doyle is proprietor of the Sicher house.

I had a very pleasant visit and a nice meeting with 212, at Slater, where I was entertained by Brother Burgum and wife. At Atchison we had a meeting in the evening and instructed Brother P. H. Lyman in the new work. Some one seemed to be trying to burn the city, as we were interrupted twice by fires in the immediate neighborhood. At Horton, nearly every one was out, but I had a pleasant visit with several of their members, among them Brother Fawcett, who I understand is developing into quite a criminal lawyer.

At St. Joe, business was rushing and not many were in. Met and enjoyed a talk with Brothers Heaton, Lathrop and Throop, and spent the evening with Brother Johnston. At Trenton I found another fine working division, and I certainly thoroughly enjoyed my visit there. Brother Stone is still there as train master of the Rock Island, and Brothers Green and — as yard masters. Boys, if any of you go to Trenton, do not forget to go to Brother Reed's hotel, where he reigns as jovial as he did on his train. My visit to 238 was a repetition of that to 42, and they are as nice a working division as you can find anywhere, and what they lack in numbers they make up in zeal. Their hospitality is unsurpassed.

At Brookfield, I found a good division and we had a good attendance at two meetings, where the work was fully exemplified upon bonafide candidates. Boys, a little more business and a little less play. Division 39 at Hannibal, had, by some misunderstanding drawn the conclusion, that I was to remain over Sunday with them, and had arranged a meeting for Sunday. Brother Wilhelm took me home with him, and rustled up several of their members for an impromptu meeting that evening, and the evening was spent in the division room very pleasantly.

Going from Hannibal to Moberly with Brother Herrington, I met on the train Brother Lyons, Superintendent M. K. & T., and had a very pleasant chat with him. At Moberly, the Wabash was full of business, but I met a number of the Bros. and was pleased with my visit. I took supper with Brother Callahan and wife and enjoyed the evening visiting with the Brothers, notably among them, Brothers Paul and Jarvis. At Stanbury I met some old acquaintances and many new ones. We had a good meeting, and conferred the third degree upon Brother (it has just got away from me,) of Division 159, by request of his division. At all of these meetings, matters of importance to the Order were discussed, and I find the sentiment is nearly universally the same. In the matter of the new class of insurance, no one seems to take kindly to it. After finishing my program at Stanbury, I went back to Springfield to attend an important trial in Division 30. I went from there to Cedar Rapids for a day, and from there home, arriving there the 11th, after an absence of six weeks. I met with 124 the 16th, 128 the 18th, and will attend the union meeting at Sedalia the 22d and 23d.

I have not mapped out any positive program for the next few weeks, as I am of the opinion, that fixing dates weeks ahead is not the most satisfactory, or the best way to attend to the work. Right here, let me say to the divisions who have not been visited, that there is no disposition on my part to slight them in the slightest degree, but there is important work that must be promptly attended to, and I aim to work where the effort will prove of the most good to the Order. I shall try to visit you all as soon as I possibly can. I intend to visit portions of Texas, Kansas and Illinois in the immediate future, on matters of importance, and I hope when the summing up is made, I can hear the welcome mandate, "Well done." Tell our members I am in P. F.

E. E. CLARK.

The March Wide Awake is replete with entertaining stories. "The Beautiful Emily Marshall," by Mrs. Francis A. Humphrey; "Animals at School," by Eleanor Lewis; "Maine in the Early Days," "Early Days in California," a Serial, "Gib Granger," by Mr. Stoddard, and "Bony aud Ban," by Mary Hartwell Catherwood.

The address of Brother D. W. Parkhurst, Sec. Division 237, should read: Blackstone street freight office, Worcester, Mass.

Our readers will confer a favor if they will mention the CONDUCTOR, when writing to any of the firms that advertise in its columns.

Another communication from Stanchfield Division 41, with no name. Please send the same, and we will be very glad to give it proper recognition.

Any Brother knowing the whereabouts of Brother E. S. McGee, who was a charter member of Boone Division 34, will kindly advise Brother S. W. Wood, Daniels house, Marion, Iowa.

We have received a communication headed, "What was the Order of Railway Conductors Organized For?" If the Brother will kindly give us his name, we will gladly give it a place in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

In this number appears the advertisement of Jos. P. Wathier. A perusal will repay any conductor who wishes to purchase a watch. Mr. Wathier is thoroughly responsible, and his customers may depend upon his goods being exactly as represented.

The March number of Demorest's Magazine will be published at noon, Febt 15, If you wish to learn to cook, then start in with this number, for these are the lessons given by the best teachers in New York city. There will be nearly two hundred illustrations in this number.

Brother W. P. Daniels, Grand Secretary, has received from Hon. Atley Peterson, Railroad Commissioner of Wisconsin, several valuable books pertaining to railway legislation in that state, and copies of the annual report of the commissioner, also other important state documents, for all of which the gentleman will please accept many thanks.

Greer Division No. 72, has kindly sent us a copy of their time card, No. 3, which went into effect Jan. 1, which states that all regular trains will start at 1:30 p. m., sharp, on the second and fourth Sundays, from the depot on Fourteenth avenue, north, G. A. R. hall, Fargo, North Dakota. A. L. Carey, conductor, assisted by C. H. Baker.

A good Brother of Division 180, Atlanta, writes to the Grand Secretary as follows: "I would have sent this letter before, had it not been that I have been obliged to be at home for several days, taking charge of a new member of the Order of Railway Conductors, making six, in all; father and mother both doing nicely." Any comment is unnecessary and out of place.

The cuts that adorn the history of one of the most renowned conductors in the United States, which appears in this number, are from The American Railway, by permission of the publishers, Messrs. Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York, The book is one that should be read by every conductor in the United States. See the prospectus of the CONDUCTOR, and learn how to get a copy free.

The B., C. R. & N. R. R. is putting in a very busy month. At this writing they are shipping about three hundred cars a day from the ice fields at Rockford, Rock Falls, Spirit Lake and other places along their line. This, with much overwork, means good pay for all the boys, and they have one thing in their favor: beautiful weather, which adds much to the comfort of all concerned. The ice is from 18 to 20 inches in thickness, clear as crystal, and quite—cool.

We are instructed to give notice, that one Otis Millard Underwood, a member of Division 104, Middletown, N. Y., and conductor of the milk train from Middletown to the city that wishes the World's Fair, met with his first serious accident on January 23d, 1890, he having asked for a few days respite, in order that he might transact the most important work of his life, and also fulfill the bible injunction, "go thou and do likewise," as on that day he was married to a young lady of Midletown, whose name our correspondent failed to give us.

Through the politeness of Mr. Brewer, advertising agent of the Cedar Rapids Republican, Mr. Merchant, manager, and Mr. Brigham, editor, we were shown through their new quarters on Second avenue, a few days ago. The whole interior is a model of neatness and perfect adaptation to the newspaper and job printing business. These gentlemen, under whose control a large and flourishing business has been established, are men that it is a pleasure for any and all to meet, and they take great pleasure in showing you their magnificent quarters.

About as pretty an invitation as we have received in this pilgrimage here below, was kindly sent us without one word of advice, by the members of Perry Division 184, Perry, Iowa. It consisted of a double card with a beveled edge of gold and blue, and reading: "Seventh Annual Ball given by—" then a cut of our initial coach with the words which are always there, "Order of Railway Conductors," underneath, "Perry Division No. 184, Order Railway Conductors, 1890." Then the invitation; Breed's Opera House, Perry, Iowa, Monday evening, Feb. 24th. 1890. Music by Thayer's Northwestern Band." Then comes the names of the various committees. It is a very neat invitation, Brothers, for which accept thanks with the wish that you may all have a very enjoyable evening.

We are pained at all times to believe that we are obliged to lose confidence in any one, more especially a Brother of the Order; and while the matter we are constrained to speak about is no way a personal one to us, still it is, to the very excellent member of Division 78, Savanna, Ill. It seems that one, Frank B. Cornelius, Secretary and Treasurer of 78, whose run is from Savanna to Van Horn, has for the last seven years been in the habit of taking a lay-off and going to Mt. Carroll, Ill. As this is the county seat, his friends and Brothers have asked him what took him there so often, and his answer, (to all appearances straightforward) was, invariably, to attend court. It has now, upon investigation turned out, that he has been prevaricating to his Brothers, for seven long years, as we read the announcement, that one Frank B. Cornelius, of Savanna, was married at the home of the bride, at Mt. Carroll, Ill., Wednesday, January 29th, to Miss Julia Pierce. How any Brother can ever forgive himself for such a deviation from the truth, is more than we can imagine.

The New York, Providence & Boston Railroad company. Mr. Henry H. Clark is appointed night trainmaster at Providence, R. I., and will have full charge of all train movements and trainmen, both at the east and west end of the passenger station, and he will be respected and obeyed accordingly. The above appointment goes into effect the 27th inst.

(Signed.)

J. B. GARDINER,
Superintendent.

Brother Clark is a member of Providence Division No. 151, and the Brothers of that division are all pleased that he has received the appointment, and wish him to accept their congratulations.

John Livingston, thou Jo John, your cunning, curious ways
May bring you wealth and fortune, but scant will be the praise,
The flag of Victory may be unfurled, the stars and stripes thy trust,
But watch thee out, John Livingston, that they trail not in the dust.
Then I would think it over, John, before I went too far,
In asserting that an employe must pay, if he rides in a varnished car,
For the world may always think, me boy, as you travel on and on,
(And you may yet be led to think) it was none of your business, John.

A few days since, the writer was sauntering through the lobby of the Savery house in Des Moines, endeavoring to so conduct himself as to convey the impression to others, that he was an "Independent" member of the Iowa House of Representatives, and consequently a person of vast importance, as being the possible possessor of the vote which was to "lock," or "unlock" that distinguished body, when his meditations were somewhat abruptly disturbed by Bro. J. H. Grinninger, of the "Clover Leaf Line," who presented an invitation to accompany him to the depot, and sample the fare in a new dining car, that was to go into service on that line. All considerations of anything else, political or otherwise, were immediately dissipated by such an invitation, and for the next hour, at least, one of the agile waiters on the "Missouri," was kept comfortably busy. The "Missouri" was built by the company, and is the equal of any dining car that it has been our good fortune to sample. One of its features is that on one side, the tables are made wide enough to accommodate two persons on each side without crowding, while on the opposite side they are made for two persons only, one on each side; thus there can be no uncomfortable crowding, and the aisle is wider than usual.

The spread to which we were honored with an invitation, was given to representatives of the Des Moines press, and all were loud in their praises of the car, its table and management. Several "Clover Leaf" representatives were present to assist in making the guests feel at home, and were certainly successful.

THE RESOURCES OF THE ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS.

In the life of every institution, whether it be of a monetary, social or financial character, there are certain periods in its history, when it seems fitting that some sort of an inventory be taken that will show to the members thereof, what there is in the future to vouchsafe a creditable warrant for the assured prosperity of said organization. As far as the financial status of the Order is concerned, the proper accredited committee has duly met and made their yearly examination and also their reports, which will, in due time, be presented to every member of the Order. We propose, in as few words as possible, to glance at the past, and imaginary future of this organization, and see how we stand at the commencement of the new year.

It is quite a number of years since the old "Brotherhood of Conductors" was first formed. They did not grow in numbers at a rapid rate; perhaps slower than many had imagined that they would. But they struggled on in their infancy, doing what they deemed best for their growth and prosperity, until an adverse wind struck them in the middle of the ocean of their boisterous and fitful voyage, and after becoming well-nigh shipwrecked, because they were apparently hindered by being constantly obliged to row against the stream, in consequence of being weighed down with a portion of that freight which is always a detriment to the sailing qualities of any ship; or the prosperity of any society. They took a new tack by relieving themselves of what they deemed the obstructive element, and after initiating new force and vitality into their system, their career has, within the last few years, been at least creditable, and their success, as a society, far ahead of what the most sanguine had surmised.

It is true that quite a number, through disappointment and nonfulfillment of having all their hopes realized, by being able to receive all the benefits that their imagination had depicted, that they were entitled to receive, dropped by the wayside, while some others have connected themselves with other societies and are more than sanguine that they have bettered their condition. It is probable that time will decide for them whether they have made the better choice or not. Others have, as it were, become disheartened, and not receiving all the benefits they thought were due them, have dropped out of the race altogether, and seemingly prefer to "paddle their own canoe." To those who constitute either of these classes, we have nothing to say. This is a free country, and everyone, as long as they conform to its laws, have a perfect right to decide what organization they shall belong to, or, if they so prefer, to none at all.

In view of these facts, our remarks are only intended for the present membership of this organization, and the first question to be considered is this: Has this organization in the past been able to afford its membership the relief that one could naturally expect that it would be able to do in the few years of its existence? We do not mean that every member may have expected or anticipated, for, if this were to be the standpoint, then the world would be ours, and all that dwelleth therein, and we would meet with no opposition and would be able to dictate to others our own terms. But this happy period, (as they would undoubtedly call it) will probably never appear to the membership of this society or any, or all others.

Now, we come to the question, have the benefits that the majority have received, been in excess of the trouble and expense that those who have been benefitted have been compelled to meet? Is the standing of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR of to-day, far in advance of what it was years ago? Are the families of these conductors so placed, that in the event of their husband's passing away, they are left in at least comfortable circumstances, instead of having nothing to depend upon at the last? In order that there be a margin in our favor, it is not necessary that every member has attended to this, but the question is, have enough been induced, to show a respectable balance on the credit side.

Is the morale of THE CONDUCTOR of today far in advance of what it used to be, and is there a credit to be shown the Order for a portion, at least, of this improvement? Have the situations of many, who have had the ill luck to be relieved, been restored to them through the efforts of the members, to show a balance in our favor? Are the fraternal relations now existing between not only our present membership, but also extending to the families of our conductors, such that a balance can be shown, and in case of a Brother's being thrown out of employment through any of the mishaps that are liable to come to any of us at any moment, is there a feeling in his mind, or of the members of his family, that his chances are improved by his being associated with this organization, or would he be benefited by standing all alone, entirely unaided, in securing a like, or any situation. Which, today, would show the brightest side for the member who is thus situated. Are there many who have sickened and died, who have been watched over kindly, and kind friends have followed them to the grave, and given them a decent burial, when had they not been members of the Order, both their lot, and that of their afflicted families, would "have been cast in very hard places." Is this true or is it false? These are questions for you all to consider carefully and thoughtfully, and in the event where many have decided that it was not for their interest to retain their membership, is it not possible that a portion of the blame or fault of not receiving proper benefits may have been theirs, instead of the Order being blameable for it all? There is an opportunity for much careful thought on this one subject.

There are many societies that offer great inducements to any and all of you, to give up your faith in this and unite your fortunes with them. Their supreme advantages are beautifully portrayed in glowing colors, and no wonder that some are gathered in. But it may be worth the while for one to examine for his own good, and ascertain whether all the supposed evils of this one have been blotted out in the other, and a corresponding increase of benefits secured, that are sure to be lasting, and no danger that any of them will fade away.

One thought more; The standing of a society in a community is considered many times, by its members, to be of some value to its existence, and well-being. Look carefully over the list and see at what rate you are quoted by the public, the sentiment of which, when expressed, as it sometimes is, makes and unmakes kingdoms and societies. With no arrogance shown or felt toward any society, before you feel discouraged at what has been done, look the field over carefully and see if others offer you any better inducements.

Now as to the future: Almost any one can come to us with a plausible argument that the Order of Railway Conductors, as a society, is not what it ought to be. A good many years ago the Savior of mankind was on earth for a longer time than the Order of Railway Conductors has been in existence, and with his personal presence and teachings, he tried to make everyone do exactly right, and for his trouble he was crucified and died a miserable death, but the cause of right and justice never was killed, and those who followed him and believed in him, never went to the enemy. The Order of Railway Conductors is not, at the beginning of this year, what it ought to be, or what it may become. But the evils can be eradicated. Conservatism can drive out all elements that are radically wrong, while for all that are radically right, no conservatism is needed. So that all we need to do, to make the future more prosperous than the past has ever been, is for every member to never cease to do his duty, being willing to give a little and take a little in regard to his views of right and wrong. And when considering his grievances, consider for the time being that they are the complaints of some other Brother, brought before him for adjudication, then he can take a view of the situation by "putting yourself in his place," and it sometimes makes all the difference in the world in passing judgment.

Let every Brother make up his mind to do just what he honestly believes to be right, and we have no fears of the result. Be not too hard with those who differ with you, not too confident that those are exactly right who perfectly agree with you, for too much familiarity, both in companionship as well as in opinion, oft breeds contempt.

Let your needs and wants be fully understood by those who have the means, or the authority to assist you. Elevate yourself in all things for your personal good, as you would that others should assist in elevating you, and the solution of the problem of your success, as an individual, will be assured, as also the success of the Order of Railway Conductors as far as you are personally concerned.

So, we honestly believe that the prosperity of the Order is well assured, if the Brothers will act in unison, for the good of all concerned. And there is but one way to do, and that is to attend strictly to business by doing our whole duty as conductors, and showing to everyone that we mean to be masters of our profession; that we only want what are our just rights and honest dues, and this we expect and shall try by every lawful and honorable means to obtain, to the end that we may be rated in all things at our true and relative worth.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., MARCH 15, 1890.

NO. 6.

ROSA MANIERE.

states, many years ago, at the curve of the road, which was necessarily made on account of a turn in the brook, called "Elliott Creek," which empties into the Delaware river, some eight or ten miles below, lived the first inhabitants of what was once a forest of beech and maple trees. In fact, the whole surrounding country was at that time almost a wilderness, and save the tall mountains that loomed up beside the Delaware, miles away, (and they were always visible in daylight and sunlight) their sides all covered with huge hemlock and pine, the whole country was what, in the old-time vernacular, was called "woods."

Here, in this quiet nook, lived Eben Maniere. A few years before the commencement of this story, "Eben," as he was always called by his friends and neighbors, had emigrated from the good old state of Connecticut, at a time when its blue laws were in full force; when it was wicked, and considered a crime, to laugh on the holy Sabbath day; where witches earned a living by the generosity of ignorant people, (although sometimes at a terrible cost); where it was right and lawful to worship God and love your neighbor, as the law directed, but when it was accomplished in any other manner it was sure to be met with death, or punishment, or, to say the least, a perfect ostracism from the ranks of the church, which in reality, and to all intents and purposes, constituted the society of that Down 'mid day and age. And many a worthy and upright person has suffered beyond description from what was then deemed their utter perverseness, because their opinions were not strictly in conformity to those who claimed to be the religious teachers of the age, that had more religion than charity, far more pretended worth than Christian goodness. And Eben had received a full line of this strict and compulsory instruction. He had been brought up in the freighted atmosphere of praising God, and tendering good-will to his fellow-men, according to the well-established creed of the time and place in which he lived. His teachers in the old log school-house and the little church at the "Corners," were none of them lacking in those peculiar teachings that hardened one's heart toward all mankind who might, in all good faith and honesty, differ from the teachings of either church or state.

And when he started on the journey that carried him across the beautiful Hudson river, his only companions, his noble wife and little Rosa, then a prattling child of 7 years, had it not been deemed a sacrilege to express a childish glee by a positive exhibition of outward mirth and happiness, Eben carried with him all the schisms that were deemed essential to the perfect happiness of any mortal who lived at that day, and anticipated the hope of a Father's love in this world, or the world to come.

And as old "Bright and Buck" busily wended their way over mountain and glen, drawing the heavy cart that contained the wealth of the Maniere family, a looker-on would have imagined that, although they might not be able to reason, that at least the instinct they had been endowed with, was seriously infected with a reasonable taint of good Eben's Christianity; and all the hilarity, or change, that greeted them, was the stern voice of the master, as, with the old-fashioned pole and leather whip, he laid upon their backs to the tune, "Haw, there Bright!" or "Gee up, there, Buck!" and occasionally a loud "Whoa, there!" for a moment's rest.

We had almost forgotten the faithful dog, "Bruno," the companion of Rosa, who must trudge along, all day, underneath the huge cart, for it would be a sacrilege for him to wander about and enjoy himself, or for a little rest ride inside. But for fear of a crack from the leather lash, he toddled on, with his tail hanging between his rear legs, for if he felt a little joyous, and happened to wag the only appendage that might express joy and happiness, Uncle Eben would blast the whole spontaneous burst of joy by exclaiming in his most positive manner: "Get under the cart and keep your place!"

O, what joy it would have been for Rosa to have had her playmate on the seat with her, for a little while each day, during that long and dusty ride. But little girls and shepherd dogs must keep their places.

So they traveled along, day after day until they reached the headwaters of the Delaware river, a tiny little brooklet that commenced in a dense and unbroken forest, save the road that had been cut through the woods that guided the travelers on their journey.

Three weeks of pulling the old cart up hill, and holding it back going down, brough Eben Maniere and his household, with all their worldly effects, to the spot that was to be their future home. With a resolute will, and a determination that brooked no fear, he set himself to work cutting down the trees, and within a period of three months the first log house was erected by the side of Elliott creek, thirty miles from even a church, a store, or tavern, and here, amongst the beech and maple buds, under the branches of the tall and sturdy birch, 'mid the songs of the blue-bird and the robin, close by the laughing, gurgling waters of the little brook that crept along the side of the mountain until it lost itself in the waters of the Delaware, commenced the new life and new experiences of little Rosa—experiences that brought her out of the old rut of conventionalities and moss-grown teachings of her early childhood, where all the law they found was the law of righteousness and hope, and their only church their own quiet home. The only religion taught her was the happy singing and beautiful carols of the birds of the forest, the splash of the clear running waters of the tiny brook, and the more substantial work that nature presented, of a perfect being who made all things and called them blessed.

And as she gained strength from the invigorating warmth of a happiness that the works of nature can only give, and wisdom from a study of the blessings that enlightened understanding can discern, although reared in this primeval forest, we find her at the age of 17 years the bright, laughing girl, who, ten years before, dare not smile on the Sabbath day.

Many others had followed in Eben's footsteps, and to-day his home was not the only one in sight; but instead could be seen some thirty comfortable houses within a radius of two miles. The log house had been supplanted by a frame one of no mean appearance. A store, a church, and withal, a tavern, had been built, and a little community of 150 souls met each Sabbath day to hear of the goodness of one who was always present, "if only two or three were met together."

Each new comer had felled the trees and cultivated the ground between the grand old stumps, till there was a little farm for all, and prosperity seemed to reign supreme at "Elliott Corners," and the country round about. Old "Bright and Buck" had dropped by the wayside, and "Bruno," who had been the playmate of Rosa for so many years, had a little home of his own on the hillside, and a large flat stone at the front door, with the simple word "BRUNO" engraved on its side by her own hand. It was not a very elegant memento, but it was more touching than the cruel welts of the ox-lash when he was alive. And the master thought that the only rule that could be followed, to obtain perfect obedience, was to enforce rigid and strict obedience from children and animals.

And now we have come to the night that is ever remembered with joy and gratitude by every New England farmer, or one who was raised in that neighborhood—"Glorious Thanksgiving Eve." And although they now live (as it was then thought) from the Connecticut border far across the mountains, "away out west," even to the third tier of counties beyond the Hudson, in the empire state, it was the same joyous Thanksgiving that it was years before in old Connecticut.

The winter was coming on, and every one was preparing for it, and although no snow had yet fallen, it was very cold. Just as the sun sank behind the hills, Eben, having "done up all the chores," and having heard the sound of the supper bell, came into the house, washed himself in real old farmer style, forgetting, of course, to brush his hair, which was not always parted in the true "Parisian fashion," and took his customary seat at the table. After a short blessing being asked on the food, so nicely prepared, he, for the first time, chanced to notice that Rosa's chair was vacant, and in a vexed tone asked, "Where is Rosa?"

The good mother answered that she had gone over to widow Black's, to carry a few doughnuts, a bottle of jam, some pickles and a mince pie, with a few dried apples, also. "As you know," she remarked, "Mrs. Black, with her three little children, has been quite destitute since her poor Caleb was killed at Neighbor Blunt's house-raising last spring."

"Yes," said Eben, "and do you know, it seems to me that 'ere girl is bound to ruin us, and she is away one-half her time, takin' suthing to somebody. It really does seem to me that all she has thought of since we moved here, was to have a good time, enjoy herself, and make somebody happy. Half of my old clothes she has cut up and made over and given to 'Squire Hoyt's children. Of course, they are poor and needy, and the 'Squire 'aint able to do much hard work, but I don't know that it is our duty to clothe the Hoyt children, or feed widow Black and her little ones. I tell you, mother, that girl of ours acts just as though she was born on purpose to have a good time and enjoy herself. She 'aint at all the same girl she was ten years ago, and if she keeps on she will think pretty soon that all she has to do in this world is to furnish for nothing the enjoyment for all the neighbors."

And before Eben had told one-half of the poor girl's faults, as he termed them, the biscuits had all got cold, and the nice fresh cup of tea had become quite insipid. But in lieu of all this, Eben had "spoke his mind," and he felt a great deal easier.

"But another thing," said he, "Bert Phillips told me that they had got some kind of a thing-er-jig down to the church—Oh, what is it he called it, oh, a——"

His good wife suggested, "An organ?"

"Yes, I believe he called it an horgan; and he tells me that there is a young woman here teaching folks to play on one, and he says Rosa is going to learn of her. I would like to see a child of mine playin' on any tom-fool instrument in our church! I honestly believe, mother, that that girl has forgot all the Puritan teachin' we ever gave her, and with singin' and larnin' to play on a horgan, an' takin' off all we've got to the neighbors that 'aint quite as lucky as we are, she'll break us all up afore she's much older."

"Yet you would hardly be willing to part with her, as bad as she is, would you, Eben?" said the good mother. "It is true, I will admit, that she is a little different in her thoughts and ways from what you and I were brought up to regard and believe was just the proper way; but she has been the joy of the household, and also the whole neighborhood, for years; and the kindness that she extends to others, and the little bits of charity that make her life so happy, will not be missed by us when we die. And when I was so sick, last winter, she watched over me day and night, for O, so long a time—and I could never have recovered if it had not been for her. And really, Eben, I cannot but think that she is nearer right than you and I were at her age; when we were brought up so strict that it seemed almost sacrilegious to do a kind act, or appear as if this world was made to afford all the pleasure that we see fit to make it. And you and I would have been very lonely when we first came to this wilderness, and ever since, if it had not been for her laugh and cheer, and faculty of making life so pleasant. Ah, I fear there would have been many a cloudy day, if she had been taken away before we came here."

But just at this time Rosa returned from her pilgrimage among the neighbors, singing some little song that she had just learned. Then, laying her sun-bonnet and shawl in a chair, she said:

"O, mother, if you had seen how happy it made that poor woman, and those little children, when I carried the little things to them, it would have made your heart so glad; and she said that I must tell father and mother how thankful she was to them for their kindness."

"And what did she say to you?" asked Eben.

"O, she did not know that I had anything to do about it," said Rosa. "I told her that father and mother sent them all."

Eben Maniere had a bad tickling in his throat, which caused him to cough very hard, although he had not had a cold in several years; and worst of all, there was something coming out of his eyes and likely to trickle down his cheek, that would seem strange to that household. So he got up from the table as quickly as possible, and said, "I will go out and fodder the stock. And it was the first lie he had ever told. He knew very well that the cattle had all been fed an hour before, but he had rather tell a lie than let them know that his heart and conscience had been touched, and he found himself all to blame, and his own little girl giving all the praise of her own good acts to one who had never deemed it even right to act as if kindness, and love for others, was one of the graces of a Christian life; or, in plain and simple language, he had been convicted in the sin that he had wallowed in, lo, these many years, by following the laws and isms and customs of the early days, leaving out the all-important duty of praising God by love for His own as well as Himself.

The winter passed away. Spring-time had come; the flowers were all in bloom; it was Sabbath evening, and Eben and his good wife, (although it was contrary to the old-time custom) started out to take a little walk. Passing the little church where the evening service was in progress, they thought they would just step into the entry-way, (as they only attended morning service) and wait there a moment for a little rest. The preacher was earnestly invoking God to help this little congregation, and when the amen had been said, they waited just a moment longer, when Eben heard the sound of that "horrid horgan," as the notes welled out rich and clear. Suddenly he heard a sweet voice, singing so tenderly—

When I can read my title clear
To mansions in the skies,
I'll bid farewell to every fear
And wipe my weeping eyes.

Others were joining in the praise, but he only heard this sweet and child-like voice, and turning to his wife, he could only say, as the tears trickled down his face:

"Mother, that is Rosa singing."

But it was spring time now, and Eben could not fodder the stock; but the isms and old-fashioned creeds were all knocked out of Eben Maniere, and the next birthday that came to Rosa Maniere, when she entered the sitting room to dust, she found it all in order, and in the farther corner a beautiful piano, opened ready for use. A piece of white paper was lying on one corner—and there was written these few words:

"FROM YOUR FATHER."

"For he now can 'read his title clear'."

E. H. B.

Here is a Genuine Touch of Pathos.

A lady living on Sixth street, who has a window full of flowers all in bloom, answered a ring at her door bell, the other day, to find a little girl shivering on the doorstep.

"Please, ma'am," said the waif, lifting her shy, beautiful eyes to the face above her, "will you give me a flower?"

The request was such an unusual one that the lady hesitated in surprise.

"Just one little flower," pleaded the child, looking as if she were about to cry.

"Why, of course, you shall have a flower, child; come in. You shall have a pretty red rose," and the good woman looked for her scissors and stepped to the window where the flowers grew. Before she had cut one a light touch fell on her arm.

"Not that one, please—not a red one; that white one. Oh, won't it be just bootful!" and the little girl pointed to a candidum unfolding its lily petals.

"That!" The mistress of the house shook her head. "I cannot cut that one, child. Why must you have a white one? Why won't any flower do?"

"Oh, because—because—because, it's for poor mamma," and the child burst into a violent fit of weeping. "Mamma is dead and I runned away to get her some flowers."

The next moment she was sobbing on the bosom of a new friend, and when she went away she was comforted, and she carried the precious lily, with other flowers, to the home where death had been.—Detroit Free Press.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON UNIFORM STANDARD TIME.

We give below to the readers of the CONDUCTOR, the Report of the Special Committee on Uniform Standard Time. While this to many of our members will be a subject that they have given but little thought, and we presume their attention has been seldom called to it, there is but little doubt in our own mind, but what it will in the next year, or at the longest two years, occupy the special attention that is usually given at the proper time to any work, that has for its object a simplicity of arrangement, that will do away with the objectionable features that gather around the present system of, or rather present systems of time reckoning, which are now in use. That some new and improved method will be devised, and soon be made the accepted one in general use, we have but little doubt. So we deem it well, that conductors, men, who are perhaps, more interested than any other one class of railway employes, should study the matter, and an opportunity is now offered for all to, in as few words as practicable, give their opinions on this subject.

We notice among the list of 237 names of replies favorable to the adoption of this or some like method, such names as A. A. Robinson, Gen. Man. A. T. & S. F. R. R.; Robert Williams, Gen. Supt. B., C. R. & N.; C. J. Ives, Gen. Man. B., C. R. & N.; M. S. Belknap, Central Georgia; Geo. B. Harris, Gen. Man. Burl. & Northern; J. Whitman, Gen. Man. C. & Northwestern; J. D. Laney, Pres. Cleveland, Cin. & Ind., and so forth. Will our readers give it the attention it deserves.—ED.

The Special Committee on Uniform Standard Time beg leave to report:

At the last Annual Meeting the Society passed two resolutions. One directing that further efforts be made to effect the general adoption of the 24-hour notation by the railways of the country. Another requesting the Committee to take such steps as may be approved by the Board of Direction of the Society to bring the subject of time reform to the attention of the public schools.

The Committee has endeavored to carry out both resolutions; the members have not, however, succeeded in meeting the views of the Society with regard to the second resolution. They have had a good deal of correspondence on the subject, but so far have been unable to satisfy themselves as to the best form and manner of carrying out the resolution.

With respect to the first resolution, the Committee is enabled to report absolute and substantial progress, the last annual report of the Committee, together with other documents bearing on the question having been published in pamphlet form, and widely circulated. Railway managers and others were asked to state their views as to the adoption of the new notation by the railways of the country.

The Committee have to announce the receipt of 237 replies to the circular issued; of these 17 are unfavorable and 220 favorable to the adoption of the proposed change.

Persons answering the circular were requested to indicate the year when, in their opinion, the change might be effected, allowing sufficient time for such preparation as might be deemed necessary.

In the 220 favorable replies received:
27 named the year.....	1892
68 " "	1891
95 " "	1890
30 gave no date.

Thus it appears that none of these replies give a later date than 1892, nearly half the whole number named the present year, and, if we assume, what is highly probable, that the 30 persons who mention no date would concur in the views of the majority, no less than 84 per cent. of the whole number think the change might be effected not later than the year 1891, should a general assent be first expressed.

The last annual report was copied in the following technical journals with favorable endorsements, and probably into other publications which the members of the Committee did not see:

- The Travelers' Official Guide.
- The Railway Conductors' Monthly.
- The Railroad Gazetteer of San Francisco.
- Journal of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
- The Railroad Gazette, of New York.
- The Railway Age, of Chicago.
- Engineering News, of New York City.
- The Railroad Record, of Philadelphia.

It has not come to the knowledge of the Committee that any journal has at any time expressed any opposition to the new notation.

The Committee has considered it advisable to tabulate the replies recently obtained with those received in previous years. It thus appears that between five and six hundred prominent men in every section of the country have responded to the Society's interrogations, and of these an exceedingly small per centage have given expression to an opinion adverse to the early adoption of the new notation.

As it is especially important to ascertain the opinions of leading railway men on this question, the Committee has caused a classification to be made of the Presidents, Managers, Superintendents and others, who have favorably responded to the Society's communications.

The list so prepared accompanies this report. It embraces the following railway authorities who are in favor of the simultaneous adoption of the 24-hour notation on the railways of the country so soon as it is ascertained that a considerable majority will give their assent.

Presidents and Vice-Presidents.....	30
Vice-Presidents and Managers.....	13
Gen. Managers and Assist. Gen. Man..	80
General Superintendents.....	73
Superintendents.....	110
Chief Engineers and Assistants.....	63
Managers of Transportation and Gen- eral Traffic.....	10
Receivers.....	5
Total.....	384

The aggregate length of railways with which these officers are connected amounts to fully 135,000 miles, and although all of the officers on each line have not yet expressed an opinion, the Committee are inclined to believe that when heard from the greater number of them will express the same views on this question.

While the Committee ventures to congratulate the Society on the highly satisfactory results of the inquiries so far made, they are of opinion that as the matter concerns so many people it will be best to proceed with wise deliberations; they, therefore, beg leave to suggest that the ascertained facts be communicated to the journals above mentioned, and that further efforts be made to secure an expression of the greatest possible unanimity, especially among railway men.

General unanimity satisfactorily established among those who control the railways of the country, it will then be fit and proper for them to take decisive action.

It is obvious that the change should be effected simultaneously six or twelve months after an agreed date, and the proper authority to determine the date is the General Time Convention.

The Committee cannot doubt that when the change to the new notation comes to be satisfactorily established the entire railway system and the community generally will recognize that a public boon has been conferred not less valuable than that already conferred by the adoption of standard time.

The Committee has the satisfaction to report that the hour zone system is now approved by the railway administration in Austro-Hungary, soon to be followed, it is believed, in Germany, Italy and Switzerland. The reckoning of time in Great Britain and Sweden is already in harmony with the hour zone system. The 24-hour notation has been adopted for railway service in China.

The Committee deem it proper to bring to the notice of the Society, that the government of the United States has so far taken no action on the resolutions and recommendations of the Washington International Conference of 1884. As the reforms in time-reckoning so largely adopted and proposed to be adopted in this country are in harmony with the resolutions of the conference, and as questions are constantly arising as to the legal aspect of standard time, it would be in the public interest to have the recommendations of the conference authoritatively recognized, and also perhaps, some satisfactory statutory enactment legalizing the changes made and contemplated in respect to the reckoning of time.

The committee respectfully suggest that the Society should memorialize the United States government on this subject.

SANFORD FLEMING,
CHARLES PAINE,
THEODORE N. ELY,
J. M. TOUCEY,
T. EGLESTON,
FRED. BROOKS,
Committee.

FORM OF MEMORIAL PROPOSED BY THE COMMITTEE ON UNIFORM STANDARD TIME.

Ordered at Annual Meeting, January 15, 1890, to be submitted to letter ballot.

The Memorial of the AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CIVIL ENGINEERS in Annual Meeting assembled, Respectfully sheweth:

1. That the application of science in facilitating intercourse between places separated by great distances, has developed imperfections of time-reckoning not previously experienced; moreover, it has been found that the difficulties increase with the increase of population and the multiplication of lines of rapid communication.

2. That efforts have been made during the past ten years to obviate the difficulties which have sprung up, by establishing a modified system of time-reckoning based on principles generally acceptable.

3. That the President of the United States, on the authority of Congress, invited the governments of all civilized nations to take part in the solution of the problem, by appointing delegates to meet in general Conference to consider the matter.

4. That delegates representing twenty-five nations met in conference at Washington in 1884, and that after patient deliberation and prolonged discussion, they with substantial unanimity passed a series of resolutions, recommending the leading principles by which the desired objects could be best attained.

5. That the International Conference recommend a common zero and a common unit measure of time, the universal day, which any community may spontaneously adopt as the standard for daily reckoning. That the Conference recommend the division of the universal day into twenty-four hours, to be reckoned in a single series of numbers from 0 to 24 in consecutive order.

6. That by the system now in general use throughout the United States and Canada the hours, though differently numbered, are simultaneous with the hours of the universal day, and that it is now in contemplation in many quarters to adopt the 24-hour notation for railway reckoning as recommended by the Conference for the universal day.

7. That so far the government of the United States has taken no action on the recommendations and resolutions of the International Conference, and legal authority has not been extended to the reform in time-reckoning, to a large extent adopted throughout North America.

Wherefore, the American Society of Civil Engineers, in Annual Meeting assembled, respectfully represents to the government of the United States, as follows, viz:

First.—That, in the opinion of this Society, it would be in the general interests of the United States to formally accept the resolutions of the International Conference held at Washington in 1884.

Second.—That, in the opinion of this Society, it would be in the general interests to legalize by Act of Congress the now common system of regulating time by hour meridians.

Third.—That, in the opinion of this Society, it would be in the general interests to embrace in an Act of Congress a permissive clause authorizing and legalizing the use of the 24-hour notation.

On behalf of the Society.

A large number of prominent persons not connected with railways have also sent replies in favor of the new time notation. Only an exceedingly small percentage of all heard from in every quarter have expressed an opinion unfavorable to the change.

It has been suggested that the change should be effected simultaneously on all railways twelve months after an agreed date, which date may be chosen by the General Time Convention.

President Harrison's Stenographer.

Miss Nellie Sanger, who is stenographer to President Harrison and private secretary to his wife, was one of the young ladies asked to assist at the New Year's reception at the White House. On the same day Miss Hunt, who is the daughter of a former cabinet officer and minister to Russia, but who, through reverses, has become wholly dependent upon herself, and is serving as private secretary to Vice President Morton's wife, was one of the most honored assistants at the reception in her employer's house. Both of these young ladies are clever, accomplished and personally attractive, fitted to grace any drawing room, but they are working women on salaries, and their formal appearance in official society is an innovation which is said to be without precedent. It is the pleasure of Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Morton that the young ladies should rank socially with invited guests, and this decision is eminently sensible. It may be said to work an era in social progress when the "better half" of an administration tacitly declares that a lady does not lose caste because she earns her living.—Woman's Journal.

Wanted the Old Song.

"Mister," said a haggard-looking man, as he walked into the hardware store, "can you tell me where I can buy a phonograph?"

"I guess we can order one for you, sir," said the salesman, who met him at the door. His face expressed surprise, but his tone conveyed assurance.

"Can you get one that will work automatically—one that you won't have to grind yourself, but can fix it up and let it go of its own accord?"

"I think we can arrange an attachment that will accomplish that result."

"All right; get it as quick as you can, will you?"

"You want it as a sort of amanuensis, I suppose?"

"No; my wife has gone out of town. I find that when I get home at night everything is so kind of solemn and still that I don't feel like going to bed, and when I do get to bed the silence is so oppressive that I can't stand it. So I thought if I could get a phonograph and have the hired girl talk into it for about three-quarters of an hour—something about its being a nice time of night for a self-respecting married man to be getting home, and all that sort of thing, I would set it before I went to bed and succeed in getting to sleep. It's funny how a man will miss these old familiar sounds."

Burdette on the Grip.

Once in a while an American returns from Europe, after a six months' tour of the continent, and as a knock-down argument against prohibition says: "I traveled in Europe six months and did not see one drunken man."

If the traveler was a sober man, and traveled in sober, respectable company, I can easily believe the statement. To show how utterly worthless as an argument it is, let me say, and I say it truthfully, that I have now been traveling up and down these United States, from Toronto to Topeka, nearly five months, and have seen but one case of la grippe. Only one, and it was so light the victim was able to sit up, had a good appetite for three daily meals, and could sit down at a piano and sing and play. Now, that's a fact. I have, since Oct. 8, been traveling constantly, going everywhere, lecturing six times a week, and have seen just this one case of la grippe cited above. And yet we know the country has been full of it. Every physician knows how like an epidemic it has raged. And yet I have seen but one case of it.

Of course, in that time I have met about 75,000 able-bodied liars, who said they had it the worst way, when they didn't have a respectable cold in the head.

The pastors tell me that la grippe has just about broken up their prayer meetings. That may be. A crick in the neck will keep a man away from the prayer meeting. But you have to saw off his legs to keep him from going to the circus.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

The Waning Power.

"They talk about the power of the press," said the editor, publisher and proprietor, pressman, and compositor combined, as he put his feet on the pine table and leaned back in his splint-bottomed chair, "but I think I can see that that power is on the wane. Yes, hang it, I'm sure it has decreased 30 per cent. in the last three years."

"In what respect?" was asked.

"Well, mostly in respect to railroad passes. Look-a-here! Five years ago I had passes over a dozen different railroad lines—annual passes, understand—while to-day I've got to pay my fare the same as a ditch digger. Does 'nt this prove that the power of the press is on the wane?"

"Possibly."

"Why, man, it's conclusive evidence, and if something isn't done to restore our prestige the day will come when we won't get a darned cent knocked off our hotel bills, nor a free ticket to a theatre. Yes, I've seen the day that I could send a friend to New York and back on passes by four different routes, but to-day I'd have to take the tow-path myself."

"That seems sad."

"It's sadness boiled down, sir. It isn't the loss of the pass so much as the spirit which withholds it. It's that breaking away of the railroads, that insubordination and independence, which I bemoan, and which can lead to nothing but disaster to a free press. For instance, in days gone by I'd sit down with a railroad guide and write to a dozen different passenger agents for an annual. I might have no earthly use for some of them, but it was to maintain our prestige, you see. Every agent would respond, and announce that he took great pleasure in so doing. He'd even ask if I couldn't use two."

"And how is it now?"

"Here is a letter to answer your query. I wrote to the K. & K. folks for a trip pass to Albany and return, and it was refused. I then sent another letter saying that I did not propose to pitch into the management of the K. & K. unless driven to it, but if driven to it they must abide the consequences. Here is the letter in reply, and they tell me to pitch in and be blanked, and add insult to injury by putting my circulation at 250 copies, when I have been working 300 right along for a month past. You see the spirit, sir. It is one which cannot be curbed and quenched too soon, and I am thinking seriously of issuing a circular and calling a meeting of the state editorial fraternity. We are drifting, sir—drifting away from the glory, honor, and power which once surrounded every editorial sanctum, and unless we put on the brake, the day will come when even no farmer will bring us a bag of apples and no circus feel it obligatory to leave free tickets."

A Lesson in Self-Reliance.

DR. DEPEW'S STORY OF COMMODORE VANDERBILT AND YOUNG JIM RUTTER.

Mr. Depew told me an anecdote. A good many years ago a young freight clerk was employed at one of the country stations on the Erie railroad. He was a farmer's boy, who had nothing but a common school education, but was regarded as a pretty bright chap. He vindicated this youthful reputation by his management of the little freight business to which he had to attend, and was soon transferred to a more important place near Buffalo. There he began to reveal the genius that was in him by suggesting certain new methods of dealing with freight, and there he came under the eye of Commodore Vanderbilt.

Some time later, after the consolidation of the Hudson River and New York Central railroads, the old Commodore desired to get a man to take charge of the freight business, and thought of this young man. He sent for him and offered him a salary of $15,000 a year to assume the duties of master of freight transportation. The clerk was a rosy-cheeked, yellow-haired young man, who at once accepted the offer with such confidence in his abilities as to please the old Commodore, who hated a man who had no self-confidence. Not long after he took charge, a very complicated and difficult problem in freight transportation arose. It puzzled the young fellow so that he could not sleep nights. If he made a mistake he felt that it would be fatal to his reputation, probably to his career, while if he succeeded he would simply accomplish what he had been hired to do. At last in his anxiety he ventured to call upon the old Commodore, stated the difficulty to him, and asked advice. The old man looked at him a moment and then said:

"Jim, what does the Central hire you for?"

"To take charge of the transportation."

"Well, do you expect I am going to earn your salary for you?"

That was all the Commodore said, and the young man turned on his heel and left him. He went out and acted on his own judgment; acted with unerring foresight, and was soon promoted to the vice presidency. Later on he succeeded William H. Vanderbilt as president of the New York Central system. That was the career of Jim Rutter, Mr. Depew said, and he characterized Rutter as one of the greatest railroad geniuses that the age of railroading has produced. Rutter killed himself in the services of the Central by overwork, a habit which Mr. Depew neither encourages by his own example or favors in any of his employees.—Philadelphia Press.

His Little Snack.

It is perhaps because there are exceptions to all rules that some persons seem to be able to bid defiance to many of the recognized laws of health.

"Wouldn't you like a little something to eat before you go to bed?" said an old farmer to a guest who was about retiring for the night.

"No, thank you." was the reply. "I never eat anything after supper."

"You don't? Well, I couldn't sleep if I didn't have a little snack of some sort 'fore I went to bed. Of course, I don't eat a reg'lar meal, but I feel all the better for a piece of pie and two or three doughnuts with some cheese and a pickle and a bite of cold pork—some light refreshment, you know, just to stay the stomach."—Youth's Companion.

There are forty-eight languages and dialects spoken in Mexico.

* *

One thousand cars for the Central Georgia by the U. S. Rolling Stock Company, of Anniston, Ala.

* *

The highest life insurance on any one life is one million dollars, that of John Wanamaker, Philadelphia, Pa.

* *

Ten new locomotives for heavy passenger service on the Wisconsin Central road are to be built by the Brooks Locomotive Works.

* *

Four large engines, and several smaller ones, for the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago, built by the Rogers Locomotive Works.

* *

The first almanac ever published was in 1457. The first American almanac was that of William Bradford, published in Philadelphia in 1686.

* *

There is a piece of property for sale in Worcestershire, on a lease which has 1,711 years to run. It was made for two thousand years in 1600.

* *

A $30,000 highway draw-bridge is to be erected over the Stillaganish river for the Seattle, Lake Shore & Eastern road, by the San Francisco Bridge Company.

* *

A man's working life is divided into four decades of ten years each, designated as bronze, silver, gold and iron, extending from 20 to 60. Intellect and judgment are strongest between 40 and 50.

The largest telescope in the world is owned by Lord Rosse; that is, it has the largest reflector, it being seventy-two inches. The largest refractor is in the Lick telescope in California, which is thirty-six inches across.

* *

There is talk in the city of New York of sending passengers and freight from there to Liverpool in five days. Twenty-four hours are to be occupied on the rail from New York to St. Johns, four days in the voyage from St. Johns to Holy-Head.

* *

The N. Y. C. & H. R. railway has introduced a new system of paying its employees. Two pay-cars will be put into service. One starting from De Witt goes west on the western division and back over the West Shore. The other starts from New York at the same time and pays up to De Witt.

* *

The officers of the Pennsylvania & Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago companies have issued a general order calling for the surrender of all passes now held by their conductors. Said order also specifies that "no conductor shall apply for or accept a pass on any other road without first notifying the officers of the line on which he is employed."

* *

Six hundred men are now digging the railway tunnel under the St. Clair river at Port Huron, Michigan, at the rate of fifteen feet each day. More than twelve hundred feet of tunnel proper is now ready for trains on the Michigan side, and nine hundred on the Canadian. The remaining four thousand feet will be finished at a wonderfully rapid rate.

There are nine navy yards in the United States, viz : Brooklyn, Charleston, Boston, Mass.; Kittery, opposite Portsmouth, N. H.; League Island, near Philadelphia; Mare Island, Vallejo, Cali.; New London, Conn.; Pensacola, Fla.; Washington, D. C.; Portsmouth, near Norfolk, Va.

* *

The annual report of the Pullman Palace Car Company shows assets of approximately $41,000,000, with liabilities of $26,000,000, leaving a surplus of about $15,000,000. The total number of employes of the company is 11,063, and these employes received wages during the last year amounting to $3,000,000. There are 1,200 depositors at the Pullman Loan & Deposit Company, almost exclusively employes. The average amount to the credit of each is $235.02.

* *

Mr. Charles E. Halbert, who has been several years connected with the Mexican Central railway, first as passenger conductor, then a trainmaster, and for almost two years past superintendent of the Guadalajara branch, died in that city on the 9th inst., of pneumonia. A young man, with a bright future, kind disposition, and who, by the conscientious discharge of his duties, had endeared himself to all with whom he came in contact. Once publicly decorated by the Governor of Jalisco for his bravery and presence of mind in saving a number of passengers from drowning, the occasion being a terrible steamboat accident on Lake Chapala. So go the good men of this earth in the railway service.

* *

Important changes of the N. Y. C. & H. R. railroad have recently transpired. Mr. H. W. Webb, who has been assistant to the President, has been chosen to fill the new office of third vice president, having general supervision of the operating, motive power, rolling stock and track departments. He will be assisted by a general manager and general superintendent. Mr. John M. Toucey, who for nine years has filled the position of general superintendent, promoted to be general manager, will be succeeded as general superintendent by Mr. Theodore Vorhees, who has been heretofore assistant general superintendent. At the age of 20 years Mr. Toucey held the position of station agent on the Hudson River road. Fourteen years later he was made assistant superintendent, holding that office until the road became a part of the N. Y. C. & H. R. railway. Five years later he was given the title of superintendent of the Hudson River division. This position he held for fourteen years, when in 1881 he was promoted to be general superintendent of the entire system. Mr. Vorhees has been in the railway service since 1869.

* *

The year's experiment of profit-sharing at the great retail store of John Wanamaker, in Philadelphia, was very satisfactory. Monthly dividends were paid employes aggregating $59,158 for the year. In addition to that $40,281 were distributed among the employes who had a record of seven years unbroken service in the house, and $10,000 were set aside as a pension for old employes.

* *

The highest monument, or tower, in the world is the Eiffel, Paris, France, 1,000 feet high.

Washington monument, Washington, D. C., 555 feet.

Pyramid of Cheops, Egypt, 456 feet.

Antwerp cathedral, Belgium, 476 feet.

Strasburg cathedral, France, 474 feet.

Pyramid Cephrenes, Egypt, 456 feet.

St. Peter's church, Rome, 448 feet.

St. Martin's church, Landsheet, Germany, 411 feet.

* *

The daily income of the Emperor of Russia is $25,000.

Sultan of Turkey, $18,000.

Emperor of Austria, $10,000.

Emperor of Germany, $8,000.

King of Italy, $6,000.

Queen Victoria, $6,300.

King of Belgium, $1,640.

President of France, $500.

President of the United States, $137.

Railway conductors, from $2 to $2.80 a day.

* *

The United States possess 150,600 miles of railway, while Europe has but 124,200.

As the entire world contains about 337,000 miles, it follows that the United States have 44 per cent. of the railways of the globe. They will soon have more than the rest of the world!

Besides its railways, America has rivers that are the largest in the world. The Mississippi is equal to all the rivers of Europe combined, with the exception of the Volga. Its length is about 3,200 miles, and that of its navigable affluents is more than 19,200.

The Hudson is navigable for large steamboats as far as Albany, that is to say 160 miles from its mouth.

There are a dozen other rivers of like importance. There are a number of large seaports at considerable distances from the coast properly so called.

There is nothing more curious than to see ships of 3,000 tons at a distance of 1,500 miles from the sea.

These great natural water-courses are, in addition, completed artificially and connected with each other by canals.

In 1880 there were in the United States 4,300 miles of canals that cost $265,000,000. The maritime coasts accessible to navigation have an extent of 13,000 miles.

If we count the islands and bays, we find that the American seashore has a total length of 32,000 miles. Moreover, the length of the coast and the lakes accessible to navigation is 1,600 miles.

* *

The net earnings of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy for 1889: $10,208,998. We are pleased to hear that the C. B. & Q. has been prospered during the last year, and also that the stockholders have received money enough to make them correspondingly happy. But we will also feel like offering just a word or two of advice, if you feel willing to call it that; or, perhaps better, make one or two suggestions that would seem to come along in the way of prosperity to another class of human beings. That is, that if the business of this road keeps on increasing, and the stockholders are able to receive correspondingly large dividends in the years to come, that they give a little heed to the propriety of their not only paying their conductors, but some other employes on their system, a little more of the needful than they are receiving at the present time. If it was only a little each year, before some of them die, or are discharged, it would be quite a little boon to them and their families, and not cripple this great railway company as much as they might imagine. There is many a conductor on this road who is getting pretty gray-headed. He will not hold out many years more, and will soon find a job where railways are not in fashion, and the cares of this world will not annoy him a great deal, where debts and de-unknown in a monetary sense. Perhaps to this class of individuals it would be well not to count much on increasing their pay, but there are young men on the system who have worked a good many years, who have tried to do their duty to the company, and to the public, and all with whom they come in contact. And for this class of railway employes we bespeak in future a little more pay, and not only that, but a kindly disposition shown on the part of all the officials to do what is right with them.

* *

We observe that Mr. T. S. Hall, son of the pioneer in the electric railway signal, has improved upon his father's invention, and now presents a new system of signaling, which is operated by closed circuits instead of open ones, as was the case in the original system. The working of the device is thus described in an exchange:

When no train is in the block section, the signal is held at safety by the current, and any derangement of the latter allows the disc to automatically move to the danger position. The record of its performance upon the Boston & Albany is certainly remarkable. Going into service May 30, 1888, being used as a positive block signal, it has never got out of order or caused an unnecessary stop, or shown safety when danger existed, thus making a perfect mechanical record. In consequence of its satisfactory operation the Boston & Albany is now extending its system and will soon have its entire line from Riverside to Worcester, thirty-three miles, double track, equipped with this system, the sections being overlapped. The New York, New Haven & Hartford uses the system even more extensively than the Boston & Albany, and now employs in regular block service seventy-four signals. This road has sixty-one Hall highway crossings, station and draw-bridge bells in use at various points on the New York, Hartford and Shore line divisions.

The system consists essentially of an automatic electric block signal. This signal, enclosed in a suitable case, may be placed at a given point on the line of railroad. An electric current, flowing through a wire strung on poles, and to the magnets of a signal instrument of the most simple description, holds the red signal at safety, or "all clear." A train in passing this signal causes it to drop, or turn to danger, this change being effected by the wheels of the train coming in contact with a suitable circuit breaker placed in proximity to the rail. After protecting itself in this manner, the train passes on one mile, more or less, places another signal at danger, and after passing quite a distance beyond the second signal a circuit closer is operated by the train, which in turn causes the first signal to change from "danger" to "safety," thus opening the first block to the following train. In addition to the protection afforded against collisions; each switch is connected and inter-locked with a block signal, so that in case of their displacement the signal goes to "danger." Bells to automatically announce the approach of trains at highway crossings, stations, draw-bridges and switch-houses are also provided for in this system, and the company also makes a very complete and efficient system of electric inter-locking signals for railroad grade crossings and junctions.

* *

To show the astonishing progress of American production in a very short lapse of time, we give the following comparison of results collected twenty years apart:

	1866	1886
Gold and Silver.....	$63,500,000	$83,500,000
Sugar.....	20,000,000 lb	286,000,000 lb
Cotton.....	1,000,000,000 lb	3,182,000,000 lb
Wheat.....	212,000,000 bu	357,000,000 bu
Corn.....	786,000,000 bu	1,936,090,000 bu
Petroleum.....	132,000,000 gal	943,000,000 gal

* *

In no country in the world, in a relatively short space of time, has the postal service been so extensively developed.

There are at present in the great American republic 57,376 postoffices (against 23,328 in 1866) while Germany has but 18,583, Great Britain 17,587, and France 7,296.

The postal routes of the United States extend over 240,000 miles, those of Germany 51,000, those of France 40,000 and those of England 25,000.

The American postoffice sent last year more than 3,576,000,000 letters and printed documents of all kinds, while England did not exceed 2,270,000,000, the Germans 1,816,000,000 and the French 1,400,000,000.

The proportion of postal matter forwarded is 71 per inhabitant in the United States, 61 in England, 41 in Germany and 37 in France.

Finally, the first of these nations spent for its postal operations fifty-six million dollars, the second nearly forty-four million, the third nearly twenty-nine million, and the fourth nearly twenty-nine million.

* *

There are about 150,600 miles of railways in the United States; nearly one-half the mileage of the world.

They have cost about $9,000,000,000.

Employ more than 1,000,000 people.

The fastest time made by a train was 92 miles in 93 minutes, one mile being made in 46 seconds, on the Philadelphia & Reading railroad.

The cost of a high-class, eight wheel passenger locomotive, is about $8,500; of a palace sleeping car, $15,000, or $17,000 if vestibuled.

The longest mileage operated by a single system is the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe system, about 8,000 miles.

The longest railway bridge span in the United States the Cantilever in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., bridge, 548 feet.

The highest railroad bridge in the United States is the Kinzua viaduct on the Erie road, Pennsylvania, 305 feet high.

The first locomotive was built by Peter Cooper, of New York.

The Manhattan Elevated railroad, New York, carries 525,000 passengers a day or 191,625,000 yearly.

The average daily earning of an American locomotive is about $100.

The longest American railway tunnel is the Hoosic tunnel, on the Fitchburg railway, Massachusetts, 4¾ miles.

The average cost of constructing a mile of railroad is about $30,000.

The highest railroad in the United States is the Denver & Rio Grande; Marshall Pass, Colorado, 10,852 feet above the level of the sea.

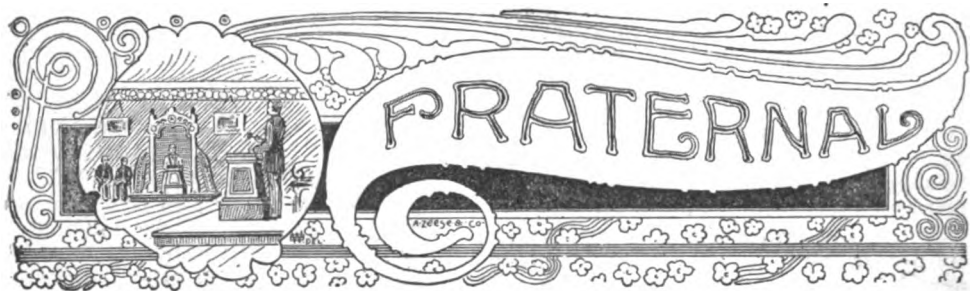

The chances of fatal accident in railway travel is one in ten million.

The longest line of railway is the Canadian Pacific, running from Quebec, Canada, to the Pacific ocean.

A steel rail lasts, with average wear, about 18 years.

The Illinois Central carries the largest number commuters, viz: 4,828,128 in 1887.

The fastest time made between Jersey City and San Francisco, was 3 days, 7 hours, 39 minutes and 16 seconds. Special theatrical train, June, 1886.

BRATTLEBORO, VT., Feb. 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

The fair held by Bellows Falls Division No. 233, February 4th, 5th and 6th, was a success financially and otherwise, and the boys may well feel proud of their first effort in that direction. Much credit is due the members for their zeal and activity in making it so. The division more than realized its fondest hopes. Nearly 1,800 fair tickets were sold, and the total amount of the receipts was over $1,125.00, leaving a net sum of $825.00 in clean money to deposit in bank. Brother Belknap, do you know of any other division with the same membership, or even larger, that has done any better than that? Brother Bean sold 334 tickets; Brother Wyman, 240; Brother Dawley, 205; Bro. Carleton, 165 and Brother Worthen, 131, and other members accordingly. The last night of the fair, special trains were run from Brattleboro and Windsor, and Union hall was literally packed with humanity. The entertainment consisted of singing, and banjo and guitar playing, by the colored Norrington Quartette, from Springfield, and Wheeler's Orchestra, of Bellows Falls, furnished the music for dancing. There were 140 couples on the floor at one time. The drawing of the prizes took place on the stage at 11:30, the last evening, and resulted as follows: parlor set, G. B. Edmonds, Rutland; sleigh, C. A. Wheeler, Bellows Falls; lady's gold watch, E. J. Leslie, Proctor; parlor stove, J. R. Prescott, East Wallingford; mileage ticket, John Cotter, St. Albans; hanging lamp, F. W. Richards, B. Falls; lady's gold ring, B. Cannon, Jr., B. Falls; gentlemen's gold ring, N. Boynton, Ludlow; fancy rocker, F. A. Curtis, Londonderry; ton of coal, M. G. Taylor, Brattleboro. A vote taken for the most popular engineer, fireman and brakeman, running into Bellows Falls, was decided in favor of F. M. Thompson, engineer on the Cheshire railroad, who was the recipient of a gold-headed cane, while A. G. Furman, fireman on the Connecticut River road, received the marble clock, and W. Mansfield, brakeman on the same road, took the cake basket. Mrs. P. G. Dawley, wife of our Chief Conductor, made and presented the division with a banner, and for that, and the generous patronage of the public, the members, one and all, wish to return their sincere and heart felt thanks.

Brother Wilkins was with us the evening of February 10, and instructed those present in regard to the new work, besides giving us a little advice relative to other matters and things. His remarks to the members, that an exchange of ideas is beneficial, and that every member should freely express himself when in the division room, that then was the time to talk, and that it was not enough to come around to the meetings once a year, leaving the officers to run them, were well put, and worthy the consideration of every Brother of the Order. It is hoped he will make it convenient to call this way again. We certainly shall be glad to see him.

Yours in P. F.,

MCGINTY.

JACKSON, MICHIGAN, Feb. 8th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

In reading the CONDUCTOR, as a member of our Order, one finds much of interest, not only to ourselves as individual members, but of our Order and the position it holds relative to other labor organizations, which at the present time, are assuming a very aggressive attitude, and are doing all in their power to bring about a federation between the several organizations, leaving out of course, the Order of Railway Conductors. Now, it is not the idea that we are left out, that causes me to write this article, but there may be more in this federation than we are aware of at present. In the CONDUCTOR of January 1st, an able Brother opposes federation, and agrees with Old Time Tough, and claims to have struck the keynote of its failure, in assuming that it will not accomplish the results expected of it, but at the same time tells us, that there is a growing feeling throughout the Order, that we are in a position of humiliation, and that something more definite and positive should be done by our Order, that we may receive that recognition due us as conductors. As to the feeling existing throughout the rank and file of the Order, it cannot be denied, but that it does exist, and we are told by those that entertain this feeling, that the present policy of the Order is not aggressive enough to fulfill its requirements. These are the thoughts of Brothers, and one can hear them expressed almost daily. There is one thing sure, either the Order is radically wrong, or radically right, in its present position; time will probably solve the problem. We, as members of the Order of Railway Conductors, have taken an obligation to sustain all laws enacted by the Grand Division of the Order; so, to, members of other organizations claim, that they are bound to abide by the decisions of a conservative, arbitration board. This being the case, is it reasonable to suppose, that they will transgress sooner than we. If not, is it any wonder, that the dissatisfied ones and members of other organizations, are looking forward to federation as the bright star of hope. The friends of this scheme claim for it, that the united front presented by the several organizations engaged in the railway service, will bring about an immediate recognition of any just demand made by them. By the term, just demand, we must assume, that the conservative element is always in the majority, and the power behind the throne would have much to do in bringing about speedy recognition. These are some of the claims set forth as the results of federation. When we advance or advocate such ideas as this, we will probably be told, that we are laboring under a delusion, and that it is caused by coming in contact with those on the other side; this may be where the feeling of humiliation comes in. This is certainly no one man affair, but it is something that concerns the whole Order, and we must agree with Brother Watkins when he says, that something more positive must be done by the Order, to the end that we may retain, if possible, in our membership, those Brothers who entertain this feeling of discontent.

Yours in P. F.,

HOWARD LEACH.

ADRAIN, MICH., Feb. 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Sir Walter Scott very beautifully said, that "from the moment the mother binds the brow of the infant, to the hour in which some kind assistant wipes the death damp from the dying, we exist but by mutual aid." Perhaps in no instance is the value of that mutual aid better exemplified, than in its use and appliance to the principles and practices of life insurance. Those principles awaken in every man, greater and graver responsibilities now, than when Scott penned those beautiful lines. The positions men are employed to occupy, the dangers surrounding them in those positions, on railroads, steamboats, and the great variety of steam appliances which men are called upon to conduct, "renders the life of the practical man more precarious, now, than at the time when Scott penned the sentence used at the commencement of this article.

In No. 17, vol. 6, December 15, 1889, there is an article in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, entitled "Life Insurance a Necessity," which is worthy of a very careful perusal and candid consideration. The writer says, let us then take a birds eye view of some of the advantages of life insurance, bearing in mind, that life is short, that it is also uncertain; always remembering too, that man's first duty, at all hazards, is to provide for his family. Let me ask, is there a class of men whose lease of life is rated at a less number of years than railroad men? Not any—only fifteen years. Is it not the duty of every man to provide for his family? All answer, yes. If, then, you are not able to purchase a whole loaf, be content with the one half of a loaf, which is certainly better than nothing.

F. S. Silvernail, in No 15, vol. 6, God bless him; methinks I see him now, laying down the law of mutual life insurance to his associates, with great force and emphasis. Go ahead, Brother Silvernail, glory beckons you onward, the immortal crown invites you upward; your cause is just, your position is right, your words are truth, your appeal is generous and your actions are humane, and I sincerely hope, that at the annual meeting in Rochester, they will stop this sending out appeals for help for those who are not members of the O. R. C. Mutual Aid Association.

In No. 1, vol. 7, I cheerfully second the suggestion of Brother Gilbert, for half-rate insurance. There may be, and I think there are, many who for some cause "best" known to themselves, may not be able to carry $2,500 insurance, but who could and would be glad to carry $1,250. If such is the case they can be accommodated. It is a matter of a few minutes' work by the committee having the work in charge and could be arranged without serious inconvenience.

In No. 3, vol. 7, in a letter signed by Albert Cutter, he makes mention of a surplus fund. In a letter written by myself, I think, to Mr. Wheaton, I suggested the propriety of each member paying ten cents additional on each assessment, until the sum of $2,000 be converted into the treasury of the mutual aid from that source.

The idea of life insurance should be paramount in the mind, heart, and action of every railroad man, and their first act, after going out into the world to battle with the dangers, cares and responsibilities of life, should be a beneficent one—that of obtaining and securing to your family a life insurance. What is home without some insurance that will revert to your family, in case you, "from any cause," may be taken away? Without it your home is like a reed, shaken by the wind.

A short article, signed W. L. E., in No. 15, vol. 6, gives us a very clear and beautiful description of home and its realities and endearments. How many pleasant memories cluster around our home. A little one, the pride and idol of our home may be taken away, which leaves a vacant cradle, and an empty shrine in our hearts. Our home is left to us, and father and mother, who always travel together down life's pathway. With an insurance that will afford relief to the mother, if father is taken away, we may then thank God and take courage, that the lines have fallen unto us in pleasant places, and there remains for us a grand heritage.

Many a widow and orphan has great reason to be grateful, that the advantages of life insurance was understood and embraced by the husband and father. It has saved hundreds and thousands from ruin, by enabling them to raise money, which they could not otherwise have obtained. How few there are in their homes of ease, surrounded by all that wealth can bestow, or appetite desire, with their heaps of gold and their broad acres, luxuriating in the comforts of their princely palaces, who little heed the howling of the wintry blasts and the pelting of the pitiless storm without. But remember, that their gold and their broad acres are held in trust for noble uses, and that a strict stewardship will be required of them at their hands.

Remember, my friends, that the wretched being who stands shivering at your door, crouching beneath the fury of the tempest, is your brother, bound to you by the ties of common humanity. His garments are tattered in shreds, and the haggard lineaments of his face, squalid want has left its furrows and despair has written its blistering lines of anguish. His lot may once have been as happy, if not as proud as yours: in a little cottage on the sunless side of a romantic mountain, forest crowned.

If such is the picture presented by a neglect to obtain life insurance, let no time be lost, secure it at once. Do not think for one moment, that it will debase your humanity. No, it will elevate you, morally and socially. You will stand as a beacon light upon the ocean shore, in the proud consciousness of having done your whole duty to your God, your family and yourself. Socially, it will elevate you in the estimation of every lover of right and justice.

Provide well for your own household, is a divine injunction, and should be sacredly observed by all. By it we are taught to exercise all the noble attributes of our nature, by doing good, exercising charity, timely attending to all the little wants of wife and children, by obtaining early in life, an insurance, that will enable you to carry with you a consolation, that inasmuch as you have done your duty to your wife and little ones, that whatever may befall you, if you are carried beyond that bourne from whence no traveler returns, you will find rest in that beautiful land beyond the grave.

W. S. S.

BINGHAMPTON, Feb. 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

As the time for the meeting of the Grand Division approaches, and the discussion of matters to be brought up there is in order, I would suggest the following: that the Executive Committee as it now exists, be abolished; that said committee shall hereafter consist of the G. C. C., the A. G. C. C., the G. S. and T., and if deemed advisable, the G. S. C., and editor of the journal. With a board of directors and the number of salaried officers that we have now, I consider this committee and its attendant expenses, superfluous and unnecessary.

The advantages of this plan, aside from its economy, would be, that the committee would always be in session, and thus be enabled to act promptly in all matters requiring its attention, thereby saving much valuable time now wasted.

They would also serve as an advisory board, and the action of each grand officer would be subject to the approval of a majority of the committee, which would be ample restraint.

The Order would then have the benefit of their counsel in all matters, which it now has not.

This is simply my opinion in the matter, and may be entirely wrong; however, I would like to hear from some of the members and get their views.

Yours in P. F.

M. F. COLLINS.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Feb 12.

Editor Railway Conductor.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: As Secretary of Terre Haute Division 90, I was instructed, at the union meeting held at Terre Haute, Feb. 9, 1890, to send a resolution passed at that meeting to you for publication in the CONDUCTOR, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that two years is too long a time, and that one year is long enough, for a conductor to run a train before becoming eligible to a membership in the O. R. C.

J. W. CASKEY,

Secretary and Treasurer.

TOPEKA, Kas., Feb. 20, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Topeka Division 179, will hold, not their first, but their third, annual ball on the evening of March 20. We have been very successful in our first division balls, so we are obliged to keep them up. This time the depression in our treasury was caused by the long sickness and death of our worthy Brother, P. G. Cary; also, the sickness of two other Brothers, and a Brother's family while he was out of employment. We believe that it is far better for divisions to do some hard labor in getting up entertainments to replenish the treasury, than to send out the begging letters that have become so objectionable to all.

We have correspondence from our grand officers stating that they are on their slate to attend a union meeting, of Topeka Division No. 179, 620 Kansas avenue, 9 a. m., on time, March 20, (the same day as our third annual ball) of western delegates and all Brothers. Questions of vital importance to the western conductors are to be discussed, as all delegates have questions and answers of great importance, they will bring them along. This is our second union meeting. The first was held previous to our Grand Division meeting at Toronto, and was a grand experience meeting, which every one of nearly one hundred Brothers present enjoyed. Your map will show that Topeka is approachable from all sides, when accompanied with the real grip, pass-word or division card. This meeting has been long talked of by near divisions, and there will be a large turn out, so the Brothers who have a great distance to come will miss a great meeting if they do not get here. Do not forget to bring your ladies, as there will be a grand O. R. C. ball in the evening; also, remember that the Copeland hotel, corner Ninth and Kansas avenue, is the O. R. C. headquarters. Reasonable rates in a first-class hotel to conductors.

D. I. FURBECK,

Delegate, Topeka Division 179.

LOGANSPOUT, Ind., Feb. 17, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: With your permission I will give you the names and numbers of our Collar and A men on the second and fourth divisions of the Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg railroad. From Logansport to Chicago we have the following members: First on the list comes Brother F. F. Barrett, who is known generally as the "Commodore." I cannot give the origin of this title, but suppose he made a visit to Kentucky. Next on the list is Brother E. W. Alexander, who, report says, when he found his hair turning grey, had recourse to the brush and shoe blacking. Next we have Brother E. S. Gardner who in some respects is similar to the whale, who must have his spout. Now comes Brother P. E. Weise, who can smell a tramp, and it is not necessary to say the aforesaid tramp finds walking his alternative. I might tell a little joke about Pete's trip west, and how the conductor in charge of the train made a run of the sleeper in which Brother Weire was resting his eyes, at a place called Franklin Switch, but he might give me ned for so doing. Next, Brother Joseph O'Kinney, who, by the way, is of Irish extraction, but does not wish it to be known, and Brother S. Kerlin, commonly called the "Deacon;" Brother J. C. Clendenen, and your humble servant winds up the list. Right here I wish to say for Brother Clendenen that a more handsome, polite, or modest conductor than he, is very hard to find, and if he wishes to tell a bigger one than that he will say the same about me. I will pay my attention to the east end men in my next.

Yours, in P. F.,

L. M. D.

Logan Division 110.

MONTEVIDEO, Minn., Feb. 18, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Not wishing to delay the publication of the magazine, I will hurry my correspondence. The fact is, I have had the grip. Did you ever have the grip? Do you know what it is to have a hot water bottle stuck under your feet, and prescribed with it one quart of boneset tea?

Give me a good red-hot patent car heater, that smells enough of burning iron to make your head ache in a minute, and sets your car on fire as sure as it rolls over the embankment. That's what I call comfort. Boneset tea is a peculiar medicine. It always leaves a bad taste in the mouth, which may be remedied by taking five grains of quinine powder immediately after. The grip was appropriately named. It has held its grip on me for four weeks, and the landlord has taken my grip for board.

Our worthy Brother and Secretary, C. H. Baker, has gone to Colorado, seeking health, and it is rumored will accept a higher position offered him. We wish him success, although in him we will lose one who has the good of the Order at heart, and one who is loved and respected by every one who knows him. But what we lose will be the gain of some other division. Bro. Baker was a charter member of Division 72, and was the first and only secretary the division ever knew. Always prompt in his duties, always the first to respond in charity, and a true Christian, enough cannot be said of the merits of him, and whether he leaves, or stays with us, we wish him success.

Our worthy Chief, A. L. Carey, is at Bismarck, and, we hope, fighting the lottery bill.

Brother Carey, as you will remember, was our representative at the convention at Denver. He was elected last fall, by a large majority, commissioner of insurance, and resigned his position as conductor. This is for the benefit of some who suppose Dakota conductors are composed of cow boys and high collar dudes. This is also for the benefit of some who think a conductor can never become anything better than a conductor, I say better, because he does become so, not morally or socially, but in the eyes of the people at large, and in the eyes of ourselves we feel that he is above us, because he is the choice of the people, but when a conductor, he was the choice of only one or two men. Thus we feel that Brother Carey is our leader. We look to him for advice and wisdom. This is also for the benefit of those who have a peculiar way of getting along in the world, especially those who are seldom pleasant if a passenger wants information, answering him in a short, surly way peculiar to such men. Brother Carey was a man who never spoke a cross word to his passengers, no matter what the provocation might be. He always had a pleasant word and smile for them all, more especially the ladies. Thus his success. I have no doubt but when he got into the baggage car that he gave vent to his feelings on the poor baggage-man and brakeman, sat on the box covering the body of some poor unfortunate, who died with the grip, spit tobacco juice into the key-hole of some lady's trunk, played sinchor poker with the governor, or some senator, and stacked the cards and bluffed. But the outside world knew nothing of this. Perhaps if they had he would have been elected to a higher office.

I will close by saying that Division 72 has a kindly feeling toward all; that the majority, and I am sorry I cannot say all, are with us in the insurance.

Brothers, can you afford to be without this, especially those of you who have a wife, children, or an aged father and mother? Can you afford to leave them in straightened circumstances? Have you not seen little boys and girls ragged, with the stamp of starvation in their faces, and when asked, "Where is your father, where is your home?" would answer: "We have neither. Our father is dead. Mother's health was poor, and her labor to keep starvation from the door broke her down, and she soon followed him." Do you remember how those fathers and mothers have sat by your bedside when you were ill, and watched, with anxious eyes, the least move or breath from you, praying God to spare your life? Do you realize the self-sacrifices they have endured that you might be happy? Have you ever thought of these things? Do you know of any better way of repaying them than to have a policy of the O. R. C., made out in their favor? God knows you owe them enough, and if you have no other way of repaying them, do this. Can you die happy, thinking that your wife's life will be one long struggle for existence? Perhaps your children will not receive a common school education! Can you give up this life with this on your mind? Perhaps some of you will say: "Oh, well, if I die the Order will not let them want for anything. The boys will chip in 50 cents, or $1 each." Don't you bet on that, although there are many who are always ready to subscribe to those calls, but they are becoming more careful, and will not give unless they are worthy, and have a good excuse for not having a policy.

Please return all not worthy of publication, and those not returnable by express, charges pre paid.

C. M. GILBERT,
Division 72, Fargc, Dak.

MEGANTIC. Feb. 11, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Thinking that perhaps the following might be of interest to some of the Brothers, I send it for what it is worth, and if you do not agree with me, just consign the whole of it to the waste basket.

On Sunday last, the 9th inst, a special meeting of West Farnham Division No. 80, was called to receive our worthy Assistant Grand Chief, Brother Wilkins. It is needless to say that he was promptly on time, arriving from Montreal Saturday evening, in charge of Chief Conductor S. H. Vernal, and Junior Conductor J. E. Cunningham. We assembled at our hall about 10:30 o'clock Sunday morning, a goodly number being present. I am very sorry to state that several of the members were absent who might have been present. It seems a great pity that members, when they have the opportunity, cannot be more interested in the Order, especially on an occasion of this kind. Of course, a prompt and regular attendance is necessary at every meeting, when possible, and by slight inconvenience and exertion, members might be more punctual.

After the usual introductions, by Brother Vernal, we all indulged in a social smoke and chat until 11 o'clock, when the meeting was called to order. Brother Wilkins in the chair. Having no particular business to transact, and only one candidate for initiation, we proceeded with that, Brother T. O. Dales being the victim.

At 1 p. m. a recess for one hour was taken. We repaired to the dining hall, where a bountiful repast was served by the proprietor of the American house. After doing ample justice to the good things, as only truly honest men can, we again took up our position in open division for an hour or so. I will omit what transpired during that hour.

About 3 p. m. we were again called to order and the usual business gone through. We were all very much pleased at this, our first, visit from one of the grand officers, and hope we may soon have the pleasure of seeing Brother Wilkins with us again. It seems to give us new life to have a grand officer come among us and give us a few new ideas, which we are all in need of. Brother Wilkins addressed the division in a very able manner, urging every member of the Order to become more interested in the division meetings, to meet as often as possible, and talk over matters in the division room, not outside. He said the members who stay away, and kick, are the very first ones to call upon you when in trouble. Right here in the division room is the place to do the kicking. When you have anything to say, come and say it, and depend upon it, you will become more and more interested and will wish to attend. He said:

"Brothers, I am not speaking of any local division in particular, but of all. It is universal all over the country, and now is the time to be as regular as you possibly can in your attendance, so as to discuss matters thoroughly, in order that your delegate to the Grand Division may become familiar with your views and ideas upon different matters concerning the welfare of our worthy Order."

We were all much surprised, and well pleased, to meet Brother Hardy, who came all the way from Lowell, Mass., to be present at the meeting. He was the founder of this division, consequently the first chief. He still clings to his old love, being a member of No. 80 yet.

Brother Vernal and myself had the pleasure of seeing Brother Wilkins safely on board the 9:45 o'clock train, bound for Newport, in charge of Brother Westover. He was accompanied by Brothers Hardy, Mills and Griggs.

Yours in P. F.,

F. G. MARTYN.

We have received a clipping regarding the Annual Ball and Banquet of Division No. 11, Newton, Kansas. While we have not space for it entire, we willingly give the following:—Ed.

Promptly at nine o'clock the forces assembled for the grand march, headed by Superintendent H. R. Nickerson and wife. At this juncture Agent G. J. Hartman, mounted the stand and in behalf of the wives of the conductors, presented the members of the Division of Order of Railway Conductors with an elegant altar cloth. In presenting it, Mr. Hartman said:

Ladies and Gentlemen, and members of the Order of Railway Conductors.

The custom which requires a man who knows nothing whatever of agriculture to address the farmers' meetings, which asks him who is totally ignorant of things political to talk politics, and which unavoidably puts a man in a place for which he is least fitted, prevails. By the operations of this strange custom I, so little blessed with the set phrase of speech, have been called upon by the wives of the conductors to interrupt your program and fill in the pause with my harsh and ill-tuned voice. Against this arrangement I protested with that modesty which is the chief beauty of my character, and asked the bevy of beautiful ladies to have this service performed by some one with a tripping tongue; but they insisted, and I have been too long tied up in the holy bonds of matrimony to offer very strong objections to a female's wish. So I polished up the brass of my countenance and have come on the part of these women, who love their lords, to present to the conductors of Division No. 11, in the presence of this assembly of strength and beauty, a testimonial of their affection and esteem. I am directed to present to you in their behalf, this altar cloth of kingly purple and golden broidery. Into it they have drawn with yellow threads and skillful fingers the symbols of your Order, the letters of your faith. The shape of this fine fabric is triangular, which strikes me as being appropriate because this shape is used by the signal service to indicate "fair weather," absence of all "storms," clear skies, no cyclones, "thunder or lightning." Surely nothing can be more appreciated by you, than a certificate of this kind, that there are no breakers ahead, and that the hurricane deck is clear. On one corner there has been placed the number of your division and here are letters I might interpret to mean the Order of Royal Companions. This cloth will adorn the altar of your division room, where all things are done, as these letters would imply, with Friendship, Justice, Charity, in Perfect Faith. I present it to you with the wishes of the ladies and of myself, that your term of usefulness here may be lengthened out many years, and that you may draw full buckets from the wellsprings of prosperity and joy; and when you have given up the punch and quit these busy scenes, may you walk on eighteen-carat pavements, where the lights shine from lamp-posts of pure sapphire, and it will not be necessary to issue duplex or report a "short fare."

Conductors, the board is not out; the track is clear; you have the right of way, and will now proceed with the enjoyments of the evening.

Mr. E. A. Beatty accepted this handsome gift for the conductors in the following appropriate terms:

LADIES:—As it is our happy lot to be the recipient of this beautiful present, we receive it with due appreciation and with the same kindly feeling with which it is presented, and we tender to the wives of the brethren of Newton Division No. 11, of the Order of Railway Conductors, our heartfelt gratitude for this handsome and appreciated gift, with the hope that the life and happiness of you all may be preserved; and that the kindly interest entertained and manifested by you toward our Order, may receive its merited reward; and in behalf of the conductors of this division I thank you.

Sedalia Division No. 60, Order of Railway Conductors, gave their first Annual Ball at Sicher's Park Hotel last night, and the Sentinel desires to congratulate the knights of the punch upon the magnificent success that attended their efforts.

There was an attendance of over 400 ladies and gentlemen, quite a number of them being from other points, and certainly no more enjoyable evening was ever passed at a like entertainment.

For the past three or four days the different committees had been busily engaged in arranging all the details, and in consequence nothing was left undone. The spacious hall never looked more beautiful, and furnished convincing proof, that the committee on decorations had performed their task most admirably. There were flags, evergreens, pictures, etc., in profusion, all displayed to the best possible advantage, presenting a scene that would of necessity have to be seen to be appreciated as it should be. There were also appropriate mottos cleverly arranged, which called forth unstinted admiration.

Prof. Lew Bernstein officiated as master of ceremonies, while the music was furnished by Prof. Gregg's orchestra, and never did musicians show up to better advantage, such being the universal verdict of those in attendance.

It was 9 o'clock when dancing began, the grand march being led by E. E. Clark, of Ogden, Utah, Grand Senior Conductor, and Mrs. F. L. Mead, wife of conductor Mead, of the M., K. & T.

It was nearly midnight when supper was served. The viands were prepared by Sicher, who as a caterer has gained a reputation most enviable, but never did he surpass his effort of last evening.

As previously stated, no more enjoyable hop was ever given in Sedalia, and to each and every gentlemen on the different committees due credit should be given. They started out to achieve success, and gathered it in, even beyond their most sanguine expectations, which is saying a little.

The Conductors' Ball and Banquet.

McCook, Neb., Feb. 24, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

The first annual ball given by the Order of Railway Conductors, of Harvey Division 95, took place on the evening of Feb. 14.

This division consists of fifty members, including freight and passenger conductors, on lines controlled by Superintendent Campbell and Assistant Superintendent Highland.

No time previous in the history of our baby city have the conductors undertaken anything of this kind.

The B. & M. employes' and the engineers' and firemen's ball, other years, have been pleasant affairs, but the conductors' ball, on Friday night, was their first attempt.

The hall was very tastily decorated. The arrangement committee: Oyster, Kendlin, McKenna, Belknap and Bruno, worked early and late to bring about a grand success.

On the stage were two headlights, on each of which was painted, "Harvey Division 95, O. R. C.", and from the stage, extending to all parts of the hall, were twined together all the signal colors.

Red, White, Blue and Green lanterns were suspended from every window and niche in the room.

Opposite the stage, on the west wall, painted in red and black letters, on white canvas, was:

.....
WELCOME TO
.....
FIRST ANNUAL BALL, O. R. C.,
.....
HARVEY DIVISION 95.
.....

On the north was time card rule: "In case of doubt, take safe side."

Opposite this was the motto of the Order: Justice, Charity, Fidelity, Truth and Perpetual Friendship."

Fifty flags also swayed over all.

Nearly three hundred people joined in the grand march, to the music of Reizenstein's orchestra.

Besides this immense body of dancers, the stage was crowded with spectators, among whom were Superintendent Highland and wife, of Cheyenne division, and Trainmaster Harman, of McCook.

Beautiful looked Menard's Hall, as these "Fair women and brave men" marched in and out of the opening promenade.

Twenty-four dances completed the program, and, at the end of the first half, all partook of a bounteous feast at the B. & M. eating house, where they were cheerfully waited upon by the corps of girls, and hospitably entertained by the popular landlord, Ed. Jordan.

All passed off pleasantly. The music could not be excelled, and the floor managers, headed by the masters of ceremonies, F. Kendlin and C. F. Sturby, were careful to note that all had their program's filled, and joined in the merry dance.

The souvenir programs and badges were very pretty, and well pleased were all, especially so the ladies, with these little tokens of the conductors' ball.

Among the visitors were seven couples from Hastings and nine couples from Holdrege, Neb.

The city club rooms were thrown open during the day, by way of entertainment for the guests, and many were the comments passed next day on the cordiality of the railroad boys, and the friendly demeanor of McCook in general.

Speeches of welcome, in behalf of the conductors, were delivered by J. C. Allen, popular business man, and Ed. Jordan, of the B. & M. hotel.

The reception committee consisted of: Ed. Kane, A. H. Chapin, W. G. Reddin, J. Bowers, J. C. Birdsell, C. D. Belknap, A. Bormo and T. Mundy, and graciously did they receive their guests.

In every way was it a grand success, and the members of the Order feel that their first attempt was satisfactory, and they will not hereafter allow a year to pass without a similar proceeding.

All returned to their homes with pleasant recollections of the affair, and feeling as though they had been entertained most royally. And well satisfied do the railroad boys feel with their ball and banquet, which must surely be considered one of the grand social events transpiring in Menard's Hall, McCook, Red Willow county, Neb.

SISTER OF ONE OF THE CONDUCTORS.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Feb. 15, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

Kindly indulge me space in THE CONDUCTOR to say something about the union meeting recently held here, and the good we hope will result from the same. The Grand Chief and the visiting Brothers were informed that 92 was in a healthy condition, having a membership of 81. The grand old war horse, Brother George House, who has been in the employ of the Vandalia line since the Wabash river was a spring branch, has had to give up his train, and will, we fear, never be able to do service again. About three months ago he was stricken with paralysis, totally disabling one side. He being well up in the fifties, age is decidedly against his recovery. The Almighty may have made prettier men than George House, but he never made one possessed of a better sense of honor. Let his taking away come when it will, Brother House has done his full duty to his family, and his Order. He has $2,500 in our Benefit Department, and will, as all of his friends hope, soon have the claim fully established, as when that is done, the remainder is soon accomplished, for no member of the O. R. C. will ever begrudge the payment of his dollar, knowing that it will carry with it a haven of sunshine to not only his family, but will keep the wolf away from the door as long as he may be spared to his family on this earth.

Brother Grand Chief, you are a daisy to make truthful forecasts, when you alluded to the "Tender Foots," who imagine they are threatened with a case of "varnish car fever," as the same individuals that find their way from the division room to the back steps of their superintendent, or general manager, to give them "pointers" as to what "the boys" are doing, and will expect soon an increase in pay, etc., etc., etc. They are here; and probably with all their prestine glory, have come to stay. But we must remember that they are a standing menace to every good of the Order. Probably all of the Brothers who are posted in mythology, remember of reading of the great marine monster that inhabits the deep with many amphibious creatures, including the devil fish and horned horse. The marine wonder, or monster, the moment it was attacked, would emit a blackish substance that would discolor the water immediately surrounding, from which it would escape. This blackened water would confound the course of its pursuers. It is just the same with some men. They will create confusion, strife, contention and discord, and then retire from an assured conquest through the trouble and ill report they have created. Everybody who knows anything of the frailties of man, knows that there is nothing easier than to create suspicion, and how hard, or difficult, it is to correct an error. Then why not say that a fool's mouth is far worse than a Keely motor? for a man of wisdom will hold his tongue. This is not intended as personal to any one individual, but probably there are members in Division 92 whose feet these shoes may fit. Let us see more brotherly love, and more charity, which will serve as a greater understanding and recognition as a member's word and oath. We are all well aware of the fact that FALLIBILITY is human nature. Perfection is attained when we develop wings. The earth is not heaven, and most unquestionably there will always be kickers from kickersville.

Yours, fraternally,

C. H. ARTHUR.

Division 92.

The Railway "Scape Goat."

"And Aaron shall * * * * confess over him (the goat) all the iniquities of the children of Israel * * * * putting them on the head of the goat and shall send him away by the hands of a fit man. * * * * And he shall let go the goat in the wilderness."—Leviticus xvi; part of 21st and 22d verses.

Scape goat:—"A goat upon whose head were symbolically placed the sins of the people, after which he was suffered to escape into the wilderness."—Webster.

It goes without saying, when Noah Webster defines a thing, he correctly conveys the true meaning of the thing defined.

It also goes without saying, we are a Christian people. From that it is but a step to say we are biblical.

Look at our Constitution. Inspect the Declaration of Independence. Examine our church spires pointing upwards. Think of the Y. M. C. A. societies, instilling the fact constantly. And not so very long ago railway coaches were "racked" with bibles.

Let it be once understood a railway was infidel in its government and practices, and the christian public would avoid it at once—upon the Sabbath.

It's noisy Sabbath whistles are ignored. It's seven days labor, each week, for every employe is complacently viewed by devout congregations who, with bibles in their hands, going to church meet employes with dinner pails in hand, going to work—upon Sunday.

But the line is drawn at an atheistic corporation or one controlled by unbelieving officials. Busy officers, well knowing this phase of the American public, and not feeling inclined to worship personally, or spare the time to individually prove their claim as christians, conceding in the meantime, the necessity for showing themselves in accord with bible customs and the spirit of the age, past and present, long since effected a compromise founded upon the authority quoted at the head of this article, by biblically (of course) selecting a "Scape goat," which is not only Levitically and biblically authorized, but often very convenient. Therefore, if not by words, by that which is more potent, example, they may claim absolution from many sins, since the railway scape goat has borne them away "by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness," which according to the bible symbolically purifies them in the eyes of the public. How it looks in the eyes of the goat, left in the wilderness to browse, does not appear.

A ship without a flag has no nationality. A citizen without a vote, no political weight. A man without a country, no legal protection. A railway employe with an undefined standing, is a cosmopolitan in the railway world, like a flagless ship on the ocean of transportation, and who so fit for a "Scape goat," as he who has such a standing, viz the conductor. The "fit man" may banish him into the wilderness with impunity.

The meanest cur with a licensed collar about his neck, is more secure than the noblest mastiff without a master. The collar not the breed affords protection.

We read of collisions, the "Scape goat" goes to the wilderness; all's well of slow time, of too fast time—a wreck. Misread, never missent orders. The public demands a victim; the "Scape goat" goes to the wilderness; 'tis well.

It is so easy to order, so perfectly simple to do the most difficult things from the office, when in fact the execution, on the road, is impossible, that "scape goats" are a railway necessity, besides so convenient. Says the High Priest to the Levite, "Why is traffic obstructed?" The Levite replies: "Scape goat!" "Lead him away! Why property damaged? Why work neglected? Why loss of custom? loss of revenue?" Instead of admitting to the High Priest lack of facilities, too much competition, etc., etc., the Levite turns responsibility from himself to the "scape goat," until the hand of the "fit man" becomes weary leading him away into the wilderness. Occasionally whole flocks of scape goats are "wildernessed" at once to prove the sin is all gone and the High Priest purified.

There is a difference between Bible method and the railway mode of doing this purifying. The priest was the one to confess the sins of the people upon the goat's head, authorized in the Bible, while every small Levite, whose only duty on the railway is to assist, takes it upon himself to bunch his mistakes, whenever possible, and "lay in wait" for the goat whose horns, alas! too often are so many, they make him an easy victim in the thickest of official ambush. But when the hand of the "fit man" takes said "scape goat" away, he (the Levite) feeling remorse, says: "The goat's name is Ishmael, and every man's hand was foretold should be against him, and I, being a man, am prophetically included; hence, no injustice can be laid at my door."

Doubtless there are many "scape goats" in the wilderness of idleness to-day who, but for their numerous "horns" would never been led away. Yet men have been led away innocent, whose despair has made them dissipated. While no right-minded man would uphold wrong-doing on the part of any employe, would there not be better officers, in fact, if so many "scape goats" were not at hand to bear their sins?

S. E. F.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., March 3, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

MY DEAR SIR: I have just been reading the article on insurance written by Brother U. L. Upson, of Buffalo division, in No. 5, of March 1, and it meets with my hearty approval. I wish every member of the order could read it. It seems strange to me that any one should be unable to meet the assessments, as the insurance is now. I am at present braking, at the small salary of $40 per month, and I find no trouble in keeping up the assessments, and also keeping up the premium of $107.40 a year on a $5,000 policy in the New York Life

If there are any members who are unable to carry the insurance as it is now, I would approve of Mack's plan, in No. 4, of Feb. 15, giving such members a chance to carry $1,250, at 50 cents each assessment.

Does Brother Madeira, who writes an article in No. 5, realize, when comparing the Hartford insurance with the O. R. C., that the Hartford is merely an accident insurance, and that a man must be crippled, or killed, by some accident before he can get any benefit from the company, while in the O. R. C., if he dies from any disease, or any accident, his family is protected, and if he loses a foot, hand, arm, leg, eyesight, or the use of same, he gets the full amount of insurance, to set himself up in business?

I tell you the Hartford is not worthy of the first degree of comparison with the O. R. C. insurance, and the insurance advertised in the back of our journal is accident insurance, and I fear too many of the Brothers are deceiving themselves by putting too much dependence in accident insurance. There is not one of you who expects to be killed in an accident, while you all know you must die, either by accident or disease. Why, then, do you not prepare for what you know must come, by providing yourself with an insurance that covers death in any form, and also keeps you if you are disabled?

I am no lover of assessment insurance, started, as many of them are, by a few men as an investment, giving them a soft snap in office, and feathering their nests until the members begin to die, and then, after all the members of the company are rich, quit business, leaving the poor policy-holders with no protection. But an assessment insurance like the O. R. C., whose stockholders are its members, bound together by the principles of Brotherly Love and Perpetual Friendship, is entirely different. I have had three years' experience in the insurance business, and must say that I know of no insurance so valuable to a railroad man, and at so little expense, as the O. R. C. insurance. It makes no limit of travel, residence, or occupation, so there is no danger of a man finding himself without insurance, as long as he keeps up his assessments, while in most other insurance a man is liable to find himself, or his family find themselves, without protection when it is most needed simply because he has broken some law in the policy, which he was not acquainted with.

And now, Brothers, let me say, if you have no insurance, or nothing but accident insurance, I beg of you, make out an application for the O. R. C. insurance at once. Do not wait till you lose a limb, or your life, and then have your division be compelled to issue a circular calling for aid for you or your poor family. Remember, if your division should have to come to your assistance, the amount obtained in that way would come far short of the noble $2,500 you would receive if you have a certificate.

I wish to urge all members of the Insurance Department to pay their assessments as soon as they come, and not keep the poor widows and orphans waiting sixty days, and then perhaps forget about having the notice in the house, and forfeit their membership, and take the great chance of leaving their own family to the cold charity of the world.

In conclusion I wish to answer Mack's question by saying that if I should die my wife would expect to pay all assessments for deaths that occurred prior to mine.

Wishing the O. R. C., and especially the Insurance Department, greater prosperity in the future than has been known in the past, I will "let you go," remaining very truly

Yours, in P. F.,

N. E. RETALLICK,
Battle Creek Div. No. 6

CHICAGO, March 3, 1890.

Dear Editor:

Since writing my last letter I have completed a trip through the entire east, and I believe a great amount of good has been accomplished by these meetings, as it gives the Grand Officers an opportunity to come in direct contact with the membership itself, and the exchange of ideas is of great moment to both. That we are all working to the end, that the conductors of the country may be benefitted, I believe is true, and the only trouble comes from the fact, that we do not all agree as to the best policy to be pursued to obtain the desired end. These meetings give the best opportunity for an exchange of the ideas held by those present, and I believe are conducive to good results.

Leaving Ottawa, February 7, in charge of Bro. Hopkins, of Division 29, we arrived at Montreal, at 9 p. m., and were nicely quartered at the Albion, which is kept by another good Brother, in the person of Brother Danforth, of Division 24. Bros. Hall and Coon, of Division 17, kept my time pretty well occupied until midnight, talking over matters of interest to the Order. On the following morning, Brother Munday, C. C., of Division 75, and also, Grand Inside Sentinel, in company with Brother Pigeon, Secretary of 75, and Brother Germain and myself, were driven around the city. We visited the church of Notre Dame and the Jesuit church, also the cyclorama of the crucifixion, the Windsor hotel, and the Grand Trunk and Canadian and Pacific depots. The church of Notre Dame, is the largest church I ever saw, and is said to seat 15,000 people, and is beautifully finished. We also went up in the tower and out on top, from which a splendid view can be taken, but on this occasion it was snowing and very little could be seen.

The years spent by the public and the Grand Trunk company in the old sheds used for depot purposes, put them in a position to appreciate a good station, and they do most certainly appreciate the present one; it is a handsome structure, very substantial, and adds very materially to the terminal facilities of the G. T. Ry.

The Windsor station of the C. P. R., which is a massive stone structure, and outwardly presents the appearance of any thing but a station, together with the grounds which surround it, cost three millions of dollars. It is built with a view to furnishing the public with all the privileges, conveniences and comforts, that are so well appreciated, and which are so essential to a pleasant and satisfactory journey. During the afternoon a very pleasant and instructive meeting was held, at which a very good attendance was had, the work being exemplified for the benefit of those present.

At 8:5 p. m., in charge of Brother Vernal, C. C., of Division 80, we left for Farnham, P. Q. This Division having moved back again to Farnham from Newport, where it has been for nearly two years past, and where their meetings were held under rather peculiar circumstances, they being compelled to meet between midnight and three o'clock in the morning, the Brothers being compelled to dead head both to and from, arriving at 12 midnight and leaving at 3:40 a. m. for home. I will add, that during all this time, they have failed to hold only one meeting, which would put to shame many older and larger divisions. During Sunday, we held a forenoon session and took recess for dinner, which was gotten up expressly for this occasion, and at which all the Brothers did their full duty. The thanks of all are due to Mrs. Foster, for the excellent manner in which she succeeded in pleasing everybody.

After dinner an afternoon session was held, the work being exemplified with candidate. All were well pleased with visit, and I believe good results will follow.

At 9:45 p. m., in charge of Brother Westover, I left, enroute for Bellows Falls, but had to tie up for the night at Newport, where at 8 a. m., Monday, I again took train and arrived at Bellows Falls at 2:15 p. m., where I was met by Brother Kinney, Secretary of this division, and taken to the hotel. During the evening we held a meeting when the work was exemplified, and matters of interest to the Order discussed. We closed at 1 a. m., well pleased with our visit to 233.

At 9:20 a. m., the 11th, left via. Cheshire R

R. for the home of Division 146, Fitchburg, Mass., where I arrived at noon. During the evening a meeting was held at which the work was explained, and while not as well attended as I would liked to have seen, much interest was manifested.

At 4:20 a. m. of the 12th, left via the Fitchburg for Breton, arriving at 7 a. m. A meeting was held with Division 122, whose members are, most of them, so situated, that very few could get away to attend. Division 157 was well represented, both divisions turning out about fifty Brothers, and a very interesting meeting was held. The following three days were spent with friends, and at 4:40 p. m., I left for Providence, where on Sunday I was to have a meeting with Division 151, as I had changed their date from the 17th to the 16th, owing to a new division at Portland, Me., not being ready to organize, for which I had left the 16th open. During the day we held a nicely attended meeting, about 40 Brothers being present, and this is the first division in all my visiting which does the work without the aid of the rituals. The third degree was conferred, and the balance of the ceremony gone through with, and no officers in the division used a ritual. I desire to congratulate them publicly, and only wish all divisions would follow in their steps. After the meeting, a line was formed and we marched to the hotel, where dinner was served, specially for this occasion. The evening was spent with Brother Whaley, C. C., of 151, and his estimable lady, in company, with Brothers Abbott, Brown and Taft, and wives, and a very pleasant time was had, and fully enjoyed by all. I feel well pleased, that I was enabled to change the date with this division, as I am satisfied, that a much better meeting was had, than could have been on a week day.

At 9 a. m., the 18th, I left for Worcester, Mass., where, at 11 a. m., I arrived, and was met by Brother Hassan, who took me to the hotel. At 1 p. m., a meeting was held with 237, at which only a few were able to be present.

At 8:20 a. m., the 19th, I left for Springfield, arriving at 10 a. m. No meeting was held here, as it was out of the question to get Brothers enough together for a quorum, on any day but Sunday. Brother Beals, Secretary of 198, had written me, that they could hold no meeting, but I failed to receive his letter.

At 7:50 a. m., the 20th, I left for New Haven, arriving at 9:30 a. m., where I was met by Brother Ostrander, and taken to the hotel, where Brother Pondée, C. C., of 201, soon put in an appearance. After a pleasant chat, Brother Pondée took me in hand, and drove me all around the city, until dinner time. This is the home of the famous Yale College, and they are a fine array of buildings. New Haven may well be proud of them. They are much more extensive than I had supposed, and some of the buildings are of peculiar architectural beauty. Most notably so, is Osborn Hall, which takes its name from the donor. A drive through the manufacturing portion of the city, developed the fact, that in carriage manufacturing, New Haven must be well to the front, if not the foremost in this particular line of business. During the afternoon a meeting was held, and pleasantly enjoyed by all present.

At 9:30 a. m., of the 21st, I left for Jersey City. A social meeting only, was held with 169, as I was just about sick at this time. On the 22d a meeting was held with Division 168 at Hoboken, at which about thirty Brothers were present, and a very pleasant meeting was had. Brother Weisz put in an appearance during the afternoon, he being on hand to attend the Union meeting at New York city, on Sunday 23d. I also tried to be present at the Union meeting, but Division 52 did not care to cancel their date, so I felt it my duty to meet with them on the 23d, and a very pleasant and profitable meeting was held, although not very well attended—only about 15 Brothers being present.

At 9:30 a. m., of the 24th, I left for Middletown, the home of Division 104. Just a bare quorum was present, but the work was exemplified for the benefit of those present.

At 8:10 a. m., the 25th, I left for Albany, arriving at 1:40 p. m. During the afternoon a meeting was held with Division 56; only a small number were present, but a very interesting three hours were spent, and I believe, was fully enjoyed by all.

On Wednesday, the 26th, the day was spent in visiting the capitol at Albany, in company with Brother Weisz. During the evening a fairly well attended meeting was held with Division 171, at Troy, N. Y., after which all went to supper at Brother Roche's, and a general good time was had by all.

The 27th was spent at Albany. I had left this date open for the purpose of meeting a committee, to take up some matters, but they were not ready, and I had nothing to do.

On the 28th, I left for Utica, arriving at 12:05 p. m. An afternoon and an evening session was held, and were fairly well attended. After the evening session, a banquet was spread at the Butterfield House, about 30 present. Mr. Saulsbury, Superintendent of the D. L. & W., among the number. A very enjoyable time was spent by all.

I believe, that if the Order was held in as high esteem by all Superintendents, as by Mr. Saulsbury, that a very different state of feeling would exist to-day from what does exist. This meeting closes a six week's trip, and one which will always be recalled with grateful remembrance, as one of the pleasant experiences of a life time.

I will take this occasion, to publicly thank, in my feeble way, all the Brothers with whom I have come in contact, for their uniform kindness to me, and the courteous treatment, that I have been the recipient of at their hands. I trust that the time will come, when in a measure, I may have an opportunity to repay to some extent, the Brothers who have done so much for me, but I shall always feel, that I am indebted to some that I will not be able to repay in their own coin. Fearing that this has stretched out too long already, I will close with kind regards to all.

Yours Truly in P. F.,
C. H. WILKINS.

Carrier of Passengers—Limiting Liability—Free Passes—Acceptance by Conductor.

Action for damages. When plaintiff received his alleged injuries he was traveling upon a free pass, given him at his own solicitations, upon which was expressed his agreement, that, in consideration thereof, he assumed all risk of accident which might happen to him, while traveling on, or getting off the trains of the defendant railroad corporation, on which the ticket might be honored for passage. The ticket bore on its face the words, "provided he signs the agreement on the back hereof." The agreement was not signed by plaintiff, the conductor twice honoring it by punching out a passage without requiring him to sign it. On appeal

Held, That an agreement by one accepting as a gratuity, a free pass upon a railroad train, to assume all risk of accident which may happen to him while traveling upon such train, by which he may be injured in his person, is a valid agreement.

Held, That one availing himself of such ticket is estopped to deny, that he made the agreement expressed therein, because he did not and was not requested to sign it by the conductor.

Quimby vs. Boston & M. R. Co., Mass. S. C., Jan. 21st, 1890.

Sleeping Car Companies—Liability for Stolen Goods.

Action to recover the value of an overcoat which was alleged to have been lost or stolen, while plaintiff was a passenger of the Wabash railway, traveling in a Pullman car. The trial court gave plaintiff judgment, and the defendant appealed.

Held, That a sleeping car company, so far as it renders service similar in kind to an innkeeper, is subject to the same liabilities; and where an article of wearing apparel, belonging to a passenger in one of such cars, has been placed in the care of the porter, and is stolen from the car, the company will be liable therefor. Judgment affirmed.

Pullman Palace Car Company vs. Lowe, Nebraska S. C., Dec. 27th, 1890.

NOTE:—It has been frequently held, that a sleeping car company is bound to use reasonable care to guard its passengers from theft, and is liable for baggage stolen from passengers through want of such care. Lewis vs. Sleeping Car Co., Mass. S. C., 9 N. E. Rep. 615; Palace Car Co., vs. Pollock, Tex. S. C., 5 S. W. Rep. 814; and a railroad company is liable for loss of baggage of a passenger in a sleeping car on one of its trains, though the sleeping car is owned and managed by another company. R. R. Co., vs. Kanzenberger, Tenn. S. C., 1 S. W. Rep. 44.

Risk of Employment—Brakeman—Stone Pile—Notice Of.

In an action for damages resulting to plaintiff by reason of striking against a stone pile along the side of the track, it is Held, That a servant of a railway company not only assumes the risks ordinarily incident to his occupation, but also such extraordinary risks as he may knowingly and voluntarily encounter. And, where a person employed as a brakeman on a section of road, and is notified that there were stone piles beside the road, and so near to it, that a person on the side of a car passing them would be struck, will be deemed to have assumed the risk from that cause, although the precise location of the danger was not stated to him.

Smith vs. Winona & St. P. R. Co., Minn. S. C., Jan. 23d, 1890.

Carriers of Passengers—Negligence—Jury.

Where a passenger was riding on a car with his elbow resting on the window-sill, and slightly projecting out of the window, but his hand and wrist were inside, and a stick of cord-wood fell from the pile, corded or stacked near the track, through the open window at which he sat, striking in the palm of the hand, or near it, catching in the mouth of the coat sleeve, and jammed the arm backward and injured it,

Held, That the facts as to negligence upon the part of the train servants were not such, as the court could decide readily upon a nonsuit, but, that such facts were proper and should have been submitted to the jury.

Moakler vs. Willamette Val. R. Co., Oregon S. C., Jan. 18th, 1890.

NOTE:—It is an unsettled question, whether or not riding with the arm outside the car window was such contributory negligence as to prevent recovery. It has been decided pro and con, and as it is a question to be determined from the facts in each case, there is no general rule which declares, that it is or is not negligence. In case of Weber vs. N. Y., etc. R. Co. it was held, that where a passenger was riding with his arm out of the window, and that the conductor seeing his position, but gave him no warning because he did not think he was in danger, and was subsequently injured, that such negligence could not defeat a recovery. In the case of Holbrook vs. R. R. Co., 16 Barb. 113; it was held to be a question of fact for the jury to determine whether the plaintiff's elbow was inside or outside the window; and if outside no recovery could be had, but if resting on the window sill and forced out by a sudden jerk, or lurch, a recovery could be had. In Massachusetts and Pennsylvania the courts hold, that it is negligence as a matter of law, to ride with an arm extended out the window. 85 Mass 18.

Carriers Duty—Jumping from Moving Train—Conductor's Silence—Contributory Negligence.

Action for damages resulting to plaintiff by reason of the alleged negligent conduct of the company's servants, in failing to stop the train at his destination. The evidence showed that plaintiff purchased a ticket to station "D," a flag-station, at which trains do not stop unless they have passengers to put off or take on. On this occasion, the conductor signaled the engineer to stop but on account of a snarl in the bell rope he failed to observe it. The train, however, was slackened in speed, and plaintiff fearing that he might be carried past, jumped from the train and was injured. Plaintiff had judgment and, defendant appealed.

Held, 1. That while it is the duty of a railroad company to stop its trains at the station to which it has contracted to carry a passenger, and to land him safely and conveniently, yet the fact, that the conductor neglects his duty and the train passes the station without stopping, does not justify a passenger in jumping from the moving train, unless expressly or impliedly invited to do so by the conductor.

2. That the plaintiff's act in jumping from the moving train was purely voluntary, uninfluenced by any invitation expressed or implied by the company's conductor, and excused by no impending danger or necessity, of any kind, except his simple unwillingness to be carried beyond his destination. It was imprudent and dangerous, and his action for the injury resulting, is barred by his own contributory fault.

Walker vs. Vicksburg S. & P. R. Co., La. S. C. Dec. 1889.

NOTE.—The weight of authority does not carry out the above ruling. The rule upheld by the highest court is, that where a passenger, by the wrongful act of the company, is compelled to choose between leaving the cars while they are moving slowly, or submitting to the inconvenience of being carried by the station, the company is liable for the consequences of the choice, provided it is not exercised negligently or unreasonably." See, Wood Ry Law, 1129. Hence, a company's liability for injury to a passenger in attempting to leave a moving train, will depend upon whether, under all the circumstances, it was prudent for him to make the attempt. Here the evidence showed, that the train was moving slowly; that plaintiff had a smooth place to alight; and but for a sudden jarring of the car he would have landed safely. Therefore it is not negligence per se on the part of a passenger to light from a moving train, nor is it want of ordinary care in the passenger to use the only means to get off, the course of the defendant permitted. And authorities are numerous, that where the act of the company puts the passenger to a sudden election between alternative danger or inconvenience, and thus creates a situation well calculated to divert his attention from that danger, and inspires a confidence in the safety of his attempt to alight, a right of action is created for damages. In this case the danger did not appear to have been either apparent or imminent. Sec. 58 Tex. 406; 53 Mo. 509; 32 Pa. St. 292; 135, Mass. 21; 19 Fed. Rep. 83, and 40 La. Ann. 420.

Injury to Person Assisting Passenger—Conductor's Knowledge—Evidence—Notice.

The plaintiff accompanied his daughter and her small children to, and into the car to assist them with baggage and to secure a seat. Before he had fully accomplished this the train started, and he hastened to leave the slowly moving train, and in doing so, stepped upon something, fell and was injured. Plaintiff alleged that the conductor gave no signal, sign or warning of the starting, and by reason of the very short stop, and the starting without notice, and the negligence of the conductor in failing to assist passengers with burdens, on the train, he was, without fault, injured. The company had judgment and plaintiff appealed.

Held, That one who gets upon a fast mail train during one of its fixed stops at a station, where such stops are too short for him to transact his business and get off, has no right to a notice from the conductor by signal or otherwise, to alight before the train resumes its journey; especially where the evidence shows that the conductor or other train servant, knew that he had come aboard, nor that there was any usage or custom to give notice or make signals for the benefit of such visitors. This applies to a father who, in conformity to a known custom of travel, attends his daughter, at her request, under circumstances rendering such attendance necessary, to aid her and her infant children to enter the train and secure seats. And if the train starts before he has finished his undertaking, he must either remain until he can make known his wishes to get off, or take the risk of alighting while the train is in motion. Affirmed.

Coleman vs. Georgia Ry Co., Ga. S. C., Dec. 27, 1889.

NOTICE.—Strangers coming on board to meet friends, or to attend friends, who tarry until after the train has started and elect to leave the train while in motion cannot recover for injuries resulting. It was held in Stiles vs. R. R. Co., 65 Ga. 375, that a person coming on board for a certain purpose might have all the rights of a passenger, but the rule of law in such cases is, that such rights must be restricted to persons who are on board with the knowledge of the conductor or agents of the company whose diligence is charged with their safety. And even in that case the conductor is charged with only ordinary and not extraordinary diligence regarding their safety. Griswold vs. R. Co., Wis. S. C.

SIOUX CITY.

THE PLACE SELECTED FOR OUR HEADQUARTERS BUILDING.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Feb. 19, 1890.

To Members of all Divisions of O. R. C.

At the regular meeting of Sioux City Division 232, held Feb. 15, 1890, a resolution was passed authorizing the undersigned committee to draft a circular respecting the erection of our headquarters building, and, if possible, induce members of the Order who have not as yet subscribed for any stock in the building corporation, to give this matter their careful consideration and as soon as possible lend their assistance in subscribing for as many shares of stock as their means will admit.

It would seem to us a plain proposition, that every member of the Order of Railway Conductors must realize when the Order will have erected a building of its own, wherein its general offices will be situated, and from which a revenue will be derived to help defray its expenses, then every Brother will admit, we believe, that this fact alone will give the organization a prestige in public opinion that no organization of like character at the present time can boast, or does enjoy. No one can in any way criticize Sioux City division for feeling a profound interest in the building proposition, not only because Sioux City has been selected as the place of location, thereby bringing most of the grand officers to this city, but the opportunity of becoming acquainted with members of the Order residing elsewhere will be greatly increased. We are informed by Brothers Wheaton and Daniels that the commencement of work on the building is prevented because the amount required by the Grand Division has not been fully subscribed. And it would seem to us that it is impossible to state any new facts, or give any information that is not already in possession of the Order, and which we cannot but believe should be a sufficient incentive for prompt action of those, who, up to the present time, have not added their names to the list of subscribers. It is our firm belief that no one can refute the argument as to the taking of stock being a good financial investment, because you not only have every assurance that your money will not be lost, but that you will get a fair rate of interest thereon.

Sioux City ranks first in growth, both as to business and increase in population, among the cities of Iowa during 1889; and as to business prospects, in the way of contracts already let for business and private buildings, and arrangements for public improvements for this year, the percentage is much greater than any previous year, thus denoting a prosperous and healthy condition of affairs generally. We state with some degree of pride that the lot selected by the board of directors, on which a valuation of $40,000 was placed last August, can now be sold for $70,000, and this fact alone should be indicative of the wisdom and good judgment exhibited by our grand officers.

Brothers, it must be plain to every thoughtful and fair-minded member of the Order, that Sioux City division can receive no more real benefit on account of the building being located here than any other division located elsewhere, other than what we have already stated, and the statements we have made are prompted solely for the purpose of having you give this matter the attention to which it is justly entitled. It has been stated in the public press, and talked from the rostrum by members of the Order, and other parties, that the Order of Railway Conductors ranked first among the labor organizations of this country, and this is a statement of which every member of the Order has reason to be proud, but we firmly believe that when the structure now contemplated is erected, which, as we understand, is to be 100x150 feet, six stories high, being at the corner of a block, and well located, with an alley on the rear and side, so that we get the full use of the building, our Order will have set an example of which any labor organization can well afford to be proud, and which will be a source of great pride to every loyal member of the Order of Railway Conductors.

The following facts and figures we think will be of interest as partly showing the nature and business proportions of Sioux City, the place selected for our headquarters building:

Jobbing trade for 1889, $11,600,000.

Manufacturing, $800,000.

At the close of the year 1889, Sioux City had a third place among western packing centers, only being exceeded by Chicago and Kansas City. Business of packing houses, $30,000,000 annually.

The only cable line in the state, three and one-half miles in length.

The horse car lines are now being converted to electric lines.

The elevated railway is now under contract and material being manufactured and part now in transit. Only two other cities have at this time elevated roads—New York and Kansas City.

Population, 45,000.

Banks, fourteen; capital, $2,575,000.

Total amount of bank clearances for 1889, $30,957,000.

Building in 1889, $4,287,000.

Has more miles of street railway than any other city of its size in the United States.

Has twenty school buildings.

Has thirty-eight churches, which cost $681,000.

Assessed valuation of property for 1889, $16,500,000.

Property transfers during 1889, $12,000,000.

Now, Brothers, don't you believe that we have made a sufficient showing, which should cause you to take an active interest in this matter, and give the assistance as desired by our grand officers, in order that the building may be commenced at once and fully completed by next fall, so that it will be ready for occupancy, so that we can receive an income therefrom?

Hoping that you will accept our statements in good faith, and that they may be a fruitful source for the benefit of the Order, we are.

Yours in P. F.,

E. FRASER, C. C.,

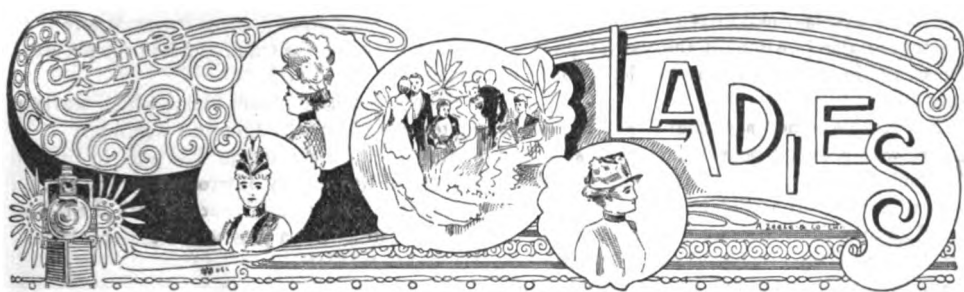

HIRAM HURTY,

W. R. O'NEAL,

J. W. WEBER,

FRANK S. BUTLER,

Committee.

The Baby's Writing.

The baby's writing—oh, who shall say
Those pencil marks in their tangled skein,
Which the baby made in his aimless play
Were not put there for some human gain ?

The baby's writing—a funny scrawl,
Tis just a purposeless maze of lines,
Yet out of the maze sweet voices call
And the steady light of a pure love shines.

The baby's writing—it calls to mind
The child that is, or the child that was,
Now gone the way of all human kind,
Or grown in accordance with nature's laws.

A smile half blooms on the mother's face,
And a lump creeps into the tender throat,
As she finds in those lines all void of grace
Some memory of what her baby wrote.

The baby's writing—how like is this
To the mark of the aged dying man !
Yet between them lie all griefs and bliss
That are crowded into a life's brief span.

Her Story a Sad One.

AN ILLINOIS GIRL'S TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE IN A DAKOTA DUG-OUT.

As the Sioux City passenger train came to a standstill in front of the Webster street depot, yesterday morning, a bright, intelligent-looking young woman, with a pretty, girlish face, surrounded by a mass of dark clustering hair, descended from the platform of the rear coach. She was about the medium height, and rather slight, but the natural comeliness of her form was concealed in a sort of jacket made of untanned sheep-skins, which she wore over a dress of some dark material. Her head was covered by a jaunty little fox-skin cap, while her feet were encased in coarse leather moccasins.

Notwithstanding her uncouth exterior, there was an air of culture and refinement—a certain indescribable something about her walk and manner—which spoke of better days, and showed she was not in harmony with her attire. A gentleman and his wife, who live on Thirteenth street, chanced to be in the room at the time, and to them the stranger told this pitiful story—a tale so full of rare dramatic incidents as to read almost like a romance.

Her name, she said, was Margaret Conner, and her home was at Rockford, Ill., where she had lived from childhood. Her father was dead, and she had for several years supported her mother, her brother and herself, by teaching in the public schools. About a year ago her mother died, and Miss Conner and her brother, Willie, who was now a lad of 16, finding themselves alone in the world, sold their little homestead, and with their worldly effects emigrated to Dakota, with a view to taking up a timber claim and going to farming. They settled on Turtle creek, in Spink county, about twenty miles south of Redfield.

Going into a new country, and being ignorant of its ways, they found it necessary to buy many things, the need of which they had not anticipated, and they saw with alarm their little stock of money dwindling rapidly away under these repeated drains. The neighbors were kind, in their rough way, and lent willing hands to give the young people a start. A warm sod house for themselves, and outhouses for the stock, were built, the requisite number of trees were planted, the stubborn prairie broken, and the spring sowing done.

The story, at this point, is so full of startling incidents that it is best in Miss Conner's own words :

"The crops," said she, "as every one knows, on account of the prolonged droughts, in the south and west, were a total failure, and all that we had to show for our hard summer's work was a few bushels of corn and wheat, hardly enough to furnish us food for the winter.

"Well, the fall dragged on into winter, and Christmas, the season of glad tidings and good cheer, found us reduced to our last bushel of grain. What we should do when that was gone, was a problem beyond our power to solve. Oh, the gloom and terror of those long winter nights, without fuel and without light ! For hours and hours we would lay, huddled in each other's arms, listening to the howling of the wolves and the shrieks of the tempest as it howled about our cabin door.

"About this time," she continued, her voice choking with a sob, "poor Willie took sick and died, and then it seemed as if my cup of sorrow was full to the brim, and I thought for a time I should go mad from the very horror of my situation. There I was, alone with my dead brother, in the midst of a Dakota prairie, without the barest necessities of life, and not a friend or neighbor within ten miles. I clearly saw that I could no longer remain where I was, for to do so was to perish, and my only hope was to get to Redfield, and there, by interesting the railroad officials in my story, obtain transportation to my friends in Illinois. Slowly and sadly I dug a hole in the hard ground of our cabin floor and laid poor Willie away, and after kissing his sweet, pale face many times, I covered the body with the cold frosty earth and left him.

"Then, collecting a few things in a little hand bag, I bade a long farewell to the home which had been the scene of so much sorrow, and started on my journey for Redfield, in the face of a howling blizzard. The wind blew against me and buffeted me so I could hardly walk; the snow beat with blinding force into my eyes and ears, so that often I could not see the road at all.

"Nevertheless, I headed on, now plunging through snow drifts up to my waist, now falling, bruised and bleeding, on the slippery road, till about midnight, when I reached the house of a neighbor of ours, known as the 'Weatherbee Place.' I reached Redfield at last, more dead than alive, and told my story to the station agent, and begged him to give me a pass to Rockford. He gave me enough to carry me to Sioux City, which place I reached last Friday.

"I now became desperate! I was in a strange city at night, without money and without friends. While I was wondering what I had better do, I noticed a heavy loaded freight train just pulling out of the depot for Omaha, and, hungry and cold as I was, I sprang into an empty box car and huddled down into a corner. The dreary darkness, the monotonous hum of the car wheels, the bellowing of the stock, and the biting cold, all combined to make me supremely miserable. To increase my terror, the car next to mine was occupied by a number of tramps, who made night hideous by their oaths and foul talk, and I tremble to think what would have been my fate had they foud out my hiding place.

"When the cars stopped at the little station above here to wait for the passenger train, I could bear it no longer, and getting out of my place of concealment I ran into the depot, where I met the conductor of the train, and he brought me to Omaha."

Such was Miss Conner's story, which was interrupted many times by sobs and weeping.

Mr. Harris, a gentleman who was in the waiting room, was deeply interested in the girl, and succeeded, through his influence with the railroad men, in getting her a pass to her eastern home.—Omaha Republican,

Three Classes of Married Women.

THEY ARE DISTINGUISHED BY THE WAY THEY SIGN THEIR NAMES.

They were discussing a certain clever and well known married woman, who is prominent alike for her business and social success.

"How does she write her name?" asked a bright faced listener from another state.

"Let me see," mused one of the group. "I believe that she always writes Mary W. Smith."

"Then she isn't 'advanced,' and she still loves her husband," said the first.

"What do you mean?" half a dozen women demanded at once.

"Just this," was the answer. "The married woman of to-day is of three classes—the woman who puts her husband and his interests first, the woman who considers her individuality and interests of equal importance with her husband's, and the woman who considers that her interests should dominate his. The first woman considers the name of her husband's family alone amply honorable and dignified, and writes her name as your friend does. The second adds her husband's name to her own family name, and writes 'Mary White Smith.' The third writes the family names with a hyphen between them, and wishes to be known as 'Mary White-Smith.' The first woman is 'conservative,' the second 'progressive,' the third 'advanced'."

The Old Church and Graveyard.

BY LA CROSSE.

They look like a forgotten link of the past. The old church, fashioned somewhat like a country school house, without any belfry, standing guard over the graves confided to its charge so many years ago; its worm-eaten sills and broken and decayed threshold testifying to its antiquity. And the old graves! Two are surrounded by a rude fence, whose pickets are thickly coated with moss. And a few inquiries made of the half-breed settlers could only elicit, in broken patois of Canadian-French and English, this scant information: "Two priests were buried there ages ago."

The answer carried you far back to when the Jesuit Fathers came to the wilderness to teach the red man of the Savior, who died for all. A sad feeling of pity creeps into your heart for those who left La Belli, France, in the prime of manhood. And this is the end of it all in this world—the two graves, with the oak and the pines murmuring o'er them. There are more graves in the general inclosure, three or four marked with rude wooden crosses nearly covered with moss, and the date burned in; "17—" was all that could be deciphered, but enough to turn our thoughts far back on the record of time. You cannot help wondering which it was, mother, sister, wife or maid, who watched in vain for the return of their dear ones, two hundred years ago.

Further to the northwest, on the summit of a hill a glimpse of blue waters glittering in the sunshine, tells us Green Bay is not far away; but a closing of the eyes, and an active use of your ears might well delude you into the belief that you were in a rural village of France. A glance at the tiny cottages, with their rustic porches and vine-covered doorways, that line the street leading south from the church, only confirms the idea that you have by one turn of some fairy ring taken a voyage to France.

Leaving these behind you, you pass on to bring to your view a dilapidated old house, built something after the Queene Anne style, that has been deserted for years. Built by some one from over the sea, whom I imagined had grown discouraged, attempting to raise a living on his sterile acres, but whom the villagers declared disappeared mysteriously, and none of them can be induced to visit the crazy old building after dark.

The Song of the Steam Demon.

BY LA CROSSE.

With whistle and scream,
Over brook and stream,
Thro' the misty air,
Like a beast from his lair,
With plunge and cr-rash,
With hisses and smash,
Over the broken beam
Laughs the demon of steam,
Ha! Ha!

Thro' the broken rails
Come moanings and wails!
Oh, the screams and the cries
From 'neath broken ties!
And oh, the heart aches,
As swell the death rates!
And he laughs in his dream,
The grim demon of steam,
Ha! Ha!

O, worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness, fear before him all the earth.—Ps. 96: 9.

Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.—Ex. 20: 8.

Deliver me from my enemies, O, my God, defend me from them that rise up against me.—Ps. 59: 1.

Every way of a man is right in his own eyes, but the Lord pondereth the heart.—Prov. 21: 2.

Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen, and repent and do the first works or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candle stick out of his place except thou repent.—Rev. 2: 5.

O, give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever.—Ps. 107: 1.

For there is not a word in my tongue, but lo O Lord thou knowest it altogether.—Ps. 103: 3.

Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people.—Prov. 13: 34.

And their sin and iniquities will I remember no more.—Heb. 10: 17.

I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth.—John. 1: 4.

Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partakers of other men's sins; keep thyself pure.—Tim. 5: 22.

Who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously. Peter, 2: 23.

And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.—Rev. 20: 15.

Your riches are corrupt, and your garments moth eaten.—James, 5: 2.

Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that you may be healed. The effectual, fervent prayers of a righteous man availeth much.—James, 5: 16.

Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.—Ps. 109: 18.

Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.—Heb. 11: 1.

Delight thy self also in the Lord and he shall give thee the desire of thy heart.—Ps. 37: 4.

Unto me men gave ear, and awaited and kept silence at my counsel.—Job, 29: 21.

Casting all your care upon Him, for he careth for you.—1st Peter, 5: 7.

The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit.—Ps. 34: 18.

O, taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in him.—Ps. 34: 8.

Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him: fret not thy self because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass.—Isa. 37: 7.

Set a watch, O, Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips.—Ps. 104: 3.

A CONDUCTOR'S WIFE.

Mehitable Jones on Wimin's Rights.

Well, yes, I'm in for wimin's rights—
 I 'lowed that all the wimin wuz,
 For who kin know a woman's wants Better'n a woman does ?

- Most folks that talk on wimin's rights
 Get up and froth and howl and rant,
 And say that men won't let us vote
 Because they think we cap't.
- And say that wimin's classed the same
 As Injuns, idjits, babes and sich,
 And ain't got half the privileges of
 The drunkard in the ditch.

And they contend that wimin ort
 To be allowed to have some say
 About the laws and vote the same
 As men, on 'lection day.

Well, mebbly this is so, but la !
 This aint the pint that's troublin' me,
 Fer I don't kno so many men
 That's smarter'n wimin be.

And when the men want sympathy
 Er kind advice, you know,
 It ain't to idjits nor to babes
 They're gen'rally apt to go.

But this is what's pester'n me,
 To see a man thet's vile and low,
 Expect to get a wife thet's jest
 As pure as driftin' snow.

They seem to think a gal must be
 A sort of angel in a dress,
 Tho' common gals with all their faults
 Are good as men, I guess,

I claim that wimin has a right
 To get as good as what they gives,
 And angel wimin are too good
 For any man that lives.

—Eva Donaldson, in Boston Courier.

HELENA, Mont., Feb. 19, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

One of the saddest events that ever shadowed a peaceful and happy home, was the death of Mrs. Thomas J. Laughlin, at her home in Helena, Mont., Feb. 12, 1890. She was the wife of a well known passenger conductor on the Montana division of the Northern Pacific. The cause of her death was pneumonia, followed by a stomach disorder.

Mrs. Laughlin was but 25 years of age, and had been married little over a year. They had just moved into their splendid new home, and were enjoying life as only "two hearts that beat as one" can, when death claimed the fair and loving wife.

The funeral was one of the largest that ever took place in Helena. The deceased was highly respected by all who knew her. The floral tributes were beautiful and numerous. The remains were taken to the cathedral from the residence, and the services were conducted by Father Polladino. It was truly a very sad affair.

Mr. Laughlin is a member of O. R. C. Division No. 243. GLENN.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 5, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

As you have not heard from the L. A. of O. R. C. No. 5, for some time, I will send you a few lines to inform you, and all interested, that we are still alive and prosperous, and glad to say that we are doing a good work. We have thirty-one members in good standing, and a bank account very creditable to so young an organization. We attribute our success to the individual interest taken by the members,

The term of our first officers having expired. we elected and installed new ones for the ensuing year. President, Mrs. C. L. Springer; Vice President, Mrs. L. Moore; Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. A. H. McCauley; S. S., Mrs. Corcoran; J. S., Mrs. Filby; Guard, Mrs. Woolsey; Delegate to Convention, Mrs. C. L. Springer,

We hope each one will feel the responsibility of their office and give regular attendance, and make the ensuing year more prosperous than the past.

We held a social at the residence of our Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. A. H. McCauley, on Jan. 15, who is about to remove from the city on account of the promotion of her husband to assistant train master of the N. Y. D. of P. railroad, at which there was a very good attendance. After spending the early part of the evening in music, singing and games, we had an abundance of refreshments, and last, but not least, a liberal collection to help swell the treasury of No. 5. About midnight all departed for their homes, having passed a social and pleasant evening, with nothing to mar.

Yours, in T. F.,

PHILA.

The Other Place.

A little girl was telling how her grandma died and went to heaven, and another little tot proudly said: "That be nuffin'. My grandma has gone to Dersey City."

Mrs. R. PACKARD:—Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from earth, the wife of Brother R. Packard; therefore be it Resolved, That the sympathy and condolence of East Saginaw Division No. 192, O. R. C., be extended to Brother Packard in this his hour of sore bereavement.

R. LAUGHLIN,
G. T. CHUBBUCK, } Committee.
FRANK GIBSON.

Died, at Pocatelo, December 2d, 1889, William H. Smith, by a stroke of apoplexy.

Brother Smith was called to go out on his run, at 4 o'clock, a. m., arose and dressed, went to his caboose and informed the rear brakeman he was not feeling well, immediately fell down and expired. He carried insurance in the Old Conductors' company, of which he was member many years. The following resolutions were passed, at January 26th meeting:

WHEREAS, The Supreme Being of the universe, having in his infinite wisdom, removed from our midst Brother W. H. Smith, and this division, appreciating his worth as a man and brother, desires to place upon the records its sorrow for the loss it has sustained; therefore be it

Resolved, That in his death, this division has lost one of its members who was well respected by all brothers. Be it further

Resolved, That the members of this division tender to his family our heartfelt sympathy, in the great loss they have sustained. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family, spread upon the records, and placed in the pages of our journal.

Committee. { W. J. RHOADS,
G. W. SCOTT,
M. M. LYONS.

Peoria, Ill., Feb. 9, 1890.

At the regular meeting of New Brunswick Division, No. 219, Order Railway Conductors, held in St. John, N. B., February 9th, inst., the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove by death, the loving wife of our esteemed

Brother M. Burgess; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, his brother members, of Division No. 219, extend to him our sincere and heartfelt sympathy, in this his irreparable loss, and hope, that in Heaven he will meet the loved one gone before him. Further:

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the records of our division, a copy sent to the bereft husband, also to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

GEO. H. TRUEMAN,
FRED. McLELLAN,
FRANK J. McPEAKE.
Committee.

At the regular meeting of New Brunswick Division, No. 219, Order Railway Conductors, held in St. John, N. B., February 9th, inst., the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God, in his infinite wisdom, to remove from the family of Brother John H. Sproul his beloved daughter; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, his brother members of Division No. 219, tender Brother Sproul and his wife, our heartfelt sympathies, in this their hour of affliction; further:

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed in the minutes of this meeting, a copy sent to the grief stricken parents, also to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

Committee.
GEO. H. TRUEMAN,
FRED. McLELLAN,
FRANK J. McPEAKE.

Mrs. JOSEPH COOK.—Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to remove from earth the wife of Brother Joseph Cook. Therefore be it Resolved, That the sympathy and condolence of East Saginaw No. 192, O. R. C. be extended to Bro. Cook in this his hour of sore bereavement.

ROBT. LAUGHLIN,
L. F. CHUBBUCK,
FRANK GIBSON,
Committee,

BRO. J. M. WELCH.—WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst our late brother, James M. Welch, it is befitting for us, as members of East Saginaw Division No. 192, O. R. C., that we should place on record our appreciation of his merits as a man and brother; therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Welch, the Order loses a loyal member and one who was held in high esteem by all; and be it further

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved family of Bro. Welch our heartfelt sympathy in their sad hour of affliction, and commend them to him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the grief stricken relatives, also the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, and that our charter be draped in mourning for the space of thirty days.

Committee,

R. LAUGHLIN,
L. T. CHUBBUCK,
FRANK GIBSON.

CHEYENNE, Feb. 7, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR: Conductor J. E. Ryan, died at his home in this city of pneumonia, Jan. 20th. Mr. Ryan was a member of Division 128, also held a policy in the insurance department. He has been an employe of the Union Pacific for twenty-three years and was, up to his last illness, running a passenger train out of this city. He leaves a wife and baby boy, also a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his loss. The remains were taken to Salt Lake for burial, and a large number of the members of Washsatch Division No. 144, Ogden, in a body, and several members of other divisions attended his funeral, for which Division 128, wishes to extend its heartfelt thanks.

Yours in P. F.,

Wm. A. Mills,
Sec. and Treas. Div. 128.

HALL OF TOPEKA, KAS., DIV. 179. }
TOPEKA, Jan. 5, 1890. }

WHEREAS, God, the supreme ruler of the universe, having seen fit to remove from our midst our esteemed brother and dear friend, P. G. Corey,

Resolved, That in his death we have lost a true brother and his family an upright and loving husband and father.

Resolved, That those traits of character which have endeared him to us and all who knew him, are worthy of our emulation and to be held in lasting memory.

Resolved, That this division extend to the stricken wife and children and their relations, our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That the charter of the division be draped in mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the records of this division, and a copy of the same be presented to the family of the deceased, to the city papers, and sent to the official journal of this Order.

Committee,

P. M. LAUX,
J. A. RAMSOUR,
A. J. RADER.

IN MEMORY OF

MRS. A. J. LAUGHLIN,

Died, Feb. 12, 1890.

Tears cannot bring our darling back,
Why should we shed them now?
She is asleep in Jesus' arms,
With a halo on her brow.

If prayers could bring our loved one back.
Would we dare to breathe them here?
What is this life, so cruel, cold,
To heaven's blissful sphere?

Gentle and loving, chaste and fair,
God took her to his breast;
And in eternal peace and joy,
Her soul has found its rest.

A FRIEND.

HALL OF
VALLEY CITY DIVISION 58, }
CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Feb. 17, 1890. }

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Great Ruler of the universe to remove, by death, our esteemed Brother, M. H. Wood. Be it,

Resolved, That we, as Brothers, do most sincerely sympathize with his family and friends in this their hour of bereavement.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of our division, a copy be sent to the bereaved widow and parents, and to THE CONDUCTOR for publication.

G. D. MARTIN,
G. J. MILLER,
J. R. McPARTLAND.

MARTINSBURG, W. Va., Feb. 17, 1890.

WHEREAS, It has again pleased the Grand Chief Conductor of the universe, the second time in our division, on the 8th inst., to remove, by death.

Thomas L. Flora, our well-beloved Brother, after a protracted illness, which he bore with Christian fortitude, and when the end was approaching he exclaimed, "All is well," and entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God, and is in the presence of the Grand Chief Conductor forever. Therefore, we, the members of Berkeley Division No. 234, O. R. C., in regular meeting assembled, do extend to his sorrowing widow and fatherless children, our sympathy in their sore bereavement. And be it,

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Flora, Division 234 has lost a worthy Brother, who was charitable in his acts to the needy and destitute; and, be it further

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days as a token of respect for our late Brother; and, be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered on the records of the division, that a copy of the same be sent to the wife of our deceased Brother, and that these resolutions be published in the Martinsburg Herald, and in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

WILLIAM M. DARBY,
C. H. SHIPLEY,
G. W. RIDING,
F. H. KESLER,
B. S. HEDGES,
Committee.

HALL OF CITY OF MEXICO DIV. 159, O. R. C.,)
CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 12, 1890. }

WHEREAS, An all-wise Providence has removed from earthly scenes our beloved Brother, Edward B. Sanger.

Resolved, That we humbly bow to the Divine will.

Resolved, That in his death we have lost a true and worthy Brother, and his family a kind and devoted son and brother.

Resolved, That this division extend to his mother and sisters our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days in honor of our deceased Brother.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this division, published in the Two Republics and RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, and a copy sent to his relatives.

J. H. SAYERS,)
J. F. CASEY,) Committee.
C. H. STARR, }

Yesterday afternoon the body of Mr. Charles E. Halbert, superintendent of the Guadalajara division of the Central railroad, was laid at rest in the cemetery in this city.

It arrived by the morning express at Buena Vista from Guadalajara, and was immediately transferred to the cemetery, where the rough outside box was removed. Promptly at 3 o'clock the City of Mexico Division 159, of the O. R. C., and many friends of the deceased, left their rooms on Second Independence street, in three funeral cars, for the cemetery. Arrived there, the coffin containing the remains was found near the southern end of the grounds, on a bier, banked with floral offerings and evergreens. On the same ground where the coffin was located, the funeral services, which were impressively conducted by Rev. W. E. McClennan, of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, took place before a congregation of about sixty people, there being several ladies among the number. At their conclusion Messrs. Neil Turnbull, W. McPike, F. A. Bodfish, T. J. Pomeroy, W. V. Mazuril, C. H. Starr, F. E. Foot and J. F. Casey, detailed by the O. R. C., as pall-bearers, bore the remains to the grave, opened in the southeast corner of the cemetery. Here the lid of the coffin was removed, and the friends of the departed were allowed, for the last time, to look upon his remains, which were encased in an inner casket, with a glass covering over the face. Before the body was lowered into the grave, the funeral services of the O. R. C. were read and the hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee," sung.

Owing to sickness Mrs. Halbert was not present at the funeral, she being obliged to remain in Guadalajara.

HALL OF CITY OF MEXICO DIV. 159, O. R. C.,)
CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 12, 1890. }

WHEREAS, God, in his infinite wisdom, has taken from among us our beloved Brother, Charles Edgar Halbert.

WHEREAS, While bowing in humble submission to the will of the Grand Chief Conductor of the universe, we realize the extent of our loss.

Resolved, That in his death we lose one of our truest Brothers, the community an honorable and popular citizen, and his family an affectionate father and devoted husband.

Resolved, That we extend to the family of our deceased Brother our profoundest sympathy in their great affliction.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the records of this division, a copy presented to the family of the deceased, and that they be published in the Two Republics and RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

T. J. POMEROY,) NEIL TURNBULL,) Committee.
H. H. GREENLEAF, }

E. H. BELKNAP, EDITOR.

WM. P. DANIELS, MANAGER.

W. N. GATES, ADVERTISING MANAGER, 10 Public Square, Cleveland, O.

We had prepared four pages of mentions and three of editorial for this number of the CONDUCTOR, but all are left out on account of space. We are sorry that the mentions are crowded out from the fact that many of them are of much importance to the members. But it cannot be helped, as we are restricted to a certain number of pages, and must feel content, though it places us in a very unpleasant position.

PUEBLO, Col., Feb. 23, 1890.

To the Brothers of all Divisions, Greeting:

Arkansas Valley Division No. 36, recognizing the fact that many delegates attend our annual sessions not knowing the opinions of the divisions they represent severally and collectively, and therefore not fully prepared or qualified to legislate for us, and believing that questions of vast importance to our Order will be brought before the Grand Division at Rochester; and believing that an interchange of ideas and opinions between divisions having identically the same interests will be of mutual benefit to all, we therefore earnestly request you to send a delegate to join us in a union meeting to be held in our hall, No. 221 Santa Fe avenue, Sunday, March 23, 1890, at 10 o'clock a. m.

We are centrally located, surrounded by many divisions of our Order, and we hope and expect a rousing meeting.

The time has come when every member of the Order should throw off his lethargy and inactivity and put his shoulder to the wheel, if we would make our Order what it should be, a PROTECTION and benefit to its members.

Much good has been done in the past by "union meetings." Come, all come, and let us know each other's ideas of matters that concern every conductor of the north, east, south and west, and let us have such an interchange of fraternal feeling as cannot fail to do us all great good.

Our Grand Officers will be present at this meeting.

Yours respectfully in P. F.,

ARKANSAS VALLEY DIV. NO. 36.

E. C. MATTES, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 15, 1890.

To all Members:

Agreeably to an expressed desire of a number of divisions of our Order, a Union Meeting will be convened in Philadelphia, Pa., as a central point, on Sunday, April 6, 1890, at 10 o'clock p. m. This meeting will be held immediately under the auspices of Quaker City Division No. 204, with West Philadelphia Division No. 162, and Camden Division No. 170, associated in the management.

There will be a General Reception Committee at Broad street station, Pennsylvania railroad, from 10 o'clock a. m. until 2 o'clock p. m., to receive and direct all visiting Brethren. Members from a distance arriving at any of the other city railway stations will be received by special committees, provided they indicate in advance the station and time of arrival.

The committees will be designated by suitable badges, and will direct all visitors to rendezvous at the hall of Quaker City Division, northwest corner Thirteenth and Arch streets, two squares distant from Pennsylvania railroad, Broad street station, and City Hall, where information will be given as to place of meeting, hotels, restaurants and all other arrangements.

It is desirable that divisions anticipating attendance in large numbers should notify the chairman of the committee issuing this call, of the probable number of their delegation, by not later than April 1, and of any further information that will facilitate arrangements for the general comfort.

We would suggest that divisions participating should designate some one of their attending members to especially note the proceedings, and make, at their next local meeting, at least a synopsis of the most interesting features observed and subjects discussed.

Members of the Order in attendance who have not been re-obligated, will, to gain admittance, be required to furnish from their Division Secretary, under seal, and of sufficient recent date, a certificate that they are entitled to receive the "New Work."

The utmost courtesy and freedom of opinion in debate will be accorded to all within the limits of propriety, and it is the desire of the management that there shall be elicited a full, free and fair expression on all the topics involved. A general invitation is extended to all members of the Order to attend, what, it is believed, will be one of the most interesting and momentous unions we have ever held.

Fraternally yours,

F. W. MACVEIGH, C. C. 204.

Chm. Com., 420 Market St., Philadelphia

J. W. BODINE, C. C. 170.

JOS. WHITE, C. C. 162.

In this number appears the advertisement of Jos. P. Wathier. A perusal will repay any conductor who wishes to purchase a watch. Mr. Wathier is thoroughly responsible, and his customers may depend upon his goods being exactly as represented.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., APRIL 1, 1890.

NO. 7.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Some months since it was my fortune to be present in the office of the "Inspectors of Pilots" in San Francisco. Being a newspaper man I was naturally interested in certain proceedings that ensued and now record them for the first time.

Two or three of the Harbor Commissioners were present as well as several old sea captains, antiquated and obsolete, who had been laid away for repairs or, possibly had laid themselves away of their own accord, but who still took a great interest in anything pertaining to their old calling.

The business before the board was the examination of a candidate for a pilot's certificate. The candidate recited that he had served as an assistant for some ten or twelve years, and that of late years had frequently been intrusted with the charge of vessels entering or leaving port; that he had for years past been accustomed to assume charge, and as pilot, conduct vessels in and out of port, and that as yet, he had met with no accident, not even the breaking of a spar. He further said, that his age was 45, his character and antecedents open to the most searching inspection of the board, and he also produced and laid before the commissioners, credentials of the highest character, signed by men high up on the rolls of commerce and well-known to every one present at the examination.

After he had submitted his case, he himself was submitted to as close and as searching an examination by the old seafarers present as any criminal could be who was on trial for his life. They questioned him about every rope on a ship, from the main truck to the kelson, about every thing in fact from the "Fo' castle" to the rudder. They ascertained by persistent and repeated questions his knowledge of the difference between a brig, a bark and a full rigged ship. Also as to his knowledge of the soundings of the port, the tides, their various influences, &c. The fogs that were liable to occur, and at what seasons. What he would do in this or that case of emergency.

It appeared to me, that the applicant answered all these various and surely hard questions with the greatest candor and confidence. His answers in fact, were not debated upon by any of the examiners, but appeared to be received as facts. I have no doubt they were the result of long experience and hard labor at his profession.

After the most searching enquiry, a short consultation was held by the board, and the old sea captains were called in one by one, and finally after the lapse of an hour or more, the board calmly informed the anxious applicant, "that his application would be duly considered, and that, as he was aspiring to a position wherein human lives were supposed to be placed in his charge, a month would be necessary to enquire into his antecedents and decide as to his fitness."

Now, it has since occurred to me, that if such a strict and rigorous examination was considered necessary to be made as to the qualifications of a man who might have in charge say, once or twice a month twenty or thirty lives, conveying them into, or out of port, and whose responsibility lasted but for a few hours, what sort of an examination should that man be subjected to, who handles daily our immense passenger trains, and in whose charge is placed hundreds of lives on a system of transit far more dangerous than that on which my poor pilot was struggling to obtain a position.

I refer to our railroads. Where do our passenger conductors come from? Are they scrutinized and subjected to any such examination as was this poor devil of a pilot? Are their antecedents inquired into? They handle daily, trains containing ourselves, our wives and our children, and does any "board" look into their morals and their fitness for the responsible duties which they undertake to perform? I think not. In their keeping is placed hourly, some sacred charge, sacred at least to those who intrust it to them. The pilot is subjected to such a rigid examination, that even the fact becoming known of his having taken a drop too much on some wintry Christmas morning is altogether sufficient to forever disbar him from the results of his many years of labor when he seeks the promotion that a brakeman looks for after a far more limited time of service.

Where do our passenger conductors pass such an examination as would seem to entitle them to assume their responsible duties? How about that frightful holocaust at Peoria? Had that conductor been an experienced railroad man, that frightful tale would have been untold. How about hundreds of other catastrophes where "no one was to blame?" "Only a Brakeman Killed" is a song sung in many a blighted home, by many a desolate fireside with its vacant chair, and no one is blamed—"Purely accidental." In the great majority of the accidents, every well informed railroad man who has studied the circumstances will say, that they occurred from pure and unadulterated carelessness, or a lack of knowledge of the business. Either ignorance or a "drop too much," tumbles our trains over bridges or down embankments. A brakeman to-day, "fresh from his native fields," who has some "pull" on an official, soon blossoms out with the "blue and brass," and at once becomes an adept at a science that he knows no more about than a cat about Christmas.

Now, Mr. Editor, this emanation does not proceed from a railroad man or one in any way connected with railroads, but simply from an observer, and one whose business calls him here and there over the country. Further, I do not think anyone will suffer an injustice by your calling attention to what you must surely know to be an evil adjunct to our railroad service, and which the influence of your journal can go very far towards correcting.

HENDERSON McCUNE.

Sieria Blanca, Texas, Feb. 13, 1890.

Correspondence or Symbolic Meaning of Colors.

WHITE is the emblem of light, religious purity, innocence, faith, joy and life. In the judge, it indicates integrity; in the sick, humility; in the woman, chastity.

RED, the Ruby, signifies fire, divine love, heat of the creative power, and royalty. White and red roses express love and wisdom. The red color of the blood has its origin in the action of the heart, which corresponds to, or symbolizes, love. In a bad sense, red corresponds to the infernal love of evil, hatred, etc.

BLUE, or the sapphire, expresses Heaven, the firmament, truth from a celestial origin, constancy and fidelity.

YELLOW, or gold, is the symbol of the sun, of the goodness of God, of marriage, and faithfulness. In a bad sense, yellow signifies inconstancy, jealousy, and deceit.

GREEN, the emerald, is the color of the Spring, of hope, particularly of the hope of immortality and of victory, as the color of the laurel and palm.

VIOLET, the amethyst, signifies love and truth, or passion and suffering.

PURPLE and SCARLET signify things good and true from a celestial origin.

BLACK corresponds to despair, darkness, earthliness, mourning, negation, wickedness and death.

The Old Kitchen Clock.

It used to tick away the years upon the parlor shelf,

When first we went a keepin' house—Belindy an' m'self—

An' thar fer more'n twenty year, it seemed to be content -

To serve the hours in proper time, an' be an ornament.

An' you'd er thought 'twas almost made to regulate the sun,

So stiddy, 'round an' 'round each day, the wheels an' p'inters run.

But when the girls grew up, you see, they had — some strange ideas.

They didn't consult us much 'bout things, nor drop an "if you please,"

But went a hustlin' things around, an' changin' ev'ry room,

An' nothin' had the same old place, less 'twas the kitchen broom.

I didn't much mind the goin's on, but shan't forget the shock

It gin me when they ousted out that good old faithful clock.

An' then a little bronze concern was got to fill its place,

With dragons crawling up its sides, and just above the face

A gal they call "Terpsichore" is settin' in a chair

An' playin' on a harp—although I never heard the air—

An' when it strikes the half hours out, you'd think a fairy sighed, that a little mouse had gin a faint squeak 'fore he died.

Then it sort o' stirs my conscience when the old clock strikes the time

With a kind o' ringin' music, in its dear, old honest chime;

For it seems to be a sayin', in a solemn sort o' way:

"It's just the way of all the world; we flourish for a day!"

An' onct I went right out thar an' says I: "Old clock, see here, You're wuth a dozen fancy clocks with complicated gear!"

Though taken as an ornament (as things go nowadays),

Mebby that tother one deserves a passing word o' praise,

But when it gets a balky turn—determined not to go—

I think it's 'bout like folks I've seen—a sort o' holler show;

An' strikes me when a clock, or friend, is faithful out an' out,

"Taint best to change for suthin' that you don't know nothin' 'bout.

—Katharine H. Terry, in Good Housekeeping.

Rules for a Man of Business.

BE THOUGHTFUL.—Commit everything important to writing. Obtain every kernel of knowledge within your reach, and read books for what they can teach you.

BE DILIGENT.—Leave nothing undone that ought to be done and that could be done. Don't consider anything beneath you, but do nothing carelessly or in a hurry.

BE JUST.—Treat all persons alike, high or low and be pleasant to everybody. A sacred regard to the principles of justice forms the basis of every transaction.

BE PUNCTUAL.—Strict in keeping engagements. Systematic in keeping all letters, invoices, bills, contracts, and every document on file, within easy reach, if possible. Have business hours and keep them. Balance your books regularly.

BE DECISIVE, clear and explicit. Do not overtrade your capital. Prefer short credit to long, and cash to credit of any kind. Lend money if necessary, but do not enlorse.

BE DISCREET.—Keep your business to yourself unless it would be unfair to others. Beware of men of doubtful credit. Avoid speculative risks.

BE NEAT and orderly in person, office and surroundings.

BE ECONOMICAL and live within your income.

BE GENEROUS, be honorable, be enterprising.

SUCCESS may not come at first, but it will not be far off.

Little Tommy, who has a bald uncle, was very much interested when his mother told him the other day that the hairs of his head were all numbered. "Is that so with everybody?" asked he. "Yes," said his mother, "that is what the Bible says." Tommy pondered for a moment in silence. "Well," said he finally, "if the Bible says so, it must be so; but I think the angel who does the counting feels mighty glad when he comes to a man with a head like uncle Jim's."

Morning and Night.

When the first beam of morning is streaking the skies

Wide-awake Tommy is ready to rise.

Oh, how he frets till the time comes to dress,

How he scorns to be stopped for a kiss or caress;

Nobody's "baby" or "darling" is he;

He's the bold laddie, the man that's to be.

The world is so large, and all round about

Filled with curious puzzles for him to find out,

That he cannot be patient, to loiter and wait,

To stay within doors, and lie in bed late;

He wants to be up at the peep of the day,

To lose not a moment for work, or for play.

He's a sailor, and launches his ships in a tub;

He's a soldier, and drums with a loud "rub-a-dub;"

With corn-cobs for timber he builds him a house,

And sets traps of paper to capture a mouse,

He digs and he delves, he plows and he plants,

As busy and brisk as the bees and the ants,

And when the dim twilight its soft shadow throws

He climbs on the wall to see where the sun goes;

And wants to be out when the moon comes, to know

If she shows her round face or is bent like a bow.

And gladly would stay in the darkness and damp

To watch for the gleam of the fire-fly's lamp.

At last, when he scarcely can hold up his head,

He yields himself slowly to home, friends and bed;

And longing in body and spirit for rest,

He meekly submits to be soothed and caressed;

And coos in his innocence, dove-like and white;

"I love you, mamma; I'm your sweetheart tonight."

—M. E. N. Hathaway, in Chicago Advance.

The Smallest American Railway.

The most diminutive railroad in all Down East, according to a newspaper exchange, is that owned and operated by the Monson Railroad Company, running from the company's quarries to Monson Junction, on the Bangor & Piscataquis. This little road has a two-foot gauge, is about six miles in length, and is thoroughly equipped with locomotives, passenger, baggage and freight cars, has several stations, regular time-tables and a superintendent. The superintendent is also conductor, baggage-master, mail agent, passenger and freight brakeman, news agent and director—a regular Pooh Bah—and for performing all these offices he gets $900 a year. Ten men constitute the entire force of the road. The trains average about fifty miles a day in summer and twenty-five miles in winter. The road is all down hill one way, so that a car will run from the quarries to the junction without the assistance of a locomotive. If a passenger misses the regular train, $5 will secure a special to carry him over the line. Last year this toy road carried 9,000 tons of the company's freight to Monson Junction (six tons to a car) for transshipment over the Bangor & Piscataquis to Bangor and points west, and 4,200 passengers, who paid $12,000 in fares, were transported at a cost of $9,000. This little road has been in operation six years, and in all that time no accident of any kind has occurred on its line. We judge it to be the smallest independent line running regular trains for both freight and passengers in America. The officers are: H. A. Whiting, President, Wilton, N. H.; J. F. Kimball, Treasurer and General Manager, Lowell, Mass.; W. L. Estabrook, Superintendent, Monson, Me.; J. F. Sprague, Clerk, Monson, Me.

Natural Objects of Great Scenic Interest in the United States.

1. Yosemite Valley, California. 8 to 10 miles long and about two miles wide. Its very steep slopes are about 3,500 feet high. Perpendicular precipice 3,089 feet high, and a rock almost perpendicular 3,270 feet high.

The Yosemite Fall surpasses all others on the globe in height. From the edge of the cliff over which the water plunges to the bottom of the valley, the vertical distance is about 2,550 feet; but the fall is not in one perpendicular sheet.

2. Colorado Cannon, Colorado.
3. Yellowstone Park, Wyoming Terr.
4. Muir Glacier, Alaska.
5. Niagara Falls, U. S. and Canada.
6. Garden of the Gods, Colorado.
7. High Sierras, California.
8. Hudson River, New York.
9. St. Lawrence River, between U. S. and Canada.
10. Oklawaha River, Florida.
11. Eastern North Carolina.
12. Mammoth Cave, Kentucky.
13. Natural Bridge, Virginia.
14. Wyandotte Cave, Virginia.
15. Blue Mountains, Virginia.

The doctor can endure life if he only has patients.

Another wire rod mill is to be built in Joliet, Ill., which will be in operation early in the spring.

* *

A $250,000 repair shop is to be built at Lincoln, Nebraska, by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy company.

* *

Mr. A. F. Banks has been appointed traffic manager of the Iowa Central railway, with headquarters at Marshalltown.

* *

The second bridge across the Mississippi river at St Louis has just been completed. It was built by the Merchant's Bridge company.

* *

The Goodrich Steamboat company, of Chicago, are building a steamer to cost $160,000. She is to run between Chicago, Racine and Milwaukee.

* *

A 5,000 mile ticket, good on any road in New England, has been recommended by the board of trade of the cities of Hartford and New Haven. What next?

* *

The Seattle & Montana railroad company has just been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000,000. At present it is presumed to be the western division of the great northern system.

* *

Every one is prophesying a year of unparalleled activity in all branches of business the coming year. The great crops of the last year, and a tendency toward a heavy supply of all things needful and a good market for everything that there is on hand, seems to be the leading features that lead the imaginary ones to guess on these probabilities.

We learn that the Central Iowa will build a track two miles in length, at or near Monmouth, Ill., to connect with the Santa Fe, and will then run their trains into Chicago over that road. It is thought that this arrangement will prove advantageous to the interests of both these lines.

* *

We see by an exchange, that Mr. William Dowd has resigned as President of the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago railway. Having known Mr. Dowd in years past it is a pleasure to be very confident, that he can live a little longer on earth, even tho' his salary should be discontinued for some time.

* *

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad company, we understand, has purchased the Chicago, Burlington & Northern, by paying the stockholders forty cents on the dollar. We certainly hope that the latter road will not be as much of a "thorn in the flesh" in the days to come to other roads, as it has been in the past.

* *

We see that the Missouri and Nebraska Railroad Commissioners have prohibited the railroads from carrying live stock and have required them to make car load rates. Many a passenger would hail the day when he could be carried at car load rates, and the small and lean would be glad to be carried by weight, but what on earth would the fat people say.

* *

We learn that Mr. O. S. Lyford is to remain with the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, and Chicago & Indiana Coal companies, as vice-president, only relinquishing the duties of general manager. We were once quite well acquainted with Mr. Lyford. It was a good many years ago when he was on the old Hannibal & St. Joe. There have been a good many changes in the railway service since that time.

* *

Mr. W. W. Worthington, formerly Superintendent of the Whitewater Valley road, thinking that his back salary had been deficient for some time, entered suit against that company for the small sum of thirty thousand dollars. This is contrary to the general rule, because many a man has always remained poor on account of not realizing what he was worth to the company for whom he worked; but it is evident that Mr. Worthington struck it a little too high, as the jury decided, that he had received all the salary that was due him. It is very probable, that had he only entered suit in the amount of thirty cents, he might at least have saved the costs.

* *

From a dispatch in one of our exchanges we learn, that the coroner's jury which investigated the cause of the accident on the Lake Erie & Western near that city in February last, in which one man lost his life, returned a verdict recommending, that engineers Joseph Eisle and Michael Conlon, be held for criminal negligence. And this very intelligent body of men came to this conclusion after the train dispatcher had testified, that the disaster was caused owing to a mistake which he had made. While we have no feelings but those of sympathy for the poor train dispatcher, because all men are liable to make mistakes, yet on the other hand, please excuse us from having to be tried by a Peoria county jury where their verdict is, that the guilty may go free, but the other fellows must be punished.

* *

J. A. Hughes, of Texas, has brought suit against the Texas & Pacific railway company for $40,000 damages, on account of being ejected from one of their passenger trains. We know nothing about the merits of the case, but it appears to one not on the inside, that it is barely possible that the gentleman may have set his figures a little too high. Many a poor man would be willing to be put off of almost any passenger train every ten minutes if he was reasonably certain that he could recover $40,000. We only wish that we had that amount for every one that we have assisted to alight, and a corresponding amount for those that we have permitted to ride, that ought to have been kicked off. We would have so many riches that we would imagine for a few minutes at least, that we could buy out the Texas Pacific, and then pay the fellow besides.

* *

The projectors of the new tunnel system of the Central Pacific railroad management, seem certainly to have work in their minds of a gigantic magnitude. The proposition that they advocate is, to commence boring at least one thousand feet beneath the deep snow line, making a start at Cold Spring canyon, near the town of Truckee, California, coming out of the mountains on the Pacific side at Yuba river canyon. They then leave the first tunnel, which will be five miles in length, running down the canyon for some distance, and then five more miles of tunnelling will be done. The grades will be a gradual descent, and a rise of one thousand feet will be saved on each side of the mountain. The estimated cost of this proposed work amounts to the small sum of ten millions of dollars. It will undoubtedly require many years of hard work before it is finished; but it is expected that the earnings of the road will be greatly increased when finished.

* *

Next to the World's Fair excitement, in Chicago, the question of greater safety at railway crossings seems to occupy the attention of the average Chicagoan. And, inasmuch as the excitement is up to fever heat, it seems more than probable, that some measure toward a problem of greater safety will soon be developed, and also be in force, by which there will be assured a greater degree of safety to human life. Whether it will be accomplished by means of the much agitated plan of grade crossings, viaducts or tunnels, is a question that time alone will determine. That something should and will be done in this matter is almost certain. For when the public at large make up their minds that so important a measure is absolutely necessary, it is almost certain that it will be accomplished. But in the excitement, that gathers so much assistance from the Herculean efforts of the press, which is at all times so important a factor in all matters tending toward any movement which adds materially to the safety of human life, there seems to be a tendency to accuse the officials of every railway corporation of not only criminal negligence in matters of this kind, but much is said in the heat of discussion and excitement, that would lead the average thinking man to be impressed with the idea, that the officers and also the employees, were engaged in the laudable act of maliciously killing people just for the fun or novelty of the affair. Or in other terms, that both parties are so earnest in their greed, one of them to become rich, and the other willing to add to this accumulation, that they entirely forget or at least ignore the rights of private individuals, and rush headlong into danger without even a thought of safety to that class of people who may be traveling in other means of conveyance, or quietly walking along without one thought of danger. And while we are perfectly willing to acknowledge the great necessity of some means being adopted, and also put in force, that will as soon as possible secure far greater safety to life and limb. And more than this, we would heartily approve and also favor, any project which would successfully bring about such a result. There is, in our opinion, another thought that has just as much bearing on the final settlement of this vexed question, that in the excitement has been almost entirely overlooked: in more than one-half the accidents which have come to our notice during a period of nearly thirty years of active service in this accident business. We have found, that it occurred from the utter negligence of those who were traveling by some other method. Our experience is, that more than half the people that are injured by the DEADLY ENGINE OR CARELESS ENGINEERS AND CRIMINAL TRAIN MEN, as they are so often pictured, are really killed or injured, by no other means in the world, than by their own stupidity, carelessness and utter disregard of the natural means of looking out in the least possible manner for their own safety. And we are confident, that this is the experience of the majority of railway employees who have seen long years of service, and whose word is as good as gold. And now, in view of these facts, is it not true, that there should be, at least a portion of this responsibility resting on the ones, who rush headlong, without one thought of danger, neither using a particle of care to avoid any accident which may befall them. So in the time of excitement, when the danger is daily pictured by the best writers that can be procured, is it not fitting and proper, even no more than what is right, to look at both sides of this important question and place the blame where it rightly belongs, instead of having it all one-sided? In the matter of what is the best way out of the difficulty, there need be no fears as to the final result. Some one will be smart enough in the near future to propose some plan that will meet the exigencies of the case, so that this great problem will be solved in a manner that will ensure the greatest safety to human life. But the man that is studying the great problem of running trains through the city of Chicago at a ten mile an hour gait, may just as well lie down quietly and die. Whoever he may be, he is too far behind the times for this earth, and if he is needed in the other world, there should be his residence.

But after every means of perfect safety has been provided that skill and human ingenuity may devise, do not for one moment imagine, but what some one will get hurt, if they do not use some little precaution and care, as they journey along.

* *

Some gentleman whom we suppose lives within hearing of that mighty roaring cataract of Niagara, sends a letter to the Railway Age desiring an answer to four simple questions. The aforesaid gentleman also states in his communication, that they are very important, and he desires that they be answered immediately, if not sooner. But the gentlemanly editor of that usually fair and impartial periodical, practically ignores the question and turns the matter over to the other fellow to answer. The only thing that puzzles us is the fact, that he acknowledges that he is unable to answer them. This is sad. Inasmuch as the gentleman has publicly announced that he is unable to give the desired information, we suppose that the field is open to the world. So we trust, that we will not be accused of trespassing on forbidden ground if we give the momentous questions to our readers for a proper answer.

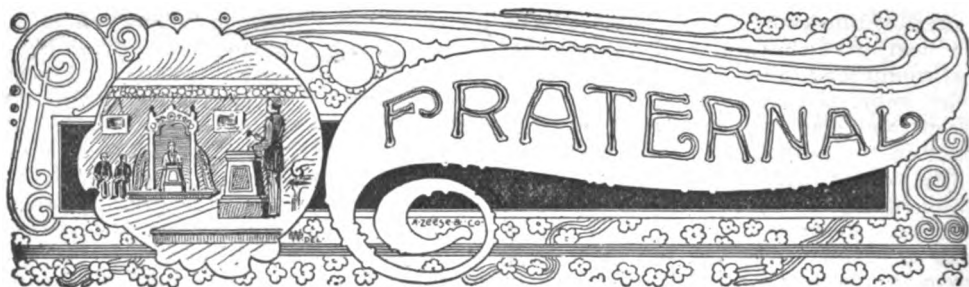

So here we go: 1st. What railroad is the most independent in the United States?

2d. Which railroad has made the fastest record, in both long and short distances?

3d. Which railroad has the latest improvements?

4th. On which road: West Shore or N. Y. Central, can a person go to New York the quickest?

We imagine that this solution is open to the world, so we hope the readers of the CONDUCTOR will not be behind in their efforts to afford the desired information.

The World.

BY F. W. B.

O, Lord! if in days gone by
My heart hath loved the world too well,
It needs more love for love of Thee
To bid this cherished world farewell.

And yet I do rejoice there are
So many things on earth to love,
So many idols for the fire,
My love and loyal change to prove.

He that loves most has most to lose,
And willing loss is love's best prize;
The more that Yesterday has loved,
The more To-day can sacrifice.

O, Earth! thou art too beautiful,
And thou, dear home! thou art too sweet:
The winning ways of flesh and blood
To smooth for sinners' pilgrim feet.

The woods and flowers and runnings streams,
The sunshine of the common skies,
The place of household peace—what heart
But owns the might of these dear ties?

The sweetness of known faces are
A couch where weary hearts repose;
Known voices are as David's harp,
Bewitching Saul's oppressive woes.

And yet, bright world! thou art not wise;
Oh, no! enchantress though thou art,
Thou art not skillful in thy way
Of dealing with a weary soul.

If thou had'st kept thy faith with me,
I might have been thy servant still;
But slighted love and broken faith
Poor world! these are beyond thy skill.

Oh! bless thee, praise thee, treacherous world,
That thou dost play so false a part,
And drive, like sheep into the fold,
Our loves into our Lord's heart.

This have I learned upon gracious Lord!
This world hath had thy rightful place;

But come dear jealous Lord of love!
Come and commence Thy reign of grace.

Banish far from me all I love,
The smiles of friends, The frown of foes;
And drive me to my Lord!
The Heart of Jesus crucified.

Take all from me from earth away,
Take all that men can love from me;
Let all I lean upon give way,
That I may lean on nothing but Thee.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Mar. 2, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Having business in Conneaut, Ohio, where Nickel Plate Division 145 is located, I attended their 6th reception and ball, given in the Lincoln opera house. To say it was the event of the season, would be stating it mild. I have attended a great many receptions and balls, but never in all my experience have I been where there was more enjoyment. The affair was under the management of the following members of Division 145: C. E. Waterman, C. C.; W. E. Bender, S. and T.; Jack Smith, C. J. Canthin, W. L. Canthin, and W. Phillips. Well, in fact all the members took very active parts. To give the names of all the Brothers who did their duty, I would have to name all the members of that division. As I entered from the vestibule into the main hall, I was taken in charge by a Brother, and run into a private room, set apart for members, where they placed upon the Noble Breast of my Prince Albert a blue badge, with bullion fringe, marked: "Sixth Annual Reception of Nickel Plate Division 145, O. R. C., Feb. 21, 1890. Visiting Brothers." There was also present one of the leading citizens of the place, Mr. Hay, (the boys call him Dad), who had a basket of button-hole bouquets for the members of the O. R. C.; of course I was adorned with one. After being decorated with a Token of Honor and an emblem of nature, I was permitted to enter the sacred precincts of the main hall, as I was duly prepared to enjoy the pleasures of the evening. The first object that arrested my sight was Welcome! worked in beautiful floral letters.

On passing under welcome, such a beautiful sight. The decorations were magnificent; there was bunting of the national colors, with beautiful mottoes, monograms and flowers artistically arranged, which made it seem like an Arcadian bower. The music was artistic, the supper delicious and the company gay and joyous. There was youth in all its innocence, beauty with all its coquetry, old age to lend an air of dignity and intellect accompanied by Chesterfielding manners, clothed in appropriate costumes, some of which were lovely, made up an assemblage that would be flattering to any city. I should judge there were fully three hundred couples; there were at least two hundred couples in the grand march, which was promptly on time, (no variations) 9 o'clock, led by Chief Train Master Henry Shaffer, and his estimable wife. Mr. Shaffer who has been with the Nickel Plate company ever since the road was opened to the public, first as passenger conductor. Previous to that he was in the employ of the contractors as superintendent of construction. He is a gentleman of varied experience and fine attainments. He was a member of the Order. Why he ceased to be I do not know, but knowing the gentleman as I do, his reasons must be good. The enjoyment went on until an early hour in the morning. It was an occasion long to be remembered by those who had the rare good luck to be present.

I have heard before, of a room with a floor laid upon springs and such like things, with so much art in every part, that when you went in you were forced to begin, a minuet pace with an air and a grace; swinging about, now in, now out, with a deal of state in a figure of eight, without pipe or string, or any such thing; and now I have writ in a brotherly fit, that will make you dance; and as you advance, will keep you still though against your will, dancing away alert and gay, till you come to the end of what I have penned.

TROM.

Bellevue Division 134.

Bellevue, Huron Co., O. •

From the Providence (Rhode Island) Journal, we learn that the conductors, designated as "Punch and ticket men," have had a dance, the occasion being their Sixth Annual Ball, stating that the Infantry Armory was crowded and the scene was a brilliant one, and also that the Governor, and other notable state officers, were there. And although the gripe was still hovering around, and there were many other entertainments to draw from even this one, the men of the punch, it seems, overcame all these drawbacks, and that the ticket sales were far in advance of any they had had in years before. Not only the railroad fraternity of Providence were there, and their wives, sweethearts and sisters, but the boys, with their partners, came from Massachusetts, and stations all along the line of the Providence & Worcester road, and also from other parts of New England. Five hundred people also came down on the Worcester special.

The decorations for the ball were on a principle of great attractiveness and grace. Butcher furnished the floral part, J. Harry Welch the draping, and Reeves provided the music. English yew and holly peeped out from the green palms and pines that bordered the stage, so that there was not much visible of the prompter but his head, so thick was the foliage and flowers in front. An immense half disc of silk flags was fastened to the wall at the rear of the stage, like a big fan; a bunch of staff flags hung from the ceiling over the stage, with streamers floating to either side, while a like arrangement hung over the center of the hall-room floor; from each sky light were streamers of different colored bunting; designs in American and other flags hung along the balcony railing; from the gallery the conductors' inevitable red, white, blue and green lanterns.

The opening was an overture jubilee, by Hoffman, clarinet solo, playing Scotch airs, by E. A. Bosworth, medley overture, Brooks, piccolo solo by Mr. Max Guetter, railroad galop, Downing.

Somewhere near 9 o'clock, as the orchestra gave the first strains of music, came the announcement that the Governor and his staff were coming, preceded by General Floor-Director Ira G. Nichols, followed by Assistant Floor-Director A. R. Whaley, then next his Excellency, Herbert W. Ladd, with Colonels H. A. Duvillard and Jos. C. Perry, escorted by members of the reception committee; also, ladies and gentlemen of note (the names of whom we have not space to give.)

The grand march commenced a little after 9 o'clock, and was led by Lieutenant-Governor Littlefield and Mrs. A. R. Whaley, followed by ex-Governor and Mrs. C. H. Taft, about four hundred couples bringing up the rest of the van.

Many of the ladies were in fashionable evening dress, such as silk, satin and other attractive material, while not a few of the gentlemen were in full dress.

Then followed a succession of popular dances, numbering twenty, which lasted until midnight, when intermission was had for supper, served by Hopkins & Sears, of the Central hotel.

If space permitted we would only be too glad to give the names of the different committees, but as we are positively assured that this was the greatest success of their series of entertainments, for the past six years, all our readers will understand fully that each one of the gentlemen who composed these committees did his part both thoroughly and well.

MACON, Ga., March 7, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor :

To me the most interesting department of our excellent journal is that headed "Fraternal," since here we see what individuals are doing for the good of the Order, as well as what the Order is doing for the individual. Here, too, we get ideas and suggestions from the rank and file of the Order, those for whose benefit the organization was instituted.

In order that this department may do the most good, each division should see that everything pertaining to the good of the Order shall find expression in these columns. It will encourage the individual to make additional efforts for his advancement, and refrain from doing anything that would bring discredit upon the Order of which he is a member. Our success lies in individual effort, and I have noticed our Grand Chief Conductor never fails to impress this idea upon every assembly which it is his privilege to address.

The Order is doing well in these parts. We are continually adding new material to our ranks, and it is easy to see that a man takes a new interest in his work as soon as he becomes a member of our organization. There is something in the obligation which makes a man think, and he is proud to know that he has been thought worthy of a membership in an order based on such principles as those constituting the life and existence of the O. R. C., and he resolves that no conduct of his shall bring discredit on the Order.

The following names will be read with interest by their numerous friends and acquaintances :

Brother L. C. Young has been appointed supervisor of passenger train service on the Central of Georgia; Brother J. T. Johnson has gone to Columbus, Ga., as general yard master; Brother Fitzgerald, of 98, goes to Albany, Ga., in some capacity; Brother L. J. Harris, late of Charleston, S. C., is made depot master at the Union passenger depot at Macon, Ga.

All these were taken from the passenger train service and other worthy members were promoted to the places they vacated.

The meetings of Division 123 are well attended, and there is a lively interest in the affairs of the organization.

At our last meeting we approved an application for a charter for a new division at Columbus, Ga., where there is much good material, and so the good work goes on.

Yours fraternally,
"GEORGIA."

Mr. —————

He runs a locomotive,
Should he cultivate quiet
You never would suspect him,
But such knowledge will supply it.
His untiring conversation
Has always for its theme
The wonderful performances
He has done with steam.

"I have pulled so many cars,
"I have such places doubled,
"I have made such awful time
"My speed other drivers troubled,
"I have, with an empty tank,
"In my boiler gauges three,
"Made the station with my train,
"I can 'run,' you may bet on me."

Again he sometimes runs a train,
Which fact he advertises
In every fireside gathering,
Where comrades he advises
What he takes, in shape of trains,
How he runs the driver,
How the dispatcher he ignores,
He is such a contriver.

"He, too, pulls so many cars,
"Has 'pulled' so many tracks,
"In spite of agents made his time
"With incompetent sharks.
"He has worked on every road
"From Canada to Mexico,
"He can't be told how to do work,
"Just remember, he told you so."

The fireman has no part or lot
In this driver's estimation,
The coal he shovels to make steam
Requires no consideration.
Neither may the brakeman share
Credit in the fireside story
Of the self-complacent "con"
When he claims his meeds of glory.

S. E. F.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA, March 4, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor :

DEAR SIR: In the CONDUCTOR of March 1, 1890, in the article headed "Early Railroading," Mr. Marshall speaks of the old Mad River & Lake Erie railroad, which reminds the writer of his boyhood days. When about 10 years old my parents moved to Ohio, boarding the train at Canandaigua, N. Y., on the old "York & Erie" railroad, for Rochester, and there abandoned the elegant passenger car and boarded a canal boat for Buffalo, and there shipped aboard the old steamer "United States" for Sandusky City, O.

I will not tire you with a description of our trip on the lake. Oh, how sick! Arriving at Sandusky we were helped on board of a car about the size of an ordinary street car, with flat seats along the sides. Our train consisted of said passenger car, and a flat car, about the same size, each car having but four wheels under them. The flat car was the baggage and freight car combined. Then came the wonder of the whole—the engine, "Wyandott." It had no cab, no pilot, no headlight, and, I was going to say, no engineer, but come to think there was a man on her who the conductor told us was the engineer. He (the engineer) was a Scotchman, and his name was John Kasson. There was no fireman, the engineer and conductor managing the whole. The engine was reversed by three bars standing on the right hand side of the deck. I afterwards learned they were called "starting bars." Old John would hustle them back and forward, first one, then the other, until he got the links, or something else, caught just to suit him, and then he would pull the throttle and away we go, John's hair flying, for I don't remember ever seeing him with a hat on his head. How he could keep that engine on the track was a wonder to us smaller passengers, and some of the older ones would speak of it. The road was built by first putting it to grade. Yes, that is so, it had to be graded the same as any other road. Then the ties were split out of large timbers as near three-cornered as possible, so one side would lay flat, and the upper side could be notched and cut out in order to make a path for horses to travel, as the cars were drawn by horses but a short time before. Then the ties were notched, per gauge, and timbers, or sills, laid and wedged in them, and a strap, or rib, spiked on top of these timbers. Then the old strap rail was spiked to it, and the track was ready for the engine—and there was my starter. I made many a trip on the "Wyandott" with Uncle John. One, I can never forget. John, with his pet, the "Wyandott," was doing some construction work about three miles north of Bellevue, and we were headed south, when a north-bound freight came booming down grade. John commenced jerking at the starting bars, and finally got the old "Wyandott" started in the opposite direction, and he and the others jumped, leaving me to take care of myself. I had sense enough to lay flat on the deck, with my feet to the fire. The collision was very light, so I came out O. K. The speed of the trains were all slow enough for one to jump off with safety, as will be seen by the following story, related by Conductor Charley Jennings. He said the track ran parallel with the wagon road at a certain place, and passing a farm house, the farmer came out and jumped the fence and ran along side of the train. Charley asked him to get on and ride. The farmer said he was in a hurry, thanking the conductor, and said he was going after the doctor. Such was the speed of the passenger trains on the old Mad River & Lake Erie railroad nearly fifty years ago.

Yours, in P. F.,

T. B. WATSON.

JACKSON, Tenn., March 5, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Having never seen any notes from Jackson Division 149, and not wishing to be "left in the cold," in the items of our popular journal, I shall take it upon myself to send in a few jottings from our division.

We have a good membership, and are continuing to grow. We receive and initiate new members every few meetings. Why can't some of our traveling Brothers, who are well up in the new work, visit our division? I am sure they would receive a most hearty welcome, be royally entertained, and perhaps mutual benefits derived. All are delighted with the new work. Our greatest trouble is to get the boys to attend. Whenever in, they want to stay home with wife, or call on "My Dulcina,"

Our election of officers took place in December, Brother Charles Martin was chosen Chief Conductor, with Brother J. S. Karr as Assistant Chief Conductor, Brother W. N. Harris retiring from the chair, although he continues to watch over us, "as a hen doth her brood." Brother Wm. M. Wood was made Senior Conductor and Brother D. C. Newman Junior Conductor. Brother J. E. Barry, whose shining bald head casts no reflections on his most worthy wife, was elected Secretary and Treasurer, and will also represent us next May at our convention at Rochester.

Brother G. B. Harris, who has served a term as Vice President of the Conductors' Mutual Aid, while clipping tickets, gives us some sound logic on the insurance question.

Brothers Morgan, Spragins, Ranson and Booker, and the two Harrises, are pulling the bell cord and calling "all aboard" to the traveling public—and allow me to say here, the public never had more perfect gentlemen to ride with.

Next let us take a peep at our freight conductors, who, if not wearing brass buttons, are an "ornament to the profession;" a trifle stiff, are still in the ring, and can hustle freight as fast as the next. It has been remarked that Brother Felix Wright has been "moving" with unusual rapidity since girlie No. 2 arrived for permanent board at his home. Felix, the ladies say you are handsome, and if we were to contradict them, many a fair one might give us the "cold shoulder," your good wife included.

"Turn your engine at Martin and clean up for the north," is a message that never fails to bring the wrinkles, with a sour grape look, on the faces of Brothers H. Hill and H. L. Palmer, for it means for them no kisses from wife and babies to-day.

Brothers W. Hunt and C. Shearin, who, if not quite as old as Brother Prewitt, are just as happy, can run as well, and are good timber all the way through.

Last, but not least, come Brothers Beucini, Williams, Alexander, Barnett, Newman, Graham, and many others on the old Illinois Central, Cairo section, who have no peers in railroading science. For upright, honest, big-hearted gentlemen, our boys will take a front seat in the synagogue. "Here is luck to them, one and all. May your shadows never grow less, or your pocketbooks lighter."

As the semaphore is showing red, I must stop. Hoping to meet many of our Brothers in Rochester, I remain

Yours, in P. F.,

MOSE.

BOSTON, March 4, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Does it take a majority to rule? If so, how is the expression of the majority of the members of the Order obtained on a delegate vote in the sessions of the Grand Division?

This is a question which deserves the attention of all divisions, especially the divisions with a large membership.

There are 260 divisions, representing about sixteen thousand members. At present these divisions, regardless of membership, are entitled to one delegate each to the Grand Division. That delegate represents one vote, whether he represents a division with twenty-five members or a division with 250 members.

Under these conditions I cannot see what prevents the minority of delegates from sometimes representing the majority of members, which is obviously wrong. How can that condition of representation in the Grand Division be improved? I trust the different divisions will give this question their serious consideration, and offer some remedy at the next session of the Grand Division. It materially affects a large number of divisions, and is of important interest to Division 157, as we have a membership of over two hundred, and should, at least, have an equal representation in the Grand Division with a division with forty members, which we do not now have, as the vote of forty members, through their delegate, has the same influence in the Grand Division as the vote of 250 members through their delegate.

It would seem to me to be fair to allow a delegate a certain number of votes, to be determined on a certain basis. For instance, let the basis be the smallest number represented by any division sending a delegate to the Grand Division, as follows: If the smallest division has but twenty-five members, that number will be the basis. The delegate representing that division will be entitled to one vote, while the delegate representing a division with 250 members will be entitled to as many votes as twenty-five will go in 250, or ten votes, which would be a just and equitable representation of divisions and members. Or the Order could (if compatible with the interests of all concerned) divide the Order into separate jurisdictions, as evenly divided as possible, and each jurisdiction entitled to a certain number of votes in proportion to the number of members of each jurisdiction, which would do away with the steadily increasing membership of the Grand Division, thereby reducing the time occupied at each annual session of the Grand Division.

W. R. MOONEY,

New England Division 157.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., March 3, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Logan Division 110 is at this writing in mourning over the loss of our superintendent, Chas. Watts, who has been promoted to the general superintendency of the northwest system of the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburg. Recognizing his rare good qualities, as we do, we should not be surprised at his call to a post higher; but being of a selfish turn, we thought he would stay with us, and I might add the wish was father to the thought. It has been the writer's good fortune to meet many genial, whole-souled railroad officials in his time, but never have a body of railway men, in all departments, been treated and directed in a more fair, kind, or generous manner than by Charles Watts. He goes from us after a term of eight years, and it is unnecessary to say that our best wishes go with him. He will be succeeded by Mr. C. M. Bennett, now superintendent of the first division of the C., St. L. & P., from Indianapolis to Columbus. Mr. Bennett is well known here, having served as manager of maintenance of way for several years, and next to Mr. Watts, the one most welcome.

I believe I gave you the names of the knights of the punch on the north end and promised you the names of those on the east and south ends. Well, here they are:

Running between Logansport and Bradford,

O., we have Brother S. F. Johnson, Brother T. Courtney, Brother W. S. Parks, (who, by the way, can make the worst bluff for a little conductor I ever saw) Brother C. L. Berry, (whose real name is Barry, but changed it as per Dennis Horan) Brother Andrew Jackson Osborne, and last, but not least, comes Brother Charles Dunbar, of pump sucker fame. We have between Logansport and Cincinnati Brother H. Case, Brother R. D. Sherman, (who says, "Whin I say gintlemin I mane dimecrats") Brother J. H. Railsbock, Brother George Safford, (who, by the way, is the homeliest man, barring the writer, running into this city) and Brother J. W. Finrock comprises the list.

Hoping I have not slighted any of the boys, I will close by promising you the names of our Brothers on freight in my next.

Yours in P. F.,

L. M. D.

JACKSON, Mich., Feb. 28, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request for short communications, I will make this short.

Wolverine Division No 182 is moving along quietly. It has'nt any boom, but is steadily gaining strength.

At the last meeting Brothers Archie Cowan and Odekirk were given the new work, and Brother Dave Sweeney was given the second degree, Brother Howard Leach acting as chief conductor and Brother Clark as assistant chief conductor. The work was handled nicely, showing considerable improvement.

Some of the members of this division believe they have been snubbed by the managers of the C. B. I. F. cigars. The facts are these: Brother Stephens, having the interests of the Order in view, wrote to the manufacturers, stating the cigars were not on sale in this part of the world, and asking for samples, that he might place a few where they would bring orders for the goods. They acknowledged receipt of his letter, and curtly (as we take it) informed him they were out of samples. He then wrote, ordering 500 of the cigars, intending to place them with dealers who would, if they sold well, handle them. They then informed him that they did not deal in such small orders, but that if he would remit $28.50 they would send him one thousand of the cigars. Now, Brother Stephens expected that the goods first ordered would be sent C. O. D. and expected to pay for them. We may not know much about business methods, but we had supposed, and still suppose, it customary for manufacturers to show the quality of their goods before asking for large orders, which it seems these privileged people do not do. They who are begging for the custom of the Order of Railway Conductors will deliberately insult a member in good standing, (as they could easily have ascertained) by asking him to remit before shipping the goods, are not worthy of the patronage of the Order. They could have shipped the goods C. O. D., and been secure from any loss. The most careful firms in the country do this, and in this case it would have been only common courtesy to have done so. It looks a great deal as if the quality of their goods was such that they did not expect to get a second order and so wished to make the first one as large as possible. We may be in error as to their intentions and reasons. If so, we would be glad to have information, as this case has caused a great deal of hard feeling toward the cigar people.

Brother J. D. Clark, our assistant trainmaster, is recovering from his long and severe illness. He was so ill that at one time it was thought he would not recover.

Old "La Grippe" got hold of our worthy secretary, Brother Swidensky, and kept him off the road about two weeks.

Brother Cady is at work again, after a vacation of fifteen days.

Brother John Lockwood is running a baggage car on the Grand Rapids division, as a result of our committee's visit to headquarters in his behalf. We are informed that they also succeeded in having their mileage reduced enough to even up for the extra time and trouble in running via the Air Line.

Several members of No. 182 attended the union meeting at Chicago on the 23d of February. They do not give a very glowing account of the hospitality of the Chicago Brothers, as it seems they postponed the union meeting to give one of the Brothers a chance to throw a little mud at Grand Chief Conductor Wheaton. Some of the visitors wanted to hire a suitable place and hold a meeting, on their own responsibility. Fortunately this was not done.

Brother Welcher, who has been running through passenger about a year, has moved his family to Detroit.

Brother Furlong is dealing in horses now. Ask him about it.

Brother Cowan will soon make a trip south and west.

I notice some of the Brothers are crowing about making fast runs. They ought to come over on the "Saganaw." It is 114 miles in length, and we often make the run in sixteen hours—seldom less than ten.

W. A. S.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 10, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

As no one has made any inquiries as to whether the correspondent of Division 103 has been lost, strayed or stolen; I will say that he has not been stolen, but was lost in the shuffle as to getting in his work as quill driver, and estrayed so far that he got away as far as Frankfort, Ind., last Sunday, March 8, where he found that a special session of the Grand Division was called for the purpose of organizing another new division of the beautiful Order of Railway Conductors. Brother Assistant, G. C. C., C. H. Wilkins, was present as organizer, and with the assistance of the following Brothers: I. D. Baldwin, H. M. Mounts, Chalmers Brown, L. D. Hibbard, C. S. Firth, John Shugrue, Wm. Paetz, J. F. Downing, Robt. Alexander, W. H. Bowers, W. S. Losey, J. M. Gray and I. A. Finrock of 103; C. H. Arthur, Frank Campbell and J. W. Caskey of 92; M. Wendell and C. Hammond of 26; John Shaughnessy of 166, and S. J. Johnston of 79. They all assembled in Red Men's Hall, the use of which was kindly donated us by that charitable order. The special session opened with the following officers in the chair pro tem: C. C., C. H. Wilkins; A. C., Chalmers Brown; S. & T., I. D. Baldwin. The secretary, or quill pushing part of this chair, was good; in fact, it was what we term a rush. The treasurer part was also what we railroad men have a term for when business is not good, "bottom knocked out," although we will not be positive about this as no one had the "combination" but the secretary. S. C., L. D. Hibbard; J. C., C. S. Firth; I. S., J. W. Caskey; O. S., W. S. Losey. Everything was done in fine style, and when we got through at midnight we had a good healthy young division formed or organized, and "christened" the "Clover Leaf Division No. 254," of Frankfort, Ind., with the following officers elected: C. C., Wm. Businger; A. C. C., Isaiah Gilpin; S. & T., W. G. Sprinkle; S. C., D. S. Campbell; J. C., D. M. Bennett; I. S., J. W. Wysong; O. S., Thomas Fitzmartin. After all business was transacted, speeches and votes of thanks being in order, at it we went, and about the first one was a vote of thanks to the management of the L. N. A. & C. R. R. for free transportation furnished visiting members from Indianapolis; also the T. H. & P. R. R., and the T. St. L. & K. C., especially the K. C. R. R. officers in making arrangements, and allowing all of their conductors that they possibly could to attend or meet for the purpose of organizing this new Division, O. R. C., which shows that they most heartily approve the principles of our "Order." Then we gave a vote of thanks to the proprietor of the Coulter House for reduced rates. and the gentlemanly manner that we were treated at this house will long be remembered by the members of 103; then the New Division made a trial on voting and they gave a big majority vote of thanks for the assistance of 103, and to the "Red Men" for their hall, also to Coulter, Given & Co., of Frankfort, for the gift of a nice frame for their Charter. Of course, everybody was happy and we had to have a few speeches; but few were inclined to make a speech. All were ready to say su'thing, but they waited outside to say it. Brother A. G. C. C. Wilkins entertained us all with a good talk, and Brother Caskey made some very good remarks; then Brother Arthur, made us a small speech which I herewith enclose, Verbatim et Literatim."

Brothers, you have just been made members of what will be called by some a Secret Order; then I wish to say to you that you will find that secret orders are like individuals, good and bad, and all good people readily recognize the wrong of slandering or villifying an individual; but many people can't see that there is any injustice in slandering a secret order. Outside of the social intercourse our order affords, look at the vast amount of money it pays out annually to the loved one's of our dead Brothers. Yes, Brothers, it comes as a heaven of sunshine to the poor heart-stricken widow; and it has kept many, many little children from being sent to asylums and county houses. Brothers, you all will readily admit, that every tree is known by the fruit it produces; then why not say that bad society makes bad men, or good society should make good men, or a good man will not remain in bad society, or should you let a bad man remain in good society. Let us apply the different tests whereby we can find the status of our manhood; for where there is no manhood you can not expect but little from that individual; the first one to feel the comforts of a man's presence at home is, who? His wife and mother. Then you must consider that your first duty is to provide something for them after you are gone; remember that by living up to the teachings of our Order you will most certainly provide for them while here, for instead of saloon-keepers and poker-rooms getting what you earn, you will take it home and place it where it will do the most good; while the home-ties are strong and every man who serves his company six days out of seven would like to give the seventh to his family. He can take his wife into his confidence to the extent of showing her that the new Order will make him a better husband and father; and the wife who becomes jealous of her husband's attentions to his Division meetings is breaking a scepter of power which she should wield; the older members know whereof I speak for you will get the same notice's in time asking aid that is all from indifference to your Division meetings; carelessness makes Brother's delinquent; death suddenly overtakes you, and your wife and little one's are left to the cold charities of this world, why? Simply from the fact that you have failed to live up to the obligation that you have assumed; there is another test by which you can find whether our order is right or wrong, it is the effect it has on your calling; we can all easily understand why men reach honor and wealth, but remember to acquire it you must have the one great essential manhood; then if our order has these advantages we must certainly be in an honest calling; there is still another test by which we may know whether the order to which we belong is good or bad, it is this, what effect has it on your sense of morals and your obligation to God. We can but admit that it will effect us to a certain extent. The Bible, the closing prayer, and many other excellent truths, then most assuredly all of this should make a good impression on us Brothers. You have become members of a noble Order; then let the world judge the order by your acts; remembering that the individual behavior of just one member will reflect very seriously on the good name of many; think deeply my Brothers of the responsibility you have resting on you for the good name of the O. of R. C.

After this speech was delivered, and balance of ordinary business was transacted we closed at midnight, all tired, but happy to know that we had done a good days work, and very proud in the addition of one more Division to our noble Order. Long live No. 254 and success to its first set of officers is the most hearty wish of 103. In this connection I want to say something for one of the members of 103:

Brother E. L. Crockett is in the southwest, somewhere, as a special agent of an insurance company of our city, which is a reliable one, and should any of the Brothers in the west or south come in contact with him, or in fact any railway employe wanting insurance don't be afraid to talk to Ed. He will do you all good, for he can talk, and don't you forget it. He learned to talk when he was a boy, and he has not forgotten how, since he has grown up and quit carrying way-bills.

Yours in P. F.,
I. A. FINFROCK,
Correspondent 103.

READING, Pa., March 10, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Nicolls Division 229, is about two years old, and as yet has never sent any communication to the Order through their medium the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, which I think is their duty to do. So in order to let the Brothers all over this vast country know that Division 229 is alive, and in sympathy with all measures pertaining to the welfare of the Order. Division 229 has at present 53 Brothers in good standing, with 2 on the list waiting for admission. We are not so well off financially as we might be, owing to the late epidemic commonly known as the "Grip," which played sad havoc with our bank account; however, we have just closed our fair, and anticipate gratifying results, thereby replenishing our treasury.

Now, a word about our insurance: I think there are but five of us out of the 53 Brothers in this division that belong to the insurance, and the natural question is: how is it, that there are not more of our Brothers that will avail themselves of the cheapest insurance there is in this country, for such it is; notwithstanding, that some of our Brothers have tried to make us believe otherwise. Now, the trouble in this section is, that the Brothers are not paid as well, as our Brothers are in other sections; they belong to the company's Relief Association to the extent of $3.00 per month dues. The sentiment among them is: that if we had two classes of insurance, the present one and one for a less amount, say one half of the present, it would certainly take, around here, and we who belong to the insurance, hope that the next Grand Division will formulate some plan, by which every Brother of the Order can avail himself of the insurance.

In reference to the Sunday question so oft written about, I think that the suggestions in Brother Ostrander's letter to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, are about the only ways by which that question can be satisfactorily settled, for it is certainly all out of the question to dispense with Sunday traffic, at least in our neighborhood.

Before I close, please permit me to say, that the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR is growing in favor all the time, and the boys are always anxious for the next one. Too much credit cannot be given you for the able manner in which you have made the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR one of the most interesting Order magazines of the day.

Yours truly in P. F.,
L. A. N.

WINSLOW, Ariz., March 5, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

I noticed another misstatement in the Railway Service Gazette of February 13, signed "R. W.," in these words: "Perhaps it would be news to many conductors, that one half of the charter members of Aztec Division are now members of the new Brotherhood, at various points." There were 18 charter members of Division No. 85, 17 of whom are still members of this division; 4 transferred to other divisions; 5 expelled; 1 dead; 1 withdrawn to join the B. R. C.; 1 expelled and 1 transferred member joined the new organization; making 3 in all, instead of 9, as claimed by "R. W." Division No. 85 has 36 members in good standing and up to this date, only one of our members (as noted above) has joined the B. R. C.

This division was instituted by Brother John W. Mallory, D. G. C. C., and not by A. D. Butt, (who was a visitor) as stated by "R. W."

AZTECAN.

CHICAGO, March 10, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

Below find report of the organization of Division 254 at Frankfort, Ind., on Sunday March 9.

A special session of the Grand Division was opened at Frankfort, Ind., in Red Men's hall at 3 p. m. with the following officers pro tem: C. H. Wilkins, C. C.; Chalmers Brown, Division 103 A. C. C.; I. D. Baldwin, Division 103 secretary and treasurer; L. D. Hibbard, Division 103 S. C.; C. S. Firth, Division 103 J. C.; J. W. Caskey, Division 92 I. S.; W. S. Losey, Division 103 O. S.

The following charter members were present and were regularly constituted into a regular Division. The work being exemplified on three candidates in full. D. M. Bennett, Thos. Fitzmartin, N. C. Word, J. W. Wysong, Isiah Gilpin, W. G. Sprinkle, D. S. Campbell, J. W. Walls, J. W. Daley, J. L. Hazeltine, S. W. Merrill and W. Businger, the last two being transferred from Divisions 124 and 103 respectively. Taking a recess until 6:30 p. m., when Brother Brown, C. C. of Division 103, took the chair as C. C., and Brother Caskey of Division 92, the chair of A. C. C. The work was exemplified in full after which the new Division elected the following officers: C. C., Wm. Businger; A. C. C., J. Gilpin; Secretary and Treasurer, W. G. Sprinkle; S. C., D. S. Campbell; Jr. C., D. M. Bennett; I. S., J. W. Wysong; O. S., Thomas Fitzmartin; Division Committee, J. W. Dailey; N. C. Word, J. L. Hazeltine; Delegate, S. W. Merrill; Alternate, Wm. Businger. The officers were then installed, Brother Brown acting as marshal. The name and number of the new Division is Clover Leaf Division 254. This Division was certainly given a good send off in that the work was exemplified in a manner that was very creditable to those who took part, and my thanks are due and are hereby tendered to all the Brothers of the Order who assisted me in the organization of this Division. There were members present from Divisions 6, 26, 92, 101, 103, 166, and the new Division was given a good idea of the work and teachings of the Brothers by remarks from Brothers Arthur, Caskey, Mounts and Brown.

I believe that great good will be accomplished by this Division. They have certainly manifested more than usual interest in the organization of this Division as they were robbed of their money once by the man having the matter in charge, and he a member of the Order, notwithstanding this, they have carried the matter through to a successful termination, and deserve great credit for it. and from this fact I derive great consolation, feeling that the interest which has carried it thus far will still be maintained to the end, that while they will not be very large with regard to numbers, they will be one of the best in the Order. Great credit is due Brother Mounts for the interest which he has manifested in this new Division, and the Brothers of the new Division feel under obligation, and at the same time thank him for the interest manifested and assistance rendered. The Division passed a vote of thanks to the management of the L. N. A. & C. R'y and the T. St. L. & K. C., for transportation furnished the Brothers, and especially to the superintendents and trainmasters of the last named for their kindness in arranging to permit so many of the Brothers to attend; also to the proprietor of the Coulter House for reduced rates, and to Coulter, Givin & Co., for handsome frame for charter, and the Red Men for use of hall which was donated for this meeting. After spending the time so well and profitably for three hours the Division closed at 12:30 a. m., well satisfied that a good days work had been done, and with the hope that great good may be derived from this new link in the Bond of Union which unites us as a band of Brothers. On Sunday March 16, I expect to organize a new Division at Portland, Me., which will also fill a long felt want. Hoping that both the new Divisions, may as I fully believe they will, be an honor to the Order. I remain as ever yours truly in P. F.,

C. H. WILKINS, A. G. C. C.

Editor Conductor:

Replying to your request to "write a review" of Looking Backward, I am obliged to confess that I have not yet read the book in question, although a copy of it has been in my hands for some three or four weeks, and ordinarily it would have been finished within a day or so. If you had simply asked that I write a notice of the book, that would easily be accomplished, and I could say, that a copy had reached us from the publishers, and honestly say, from a brief inspection, that it is a book that should be read by every American citizen, and it should be read carefully and thoughtfully, and express my belief honestly enough, that any reader of the CONDUCTOR who would invest one dollar in the book and read it, would never regret the cost or the time, if he has the slightest interest in the welfare of our nation and his own descendants. It certainly should be read by every member of any labor organization, and it should and I believe will, furnish food for thought to members of the Order of Railway Conductors, but when it comes to a request to write a review, do you have any idea what your request might lead to? Will you surrender to me, space enough in the CONDUCTOR to review this, to say the very least, peculiar book and the ideas expressed therein? I do not flatter myself as being competent to review or criticise such a writer as Mr. Bellamy, but had I the time, I would have no hesitation, and in fact would be pleased to comment upon it at considerable length.

The fact that Mr. Bellamy's book has received the serious attention of scholars and statesmen, proves that it is not merely a time-killer, but that it may possibly contain the germs of a new civilization, as yet undreamed of except by its author. It may be a question with some, as to whether or not the intent of the author was anything more or less than a huge joke, and it may be suspected by some, that he is even now enjoying himself with the commotion and discussion that has been caused; be that as it may, the result is none the less definite, and it is none the less certain, that the possibilities of A. D. 2000 are being earnestly discussed by thoughtful men. The great problem of this generation, the problem which has been steadily increasing in importance since the federation of the thirteen states, and the one beside which all others pale into insignificance, is the labor problem. The "irrepressible conflict" between capital and labor is being urged with increased energy every day. The laborers of the United States are only just beginning to learn their power, and it seems to me, that nothing can be more certain than dire disaster to all, if that power shall ever be exerted unwisely in its full force. Is it not within the bounds of possibility, that the labor Sampson, in its blind endeavors to escape from the tyranny of monopoly, may destroy our whole social fabric, and from the chaos, result a reign of terror incomparably more terrible than that succeeding the French revolution? Is there not a distinct and increasing tendency toward anarchy? Will there be wisdom enough to bring about a readjustment of the social and financial conditions of to-day without bloodshed? And if without bloodshed, will it be in the path outlined by this book? Is it possible, that the Creator intended that thousands of human beings should suffer and starve, in order that one may have the satisfaction of piling up millions that he cannot use? Should present conditions continue in existence or rather continually get worse for the laborer, is it at all unlikely, that the sufferers may not adopt

"The good old plan,

Let him take who has the power,
And let him keep who can."

Is there a question in the mind of any man, as to the ability of labor to take what it wants, if it shall ever become united and determined?

These are not idle questions, but are of vital interest, and the man is deceived who refuses to consider them, thinking that they are but temporary and that he can avoid the consequences in the future by refusing to consider now.

However, this is not much in the line of a review of Looking Backward, but it is a brief outline of some of the questions that are brought forcibly to our notice, by a consideration of the plan proposed by the writer, for the solution of nothing more or less than the labor problem; the old, and yet ever new struggle of capital vs. labor.

Should time and opportunity offer, I may in the future ask your forbearance and make some comments on Mr. Bellamy's plan, meantime, to yourself and all I say, read the book. I commenced it when first placed in my hands, and while I have glanced through, I have not yet read half of it.

Yours truly in P. F.

WM. P. DANIELS.

BUTTE, Montana, Feb. 14, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Much has been written in the past, and the discussion still continues, about insurance. I think the floating and familiar subscription list can be buried out of sight if it can be made a serious offense for any division to start such lists. If they choose, let them chip in among themselves, but it's an outrage to make such lists out and spread them broadcast over the land. If there is a penniless widow, left so by the shiftlessness of her deceased husband, why should I, and thousands of others, have a pitiful subscription list shoved under our nose? What difference does it make to some good, hard-working conductor down in Vermont if there is a conductor's widow in poverty over in Oregon?

This subscription business is just like a man walking deliberately into the clutches of the law, and then appealing to the judge to "think of his wife and family." He, and not the judge, should have thought of the wife and family, and steered clear of the law.

I have known several instances where conductors' wives were averse to O. R. C. insurance, claiming that the money was thrown away. We all know that improvidence is the leading characteristic of railroad men, with no thought for the future, and some day there is a rip, bang, smash, and out goes their life. Shortly after along comes the inevitable "$5, paid," "$3, paid."

In looking over the pages of the journal, I have often wondered why E. E. Clark did not inquire into the matter of insurance. Of course, he has his instructions, and knows best. A few remarks, spoken at the right moment, might have a good effect, as we are all more or less impressed. In his travels, E. E. Clark meets but few members who don't jingle some loose dollars in their pockets, and if talked to the right way would cheerfully join the insurance association, where, if left to themselves, will jog along without bothering, and tell you "it is time enough to bid the devil good morning when you meet him."

J. B. R.

HELENA, Montana, March 2, 1890.

W. P. Daniels, Esq., G. S. & T.:

If you have space please insert in next number of CONDUCTOR, the following resolutions by Helena Division 243, this date:

Resolved, That Helena Division 243, will not donate any more money to any Brother of the O. R. C. unless he is a member of the insurance.

We have contributed so far to all appeals for aid, and have decided that if a Brother will neglect his family himself, and not take out any insurance he must stand the blame, and not us, who pay our money every month to support the beneficial department. Too many say I am in good health, and if anything should happen I will have my Division send out a circular, and get as much or more than I would if I paid insurance every month. Brothers, this is not right, either come in the insurance, or do not send out any circulars for assistance. Division 243 has lost two members by death lately, and had others sick and taken care of them without sending to outside Divisions the circular which is becoming too common with the O. R. C. at present. If we had no benefit department it would be different, but with the best in the world (as I think) there is no excuse for not becoming a member of it. I am a single man and carry ($8,000.00) eight thousand dollars insurance. How many Brothers having families dependent on them can say the same.

Yours in P. F.,

ASA WILDER,

S. & T. 243.

From a letter just received at this office we learn, that Hollingsworth Division No. 100, Columbus, Ohio, will hold a special and Union meeting on the 3d Sunday in March, which occurs on the 16th of that month. One session will commence at 10 o'clock, a. m., the other at 2 o'clock, p. m., to which all the members of the Order, both far and near, are invited, by order of Hollingsworth Division, through their Secretary, Brother Gus Shipley. We trust that all members who can find it convenient to attend this Union meeting will do so, and help out the members of this division, for by doing so they can also help themselves in the knowledge and work that may be laid out for them to do.

JOHNSON, MRS. F. A.—At a regular meeting of Milbank Division No. 99, O. R. C., the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Great Ruler of the Universe to remove suddenly and unlooked for by death, the kind and loving wife of our esteemed Brother, and

WHEREAS, As we bow submissively to the will of a divine power, we know that our Brother has sustained a great loss—a loss which no earthly friend can fill. How lonely will be his home without his treasure. Gone, but not forgotten, she was a friend to every one, a cheerful companion and a true Christian woman; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, as Brothers, most sincerely sympathize with our Brother, and extend to him our heartfelt sympathy in his great bereavement; and be it further

Resolved, That as a token of esteem to our worthy Brother, a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes; also that a copy be given our Brother, and a copy be forwarded for publication in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

JAS. R. MCLAIN,
W. L. LEONARD,
J. E. HORN,
Committee.

At a regular meeting of Palmetto Division, 208, O. R. C., the following was ordered published:

The dread avenger, Death, has again invaded our ranks, and claimed another worthy and zealous member of our Order.

Brother Henry Ravenel is no more. Young, vigorous, and with health and energy, giving promise of long life and usefulness, he has been suddenly summoned by the Grand Chief Conductor of the universe to join that Heavenly order, to which sooner or later we will all be called.

Our departed Brother was possessed of a disposition meek and child-like in its simplicity and purity of purpose; confiding and fraternal in his intercourse; assiduous and faithful in discharging responsibilities and duties, and over zealous, perhaps, in his aspirations to excel in his avocation, he met a fate which might befall any in their efforts to advance their usefulness, inspire confidence, and enlist commendations.

Brother Ravenel's calm and peaceful death, in full consciousness of its approach, evidences his life to have been such, that the summons came with no terror to him; but with Christian courage he gathered around him those near and dear, and with a fortitude as remarkable as it was consoling, bade a final farewell, and peacefully entered the realms of bliss.

Be it Resolved:

1. That in the death of Brother Henry Ravenel Division 208 has lost a worthy and faithful member, and the Order of Railway Conductors a zealous and true co-worker;

2. That we deplore his death with unfeigned sorrow, and extend to his widow and children the expression of our profoundest sorrow and condolence in their loss;

2. That our charter be draped in mourning for thirty days, and a page in our Minute book be dedicated to his memory as a mark of respect;

4. That a copy of these proceedings be sent to the widow of our deceased Brother, and that this preamble and these resolutions be published in our daily morning papers, and in our journal, THE CONDUCTOR.

By order:

W. H. EVANS.
Sec. and Treas.

CAMDEN, Feb. 10, 1890.

At a stated meeting of Camden Division No. 170, Order Railway Conductors, held February 2, 1890, the following was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, God, the supreme ruler of the universe, having seen fit to remove from our midst our esteemed Brother, and Past Chief Conductor, James G. King

Resolved, That in humble submission to His will, we bow, and are conscious of our great loss.

Resolved, That in his death we have lost a true Brother, and his family an upright, loving husband and father.

Resolved, That those traits of character which have endeared him to us, and all who knew him, are worthy of emulation, and to be held in lasting memory.

Resolved, That this division extend to the stricken wife and family, our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed on the records of the division, and a copy be presented to his bereaved family, also a copy sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

A. E. LUDLOW,

J. P. ANCKER,

E. G. BLAISDELL.

Committee.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2, 1890.

To C. C. officers and members, El Capitan Division, No. 115, O. R. C.:

We, your committee appointed to draft resolutions of respect on the death of the wife of Brother G. F. Nightingill, (Mrs. Kittie Nightingill) beg leave to submit the following resolutions of respect:

At a regular meeting of El Capitan Division No. 115, O. R. C., held at their hall, March 2d, 1890, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The Omnipotent Ruler of the universe has seen proper in His inscrutable wisdom to take from life unto death the dearly beloved wife of Brother G. F. Nightingill, therefore be it Resolved, That in the sudden death of Mrs. Nightingill, the husband, the family and the community have suffered a loss irreparable.

Resolved, That the membership of Division No. 115, O. R. C., and kindred fraternities extend to Brother Nightingill, the family and the many warm friends their heartfelt condolence in their great bereavement.

Resolved, That the above resolutions be spread upon the minutes, a copy sent to Brother Nightingill, also a copy sent to the CONDUCTOR for publication.

After an illness of one week's duration, the life so bright and hopeful, ere the meridian was attained, the rosy evening was changed into the dawning of immortality without prolonged suffering.

The voice is hushed, the warm heart has ceased to beat and the hands are crossed in death, and the spirit has flown to that beautiful city whose gates are inlaid with priceless pearls; joined those in the great beyond.

Thus 'tis:

Death calls forth the bitterest anguish and the sweetest rest; it opens the gate to joys unspeakable or woes eternal.

Death, the king of terrors which pains and soothes.

Death, the night of rest, that comes after the toils and struggles of a weary day.

Death, the sweet impressive calm that follows when the storm has passed.

Death, an opiate that softens, soothes and tranquilizes when the fitful fever of life runs high and the throbbing heart beats on and on.

J. D. MAN,
J. E. DILLON, } Committee.
G. S. SMITH,

DANVILLE, Ill., March 9, 1890.

Brother Bert Kent, died of dropsy March 3, and was buried March 5. At a meeting of Danville Division 118, held at their hall, Sunday March 9, the following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Almighty God in His infinite wisdom, who doeth all things for the best, to remove from our midst, our beloved Brother, Bert Kent, who died at his home on North Vermilion street, at 10 o'clock a. m., Monday March 3, surrounded by relatives and friends, and,

WHEREAS, He was taken away young in our membership, we feel that by his death this Division has lost one, who would have been an earnest worker, and be it

Resolved, That this Division extend to the bereaved wife and parents our most profound sympathy, in this their sorrowful affliction.

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for thirty days as a token of esteem and respect in which our brother was held; and be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this meeting, and a copy sent to the wife and parents of the deceased, and a copy sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, and each of the daily papers for publication.

S. H. DAVIS,
F. W. SMITH,
M. FITZPATRICK,
Committee.

WINNEMUCCA, Nev., March 5, 1890.

At a special meeting of Geo. C. Cornwall Division No. 94, O. of R. C., Feb. 20, 1890, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Almighty God to remove from our midst, the kind husband and esteemed brother F. M. Bennett, be it Resolved, That we do most sincerely tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved wife and daughter.

Resolved, that these resolutions be placed upon the records of our Division, and a copy be sent to the family and to THE CONDUCTOR for publication.

A. E. LOTHROP,
FRED T. BENSON,
Committee.

DENVER, Col. March 7, 1890.

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father in his wisdom to remove from the home of our dear Brother Gordon and wife, their little son to his Heavenly home, under the care of the good shephard who will for ever guide him.

Resolved, That Denver Division, No. 44, extend to Brother Gordon and wife, its heartfelt sympathies in their hour of affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions appear in the minutes of this Division, and a copy be sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

Yours, in P. F.,
C. C. GRAVES,
S. & T.

Quaker City Division, No. 204.
PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 9, 1890.

DIED—On March 3, 1890, after a lingering illness at her residence in Chester, Pa., the wife of Brother I. G. Happersett.

WHEREAS, Our dear Brother has been, by the cruel hand of death, bereaved of a loving and dutiful wife, and his children deprived of a tender and affectionate mother, and, as in times of such affliction the sympathy of true friends is doubly dear, and comforts the mourning spirit in its sorrow and distress, be it

Resolved, That in the bereavement that has come to our Brother; we have with him the blessed assurance, that "He doeth all things well, and though sorrow may endure for a season, yet blessed be the Lord, joy cometh with the morning."

Resolved, That we his brothers, who rejoiced with him in his hours of gladness, feel that now, in the days of his affliction and grief, our hearts yearn out to his, and in the true touch of fraternal affection, we, too, feel the desolation, that has fallen upon him, and mourning with him hope the sooner to bring the healing balm that comes on the wings of time, to soothe the most grievous wounds. "Behold, we count them happy which endure."

Resolved, That this expression of condolence be spread upon the minutes and published in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

E. T. MACVEIGH,
C. H. SLOANE,
Committee.

Our A. & P. people will be pained to hear that Frank Prohaska, formerly a conductor on this road, died recently in Central America. The particulars are contained in the following letter:

PORT SIMON, Costa Rica, Central America,
Jan. 31, 1890.

DR. J. P. BOOTH. Dear Sir: For the benefit of the many friends of Frank Prohaska, please announce in your paper his death which occurred here Jan. 29, and was caused by billious remittent fever. I have notified his lodge at Winslow, also his sister, Mrs. Annie Hefte, in Iowa City, Iowa. Poor Frank was only sick three days. We buried him yesterday. Have sent his sister a draft for all the money he had, $1,219.89. The boys here are going to erect a head stone at his grave. Have asked Conductor Roberts to look after his insurance.

He passed off very peacefully; was conscious up to within an hour of his death, and said he suffered no pain. Remember me to all friends in Needles.

Respectfully,

C. C. DODD,
Booths Bazoo, Needles, Cal. Feb. 15, 1890.

CHICAGO, Ill., March 18, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

At a regular meeting of Stanchfield Division No. 41, on Sunday, March 9th, 1890, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Almighty God has seen fit to remove from its earthly home and parents, the infant daughter of our esteemed and worthy Brother Geo. H. Laiser; therefore be it

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the one that doeth all things well, we none the less sympathize with our Brother and his estimable wife, in this their hour of affliction; further

Resolved, That these resolutions be made a part of the minutes of this meeting, a copy be sent to the parents and a copy be sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

Cheer up, Brother and Sister, weep not for thy little one, for thy loss is Heaven's gain, for God hath said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for such is the kingdom of Heaven."

L. S. CLARK,
J. R. OLIVER,
Committee.

To the wives of all Railway Conductors I affectionately dedicate the following verses:

While sitting by my fireside this lonely Sabbath night,
While our little ones are sleeping, dreaming of the angels bright—

While my husband, a conductor—on the great C. B. & Q.—
Is toiling through this snow storm—I'll talk awhile with you.

You the wives of all conductors, in this great land of ours
To you in northern climes—and to you mid southern flowers,

To you our sisters in the east, and to you in western lands—
I come this night to greet you—and to take you by the hands.

Let us talk awhile together—of our joys and sorrows too—
Of our hopes and disappointments, and the good we all may do.

By being more united—as their wives we ought to be,
And prove ourselves a blessing, to the noble O. R. C.

While some of us are happy—and have plenty laid in store—
There are others who can hardly keep the wolf from out the door.

There are some who glide quite smoothly along the path of life.

And some others who are roughly tossed—amid the toils and strife.

There are some who have great trials, and hardships hard to bear.

And death has entered in some homes, and claimed our darlings fair.

Children, husbands, wives and friends—we have laid away to rest—

While their spirits now are resting, in the mansions of the blest.

The signal lights are fading—the train moves slowly on.
We hear the angels whisper—"another brother gone."
His last long run is over—the watch word is "on time"
And loud they sing his praises—all along the line.

How sad we are to-day, midst tears, and blooming flowers.
Who knows but on the morrow, it may be one of ours.
Just when this train is coming—our time cards can not tell—

And He will shout the "all aboard" who doeth all things well.

Life is not sunny all the way, we have the clouds and rain.
And when the darkness disappears—the sun light comes again.

So in our lives we find it so, the shadows and the showers—
The winter brings its frosty breath—the summer brings its flowers.

What! my clock has called the time, the lonely hour of two—
Still the children sleep—I'm talking still with you.

I hear a train a coming—yes—I see his lantern bright.
He has given me his signal—so dearest friends, "good night."

[Written and Composed by Mrs. C. A. Rouse, Corresponding Secretary of the Ladies Auxiliary to the O. R. C., Creston, Iowa, March 1, 1890.]

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 28, 1890.

We are pleased to have the opportunity of saying a few words in regard to our auxiliary, which I think we can truthfully say is thriving wonderfully, and all our motives in organizing have proved effectual, as we have been organized one year this month, and our object is to assist the O. R. C. and their families. For moral, social, and charitable improvements, and comfort. It is our aim as well as being charitable to unite our families in one common cause—that of elevating us as railroad people. These admonish us to extend fraternity, and render at all times, such assistance as may be consistent without neglect to homes or families. And I am pleased to say we are not any way discouraged with the progress of our Division. Instead of relinquishing our hold on it, we are still grasping it tighter, and the older our Division grows, the more interest is manifested in it. We have thirty-one members in good standing, and expect several more propositions. We have also a considerable sum of money in the treasury, as we are a beneficial society, and have been fortunate enough not to have any claims for benefits, and hope that we may still continue so. Our dues are not very high, so therefore, our benefits cannot be very steep; but at the same time a little is better than nothing. We have had several socials this winter, and have had very pleasant times. Our last one was held at Sister A. H. McCauley's, previous to her leaving the city, and will be a pleasant remembrance in our minds for some time. We elected our new officers the last meeting in December, with Sister Springer as president, and re-elected Sister A. H. McCauley, secretary. We appreciate the interest Sister McCauley has taken in us very much, indeed we cannot speak too highly of our auxiliary, and with the interest and kindly feeling that exists between the members, we surely cannot do anything else, but prosper and be a success. And we would ask all the O. R. C. members and their wives to take an interest in the auxiliaries, as I think it is a grand cause, and one that every railroad family should feel interested in.

MRS. BENJ. WILTSE.
Corresponding Secretary,
Div. 5, L. A. of O. R. C.

CLIFTON FORGE, Va., March 3, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Being an O. R. C. man's wife, of course I feel interested and read the CONDUCTOR, especially the ladies' department and communications with pleasure. It has been quite a while since I saw a line in it from this part of the country; and as we have had quite an enjoyable affair in the way of a supper for the benefit of Blue Ridge Division, I thought perhaps it would be of interest to some of the many readers to have a brief sketch of it through the CONDUCTOR.

The last three evenings in February were set apart for the occasion. Despite the unfavorable weather, the town hall was filled with guests, who were entertained at intervals with solos and duets from some of our fair maidens, which brought flattering applause. Mrs. Shular also displayed her artistic work in the way of a banner for the occasion which graced the stage; on the front was the name and number of Division in beautiful silver letters, at the bottom suspended the three emblems of the degrees of the Order, red, white and green lanterns, which attracted the attention and admiration of not a few of the old conductors. Chas. Haynes on the Huntington Division and C. J. Hunter on the James River Division were selected to run for a fine lantern, also Miss Ella Boswell of this place and Miss Nettie Harlar of Charlottesville, for a nice rocking chair, both to be decided the last evening. Captain Haynes won the lamp by a large majority. Miss Harlar was the successful one in getting the chair, the contest being so close the committee thought it but justice to present Miss Boswell also with a present.

In addition to the supper, dancing was advertised for the last evening, and one can well imagine the hall was filled to its utmost capacity. Most of the lady dancers came in ball costume and seemed to enjoy the music, which was rendered by the orchestra. Capt. Chas. Gay, J. W. Gentry, floor managers. F. S. Shaw presided over the cash box. The ladies who waited on the tables were kept very busy. The best of order was kept throughout the entire occasion; all was music, laughter and gaiety until the "wee hours" rolled on, the crowd began to drop off, the cream low in the freezers, the ladies at the tables tired, and all said "let us go home."

Judging from the weight of the cash box, the writer would think the Blue Ridge Division might imagine itself as rich as a Vanderbilt. It would be but justice to say that Mrs. Pugh, Mrs. Shular and others of the conductor's wives deserve a gold medal for their faithful efforts and labors in the affair. The marked success of the entire occasion was largely due to the energy of Conductor Shular.

Long live the noble order of R. W. C.

"WEAL."

SIoux CITY, Iowa, March 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

With a wee bit of woman's curiosity I opened a volume of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, wondering what would be its contents; the first volume I had seen. After scanning it through I turned back and eagerly read page after page till a whole afternoon had been spent, and the four volumes received, quite thoroughly read. I found expressions of pure thought, words and ideas calculated to stimulate the better part of one's being, a standard of morality that could vie with any of our best publications. Some one says "tell me your friends and I will tell you what you are." Why not add tell me what you read and I will tell you what you are. Of all classes of men who need to select their reading and friends wisely, are those who are most away from home and home influence, and among the greatest number of that class are railroad men.

In volume seventh in the mentions, I found something from the editor's pen. Beginning it is a long road, that has no turning. Where he speaks of "when the average railway employe was looked upon by the average inhabitant as a little below par in the scale of humanity and decency. But upon investigation we find there has been a change, and he asks which has done the most to bring about the reformation, the officers of the system by which you have been employed, or the associates with whom you have been connected?"

Can we not safely say both, and add also of what your reading consists; but mostly association. Choosing pure companions we grow pure in thought and deed. And going with those of a low standard of morals, what first seems repulsive become pleasant. And what at first one recoils from after awhile is sought. But we say with Galileo "the world moves, and so the great mass of human beings dwelling on the earth." Humanity is on the advance, we are too apt to repine because we see so little of the result of the good work being done, and at times become so discouraged that we slacken our efforts, tired of the conflict, but science teaches that the "tear of despair shed to day, may appear to-morrow in the rainbow of hope." And surely we may see the truth of the assertion, for do we not find to-day better men and women among a class (railroad men) of people who were once almost ostracized from the best society? Men and women who are to-day capable of filling any position among the best; proving that the world has moved socially as well as intellectually and morally for those in the railroad ranks. True we do not yet behold them in the zenith of their glory, but the time is surely coming, when they will as a mass be ranked among the better class.

There is much depending upon the wives and mothers of all railway men, for we are perfectly aware that a proper influence exerted in the right way will always produce a good effect.

There is a great work to be accomplished by women, for by the elevation of women the conditions of mankind are benefitted. In their hands as it were rests all that is good and beautiful; all that is gentle and lovely; an influence for the better felt, by all with whom they come in contact, or they may throw a mantle of darkness so vile, so polluted and low that the very atmosphere they breathe leaves its lasting impression upon all in their presence. How I blush for women whom I so often see in my travels that are carrying on a little innocent (?) flirtation as they call it.

O, woman! woman! stop and think. You are looking to-day through dim shadows, a to-morrow will dawn when there shall be a clearer light, and the mantle that has covered you will fall, and you will see each other in all the grandeur of a pure life, or stand in shadowy darkness caused by misdeeds.

Go up higher out of the narrow animal life, and into the pure realm of being. Learn to live justly and wisely, and learn that we cannot live for ourselves alone.

Welcome the glad day bringing a better and purer humanity.

Your Friend,

AUNT KATE.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., March 16, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

As we read and re-read "At Eventide"—by wife of Grand Chief—our eyes filled with tears over the beautiful thoughts expressed in such a sweet way, and one of our chief regrets is, that we did not meet the gifted author during our trip last May. But from the sentiments of the beautiful poem, written from the depths of the heart: 'ere long, we too shall pass through the golden gates of the Heavenly harbor and meet one another there. "At last it will all be clear." What a beautiful thought? Can we wait not and be at peace.

K. BROWNE.

TEACH

YOUR GIRLS

YOUR BOYS

To sew.	To have nothing to do with gambling.
To cook.	To neither drink, smoke, nor chew.
To mend.	To like home better than the street.
To be gentle.	To refrain from bad language.
To value time.	To employ their time usefully.
To dress neatly.	To shun evil companions.
To keep a secret.	To abhor trickery or cheating.
To be self-reliant.	To be temperate in all things.
To avoid idleness.	To be punctual and prompt.
To mind the baby.	To be generous and kind.
To darn stockings.	To be obedient always.
To respect old age.	To be courteous to all.
To make good bread.	To be cleanly and neat.
To keep a house tidy.	To respect old age.
To control their temper.	To speak politely.
To be above gossiping.	To be honorable.
To make a home happy.	To be truthful.
To take care of the sick.	To be thoughtful.
To humor a cross old man.	To be unselfish.
To marry a man for his worth.	To be cheerful.
To be a helpmate to a husband.	To be gentle.
To take plenty of active exercise.	To be brave.
To see a mouse without screaming.	To swim.
To read some books besides novels.	To think.
To be light-hearted and fleet-footed.	To work.

J. F. Johnson has been appointed general yard-master of the Central R. R. & Banking company, of Georgia, at Columbus.

.

Capt. L. C. Young has been appointed supervisor of passenger service at Savannah, of the Central R. R. & Banking company, vice Capt. J. E. Gee, resigned.

.

V. R. Dwinelli has been appointed train master of the Northern and Texas divisions of the Mexican National railroad company, vice L. D. Coppoit, resigned.

.

R. C. Fitts has been appointed general yard-master at Albany, vice J. T. Johnson, transferred to the Savannah and western division of the Central railroad of Georgia.

.

Any one knowing the present address of J. M. Usher and E. J. Shampain, will confer a favor by notifying G. O. Miller, 119 Manson street, Waterloo, Iowa, Secretary and Treasurer Johnson, Division No. 67.

.

Brother G. S. Green, member of Queen City Division No. 60, sends us his card which reads: "G. S. Green, City Restaurant, Manito, Ill." Success to you, Brother Green, in your new venture.

.

In a letter to Brother Daniels from Brother Dana Brown, Carson City, March 3d, we learn that he has received a position in the United States Mint at that place, at a salary of $1,800.00 per year. All will congratulate Brother Brown in his prosperity.

.

From a reliable source we learn that Brother J. H. Archer, member of Division No. 14, Cleveland, Ohio, has been appointed by Manager Jewett, to the position of chief car inspector of the Mahoning & Shenango Car Service Association. Allow us to congratulate you, Brother Archer, while we hope that your new position will be a pleasant one to you, and also your services found very acceptable to the company.

From a card received from Brother C. S. Millard, dated Sioux City, March 5th, we learn that he has just received the appointment as train master and master mechanic of the Sioux City & Short Line railroad. Everyone will be glad to hear of the Brother's good luck.

.

Altoona, Feb. 14, 1890, at the residence of the bride, No. 649 Cumberland street, Harrisburg, on Jan. 21, our genial Past Chief Conductor, E. H. Sell and Mrs. M. E. Palmer were united in marriage by Rev. Dr. F. F. Everett. May their pathway through life be strewn with flowers is the wish of his brothers in P. F.

.

If Brothers O. B. Fredricks, E. N. Bettinger, C. F. Carham, Thos. Carlisle, H. A. Cox, R. G. C. Jenkins, E. L. Gilboy and A. J. Galloway hear of or see this notice will they please write to Grove H. Benson, Secretary Division 173, or will any brother knowing there whereabouts inform Brother Benson, Chadron, Neb.

.

Brother Frank J. Easley, member of Montezuma Division No. 70, East Los Vegas, N. M., has been appointed chief clerk in charge of the superintendent's office, with authority to act in the absence of the superintendent. His authority will be respected by employees of all departments.

Signed: H. N. MUDGE.

.

Commencing Monday, March 3d, Mr. E. D. Nash will, in addition to his present duties, have charge of the locomotive engineers and firemen on the central, northern and western divisions of the Central Vermont railroad. Mr. Samuel Fox will have charge of the engine houses at St. Albans, and all machinists, carpenters and wipers employed therein, and engineers and firemen subject to Mr. Nash.

.

In our advertising columns the readers of the CONDUCTOR will find the advertisement of the Brazilian Specific Company, New York. This medicine is a blood purifier, and comes before the public well recommended, as private letters from members of the Order testify, and if any should be in need of such a remedy, and see fit to try its curative properties, we shall feel under obligations to them if they will notify us of their experience in the use of the same.

In this number appears the advertisement of Jos. P. Wathier. A perusal will repay any conductor who wishes to purchase a watch. Mr. Wathier is thoroughly responsible, and his customers may depend upon his goods being exactly as represented.

Send for Garden City Galop, by Mrs. Lizzie Leggett, illustrated title, World's Fair Chicago; price 50 cents. This galop is both brilliant and attractive, and well deserving of your notice. Published by W. I. Leggett, Galesburg, Ill. Sent to any address on receipt of price; postage stamps accepted. Brother Leggett is a member of Galesburg Div. No. 83.

We hear encouraging news from the Grand Officers who are in the field. Brothers Wilkins and Clark, both of them, have recently finished long trips through different sections of the country, and as far as we are able to learn, they have been cordially received, and good reports come from the services that they have been able to lend to the members of the Order in the different sections where they have visited.

We thoughtlessly omitted in our last issue to return our thanks to W. C. Brown, Superintendent of the Iowa lines of the C. B. & Q. railway, for permission to copy the elegant address that he delivered at Tabor, Iowa, sometime since. And while he is a personal friend to us, we know that he has too much good sense to even think that we purposely omitted to make a proper acknowledgment at the right time, for his kindness, in giving us permission to print so elegant an address,

There are at the present time three or four new charter petitions, which will call for as many new divisions to be organized during the month of March. Still the good work goes on, and we trust that these new divisions may be started under pleasant and profitable circumstances, so that their standing may rank with the most prominent in the whole Order. As soon as organized, we will give the readers of the CONDUCTOR the name and number of each division, as also the place where they are located.

From a communication from Brother John Hollinger, Secretary of North Star Division, Winnipeg, Manitoba, we learn that he has been terribly afflicted, as his whole family have been very sick and one of the little flock, tired out and weary, dropped by the way side, going all alone, at the age of 4 years to join his playmates in a land where sorrow and tears are never known. We trust that the good brother and his good wife, will through us accept the sympathy of the Order in this their sad distress and affliction.

We hear good reports from the meeting which was held at Sedalia, February 22d and 23d. There was a very good attendance, and we learn, that the principles of the Order of Railway Conductors were thoroughly discussed in that meeting, and trust that a fraternal feeling was re-kindled, that will last for some time. We are glad that the members of Division 60, who were so earnest in making this meeting a success, were more than pleased with the results; also, with the reception. The ball, on the evening of the 21st, was a decided success.

New Continental Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., Bryant & Miller, proprietors. Brother Bryant is a member of Division No. 2. We hope that any members of the Order who may chance to pass through Buffalo, and have a few moments time will give Brother Bryant at least a pleasant call. Shake hands with him, inquire after his health, and if you are in Buffalo over night put up with him. In this way you may be able to help the brother along in this worlds' goods, a little, and become acquainted with both him and his partner, Mr. Miller.

Guinn House, Hot Springs, Ark., L. S. Smith, proprietor. Brother Smith is a member of Division No. 6. His house is convenient to bath houses, banks and postoffice. Street cars pass the door every five minutes. We trust that any brother who may chance to travel in the south, especially in Arkansas, and is in need of a bath will give Brother Smith a call, and try and make him happy while you stay there, and perhaps in so doing if you should remain in the place for any length of time, you may add a few nickels to his wealth and happiness.

A few days since, we received a very kind and courteous letter from the chairman of the executive committee. W. C. Cross, of Burlington, Iowa. It was the first communication we have had from him other than in a business way for several months. We did not even know whether he was alive or had gone to that place where freight cars, time checks, switch lists and train master's rules are unknown. But upon receipt of this letter we find that he is still alive and walking up and down the track continually. Hardly time to go home to his meals, but very little time to sleep, and the continual warfare of hard labor and diligence in business we learn, has made him a little thinner than usual. So much so, one of the Brothers reminds us, that he can scarcely cast a shadow, except when engaged in battle with the Elks.

We would take this occasion to publicly express our thanks for the splendid communication which was written by General John McNulta, of Bloomington, Ill., and which we gave to the readers of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR in a late issue. We thank the gentleman, not only for his kind remarks and good will toward the Order, and no less for the fund of information which his letter contained, and hope that at some future time he may deem it a pleasure to favor our readers with other communications, that will not only be of great benefit to the members, but that will be read by all who may chance to see his writings, both with pleasure and profit.

By request we will state that Brother Marshall Lafferty of Evansville, Ind., has prepared a pamphlet containing the speeches of Dan Voorhees and Hon. J. M. Jordan in the case of the O. & M. Railway vs. Marshall Lafferty, tried in Cincinnati last October. They make about fifty pages of reading matter which will certainly be interesting reading, and as Brother Lafferty has been to a great expense in this matter to make his record good, any brother of the Order who feels kindly disposed, and is willing to lend a helping hand will receive a copy of this pamphlet by enclosing 50 cents to Marshall Lafferty, Evansville, Ind., 1, 140 Governor street.

An opportunity for some railroad man to get a Howard watch free of cost to him. Mr. J. S. Townsend proposes to furnish one of the well known Howard movements, of their best quality gilt, fully adjusted to heat, cold and position, and cased in a specially made filled case, open face, or hunting, as may be desired, to some railroad man who will send his name in full, giving address and classification of employment. Each letter received will be assigned a number, and that number will be registered against the name of the writer, and the lucky number gets the Howard watch, which is universally acknowledged to be the best railroad watch manufactured. A 2 cent stamp enclosed with the letter will insure a return of certificate bearing the registered number of the name, and for 25c will include his 230 page catalogue illustrating movement and case to be given. The object in making this extraordinary offer, is to get the correct name and address of all railroad men. The number drawing the watch, and the name of the party holding the same, will be published in this Journal. Drawing to take place Sept. 1, 1890, and to be under the supervision of responsible parties. Send your full name and address, to J. S. Townsend, 1554 Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill.

There has been no notice sent us of the demise of Brother Howard Evans of Schenectady, N. Y., and Brother Martin Clancy, of Kent, Ohio, and we are not at liberty to announce any such information to our readers. However we have great fears that they have been foully dealt with, or met with some great misfortune which is being kept from our knowledge. We used to hear at least a word once in a while from these brothers, but lately they have either neglected, forgotten or purposely left us out in their correspondence. We hasten to excuse the brothers for any such dilatoriness on their part, as we well know that they are active members of society, and engaged in all that benefits and interests the town in which they reside in every way, and have positive knowledge that their spare time is all taken up. Even while they were in Cedar Rapids in their duties as members of the executive committee, although we were at home sick at the time, we learn that there never was an idle moment, and even in the quiet hours of night, when fast asleep, they were dreaming of business that they had neglected, and that was very necessary to be done, so we freely forgive these two Brothers any neglect they may have shown toward us. They are both of them now in the prime of life, eager to do, and to be doing all that is possible to be done, perhaps realizing that their lease of life may be short, but we do honestly hope and trust, without any particular claim on them, that we feel as if we had, that they will be a little more attentive to the wishes of the other Brothers of the Order, and occasionally drop in a line, which if written on a postal card would only cost one cent, and a good long letter only two cents, and if we know that they are doing their whole duty to others we will let the matter pass by so far as we are personally concerned, and give them all the glory while we go without the letters. We bear the brothers no ill-will, but take this silent way of notifying them that they still owe us a few lines if they ever find time to jot them down. In conclusion, we will say to them that there is no expense attached to these remarks, only hoping that they may prove better in the future than they have in the past, in keeping up their correspondence.

EDITORIAL

E. H. BELKNAP, EDITOR.

WM. P. DANIELS, MANAGER.
W. N. GATES, ADVERTISING MANAGER, 10 Public Square, Cleveland, O.

PAY OF CONDUCTORS.

It is at least very amusing, even if it may not be instructive, to read the different views expressed in many of our periodicals regarding the pay of passenger conductors, and the best remedy to secure a faithful discharge of every duty. One writer says "that those who are honest must of necessity suffer for the misdeeds of those who are dishonest, and as long as the few (or the many) will not do what is right and just, they must all expect that the spotter, or detective, will remain in the employ of the railway companies until some other method is invented that will secure a better and more healthy state of affairs." The same writer admits "that men who are in the same line of work for the same corporation, or as near as one man's work can be to another's, in the railway service, are paid $150.00 and $175.00, while the conductor receives but $100.00. And this state of affairs are not right for the conductor, or at least the passenger conductor, earns as much as the gentlemen who are doing service in the same business." If it be true it is a lamentable state of affairs, for someone must surely be at fault. We have had it rung in our ears for many years by different railway officers holding high and honorable positions, that any conductor that would take a cent of money which rightly belongs to the company would be just as dishonest at a salary of $200.00 as he would at a salary of $50.00. For the sake of giving these officials all the benefit of their line of argument, we will pass this lofty sentiment by, and not take up our time for the present in any argument on this point. We have in our lives been acquainted with railway officials who, at a very moderate salary, each year that they held their positions, who were not worth five hundred dollars when they accepted such positions, but in fifteen years, with a large family to look after, and many other expenses, either by some one's request, or their own, retired with a competency of $100,000. How it was done we cannot tell, because we were never an official. But these same persons are the ones who have told us that $150.00 conductors would be just as dishonest as a $50.00. There is a curious sentiment abroad in the land among railway officials, and among the public. It even goes out on the breeze that wafts its life on the mountain side, that everybody in the world is honest, or at least everybody in every department of railway service, except the poor, miserable conductor. And out of the darkness in which this involves his name, his character, his everything in this life, at least, there is but one streak of silver lining that sheds any particle of brightness on the horrid picture. This lies in the fact that if he does happen to have $100, or $1,000, in stocks or bonds at the expiration of twenty or thirty years, they are not "watered," or subsidised, or fictitious. They represent their actual worth. "The spotter or detective system must prevail until something better is discovered to take its place," says one. Another says the passenger conductor earns as much as others who receive $150.00 and $175.00 per month. Prominent railway officials acknowledge the same thing. We wish to ask these gentlemen just a very few questions: Is there anything on "God's green earth" that you do not ask of your conductors? If there is, tell us of it, for we are in ignorance. You want a gentleman. You want perfect loyalty to all your interests. You want them to correctly understand your version of the railway laws of the land so thoroughly that your interests will never be compromised by them. You want them to present a clean and neat appearance. You compel them to dress well, at their own (not your) expense. You wish them to be well informed on all subjects (except that of wages). You wish them to be polite and agreeable to everyone, and just as capable of entertaining in an agreeable manner, the highest dignitaries and the most polished gentlemen who travel over your line of railway. You wish them to be cool-headed and masters of good judgment and excellent discretion in all cases of danger and emergencies. He must be at least a passable book-keeper in order to retain his position. He must at times work twenty four to thirty hours without rest or food, if it be necessary. He must bear the complaints and inuendoes emanating from the cranky patrons of your road, without murmur. "In time of fear, when trouble's near," he is expected to bear the blunt of the battle. And now I ask you in all sincerity, is there any employe in your service, was there ever one, or will there in any probability be one, of whom you require one tithe of this work? Yet the writer of one article says, (and we suppose that he is only telling the truth) that you pay a portion of the other employes $150.00, and your passenger conductors from $60.00 to $100.00. If this be a statement of facts as they exist, have you done your whole duty? We do not ask you to answer, but candidly, quietly, and in a business-like manner think about it, and it may not do any harm to talk it over, one among another, if it is just and right between man and man. If it be justice between the employer and employe, say so; but if it is not, don't pass it by with some sneering remark like "Let them help themselves if they can," because that is not justice or right—not even gentlemanly. In answer to the oft repeated tale "that any conductor will be just as honest at $50.00 per month, or $80.00, as he will at $150.00," we have just one thing to say: You have never tried it! You yourselves acknowledge that the conductor earns just as much as the other employes, but you never pay it. If it be a fact that all the railway officials, and all the other railway employes, and everyone else in the world, are honest and upright and perfect, and on the other hand the passenger conductors in this world are all thieves and robbers and speculators, then I would not give them what they earn. Nay, farther, I would discharge them all before the sun goes down beyond the western hills. But it matters not what we think, it matters but little what others may say, you do not believe any such thing. It is all enveloped in one English word. It is only a "subterfuge," it answers the purpose. Give your passenger conductors what they are worth in comparison with other employes. Try it for thirty days. Show by your works what you acknowledge with your mouth. If your faithful, honorable, honest, loyal employe gives you a whole lifetime of good and faithful service, in the most hazardous of all pursuits, when he asks you for a loaf do not give him a crumb. When he is worthy of the harvest he has helped you to garner, do not hand him a stone. When you say he is not worthy of his hire, do not condemn him until it has been offered. Think of all these things, gentlemen, in half as kindly and thoughtful a vein as they are written. Practice them once, just once, and tell me afterward, not who was the wise one, but who was the fool.

Whatever is Done let it be for the Best Good of the Conductors of America.

Only a few weeks more before the delegates to Twenty-second Grand Division of the Order of Railway Conductors will meet in annual session in the city of Rochester, N. Y. This will undoubtedly be the largest gathering of conductors that has ever met together. Quite a number of new Divisions have been added during the last year, and it is apparent to all, that everyone will feel that they should be represented, and not only represent, but each and every delegate will be expected to represent his Division in a manner that will be acceptable to a majority of all the members of his Division. It is not only possible, but more than probable, that many issues that should be deemed of great importance to the conductors of the present time will arise, many that are vitally essential to the welfare of the Order. That there will be very material differences of opinions in regard to many important subjects can hardly be doubted, and it is not our purpose, neither desire, to say to any member what policy you shall pursue, what measure it is for your interest, or for the interest of the Order to further and advance. We, as editor of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR have no privileges accorded us, above any member of the Order, whereby, we can feel at liberty to forestall any one in their opinions, regarding their duty in all matters, pertaining to the welfare of the Order. Events may transpire and complications may arise, before this session shall open, that no human eye can see, nor mind imagine. Therefore the proper time for one to definitely express one's views, would seem to be when the regular order of business is called, or else in the halls of your own Division room, and in the latter case, even then, certain exigencies may arise whereby the duty of your delegate may seem to be borne along in a very different channel from the forecast you had previously made. In presenting opinions as individuals in written communications before they are to be acted upon, one is very likely to dwell almost wholly on "his" views of the case as studied and formed from one side of the question. He has probably never given the other side the careful consideration that he has given his own, consequently there is great danger, that when certain propositions are brought up before the court, as it were, that decides on all matters of principle or law, he is often either persuaded, or otherwise forced to back down gracefully in many ways, or possibly acknowledge himself defeated, simply because before this, he was in a great measure legislating for himself, but in the Grand Division finds out, that the wishes and rights of many others, not only should, but must be respected. Do not understand us to say, and do not infer that we are ignorant of the fact, that there are certain and vital principles, which are the sure foundation of the success of every society, that must be kept inviolate, and are not to be changed or tampered with, and for fear we may be misunderstood, and some may feel at liberty to put their own construction on what we allude to, we will name them so plainly that even the blind can make no mistake. First in the list comes the question who shall rule? The Constitution and Statutes, or if not these you may say they are not enough, then we will make it personally binding, add, your obligation teaches you not only who shall rule, but also in what spirit, every one shall acquiesce in the final decision of this legislative body of conductors. Of the law, the constitution of the statutes of the Order, and in addition to these, if the obligations of a member mean anything, if there is anything binding in their being lived up to, then it must be very plain to every one, what the duty of all has been, and is to-day. If other laws shall be enacted, and other obligations taken, then will be the proper time to do the same by whatever they might be. But to-day we are, or should be, living under and obeying the provisions of the one's already in force. In some portion of the work of the Order, there is some allusion made to the matter of "Brotherly Love," one toward another. Justice is referred to, and several other things that may possibly have been forgotten or neglected during the past year. Some one may offer the suggestion that these are not essential elements for the prosperity of any society. We will only suggest one thought, in reply, that if they are not, then the quicker the order is abandoned, the better it will be for every member of it. We have been invited to define our position, (both as a member of the Order, and as editor of its organ) upon matters that may become laws in the future. We will say that we have never been bashful in regard to expressing our views, either as a member and no less an editor, regarding the right observance of the ones that are our guide at the present time, and at any future time should they chance to be changed, we will do what we deem right in every time and place. Also in every position, or else we will gracefully step down and out. But as long as we have anything to do with this Order, in any position whatever, the poorest conductor that runs a train, or any who are out of employment, is entitled to and shall receive more of our sympathy and earnest endeavor to place him on a comfortable footing, to be able to live and be happy, then all those who are either high up in power, and the good things of this life, because he merits it, because he is in need of such treatment, because this is the corner stone of every fraternal organization in the world. And whenever any member feels that he cannot do this, either that person should be invited to withdraw, or else the words that indicate what that Order is for should be dropped out and lost sight of.

So, we sincerely trust that every delegate and member of the Grand Division will go to Rochester, with the full determination to do his whole duty to his Brother men, as becoming, every one worthy to be called a member of the Order of Railway Conductors.

THE NEW DETECTIVE.

It is a machine 5x2; on its face are three rows of keys, that work by pressing them down with the finger, and which are numbered. One row of keys represents dollars, the second dimes, the third cents. When loaded, "look out or the gun will go off." It contains a roll of blank paper, moved by means of a small wheel on one side of the machine, and lined so as to be in three columns to correspond with the keys. With this machine fastened to the coat, the conductor goes through the coach, and when he finds a fellow who is minus a ticket, or a book, or a pass, he presses the keys of this little detective and registers the amount; then he brings out of the slot a piece of paper an inch wide and two long, on which the fare is stamped, and hands this to the passenger from whom the fare is collected.

The object is said to be to serve as a check upon any conductor, who may be inclined to render a false accounting to the company. We have, in our day, run a train where this would have been a great convenience. For instance, we have in mind a little station, where eighty or ninety used to get on and ride four miles; we generally made the time in six minutes, and quite often have collected thirty and thirty-five and as high as forty fares beside the tickets. Now, we have no knowledge, that we were born in any great cyclone, neither have we been much of a tempest since, but we were egotistical enough to believe, that we could get through a coach, and do the work as it came to us to do, about as sudden as the average conductor, who is looked upon with a suspicious eye, and we wish to state, that if he collects thirty tickets and thirty or forty fares, making change for eight or ten of them, and gets through in six minutes, he will have little time to work any new fangled sausage grinder, or cherry-picker that is buckled onto his coat. The click of the little bell may remind him that he is indebted to the company for fifteen cents, but sometimes the whistle of the engine sounds a warning that may be forgotten, if too many appliances are tacked on to a conductor to enrich the pocket of some fellow who has a patent to sell.

But after all, we believe this little "Detective," that is buckled up close to you is more humane, more honorable, less to be feared, than the usual two legged one, that sits in the corner and marks them down with a pencil, whether they are collected or not, whose only incentive, as a rule, is to make out a case in order to hold his position and draw his salary. We are not preaching up stealing as a virtue, neither sustaining dishonesty in any form whatever; but in the matter of old fashioned detectives, we know just what their work is as a rule. In justice to the profession, we will say, that there are a few noble exceptions. But the average conductor, with the average detective at his heels, stands about as much show for his reputation or his life, as a chicken just out of the shell does in the clutches of a hawk; and when they are off duty, they are guilty of acts, very many of them, that would eclipse the bad qualities of all railway conductors. So, if they must travel along with the conductor, give us the one that has no reason to blacken the reputation and name of a man who tries to do right; one that will not drive him so far, that he is branded as a thief from one road to another, not because he is one, but simply for the reason, that his (the detective's) position may remain intact.

To those who are honest and upright, these things do not apply, but we know too much of the others. So, if there must be one, by all means have the one that only registers the truth, and can not manufacture lies, that blot out the existence, almost, of so many conductors, who are peers in honesty and everything pertaining to manhood by the side of the dishonest detective.

It will not leave the poor wife and children with nothing to eat and little to wear, while the father is looking for a situation, and the only response he can hear is "Blacklisted;" not because he is or has been dishonest, but because, in many, so very many instances, "the watchman who was on the tower," was feathering his nest, by making out false accounting, instead of the conductor. These are facts, gentlemen. Are they right, in the sight of God, and honorable railway officials? We leave it to for you to answer.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., APRIL 15, 1890.

NO. 8.

TIM.

Morning among the mountains! The crisp coolness of October, and the leafy greenness of June! What vitality was in the air! What a tonic for weary brains and tired nerves!

It was interesting to note the look of renewed energy in the faces of the guests, as they gradually gathered on the hotel piazza, fresh from the breakfast-room.

"Mountain air and good coffee are acting on the nerve centres," I said, with a laugh, to my companion, as the sound of merry voices became confusing.

"Hello, there's the stage-coach on time!"

There was a quick tramping of hoofs, and the six horses came prancing proudly up to the door. A crowd of bright faced girls appeared. What a clamoring for outside seats! What a flutter of pretty costumes!

Ned Holmes and I held back. Who wouldn't? When, at length, we ventured forth with the dignity that became seniors in a great college, the seats were all taken. We stood in perplexity, a source of merriment to saucy eyes.

"Strap them on behind," came softly from under a bewitching bonnet.

The merry laugh which followed decided our fortunes for that day, and gave us one of the richest experiences of life.

"What time does the next coach go?" shouted Ned to the driver, as the horses curved gracefully under the warning crack over the heads of the leaders.

"At twelve o'clock," answered the driver, drawing the obedient horses into line.

There was a loud bugle blast, a triumphant waving of white handkerchiefs, and Ned and I faced each other with the question, "What shall we do?" There was to be a grand carnival at the big hotel, ten miles away, and we wanted to go.

"I say, Will, let's walk." Ned put his heel down hard, and straightened himself. "Let's get even with that laugh. We can take a short cut over the mountain, then strike the valley road, and get there by noon. I've been over before."

In half an hour we had packed our evening suits to go by coach, and, in walking trim, were triumphantly climbing the steep mountain path. What an experience was ours! I can never recall that mountain-climb without a thrill of emotion. Nor can I recall my glimpse that day into God's kingdom in the heart of a child without a new impulse to self-sacrifice and unselfish living.

It was almost noon when we stood upon the mountain top. A grand panorama of landscape glory lay before us,—hills and valleys, cultivated fields and winding river, a vast harmony in green and gold and overhanging blue. To the far west lay a bank of dark clouds—the mystery of evil, threatening the fair universe.

After gazing a long time in rapturous silence, Ned, exclaimed: "This is glorious, but I shall be obliged to consider the claims of my stomach. Do you see where the path trails around a projecting rock down there? Well, just below is a cold spring, with shade and outlook good enough for a picnic paradise."

It was a quick tramp down, and we thoroughly enjoyed the cool water and dry lunch, and lay a long time resting and looking out over the beautiful valley. But a warning thunder-roll aroused us, and we jumped to our feet and started down the mountain.

We hurried along at a brisk pace, scarcely speaking, to save our breath, while the thunder rolled nearer and nearer.

I had nearly given in, when Ned, a few yards ahead, shouted, "Here's the road; now for a little run of ten minutes." In less time than that we sighted a house, and ran unceremoniously into the yard and up the steps of the piazza, much to the amusement and curiosity of half a dozen children who were scampering in from the pattering rain drops.

A mild, motherly woman met us kindly, and opened the door of the best room, but the musty odor, the framed sampler with its weeping willow, and the stiff haircloth chairs prompted Ned to say, "We thank you, ma'am, but we prefer the piazza."

As we sat watching the rain, chatting with the farmer and his wife, my attention was attracted to the children grouped at the end of the piazza. Three of them were lean and scrawny, with sallow skin and peaked faces, and three were round and rosy.

Suddenly one of them said, pointing, "Poor Tim, see how it rains on him!" Then turning toward us, "Papa, won't you put a roof over Tim, so it shan't rain on him?"

Looking in the direction she pointed, I saw only a swing and children's playthings under a large maple. A second look revealed what seemed to be a grave covered with flowers in the midst of their playground.

Before the father could answer, I said, thoughtlessly, "Is that a grave out there?"

A curiously tender, almost reverent smile came to the farmer's face, as, turning to his wife, he said, "Mother, tell the strangers about Tim."

"It's only a short story," she said, "and I'm always willin' to tell it, though it makes my heart ache, but I think maybe it'll make people feel more tender-like to the poor children the kind folks are sendin' out of the big city to get a bit of fresh air.

"I didn't feel for 'em at first. Our minister, he came and asked me to take two or three, and I jest said, 'No; it's hayin' time, and what with the extra hands to cook for, and the milk and butter on my hands, and a six-months-old baby of my own, I don't feel no call to take care of other folks's children. There's them that hain't got any; let them take 'em.' The minister didn't press me, only he said something about a blessing would surely come with 'em.

"After he went away, I couldn't put it out of my mind. I kept a-thinkin' what if God was to take mine away. I seemed to hear some one reasonin' 'bout it to me every time I thought of it.

"What would be the trouble?" the voice seemed to say. 'Isn't there always enough to eat for one more, and couldn't a child take care of itself?'

"Then one night I had a dreadful dream of somthin' horrible, I couldn't tell what, a-happenin' to my baby. So when my girl Sally, the one there with the checkered apron, came to me the day they was to come' and asked me to jest go down to the depot to see 'em come in, I went.

"What a sight it was, mister! Enough to make any mother's heart ache! Such a lot of half-starved, sick-lookin' children!

"Well, folks kept a-taken 'em away in wagons till there was jest one poor little boy left. Nobody seemed to be lookin' for him. He 'peared so forsaken, I declare for it, I went right up to him, and says I, 'Do you want to go home with me?' not knowin' what I was a-doin', only wantin' to see a happy look come into the poor little face.

"Oh, yes, ma'am!" he said so quick. And Sally, she ketched him by the hand, and pulled him into the wagon, a-talkin' 'bout huckleberryin' and all the fun they'd have. Up comes the minister, jest as we was startin' home, a-smilin' his knowin' smile, and says he, 'A blessing comes with him.'

"And it did come from the very first. Somehow things never did run smother in haying-time. I never remember a year before when, for some reason or other, some of the hands didn't leave us jest in the heaviest part of it, but that summer we had help enough right through, and not a load of hay got wet. Then Tim was a great help, too, for he jest took the baby and kept her away from me most of the time. It was wonderful how he could quiet that child.

"One day I had a big washin' to do, and I gave the baby to Tim, and says I, 'She's fussy to day, its so dreadful hot. Take her anywhere you want to, only mind ye don't let her get hurt.'

"After a while I went out to get a breath of air and see what was goin' on. I can see him now, just as he lay there under that tree."

Here the good woman paused to wipe her eyes.

"The baby was a cooin' away, and Tim he was a-lookin' way up into the sky, and I heard him say, 'My Father,' just as plain as could be. I knew he was a-thinkin' of what the minister said to him 'bout his 'Father in Heaven.'

"When he saw me he said, 'O ma'am, I wish I could jest lie here forever.' Sally, she looked up from her doll and laughed. Somehow I couldn't say anything, but went back to my tub with a queer feeling that he was goin' to have his wish. I hadn't been there two minutes 'for Sally rushed in, crying, 'Mamma, mamma! Mad dog!'

"Scared as I was, I thought first of John," nodding toward her husband, "and, as I rushed out, I remembered to ketch the dinner horn off the nail. When I got 'round to the yard I saw such a sight as nearly overpowered me, but I did blow that horn like to raise the dead.

"Tim had snatched the old shawl the baby was on and had thrown it over the dog's head, and somehow in the scuffle got it wound 'round so he couldn't bite nor get away. There he was, as the dog jumped and jerked, a holdin' on with all his might, and screaming, 'most out of breath, 'Take the baby! Take the baby!'

"I grabbed the child, and I believe I threw her into the window; then I keched a broom and ran to help Tim.

"I jest had one glimpse of his white face and set teeth, when John came like a shot across the yard with a pitchfork.

"I didn't know any more till I came to out there on the grass. I had jest fainted clear away from it all. John, he laughs at me, and says I always get rid of trouble that way, but I can't nowadays help it."

"It's a very easy way out of it," said the farmer, with a laugh. "Tom came running in the other day with his finger half cut off, and she jest lay down easy-like till it was all fixed up, then she opened her eyes and asked, 'What's the matter?'"

"Well, I never felt so bad about it as I did then, when poor Tim was a-battlin' for his life. When I came to I cried with my first breath, 'Where's Tim?'

"Here I am, ma'am," he said, in a cheery voice. But oh! he looked so white and weak, leaning back agin the tree, that I jest broke down and cried like a baby, and for the first time I hugged and kissed him like my own child."

Here the good woman broke down, unmindful that she had left Ned and me in suspense as to what really happened.

"Did the little fellow get hurt?" asked Ned.

"Not a scratch," said the farmer, with a look of disgust toward his wife. "Ye see,

I was close by on a load of hay, and when I heard that awful screech on the horn I knew something was up. I suspected 'twas tramps, and I jest grabbed my fork and jumped. It didn't take two minutes to get all the harm out of that cur. 'Twas a small dog, and Tim had held on with all his might, but his strength was about used up.

"Now, sir, I never give no credit to miracles afore, but I said 'twas a miracle that he thought of the only one way to save the baby, or himself even, for he had no time to run, the dog came up so sudden."

"The minister said it was all Providence," resumed the woman, smoothing out her apron, "and a part of our blessing for taking Tim."

"After that we couldn't let him go back to the city, but he never seemed to gain much in strength. Some days he would be bright, and then again he would lie for hours out there, weak and listless. In the early fall he took a kind of slow fever, and, though we did all we could for him, he never rallied. The doctor said it was all owin' to his starvin' so long in the city.

Jest afore he died he sent word to his mission teacher that he knew her words were true. He had seen the birds and flowers like the verses she taught, and knew the Father would take care of him.

"So we buried him right there where he used to want to lie. I told John if anything can keep us from being mean and selfish, and make us willin' to help others, it will be the sight of Tim's grave. For his sake we always take in summer two or three city children, though we've never found another Tim. But we always feel repaid for our trouble."

The shower had passed; the sun was shining. We went on our way past the little flower-decked grave, with no feelings of vanity or thoughts of the triumph at the big hotel.—Maria Upham Drake in the Youth's Companion.

Some Time.

Some time in the great hereafter,
Which with hope we're looking to;
Which is filled with joy and laughter,
And with wealth for me and you,
Some time in the subsequently,
When our friends shall all be true,
When the world shall use us gently,
There's a board bill coming due.

—Minneapolis Times.

My Brother and I.

I was many years older than my brother, being a young man seeking my fortune when he was born.

To my parents, in the October of their lives, he was a gift of joy and comfort; to me he was always my little brother. As with tender hands I nursed him and hushed him to sleep feeling his soft tiny face close to mine, I had more of a father's than a brother's love for him.

The years flew by and I ever had a tender interest in his studies, with the hope for him of a bright and useful life.

The child, always delicate, grew to manhood and set to work to win his fortune and a name. But although watched by a loving mother, guided and guarded, with all the rough places made smooth by kindness and affection, he did not grow strong. And at last when love could no longer conceal the fact of weakness and disease, we knew a change must be made, a better softer climate must be found. Then my brother, light of heart and full of hope, made ready for the journey to a land where surely health and strength would be found. So over the plains, across the rivers, through the mountains happy and glad he traveled. For through the day the sun shone, lighting valley and hill, and its bright rays sent the warm blood coursing through his veins and brought him new life. At night, the stars, brilliant and bright, filled the sky; the moon, white and clear shed her radiant light, and like a tender mother kept watch and guard, lovingly wooing him to sleep.

"Oh! my brother, I am full of grief and pain, that strength wast not given thee that thou mightst have fulfilled the promise of thy youth."

The journey, which meant so much to him, was at last ended; and it seemed as if his hopes were to be realized, for he grew stronger and became able to go about his work. But the strength did not last; cheerfulness and hope were changed to longing and vain regret. So the old year, with all its pain, with all its trouble, passed away, and a new year came full of promise and hope, but in the dawn of its birth my brother fell asleep. Just as the sun arose on a new day, the mantle of pain and weariness fell from his shoulders, and he said not good night, but in a brighter clime—good morning. I rejoice in the midst of my sorrow, for in that land "There shall be no night, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, former things are passed away."

Over the wires came the words that would bring pain to all our hearts. And I, far away, thought of the white haired father and mother as they grieved over the loss of their youngest, dearest and best beloved. No tears but those of joy had ever been shed over the one who had lain down to rest in a strange land. Oh! my brother, mine now as in thy childhood's days, thy mother could not be with thee to hush thee to sleep, but I will take thee to her that thy rest may be sweet and undisturbed.

With the help of a faithful friend, another journey was made. Through the mountains, across the plains, and over the rivers we came. Through the day the sun shone as brightly as on that other journey; lovingly the bright rays rested on the narrow bed where my brother slept, but they brought no warmth to the cold limbs. At night, the stars came out in all their beauty, and the mellow light of the moon lay in caressing folds about my brother's couch; but he heeded not. Peacefully he slumbered, no earthly heat or light would ever have power over him again.

Full of grief, sick in mind and body the warmth and light of the sun tortured me in my sorrow; the beauty of the moonlight made me lonely and homesick. The long hours of the days and nights at last wore away, and our journey was done. I had brought my brother back to his home.

Our family was once again gathered together. But there was one who was given the place of honor, one to whom all did homage. But he was silent, his voice would never again be heard in friendly council. He had nothing to tell of his journey, nothing to tell of his wanderings in distant lands.

There were tears and sorrow and pain; and yet there was comfort, for the face we looked upon was full of rest and peace. There were words of sympathy, there were songs, there were prayers, there was the benediction, there was the loved form hidden from sight—then—there was the empty and desolate home.

But after a time the sharp pain will leave our aching hearts when we come to know that "He is not dead, the child of our affection,

But gone unto that school

Where he no longer needs our poor protection,

And Christ himself doth rule."

WEVIE.

Charity Begins at Home.

She went 'round and asked subscriptions

For the heathen black Egyptians

And the Terra del Fuegians,

She did.

For the tribes 'round Athabasca,

And the men of Madagascar,

And the poor souls of Alaska,

So she did.

She longed, she said, to buy

Jelly cake and jam and pie,

For the anthropophagi,

So she did.

And she loved the cold Norwegian,

And the poor half-melted Feejian,

And the dear Malacca Islander!

She did.

She sent the red tomato

To the tribes beyond the equator,

But her husband ate potato,

So he did.

The poor, helpless, hopeless thing,

(My voice falters as I sing)

Tied his clothes up with a string;

Yes, he did.

—Fun.

What She Can Do.

What can a helpless female do?

* * * * *

Can live in a room with an invalid cousin,

Or sew shop shirts for a dollar a dozen,

Or please some man by looking sweet,

Or please him by giving him things to eat,

Or please him by asking much advice,

And thinking whatever he does is nice,

Visit the poor under his supervision;

Doctor the sick who can't pay a physician;

Save men's time by doing their praying,

And other odd jobs there's no present pay in.

—Journal of Woman's Work.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Conductor's wives do not live for themselves alone. They live for the good of others as well as themselves. Every one has their duties to perform, the rich as well as the poor. To some, life is pleasure, to others suffering. But the best do not live for self enjoyment, or even for fame. Their strongest motive power, is hopeful useful work. In every good cause we often connect the idea of duty, with the soldier's trust. We remember the Pagan sentinel at Pompeii, found dead at his post during the burial of the city by the ashes of Vesuvius, some eighteen hundred years ago. This was the true soldier. While others fled, he stood to his post. It was his duty. Our duty is done in secret, and without sight of man. There, it does its work, devotedly and nobly. It does not follow the route of worldly wise morality. It does not advertise itself, it adopts a large creed and a loftier code.

Many of these duties are performed privately. Our public life may be well known. But in private there is that which no one sees. If we can only make ourselves and others, a little better, holier and nobler, we have, perhaps, done the most that we could do. The joys that come to us in this world, are but to strengthen us for some greater labor, that is to succeed what has already been done.

We have, also, something to learn from the noble Greeks as to the virtue of duty. Socrates is considered by some as the founder of Greek philosophy. He was born at Athens, 168 years before Christ. He received the best education that an Athenian could obtain.

Plato, has embalmed the memory of his actions, wrongs and death.

I will say to all wives: live so, for no good thing is ever lost. Nothing dies, not even life, which gives up one form, only to assume another. No good action, no good example dies, it lives forever in our race. While the frame moulders and disappears, the deed leaves an indelible stamp.

The wives of strong, good wills. There are a larger number who have very weak wills, or no wills at all. They are the passive recipients of impressions, which, however, take no hold of them, they seem neither to go forward nor backward, any will can govern theirs. Such persons constitute the mass of society everywhere. The careless, the passive, the submissive, the feeble and indifferent.

It has been said and written scores of times says Miss Nightingale: "that every woman makes a good nurse." But how came it that she devoted herself to so trying and disagreeable an occupation? She was an accomplished young lady, possessing abundant means. She was happy at home, a general favorite, and the centre of an admiring circle. Simply from a feeling of love and duty.

In previous works, we have endeavored to show forth the great virtues of a good example. It is among the most priceless of all things, to set the best example in our power; it is one of our highest responsibilities. Example teaches better than precept. It is the best mold of the characters of men and women. The best and bravest of wives may have moments of doubt and weakness, they may feel the pillars of their faith shaking under them, but if they are the best and bravest, they rise again to first principles. We must believe that the universe is wisely ordered, and that every wife must conform to the order which she cannot change. That whatever the Deity has done is good. That all wives are our sisters, and that we must try to make them better, even those who would not do otherwise. To act rightly then, is the safety valve of our moral nature. The greatest of difficulties often lie where we are not looking for them. When painful events occur, they are perhaps sent only to try and prove us. If we stand firm in our hours of trial, the firmness gives serenity to the mind.

I have often thought of what that dear good woman, Mrs. Vancleave, of Minneapolis, said in a lecture given at Milbank, Dakota, some time ago. She said: "dear sisters, as this may be the last time you may hear me, I will bid you all good bye. I am getting so weary of my journey here, that I some times wish for mother to take me up in her arms and rock me to sleep."

I would say to all wives of conductors: while our husbands are battling with difficulties on the road, and tired and weary of their life's journey on the rail, let us give them every home comfort and sunshine there is, to brighten and cheer them while at home. Knowing that they give their time and life for our comfort and happiness, let us do our duty kindly and nobly.

Wife of conductor W. S. KEENEY.

Ortonville, Minnesota.

Editor Railway Conductor:

How sorry it made us feel to read Brother Severance's letter against the Christian Sabbath. He surely must have forgotten how good God is to give us six days out of seven. Railroad men as a class are too good at heart, to want to rob God. I know that he did not think what the Christian Sabbath has done for us to ever condemn it. Railroad men if not compelled to work on the Sabbath would soon regard it as their wives do, who are trying to lead Christian lives. How, we that are trying to serve the Lord will hail the day when the one, who is all the world to us, can go with us, and worship with us. How many Christian wives all over the land, echo my word. We want to feel certain when our husbands are snatched from us without a moment's warning, that they are safe with Jesus. One of the saddest things I ever tried to do, was to try to comfort a Christian wife, whose husband, a conductor, was almost instantly killed. She loved him so, that the uncertainty of not meeting him in the "great beyond" almost crazed her. I comforted her with the thought, that at the last moment of consciousness he called upon the Lord, and the dear Savior in His tender mercy heard him. What a power for God railroad men would be, if they would band together for Christ. I have never yet heard of a Christian man being discharged. God helps those who rely on him. When amidst great danger, dear Brother's, who can help but the dear Heavenly Father, whom you do not delight to honor. What pleasant remembrances of the Conductor's excursion to Denver and Salt Lake City last May. Not being well, the railroad men and ladies vied with each other to wait on me. How kind they were, and how good God was to us all. Not an accident or incident of any kind to mar our pleasure, and how did we show our gratitude to the "author of all good." We started on our journey on the Sabbath; many of us spent the next Sabbath seeing the sights of Salt Lake City, forgetting that "God blessed the Sabbath day and sanctified it," Gen. 2-3; and also these words from God's own lips: "Ye shall keep my Sabbath and reverence my sanctuary," Lev. 19-30.

A CONDUCTOR'S WIFE.

A Girl Machinist.

Miss Nellie Patterson, one of the prettiest girls in the village of Mount Carmel, says a Connecticut paper, has just completed a four year's apprenticeship to the machinist's trade. To-day she is working at her lathe and vise in the factory of the Mount Carmel Belt company, and there isn't a mechanic in the whole shop who can do a better job or in less time than the fair young workwoman. Four years ago, when Miss Nelly began to think of the means whereby she must earn her living, she looked over the whole field of woman's work. Among the trades or occupations which the pushing women of this country have made their own, there was none she especially liked. She was a bright girl, with a great deal of Yankee cleverness, and considerable ingenuity and inventiveness. The remark was made to a friend that she was so fond of inventions she ought to become a machinist. The seed thus idly sown took root, and she applied for a place as an apprentice. For the past four years she has worked faithfully, and a few days ago her time expired, and she is now a full-fledged machinist. She is able to block up a piece of work on the planer, or turn up an arbor on the lathe. She uses the drill or handles the file as well as any man in the shop. Her specialty, however, is tool-making, and to this she proposes to devote herself. She can also draw plans, figure out dimensions, and from the working drawings she can make anything. She is not afraid of the grease and grime of the shop, and her beauty is not in the least marred by a long swipe of dirt across her dimpled cheek, or a spot of oil on her nose. Her hands are not as white as those of some of her sisters, but they are by no means large, though they are very strong. She is a great favorite with her fellow-workmen, and is the pride of the little country village.—Springfield Republican.

Useful and Suggestive.

Table talk advises keeping out of the frying-pan and trusting to the broiler.

A good cure for indigestion—go without eating as long as possible without serious inconvenience.

To cure quinsy—Use boiled beets, sliced and applied hot. As pieces cool, remove and burn them up, and replace by fresh, hot ones.

Most persons drink too much and too fast. A small quantity of water sipped slowly satisfies thirst as well as a pailful swallowed at a draught.

Use great care in serving food for the table, as the smallest spatter of grease or gravy changes the appearance and spoils an otherwise pretty dish.

If a dish of coal ashes, which have been sifted through a wire sieve, is always kept in a convenient place in the kitchen, the labor-saving uses it can be put to are almost numberless.

A London medical man says: "Be careful in your dealings with horseradish. It irritates the stomach far more than spice, and an overdose will bring on an unpleasant sensation for days."

The common elder bush is useful for blossoms and berries, and the leaves keep away insects. Branches put in plum trees save the crop of fruit, and leaves scattered over squashes, cucumbers, etc., keep them free from pests.

The shorter the time between the picking of a vegetable and the eating of it the better the flavor. This applies most particularly to Lima beans and sweet corn. It is much the same with an egg. Eat one five minutes after it is laid and see!

The best way to clean out lead pipes without the expensive aid of the plumber is to pour a strong solution of concentrated lye down them. The lye will dissolve the hair, lint, indeed all animal and most vegetable matter, and so open the pipes.

Balsam of honey.—A cosmetic for the face and to remove freckles. Best pale honey, four ounces; glycerine, one ounce; mix by gentle heat and when cold add of rectified spirits one fluid ounce; essence of amber, six drops. Bottle for use.—The Home.

A Swedish servant maid, finding that her mistress was troubled with sleeplessness, told her of a practice of the people of her country who are similarly afflicted. It was to take a napkin, dip it in ice cold water, wringing slightly, and lay it across her eyes. The plan was followed, and it worked like a charm.

Rice jelly.—Mix enough water to two heaping teaspoonfuls of rice flour to make a thin paste; then add a coffee cupful of boiling water. Sweeten to taste with loaf sugar. Boil it until it is transparent. Flavor it by boiling with it a stick of cinnamon if the jelly is intended for a patient afflicted with summer-complaint; or add, instead, several drops of lemon juice if intended for a patient with fever. Mold it.—Practical Cook.

The care of the finger nails should not be neglected. It will not take long before a child will feel as conscious as a grown person of unclean nails. These trifles show the difference between the child of thoughtful parents, who think of all the good they can do their children, and the careless parents who think it is too much bother and that the children will learn these things for themselves when they go out in society.—The Housewife.

In putting up grape juice, catsups or any thing of the kind which is to keep in an unfermented condition, remember two things. Have the liquid boiling hot and fill the bottles full. Of course the cork displaces some of the liquid. Be sure the corks are sound and air-tight. When the liquid cools, it will contract leaving a small space between it and the cork. It is a safe precaution to dip the corks in some kind of wax.—Rural New Yorker.

Creamed tomatoes.—Peel some small tomatoes and fry them whole in butter, turning them first on one side and then on the other. Then dredge them nicely with flour and add a cupful of cream to the butter that is in the frying-pan. Season with salt and just a pinch of curry powder, if the latter is liked. Baste the tomatoes with the butter and cream until the sauce thickens and is sufficiently cooked, so it will not have a raw taste. The flour dredged over the tomatoes prevents the cream or milk from curdling.—New York World.

Eligy.

WRITTEN IN A POOL ROOM.

The whistle sounds, the men's day's work is o'er,
They wend their weary way toward their homes;
They stop, then gather near and pass the door,
The balls are tossed, the game of pool begun.

Now shines the light upon our dazzled sight;
Through all the room the motly crowds are seen.
The putrid fumes of smoke bedims the light,
And blasphemy is joined to words obscene.

The clank of balls, as round the board they fly,
Impelled by cues in hands of so-called men
And youths, whose ribald language would imply,
That they were hardened in the ways of sin.

Beneath the brilliant light's seductive glare,
Where vulgar jests are couched in every shape,
How many souls are formed and fixed to share,
The fate that none like them can e'er escape.

Impatient calls the the players to the boy,
To "ring them up!" or raps upon the floor;
Cursing his tardiness, and words employ
That scorch and burn the soul's most inmost core.

The foaming beer and sparkling wine they quaff,
The scene grows wild and weird with times advance.
The jeering boast, the coarse and boisterous laugh,
All join to gain perdition's cause enhance.

The liquid poison permeates the brain,
Excitement reigns and recklessness is ripe,
And soul and body reels beneath the strain
Of wild debauchery and dubious strife.

For some, a mother's anxious watch is kept;
A child or children wait their sire's return.
Some fond wife listens for the well known step,
With nameless fears that cause her heart to burn.

Those oft keep watch through all the weary night,
With hearts as sad as if the sombre folds
Of death's drear funeral pall obscured from sight,
The form that all their hopes most cherished holds.

O, glittering road! along whose tempting way
So many pass and ne'er their steps retrace,
That ends abruptly in that fiery bay,
That harbors souls that die in sin's embrace.

O! vaulted grave of animated souls,
Hope's brightest gems lie buried in thy walls;
What lights of genius fade from off the rolls,
Extinguished by the vice that fill thy halls.

Unconsciously they sink into their graves,
Not the eternal grave of peace, 'tis true,
But that dark labyrinth of winding caves,
That overwhelms the soul in passing through.

Oh! woman, act in all thy virtuous might,
Reach out thy hand, they may be saved;
I beg you, by your love for what is right,
No man with life is totally depraved.

LOOKOUT.

Chattanooga, March 10th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

In your editorial in issue of January 15th, you called attention to the probability of the Grand Division, at Rochester, being called upon to vote upon the question of "Biennial Sessions," and referring incidentally to the unwieldy nature of the Grand Division as at present composed, containing nearly 300 members, and believing with Bro. Daniels and yourself, that something must be done to facilitate the business of the Order, as well as to reduce the amount of transportation now required to enable the Grand Division to meet, I beg leave to offer the following, from which abler minds may possibly evolve a solution:

I would divide the Order into districts—having due regard for geographical proximity and membership rolls—of which the following may serve as samples:

District No. 1.—The states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and Province of Quebec.

District No. 2.—The states of New York, Ohio and Province of Ontario.

Each district to have its own Grand Division, the membership of which should be on the same basis as the present Grand Divisions are formed, provision being made for equable representation as regarding to number of members in a division.

The legislation and general business of the Order to be performed by a Board of Control, or whatever name might be given such a body, composed as follows:

The District Grand Chief Conductors, and one member for every seven hundred members of the Order in any district. Assuming that we should not have any more than twelve districts, this Board of Control would never reach fifty in point of numbers, and yet be so constituted as to give voice to the opinions of any and all localities. The board being limited in numbers, and meeting only for business, would always meet at the headquarters of the Order, where the books and archives of the Order being always on hand, they could intelligently act at all times and not be obliged to depend on memory for matters of record. The functions now performed by the Grand Chief Conductor, or such of them as should be deemed appropriate to be vested in the chairman of the Board of Control, which office would necessarily continue to be a salaried one.

All powers not delegated to the Board of Control to remain with the District Grand Divisions, who would, as a matter of course, take up and act upon and adjust all local matters and grievances.

Districts could use their own discretion in the matter of having the District Grand Chief Conductor in their district devote his entire time to their service or otherwise.

I shall not attempt to elaborate this plan, believing that enough has been written to give an idea of what is intended, viz: a general outline.

The advantages of this system are readily manifest, and too manifold for enumeration in this article.

I am aware that this would mean a re-organization of our governing system, and that many may object to it on that account, but inherent defects require radical remedies to effect a cure.

Biennial sessions without reducing the volume of representation, would be a make-shift, not a remedy.

As at present organized, parts of the country are so seldom visited by the Grand Officers, that but few know them, and it is a physical impossibility for them to visit all the different divisions on their meeting days, in the same year.

Hoping that this may at least lead to a "full and free discussion" of this matter, and that other plans may be advanced for consideration,

I am respectfully,

CHARLES D. BAKER.

Division 122.

PITTSBURG, Pa., March 12, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I am going to impose on your good nature for a short time and give you my views on a subject which I know all members of the O. R. C. are interested in, and that is, "the conductor's insurance," which, I notice some one says, "it costs only ten cents a day." Well I know that it looks small, looking at it in that proportion, but it amounts to $36.50 per year, and one has to pay for twenty-five hundred death rate. Now, why not make it one of the obligations when a person becomes a member of the O. R. C. to make him a member of the insurance? I notice letters from different brothers in all parts of this country, Canada and Mexico, inquiring why more members do not join the insurance department. I know members who are unable to belong to that department, as the standard of qualifications is entirely too high for most of the profession.

I am a member of the O. R. C. Insurance department, and in 1889 paid three dollars for assessment, and two assessments, four dollars per assessment, and in the Journal there is an advertisement at the rate of seven cents a day, and twenty-five dollars weekly indemnity for disability. Why cannot our Order have something of the same, and not have us go outside to get this protection, for I think a man that will not protect himself and family, or parents, when he is able to do so (and there are none of the Brothers, but are able to do so, if he will just try saving a little of his money after pay-day) has very little regard for those dependent on him.

The Standard of Detroit, insures one for $30.00 per year, on $5,000.00 at death; and $25.00 for weekly indemnity, or for $3,000.00 at a cost of $18 and $15.00 indemnity per week. Quite a difference, don't you think so Brothers, in having a weekly income and being left to the cold charity of the world. I should think if other insurance companies can do so much, we should be able to do something among ourselves in next Grand Division.

There has been a great deal written by different Brothers at different times, as to "what good the Order was to them." Put the question in Division myself, and I was answered by one of the oldest members, "that it was only a social gathering." Well, Brothers, if our Order is nothing more to us than that, I think it is about time for us to shut up shop, and spend our time and money more profitably, but as there has been so much written at different times about this, I will not take up any more space with it, as I think we have other matters which are much more important. The conductor's pay, for instance is a very important subject, and one which the Order has not kept up to the times with, but has let drag for years back. As the learned Judge Field says in his views in the Ross vs. C. M. & St. P. R'y, that—"A conductor having the entire control and management of a train, occupies a very different position than any other employe on the train. He is and should be treated as the personal representative of the company he is employed by, and if he is responsible for subordinate servants, he should be paid better for that responsibility, and not get less than those he is held responsible for, and I think this is the first thing that should be looked after by delegates at the Rochester meeting.

Hoping I have not taken up too much of your valuable time I remain,

Yours in P. F.,

GEO. C. HURST.

Brother Editor:

I have a few thoughts I wish to give expression to at this time, and as it is drawing to the time, when our representatives will convene in annual session, I would like to go on record, as I will not be present, or at least have no voice in the next Grand Division.

In the first place, I have had the fact pressed home to me, that there is considerable dissatisfaction among members of the Order, that it is not accomplishing for its members as much as other, and similar orders do for their members. I also found that this dissatisfaction is largely among a class of our membership, who rarely or never, attend a Division meeting. In this one fact of non attendance, I believe is the source of one-half the trouble. In my own Division, for instance, with about 170 members, the average attendance is about 25, and those the same old faces we see from one year's end to another. How is it possible to gain proper recognition if those most interested will not even come and assist in preparing the matters for adjudication. Then, again, we will say that everything is in readiness for presentation. The parties most interested will remain in the rear, and pushing some other fellow on the back, say, "Oh, you go." Then, when the last resort comes, and the Grand Officers are called into the matter, what kind of support do they receive? At the best, only half-hearted, or in some cases none at all. In this fact I believe lies the other half of non-success in our endeavors. Why is it that we go to Grand Division and elect officers to transact our business, and go right home, and speak to, and act towards them as if they were our deadliest foes? I firmly believe that if our membership would resolve to give one year of honest trial, to an attendance by every member, of every meeting of his Division at which he could be present, and be a hearty whole-souled support of our Grand Officers, in carrying out the orders of the Grand Division and their efforts in behalf of individual members, and of those cases affecting whole systems, that one year by its exceptional record of success, would at once commend itself to every thoughtful mind. Another thing, as a rule we go into an adjustment of differences anticipating defeat. If we firmly believe our cause is just and right, and go into the matter, with the determination to overcome every obstacle, we are half way on the road to success. Any alteration of the terms of our constitution or ritual, or deviation from the traditions of our Order, will not better the situation one particle, as long as the present apathy of our members exist, and I trust that no such action may be taken at Rochester, as is hinted at in a recent communication from one of our Grand Officers. The day of strikes is past, public sentiment is strongly opposed to that method of arbitration, and without the moral and material support of the public, in such a crisis, failure would be assured from the start. Believe me, Brothers, the Railway Officers of this day and age are not blind to their own interests, and that of the corporations they represent. Neither are they ignorant of the duties and responsibilities required of you, and if you desire a conference at any time, and go to them as men and gentlemen, I feel free to say that you will be met upon the same platform, and your grievances adjusted upon an equitable basis.

Another matter upon which I desire to be on record, is the matter of a "reserve fund" in our insurance department. Brothers work and vote for the adoption of this feature. You are not building for a day. You are securing for yourselves and families absolute safety, and building a monument for yourselves that will command the admiration and respect of future generations of conductors. I believe I speak truly, when I say that this is all that is lacking to make our Benefit Department perfect. I could, if space permitted, furnish evidence to sustain my views, but undoubtedly the Grand Division will be fully advised by many members, competent to demonstrate its necessity. One other important matter let me urge upon my Brothers, the necessity of placing the proposition of the citizens of Sioux City in a condition to be accepted. So that before the year, when all the world will be visitors to the mercantile metropolis of the United States "Chicago," we will be in a position to invite those same visitors to continue their journey a little farther and inspect the monument reared by the railway conductors of America. The good people of this whole country believe in us, and stand ready by moral and material support to assist us in all our laudable and lawful undertakings. Why, then, Brothers, will we not believe in ourselves, and by word and deed assume the position conceded to us by every one, except a few discontented one's within our own ranks.

Brothers, I may not have another opportunity to say more, before you meet again in annual session. Take heed what you do, and do not mar the grand record of the past. Be conservative in all you do, and may the result of your labors, tend to strengthen the structure already reared.

Fraternally yours in P. F.,

WM. KILPATRICK.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., March 17, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

I am pleased to see the numerous letters in our valuable album of information, from members of the Order in various parts of this great country, on subjects of great interest to every member of our noble Order. It shows us that members are more interested in the good of the Order than they ever have been before.

It causes members to be more earnest readers of the CONDUCTOR, giving them new ideas, that are of interest to one and all. The article that has taken most of my spare time to-day, is from Bro. Howard Leach in March 15. It has called my attention to several others, bearing on the same subject, and calls for argument which I trust will settle forever the idea of federation.

If a federation of firemen and engineers will cause the divisions of their orders the great expense of supporting an army of men out of employment for one year, and finally force these men who had good situations at a good salary, to shovel in the streets, run stationary engines at one third the salary they received before the federation, or do anything they can find to do to support their families; do we want federation? I say no.

You may say if the conductors and brakemen had been with them, the result would have been different, but again I say no. Only a very few conductors took positions as engineers, and if an extensive railway system can be supplied with engineers and firemen in so short a time, they certainly would have no trouble in filling all the vacancies on the trains, but I hear a voice say: if we had a federation of all trainmen, we would not allow men to take our places, but that would be too barbarous. When great nations settle their differences by arbitration, we do not need to have a war to settle little differences between us and our employers. You ask what has the Order of Railway Conductors done for its members. It has raised the standard of conductors, morally, physically, financially, mentally and socially, and if we live up to its teachings and principles, we will need no better federation than a federation of conductors bound together by the ties of Perpetual Friendship. Let us be men, honest, sober, industrious and reliable, having the interest of our employers at heart, and we can depend upon getting anything we ask for, within the bounds of reason. Railway officials want honest, reliable men, and they are willing to pay them a good salary when they can depend upon them. Does it not give you great pleasure to know you are a member of the Order in which the noted cities of Iowa took such a great interest at our last convention?

I tell you when Sioux City will give $75,000 for the location of our Grand Division building in their great growing city, and sell us a lot on the corner of two principal streets for $40,000, that is now worth $70,000, on which to erect the same, we have great reason to feel proud of our Order. I know of no other way that will bring about a more immediate recognition of our just demands than for every member of the Order to be diligent, prudent, temperate and discreet.

Hoping a careful perusal of the pages of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, the timely visits of our Grand Officers, and the great prosperity of our glorious Order (which I think is second to none on the face of the earth, in benefits to its members when they are governed by its principles) will remove entirely the feeling of discontent, and that all members will work together to win the favor and respect of the general public, and especially of railway officials.

I remain, very truly yours in P. F.,

N. E. RETALLICK.

HOPE, Idaho Ter., March 16, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

I have read the article written by Brother W. V. Stafford in the Feb. 1st number of the CONDUCTOR, in regard to having a clearly defined standing on a formal and positive recognition. It seems to me, that now is the time to take steps to secure such a recognition and understanding with the various managements throughout the land, as will secure us the right to offer ourselves when out of employment, to officials, as conductors and not as brakemen—as our Brother says, no matter how long we may have broke, or what our experience as conductors, we have to go back to braking again when seeking employment in new localities. The Brother says, the argument may be advanced that there would be more kicking if he got a train to start out with, than there would if he went to braking and was then promoted. Let me give you my experience in this regard. Before coming into service with this (N. P.) Co., I was running a train on the C. St. P. & K. C. R'y, out of St.

Paul, and not being satisfied with my position, I resigned and sought employment with this company on this (Rocky Mountain) division. I went to then Assistant General Manager Ainslee, who gave me employment as a conductor and transportation out here. I came to Missoula and was given a train from the start. If there was any grumbling among the brakemen on account of my coming here and taking a train, I never heard any of it. While, after I had been here about three or four months and some of our O. R. C. men came here and went to braking, and after a few trips promoted, there was plenty of kicking by brakemen who had been here longer than they, but who had never been a conductor. And it is so now, when an old conductor is promoted after a short service as brakeman. Brother Stafford's illustration of the conductor and engineer who were discharged from the service of the same corporation, and were hired by the other same corporation, the engine man as engineer, and the conductor as a brakemen are very apt, and are in themselves sufficient argument for each division to instruct their delegate to the next meeting of the Grand Division to legislate for this purpose. Now, a word in regard to the biennial session of the Grand Division. I think as do a great many, and in fact all with whom I have talked upon this subject, that the present mode, annual sessions, will be far more satisfactory to the majority, than would the biennial sessions, for the simple fact, that under the present mode, each Division has their own representative who is familiar with the wants and needs of his own Division, while he probably has not the least idea in the world, what the Division nearest to him may want. While we admit the fact, that by dividing the country into districts, and sending a representative from each district twice a year we may reduce our expenses a very little. We cannot bring ourselves to see or believe, that it will give as good satisfaction as the present mode. We certainly are able to bear the expenses now, and hereafter, as well as heretofore. No; Brothers, keep the legislative mill grinding on, on the same old annual session plan with a representative from each Division. For I am certain you will be better satisfied for having done so. I have looked the CONDUCTOR'S for each month through carefully, to try and find a communication from some of the Brothers who are able to attend Division regularly, and are able to give you a statement of the progress of our little Division 243. Your humble servant is located on a run 150 miles from the nearest Division room, which is his own Division (Helena Div. 243.) Our Division is 300 miles long, so that when the first and third Sunday's come, should we be at the west end of our run, we will be 300 miles from our place of meeting. As we have a large family to care for, we do not feel as though we could lay off very often to attend Division. Hoping all the Brothers will treat my little article to a careful study, I will sign myself,

Yours in P. F.,

E. A. CRANDALL,

Helena Div. 243.

FARNHAM, Pq., March 18.

Editor Railway Conductor:

I respond cheerfully to the invitation of Brother Severance, which appeared in the journal of this month, to discuss the question of the sanctity of Sunday, and the running of trains on that day. I have read it over carefully, and I fail to find anything in it that would cause me to alter my opinion with regard to the sanctity of the Christian Sabbath. I believe the Sabbath day, aside from its religious aspect, is a great blessing to man and beast. Were it not for some arrangement of this kind, the condition of the working man and beast, would be pitiable indeed. In this idea I am supported by scientists, and by the best men the world ever produced, and I may say, it is acknowledged by all civilized nations, to be a wise provision for the benefit of mankind. With regard to the setting apart of the Sabbath as a day of rest, consequently a day of holy worship, it was not set apart by Constantine, but was observed long before Constantine was thought of, and can be proven by Christian and pagan testimony; the latter testimony I presume Brother Severance will not deny.

A large portion of the article in question, I consider illogical, and can have no bearing whatever on the case, consequently I pass it over.

Brother S. goes on to say, that nature goes on independent of the Sabbath day. I think it does not require a very keen perception to believe this when Brother S. states what is done in Berlin; he need not go farther than our own country to see what is done to secularize that day. Whatever Germany or any individual, or individuals do, does not make it right.

Brother S. I say, again, that "Sunday is any better or more holy than any other day is all gush." This is a bold statement to make in the face of so many millions of people who acknowledge the Christian faith. The few who think otherwise do not count for much, when compared with this vast multitude; and from the gist of Brother S. article, I think numbers count for something in deciding this all important question.

I agree with Brother S. and Col. Ingersoll, to make Sunday a day of joy and holy pleasure. I sincerely wish the Blair Sunday rest bill will become law, and I rejoice to know, that a similar bill is about to be introduced in the legislature of this county. If it should pass and become law, it will be received with great satisfaction by the 25,000 R. R. employees of Canada, as the majority of them feel that that day belongs to them.

Yours in P. F.,

F. G. MARTYN.

West Farnham Division No. 80.

W. P. Daniels, Esq., G. S. & T.:

I like the CONDUCTOR and think it much improved under its present management. Its pages show that the editors are not novices at their work. Well, Brothers, I have been railroading 27 years for one company—the B. & O. Was engineer 8 years and conductor 15. Was in fault for but one accident in all that time, and that while running a locomotive. I ran into a train by letting my train get start of me. Was never held off but once outside of that, and that was for detaining an express twenty minutes, while on rear end of train. This is a pretty good record, is it not, for over 27 years of railroading on mountains? I am 48 years old and have not got a scar to show from a railroad accident, although I have been in some bad ones.

G. H. B.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., March 13, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

I have received letters from Division No. 141, telling me that they have sent my transfer card to Sierra Nevada Division 195. Myself and wife are very thankful to them for the favors shown to me, and shall never forget them for their kindness, and sincerely hope that they may always be faithful and successful, and hope that I will meet with better luck in California than I did at Nodaway, Mo., on December the 1st, 1888, with Brother Hewett. I have better health than I had then.

They held no meeting here on last Sunday. I do hope that they will have one the next meeting day. With kindest regards to all,

Yours as ever in P. F.,

J. F. BRUCE.

1726 Sixth street.

Editor Railway Conductor:

At a meeting of Bellevue Division 134, there was unanimously elected a correspondent. The Brother was hushed up when he protested that he was not competent, and if he was, he was too modest, and if not too modest he did not have the time. The members replied; if not competent he should prepare himself by carrying on his person an encyclopedia. If too modest, that would be dissipated after coming in contact with the press.

As for not having time, he could find it, as there was "a time for everything." Now, Brother B., I ask in all fairness, was that fair? I think the Brother that received the lucrative and dazzling position thinks so too.

As I have not seen anything in the CONDUCTOR emanating from the pen of that sorely abused member, so in his inability, modesty or lack of time, I will try and tell you something of our division, and about some of its members.

This division, as you are aware, is situated in Bellevue, Ohio, about half way between Buffalo, N. Y. and Chicago, state of (World's Fair), on the line of N. Y. C. & St. L. R. R. (Nickel Plate), five hundred and twenty-three miles long, composed of two divisions and four districts—two districts to each division, under one general superintendent, Lewis Williams, and two division superintendents, A. W. Johnson, from Buffalo to Bellevue, and C. D. Gorham, from Bellevue to Chicago. They are gentlemen of practical experience, and have filled high positions before they were called to fill their present places. The minor offices are also filled by old and experienced men. Our chief train master, Henry Shaffer, and his assistant, Allen Mahlin, are in the eastern or first division; both are ex-conductors, and members of Division 134, O. R. C. Mr. Blair, chief train master on second division, is an old and trusted train despatcher, who for several years was chief train despatcher of the same division he is now train master of. Our chief yard masters are: Wm. Thompson, Buffalo, N. Y.; D. R. Miller; Conneaut, Ohio, members Division 145; August Murphy, Cleveland, Ohio; C. K. Dryden, Bellevue, (member of 134.) Samuel Gamble, Ft. Wayne, Ind., a gentleman I broke with, twenty-six years ago this winter, on passenger, long before we had any kind of air, except what we made ourselves, and you may be assured we furnished plenty of that. The gentleman at Stony Island, the terminus at Chicago, is R. H. Cherry, an O. R. C. man.

So you will see by the above, that the western roads do not have all the glory of O. R. C. members filling official positions. I know that you have Gen. Supts., Supts. of Divisions and other high officials who are members of the Order, but who knows what may turn up, for I tell you the members of the O. R. C. are not Micawbers, waiting for something to turn up. They are getting to the front, and the officials know, that when they have O. R. C. members in their employ, that they have been tried and served a probation of two years as a conductor, (before they are admitted into the Order) not only as practical men, but proven their characters as moral men. Under the circumstances is it any wonder, that they are trusted and advanced? Brother B., I will not tire you out this time, but in my next, I will give you the names of some of the members that are running trains, both passenger and freight.

Yours truly in P. F.,

TROM.

An important meeting was held last evening in the Knights of Pythias hall, on East Fifth street, when a new division of the Order of Railway Conductors was organized. Salida, Colorado Springs, Denver and Pueblo have divisions of this Order, but this is the first one established in the mountains since the big roads were built. The new lodge is known as Holy Cross Division No. 252, and is composed of some twenty-two Midland, Rio Grande and South Park conductors, who have division headquarters in Leadville.

The officers elected at last night's meeting were as follows:

Chief Conductor—R. C. Bowdish.

Assistant Chief Conductor—W. P. Dale,

Secretary and Treasurer—C. D. Robinson.

Senior Conductor—E. L. Dunn.

Junior Conductor—L. A. Singleton.

Inside Sentinel—W. Henderson.

Ooutside Sentinel—George Hewitt.

C. D. Robinson was elected representative to the meeting of the Grand Division in Rochester, New York, next May, and L. A. Singleton, alternate.

The visitors present were Grand Senior Conductor E. E. Clark of Ogden, Utah; Conductor Scott, of the Santa Fe road, Emporia, Kansas; Conductor Moran, of Colorado Springs, and Conductor Frank Scoville, of the Union Pacific, Denver.

It was decided to hold meetings at the present quarters of the Knights of Pythias, the first and third Sundays of each month, the hour of meeting the first Sunday being 1:30 p. m., and the third Sunday 7:30 p. m.

The Leadville Division starts out with most flattering prospects. Its present members include a number of Colorado's most prominent conductors, men who will undoubtedly make a success of the new division. The Order of Railway Conductors is one of the oldest in the country, and has a membership of over 15,000. That the Leadville Division will be a credit to the Order, there is not the least doubt, and many are the wishes for its prosperity.

WILMINGTON, Del., March 8, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Some time ago Division 224 elected a correspondent, and as he has not been heard from through the CONDUCTOR, I expect the Brothers will think he has left town. So I thought I would write a few lines.

Division No. 224 held its annual election Dec. 15th, and elected F. J. Baglan, C. C.; J. H. Warfield, A. C. C.; J. D. Phillips, S. C.; J. M. Young, J. C.; E. M. Dunn, I. S.; H. V. Easom, O. S.; Wilson Peirce, S. and T. and Delegate to Grand Division, and J. T. Dayfield, Alternate. The Brothers are well pleased with the officers, and we expect to add to our membership this year. We hope to take in a great many good men, as we have some in this locality.

There is not much new at this time except that Brother I. M. Cohee has been promoted to a through run to Washington, and is well pleased with the change, but not more so than is Brother C. E. Wyman, over the addition to his family, in the person of a fine son, and we hope the boy will do well.

Brother Emmerson has purchased a fine horse and carriage, and enjoys a ride in the country when at home.

The boys, with a few exceptions, like the CONDUCTOR, and like to read it, and think if all would read it they would like it better.

The Brothers of Division No. 224 are expecting to take a trip to Richmond, Va., March 23d, and are anticipating a good time. I hope to give the boys a more interesting letter next time.

Yours in P. F.,

J. T. P.

Pine Tree Division, No. 66, Conductors of New England Gather at Portland—Bouquets and Banquet.

PORTLAND, Me., March 16, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Two hundred brethren of the Order of Railway Conductors of New England, all handsome and well dressed in their best suits of clothes, came to Portland on special trains from Boston and Bangor to-day, and instituted Pine Tree Division, 66, which is the local branch of that well-known order.

The officers installed by Assistant Grand Chief C. H. Wilkins were as follows: Chief conductor, W. Sprague; assistant chief conductor, G. E. Whiting; secretary and treasurer, S. S. Cahill; senior conductor, M. F. Healey; junior conductor, F. L. Gardner; inside sentinel, G. P. Thomas; outside sentinel, C. M. Benjamin; delegate, S. S. Cahill.

A special train over the Eastern division of the Boston and Maine road, with Conductor Abner Silsbee in charge, left Boston at 8:30 o'clock with over 100 brethren, representing Boston, Providence, Hartford, New Haven, New London, and intermediate points.

At North Berwick the delegation was joined by a party of western division conductors, who were conveyed to that point on Conductor Walter Brown's special, which left Boston at 7:50. Despite the company on board, the train arrived here without being wrecked, where the visitors were met by a local delegation and given a ride to Knights of Pythias hall on Exchange street where the installation ceremonies were held. At 3:30 o'clock the business meeting was adjourned, and the visitors, accompanied by nearly 100 brethren from Bangor and eastern Maine, went to the union depot cafe, where, at 4 o'clock, an elaborate dinner was served. At the head of the table sat the following guests on the right and left of the president: William G. Davis, director Maine Central; J. B. Coyle, general manager Providence & Boston steamship line; Jonas Hamilton, division superintendent, and T. P. Shaw, paymaster of the Maine Central; John Heald, claim agent; William Allen civil engineer, and Foreman J. A. Pinkerton of the Maine Central, and D. Minish, master car builder of the Gd. T. Ry. Around the other tables were Supt. J. R. Hartwell of the Fitchburg railroad, Chief Train Despatcher E. A. Smith of the N. Y., P. & B.; Herbert Merritt of the B. & M.; H. H. Kinsley of the B. & A.; Augustus Colby of the B. & M.; G. F. Ingalls of the N. Y. & N. E.; G. F. Foye, station master of the Fitchburg depot, Boston; George Obids, chief train despatcher N. Y. & N. E.; C. F. Kennedy, train despatcher N. Y. & N. E.; John Foster of Waltham, the veteran conductor and hero of the Deerfield disaster; E. H. Bowditch, whose connection with the B. & M. goes back to 1852; R. E. Alden of the M. C.; Sam Lunt of the B. & M., George E. Mudget and Abner Silsbee of the "Flying Yankee." Representative Nat Winn of Portsmouth, and popular Charles H. Ferguson of the same line.

[Following are the names of others present, numbering 109 persons. Want of space forbids giving the names.—EDITOR.]

The after dinner exercises were opened by Chairman Sprague, who introduced as the first speaker, Assistant Grand Chief Wilkins, who was deluged with bouquets. He said:

"It was but a few years ago that five railroad conductors in a little western town organized the first branch of our Order, which now has over 16,000 members in North America. I think that we may congratulate ourselves upon the benefits in a social and financial way that have resulted from our organization. The influences that are exerted upon members, tend to raise the standard of the occupation, and the improvement that has been made in this direction for the past five years speaks eloquently for future prospects."

The speaker then paid a compliment to the local organization, and in closing was given three cheers.

Other informal remarks were made, and at 6 o'clock the Boston members left for home on a special train.

The dinner which was complimentary to Chief Wilkins, was a great success. An orchestra furnished music.

The names of the organizing members of the Division are: M. M. Tarr, L. W. Pollaster, Charles Hartshorn, L. D. Cobb, D. Conway, E. G. Chase, David Pratt and I. H. Healey. It is expected that in less than a month the organization will number 50 members. Regrets were expressed at the absence of General Manager Payson Tucker of the Maine Central, who was confined to his home by sickness, and Supt. D. W. Sanborn of the Boston & Maine, who was kept away on account of railroad business.

Much praise is due Messrs. Woodbury & Son, the proprietors of the cafe for the excellent management of the dinner and also to Mr. W. A. Campbell, the steward. The committee of arrangements at first gave orders for the accommodation of 100, but late yesterday changed their order to 200. It was short notice for twice the number that preparations were made for, but when over 300 were to be cared for it was almost out of the question. With 20 waiters, Mr. Woodbury did his best to supply all, and we are sure nobody went away hungry. At 6 o'clock, the Boston train carrying about 125 of the guests ran out of the depot amid the hurrahs of the crowd. The company left behind, soon departed, some returning to the hall where more business was to be transacted.

CONNEAUT, March 22d, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

DEAR SIR: I noticed in the CONDUCTOR of March 15th, the call on each and every division or its individual members (or Brother), to subscribe for stock in the building to be known as headquarters of the O. R. C.

It does seem to me, that if the Brothers of the many divisions would look at it in the light they should, or if they have any pride in the development or prosperity of same, they would exert themselves trying to raise the necessary amount to complete the proposed structure as a monument, to be gazed on by the passing public as a marker, establishing in their minds, the fact, of there being in existence an Order of Railway Conductors, founded on good principles, with backbone sufficient to stand up for their own interests, fighting it out on the line of honesty, uprightness and muscle, with the motto floating above: No strikes.

I am a Brother of Nickel Plate Division No. 145—which I am proud of; but I am sorry to number them with the many more, that do not look on the erection of the headquarter's building in the light that I think they should; considering it the most important move ever made by the Order, and I hope and pray for its success, giving for my reasons, that should it prove a failure, we would become the laughing stock of all the other Orders, looking at us and our doings through green glasses (cross-eyed at that).

I think an order with the membership we have, after making the public demonstration we have and then fail, should go in their hole, as did the Knownnothings, and draw the hole in after them.

Brothers, my motto is: Look up! Step up! Put up! or Shut up!

Hoping the above may find room with the scraps of the CONDUCTOR, and that the above motto may be adopted by all, I remain,

Yours in P. F.

E. P.

CLIFTON FORGE, Va., March 23, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

You remember I wrote you we would have a supper for the benefit of Division 184, February 26th, 27th and 28th, 1890. We realized two hundred dollars.

We elected a corresponding secretary at our last election of officers and he should write something for the CONDUCTOR, but we have failed to see a line penned by him. As we do not know what is the trouble with him, or why he has never written, some of us have decided to offer as a reward, a large water melon, in season, for any information as to what is the trouble with him that keeps him from filling his office. We know he does not have time to write in water melon season, not many widowers do in this section of country, they are a very industrious set of people.

GET THERE.

GALESBURG, Ill., March 25, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

I think between you and me,

I'll let you hear from Division 83.

And how are you of the fraternity? As far as I know, we are all well here. I presume there would be much to write about had I time to gather it in, but have not, and as I can get no help from the Brothers, must go it alone; but don't you think, Mr. Editor, when they have elected such a poor correspondent, they ought to club together and help him out, and so save the division from disgrace?

I noticed in your last, quite a sketch regarding Richard Love, better known in Galesburg, and on the C. B. & Q., as "Stinger." When Dick first landed in America, he "fetched up" at Buda, Ill.; a way station on the main line. He was quite a hunter, was often called Daniel Boone. At one time he caught a coon and trained it. The first time I saw Dick, he was exhibiting the coon, and the coon bit his finger; he will show you the scar from the bite now, if you would ask him. I hope he will not think I wish to give him away, so I will stop before I say too much about "Stinger."

Since writing you last, I am glad to say, that Brother E. S. Kimball has again come on deck—has a run from here to Quincy. We all say good and many thanks to the officers of the "Q" for the great kindness shown our worthy Brother E. S. K.

D. C. Kies is getting along very nicely, and will come out of his very painful injury much better than was feared at one time.

Has any one given you a notice of the foot race between Chas. Blum, Walter Leggett and J. L. Richardson; the latter better known in the G. A. R. as "the Goddess of Liberty." It will be a good deal of the human race, the average weight of each being 275 pounds. I think there will be considerable more blowing than running, or money either.

Brother Shell Ayers took the cake at the R. R. reception last Friday evening. He was one of the committee, had full rig and all sails flying. He is bound to "get there" whether on the "Eli" or not.

Brother T. C. Garrity is very near well again; has resumed his duties by taking his old run.

Wishing you all prosperity, I remain,

Yours in P. F.,

BROTHER J. K. HOWLAND.

LOGANSFORT, Ind., March 24, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

MY DEAR SIR AND BRO.: Since my last letter to you in which I made mention of our Superintendent, Chas. Watts, being promoted, the employes here, gave him a monster reception, and presented him with as fine a piano as they could secure (it cost, I believe, one thousand dollars), and on its being presented to him, by Judge N. O. Ross, he thanked the employes in a manner, that showed how much he appreciated the kindly feeling manifested by them. The reception was held at the rink, and notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the house was full, as were some of the people who attended the banquet—later.

The genial Comodore Barnett, was grand pusher on the floor, and the way he handled the crowd.

showed him to be a master hand at it. Of course every one is partial to their friends, and the Comodore is no exception, so his friends from Kouts, and other places on the Chicago division, were given seats just behind Mr. Watt's family.

Our worthy Secretary was the general director of everything that needed attention, and as he was with the movement from the start to finish, the successful carrying out of the project is due to him mostly.

After the reception the party adjourned to the Johnston Hotel, where a magnificent spread was laid, and—well I can not describe the rest as —

Yours in P. F.

L. M. D.

Logan Division No. 110.

SYRACUSE, March 23, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

The air we breathe is again free! No longer are we under the restraint placed about us by the projectors and originators of the scheme where by a valued friend, and honored member of this Order, Mr. H. T. Bolles, was given "time" to leave the place where for more than a decade he has made his home.

An ominous silence seemed to pervade that section of atmosphere, which enveloped the district in which he and the conspirators moved. The news became bruited about that one of the members of our Order had in a very jubilant, characteristic and emphatic manner, announced his decision to abandon and forswear all allegiance to his old home, and had elected to take up the threads of existence with all their various vicissitudes, in an adjacent town. His manner and the tone which characterized the announcement of his purpose, proved the germ from which was evolved the idea to retaliate, and teach the offender that he could not treat his many friends with impunity and absolute indifference, rupturing the ties of close communion, and in a measure severing the bonds of an intimate friendship, without an expression on the part of a few of his many friends whose names are legion. So for a few weeks it has been cautiously whispered about, that a plan had been formulated in the minds of a few leading spirits, whereby an estimate of the true esteem and high regard in which he is held could be properly manifested. Gradually the scheme became known, but all were enjoined to the strictest secrecy, however. "Don't breathe it to a soul," "keep quiet." "We'll fix him," etc., being the closing injunction invariably. All seemed to vie with one another in this direction, and so often were we cautioned and admonished, concerning the value of silence, that our respiratory organs became affected in no small degree. The 21st of March had been chosen for the day, or evening rather, on which the materialization of the scheme was to develop, that date being the forty-first anniversary of his birth. So as the afternoon of that memorable day deepened into the darkness, which a threatening sky made heavy and dense, the rumble of wheels and the tread of feet toward the residence of our subject began.

Each participant in the festivities of the occasion, which followed, was most kindly received by the wife and daughter, and every attention was given to the individual comfort of all.

Introductions followed the arrival of all guests, and an era of the most pronounced good feeling and joy prevailed. Reminiscences in which all were interested were indulged, affording a pleasure, rarely experienced by so large a number, collectively, there being nearly two hundred present.

Games, too, contributed their share to the general fund of amusement, and joy reigned supreme, lighting the countenances of all with a common happiness.

The hour of his coming soon became known, and as it drew near, the lights became subdued, general conversation was reduced to a low tone, and eager expectancy seized upon all. The conjectures expressed as to the effect of so large an assemblage upon him were many and various, not a few touching upon the ludicrous, and of course not one possessing the merit of close proximity to the actual.

As time lengthened and drew apart from that calculated upon for his arrival, anxiety began to manifest itself, possibilities and probabilities preventing his coming were introduced, misgivings were indulged, but the fears of the many were soon extinguished by the logical reasoning of the practical ones.

But the night grew on apace, and still the object against whom the shafts of a common purpose were directed came not. The few impatient ones resumed their games, the low buzzing which characterized the tone of the conversation, changed to its quondam key, which manifestly increased the anxiety of Mrs. Bolles, whose frequent flittings from room to room denoted the state of extreme perturbation of her mind. Prompt and judicious reasoning, however, produced a soothing effect upon her highly wrought nerves, and joining in an animated discussion as to her liege lords adaptability to circumstances, was soon oblivious to the lateness of the hour.

Suddenly all conversation ceased, and our vigilance was rewarded by the sound of footsteps which bore a distinctively proprietary ring. The silence of the tomb prevailed, save the measured tread of the bob-tailed cat, then the door was opened, and the well known form of H. T. presented itself, but the expression of blank amazement depicted on his countenance sustained the truth of the assertion that he "knew nothing."

Simultaneous with his entrance, the lights became more brilliant, and the familiar air of "Home Sweet Home," mingled with the glad buzzes of all present. This naturally added to his confusion and apparent embarrassment, and being the synosure of many pairs of mirthful eyes, he was indeed an object of interest.

Composure he could not regain, for the surprise was complete, so he wandered about the now brilliantly illuminated rooms, greeting all very cordially, until the card room was reached. That proved his Waterloo, for around the different tables sat many of his warmest friends, some having traveled from a great distance to participate in honoring this valued friend. It soon became evident that concentration of thought was an unknown quality with him just then, as repeated urgings demonstrated, but as the bewitching strains of a familiar waltz were wafted from the parlors, our hosts manner changed, and he entered into the spirit of the occasion, with a zest which inspired all present to greater enjoyment, regardless of the restrictions imposed by the lenten season. All were captivated by the efficient rendering of the orchestra, and displayed their approbation by "tripping the light fantastic." After dancing had reached its meridian on the program, luncheon was announced, and all available seats and space were quickly claimed. After all had become seated, chairs for the host and hostess were placed in the center of one of the rooms, and they were requested to occupy them, which they did in meek submission to the request (which amounted practically to a demand) realizing the superiority of power.

At this juncture Supervisor M. J. McCarthy in a neat manner, and a few well chosen remarks presented to Mr. Bolles, on behalf of his assembled friends, an elegant onyx clock, with accompanying statues, as a token and mark of the pure esteem, and high regard in which he is held by them. A breathless silence pervaded the throng while listening to the presentation, and upon its conclusion, Mr. Bolles made a very feeling response, which indicated the great emotion under which he was laboring, thanking very earnestly the happy donors for their sincere and substantial appreciation. His response met with general applause and luncheon was then served.

After the intermission, dancing was resumed, and the gay revellers made the welkin ring with their joyous laughter and merriment. All dispersed in seasonable time, fully recompensed for the mild dissipation in which they had indulged.

Mr. Bolles' address after May 1, will be Binghampston, N. Y.

As the hands on the dial of that clock, mark the rapid flight of time, may each moment revive the memory of that joyous event, and each stroke of the hour, recall the voices of his many friends, is the wish of NOYES.

Division 155.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., March 23d, 1890.

Mr. E. H. Belknap, Editor Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BRO.: On account of poor health, I concluded, about the 20th of March, to visit Hot Springs, Ark. Made my arrangements to and started on Saturday, the 22d, at 8:10 p. m. Imagine my pleasure on reaching the Union depot (St. Louis) to find my old friend Horace Morgan, the veteran conductor of the Wabash, enroute to the same place. He was very feeble and could hardly walk alone. I was very sorry to find poor Horace in such bad health, and began to make his trip as comfortable as possible. As this was but the second time I had met him since I left the Wabash in 1871, you can easily see that we had plenty of things to talk about. I found that there had been a great many changes on the old "Friendly Hand" route. As elsewhere, a great many of my old engineer friends had "crossed over." Such was also the case with the conductors. I found that McKeeby and Charley Parker, who run into Quincy with me in the '70's, had gone—two as genial friends and gentlemen as I ever met—and so on. I only speak of these, because you and I were brought in contact with them nearly every day, and I am sure it was fully as pleasant for you to meet them as it was for me.

We arrived at Hot Springs about 3 p. m., an hour and one-half late—delayed on account of water—the T. M. having suffered considerably in the past month from floods in the river bottoms through which this line passes. We were taken to the Arlington hotel, where we found several prominent R. R. officials and conductors; among them W. E. Burk, of the Vandalia; Cook, of the "Cotton Belt" and Burk, of the Little Rock & Fort Smith line, who were very glad to see us. Later I met Charley Howard, of the B. & O., whom I had not met for 18 years. But our greatest pleasure came a few minutes later, when we saw the genial face and portly figure of Dr. J. H. Leslie, approaching. Dr. Leslie had recently located here, and was an old acquaintance of Morgan, as well as of myself, having officed in the same building in St. Louis, that we had rooms in, and who was familiar with our condition and wants. He took us in hand once, and now, after a week's treatment, he has brought Horace out of a very severe seige of rheumatism, and caused him to gain seven pounds in flesh, and saved me from an attack of pneumonia and typhoid fever. I am glad to say that Joe Leslie has got a very extensive practice, which is wonderful, when you come to consider he has been here but six weeks. "May he live long and prosper." Well, I will draw this tiresome letter to a close. My only excuse for occupying your time is that I am feeling so much better in the short space of time (one week), I consider it a duty to say something about it and how it was brought about. Hoping to meet you and the Brothers in the best of health, at Rochester.

Yours truly in P. F.,

T. H. RILEY.

Division No. 30.

With pleasure we give this letter a place in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR. Many thanks to you, Bro. Riley.—ED.

EL PASO, Texas, March 25, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

I see in the November 15th, 1889 number, also, in March 1st, 1890, spirited articles on the Sabbath and the running of Sunday trains, written by Brother Severance, of Vermont. He discourses so learnedly and wisely, I feel disposed to approach the fountain of wisdom to catch a glimpse of the daylight, that now seems to be dawning upon the ages. A question which has taxed the brains of the thinking men of the ages passed, and one upon which national destiny has trembled from time immemorial, has been summarily settled by Bro. Severance; and with such complete satisfaction to himself, that I look on with astonishment, and wonder what kind of meat the young Cæsar has been eating, that makes him grow so fast.

First, he assumes, that every one who differs with his views of wisdom and advanced thought, is cranky; and he who should chance to have a moral consciousness of his own, he is a cranky crank. What charity! What urbanity! What wisdom! I wonder that we are allowed to think at all, in the presence of such stupendous knowledge. This is a question with which states and statesmen have grappled: philosophers, sages and senates have sought through all the historic ages a solution for this problem, and found none; but our young Demosthenes, with herculean strength, has settled it completely in two short, hasty articles.

The Brother admits the necessity of one day in seven for a rest day. Brother, where did you get that idea? Just refer me to one instance of a rest day, or the need of a rest day in all the records of the world, that was not copied from the bible, and I will forever worship at the shrine of your wisdom.

Now, Brother, don't dodge nor dogmatize, but just give us the origin of your idea of a rest day; did you find it among the tribes of Red Cloud, or Rain in the Face, or Sly Wolf, or Spotted Tail, or where did you get it?

If it is not a moral issue, what is it?

Please answer the above questions.

Next, the Brother makes a summary disposition of what he is pleased to call the Sabbath of the old testament, by stating that it come on Saturday. Now, we will just inform him, that it done no such thing.

The Sabbathical week of the Hebrews was a lunas week, governed by the four lunations of the moon, and if he is at all acquainted with chronology he well knows that every calendar in the known world was thrown into a political calendar at the beginning of the Julian period, forty-six years before the beginning of the Christian era. The Brother gets the hank tangled by getting on both sides of the issue. I believe the foregoing covers all the ground of the November article except the Brother's sanguine prognos is, which is mostly wind.

His article in the first of March number has one point, and but one. It, however, is a reiteration of a former position, in which he says the Sabbath of the bible is Saturday, and that the Sunday of the bible is a day set apart by Constantine. With regard to the former, if Brother Severance knows anything about language, which he doubtless does, he knows that Sabbath means rest, nothing but rest; the days of its appointment are purely conventional. But man has no authority for a rest day, except from the bible, and no conventionalities of man have succeeded, except as conformed to bible appointments. With regard to his latter statement, that Sunday was appointed by Constantine, whom he styles a cut throat and a ruffian. The Brother seems to be well posted in scripture, if he wishes to argue it on that line, all he has to do is to put himself on scripture ground.

We don't care to shoot cannon balls at monkeys, nor musket balls at gnats, but if Brother Severance will logically deny our position, this writer holds himself ready to prove that the Sunday now in use was specifically appointed, set apart, and perpetuated, from seventeen hundred and forty-six years before Constantine was born; but it must be arguments and not dogmatism, logical deductions and not bare assertions.

The Brother informs us, that according to Mr. Worcester, Sunday is so called because it was dedicated by the ancient sun worshippers. So are all the days of the week dedicated to some of the gods or demi-gods and named after them; but the Sabbath is holy, no matter to what day it may be applied; it is untarnished by idolatry or revelings, or banqueting, or even labor; it is rest—a holy thing.

The Brother informs us, that in Boston, New York and other large cities, the Sabbath is scarcely known as such. I know that in those large cities there are hundreds of thousands of people who know no Sabbath; but among that class, while you find many good people, you find exclusively the slums, the brothels, the doggeries, the drunkards, the staring, the degraded and the criminals.

He tells us that the great city of St. Petersburg has no Sabbath. I know they have none; but in lieu of it, they have the Siberian land of exile; which according to the North American Review, is a land of untold and unspeakable horrors.

It is not a matter of Sunday trains, but a matter of morality or immorality, of which the Sunday train is merely a result of a total disregard of all morality, by a people who only consult their own convenience or interest regardless of what the result may be.

Hoping to see articles written by others on this question, I remain, yours truly in P. F.

E. T. STOCKWELL.

Division 69.

MEGANTIC, Que., March 27th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:—I am not correspondent for this Division; not by any means. Methinks I can hear you say: "No, I guess that's right." However, let that be as it may, I want to give the journal a little description of No. 80, this month. I understand our secretary and treasurer sent you an account of the installation of officers of this division for 1890. Failing to see an appearance of the same in the columns of the journal, I will endeavor to give another. The installation took place on Tuesday, Dec. 17, 1889, when the following officers were elected for this year: S. H. Vernal, C. C.; Joseph Moreau, Sec. and Treas.; N. Cabana, A. C. C.; S. L. Grigg, S. C.; J. E. Cunningham, J. C.; L. Martelle, I. S.; Fred Houle, O. S.

Brother Vernal is appointed as delegate to the Grand Convention at Rochester. (A good choice, as he will, I am sure, do all in his power to further not only the interests of our division, but that of the Order.) Brother P. D. Lefebore, alternate. We have a membership of thirty members, all in good standing, and more coming in. Our Division, I may say, is in a prosperous condition. We have only one drawback, and that is, some of the members are not very punctual in attending the meetings. If this could only be overcome, things would look very favorable for us. I am in hopes the boys will soon become more interested, and make an extra effort to attend. We hold our meetings twice monthly in O. R. C. Hall Farnham, having changed from Newport, Vt., last November, where they were formerly held. Business on the line is good; all crews kept busy. Here are some of the runs of the boys: Brother Vernal as extra passenger conductor; Brother Gale, Past Chief, on air line, Montreal to Newport, trains Nos. 11, 12, 13 and 14, Boston express alternately; Brother Whitney same run; Brother Westover on Nos. 15 and 16, Newport local; Champlain Division are Brothers Moreau and Cabana on passenger trains 61 and 62, Sorel to Montreal, and Brother Martelle on 63 and 64, mixed, Farnham to St. Guillaume; Brother Houle on Stanbridge branch has it all his own way, running Nos. 65, 66, 67 and 68; Brother Audette on St. Lambert Branch has charge of Nos. 55 and 56; Brother Cunningham and your humble servant on Nos. 1 and 2, Halifax Express, Montreal to Megantic; Brother Guilfoyle, Lefebore and Dales on same train east of Megantic; Brothers Griggs, G. Conner and Wallace on Nos. 85 and 86 mixed, Farnham to Megantic; Brother Sheldon on Nos. 81 and 82 Sherbrooke local. On Northern Division we find Brothers McCabe, Stone, Mills and Barnes, Brother Parsonage on 87 and 88 Sherbrooke and Megantic way-freight, Brother E. Connor on extras, all a first-class lot of boys who seem pretty well contented with everything in general. We are well used, having fine men for officials, especially our Assistant Superintendent F. P. Brady, and Train Master L. W. Powers, two as fine men as ever held the same positions.

By the way, let me here state that Brother Wallace has a new song entitled "The Chickens of Shian." It must be heard to be appreciated, and when executed in his ablest manner, is truly very inspiring. Brother Gale has just returned from a trip to Georgia, where he has been to visit his son. He met with several Divisions during his absence, and he thinks from appearances that the Order is flourishing in the south, and expresses himself as well pleased with his journey and also his reception by the Brothers. Brother Parsonage has been on a flying visit to Boston, but is very reticent about the affair. This seems rather mysterious. Ted, better tell it just as it is and give us an introduction to the lady.

Yours truly in P. F.,

F. G. MARTYN,

West Farnham Division No. 80.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Your suggestion that I should "say a word," in regard to insurance has not been forgotten, but has been steadily kept in mind waiting for a more convenient season, but as a season when there is nothing else to do, never comes and as the time for the next Grand Division is right on hand, I will make it convenient to say a word, "perhaps two, and possibly three," just now,

One writer in the CONDUCTOR suggests that a certificate for $1,000 be issued for those who do not feel able to carry $2,500, and to that I have only to say that for several years I have been trying to have something of this kind adopted. The nearest we have ever come to it though, was at Toronto, where the matter was submitted to a committee with instructions to report at the next session. Another wants to know why it is that members of the Order do not avail themselves of the benefits of our insurance and then gives it as his belief that the "disability clause" is the stumbling block and wishes the law amended so that it will provide that whenever a man is disabled so that he cannot run a train, he shall be entitled to the full amount of the benefit. I have simply to say to all who are in favor of this, that if you wish to hurry the Benefit Department to an untimely end, adopt such an amendment and you will see its sun set in darkness in a time so short that you will wonder if there ever was any such a thing as a Benefit Department. When members complain of the excessive cost of the insurance at present, what would be the effect if the cost should be suddenly doubled? And it would be doubled inside of six months should such an amendment become law. I believe that our present disability laws are a little more liberal than they ought to be and I believe that on this account many claims for disability are made that otherwise would not be. Much fault is found on account of the delay in passing upon disability claims, and it is a common occurrence for me to receive letters from members, saying that if I do not act more promptly, all the members in Division . . . will "drop out" of the insurance; the fact that I have nothing whatever to do with the approval or rejection of claims does not appear to enter into their calculations at all. I do not propose in this letter to defend the insurance committee, as I believe them competent to take care of themselves, but it is a fact that in all claims, where there is no doubt as to the right of the claimant, there has been much more delay on the part of divisions themselves than on the part of the committee. Again, too, I receive complaints occasionally from members on account of the delay in paying certain claims, and in three instances out of every four, I find upon investigation, that the member who makes the complaint has not paid the assessment from which the claim is to be paid. Or, in other words, that he has in his possession the money that he censures me for not paying to someone else. There are on our books, several disability claims that the committee cannot allow without violating the laws and claims in which the claimant has no shadow of a right to the benefit. This may sound like strong language, but it is true, as the Insurance Committee will verify; for instance there are several claims for loss of hearing, where the claimant has ran a train successfully notwithstanding his deafness, losing his position for some other cause, and then because he cannot procure another situation as conductor, on account of deafness, claims the benefit. One claim that has been rejected by the committee was for deafness, when the claimant admitted that he was deaf before he ever became a member of the Order. During its existence the Order has paid not less than a dozen claims where the claimant had not the slightest legal claim upon us, and where any other association would have refused to pay, unless it should possibly be some fraternal association of a particular class like ours. Now, as to delay in claims where it is difficult to decide: It is well known to every member, or if it is not it should be, that there are many cases of sickness where the person is totally disabled for a long time and finally recovers; there are very many cases where a conscientious physician cannot certify to the best of his belief that the person will not eventually recover fully, and where a physician does not make such a certificate, the committee cannot allow the claim. There are numerous other cases where the certifying physician qualifies his certificate by saying "cannot recover without an operation," "may possibly recover, but not very likely," "is totally disabled from performing any heavy manual labor," and so on almost ad libitum. In others, physicians certify that the claimant cannot recover, and the medical director says that such cases frequently do recover, and advise the committee to wait awhile before acting. Is there any wonder that there is delay in such cases? We have had numerous cases of claims for benefit on account of the loss of use of an arm or leg, when it was proven absolutely that the limbs were being used every day. Claims have been filed for disability on account of sickness or injury when the claimant was steadily earning more than a great many members who have suffered from neither. I remember one case where the member making the claim had suffered from a slight injury to the leg, but at the time of making his claim was receiving $75 per month, using his leg every day, and is still using it, withdrew from the Order because his claim was disallowed, and now accuses the Order of "defrauding" him.

The trouble is, that under our present disability laws, we pay a premium for disability claims. In my opinion the remedy is not to open the door any wider, but to partially close it by paying only one-half the amount of the certificate for any disability except the loss of both arms, both legs or total blindness.

A matter that has been explained more times than the department has had losses, and which is explained in print on the blank form that is sent out for making the claim upon, is that alluded to by a correspondent from Division 160, and in reply to the question, I would say that under our present laws, if the Brother should die April 1st, his wife will have to pay all assessments that are made for losses occurring before April 1st, even if the notice of those assessments is not issued until after his death. For instance, should I die today and the Brother April 1st, a notice of assessment for my death would not reach Northumberland until after his death, but that assessment would have to be paid by some one for him, or it would be deducted from the benefit. Is there anything unfair or unjust about this? If time and space permitted, I could readily show that any other method would not be just to all, and that if assessments ceased with the member's death, without regard to previous losses, it would work injustice to some.

The same correspondent objects to the plans proposed in the CONDUCTOR and rejected by the last Grand Division simply because it would hurt the present insurance, or class A. This same argument was used at Denver, and the same old argument was used before you and I were born. "We must not adopt anything better because it will injure what we now have." Had this same old argument been effective, there would be no Order of Railway Conductors today, because there would be no railroads to make conductors. It is the same argument that caused the English farmers to chase the first railroad surveyors out of their fields with pitchforks, because forsooth the railroad would make their horses useless. One is not so much surprised at the use of this argument in those days, but it is a natural supposition that in this day and age such argument is obsolete, or ought to be at least. Just think of it for a moment! "We won't adopt a better, because it will injure what we have." If some insurance company should offer Brother Mack as many $2,500 policies as he wished at the rate of say $15 per year, each would he refuse to avail himself of the offer because it would injure the benefit department of the Order? One objection made was that the proposed laws would cause class A to become extinct through loss of members, and that there are many present members who could not pass the necessary physical examination to become members of Class B, and thus they would be deprived of their present insurance when too late for them to obtain any other. This would be true, if no provision had been made for them, but a provision is made in the proposed laws that will give them, I believe, $2,000 insurance that will be good for all time to come in the place of $2,500 that is good if they die now or perhaps within the next few years, but which I honestly believe will be worthless to the member who lives twenty years from now. Which is the most un-them $2,000 good insurance, or let them keep $2,500 of "maybe it is and maybe it isn't?"

Our Benefit Department lost 263 members last year, and while I am very sorry to see it and be compelled to admit it, it is simply following in the path trodden by our predecessors. Our percentage of loss has been much less than our older contemporaries, but I fear it will steadily increase if we do not do something to stop it.

We have now the best and cheapest insurance of its kind in existence, but it is not what it should be. The fact that members pronounce it too high, is simply proof that they speak without knowledge or consideration. I shall later on make some comparisons as to cost. Those who complain of delay in the adjustment of disability claims do so also without knowledge of facts or without due consideration, for I am satisfied that the committee can give good and sufficient reasons for the delay in any case, and I urge any member who has any reason for complaint or who thinks he has, to make it known through the columns of the CONDUCTOR and give the committee an opportunity to answer it.

Some members, and at least one correspondent, favor making the insurance compulsory. Now, I will leave the matter of "compulsion" to those whom I know will take a decided stand as to the personal rights of members which even the Grand Division cannot infringe, and simply say that the laws of Iowa under which we are incorporated, prevent anything of this kind, as do the laws of every other state in the union which makes any pretense of regulating the matter of life insurance, and I would suggest that making the initiation fee large enough to cover the cost of a certificate, and saying to the new member after he "registers in" the by-laws: "This Division will present you with a certificate of insurance for $2,500 if you can pass the necessary examination and will promise to pay the assessments." Of course the Order can be made a purely mutual benefit association, but to do that we would have to get rid of a great many present good members and shut out a great many prospective good members.

Recurring again to the question of "why do not members take more interest in the Benefit Department?" Let me ask any member about what proportion of mankind would be insured if left to their own free will? I am very free to say that in my opinion it would be very small indeed, and I believe the success of the Benefit Department in building up an association that pays its members $160,000 per year without the aid of paid solicitors, is phenomenal in the annals of life insurance. It is a record that has never been approached by a like association. The Order does absolutely nothing in the way of soliciting business and solicitation is what makes the success of outside companies and associations.

Whether it would pay the Order to employ solicitors, is a question for consideration. In case it should do so, there is one very important point to consider immediately, viz: Shall we do business in violation of the laws of several states, subjecting ourselves and our agents to the penalties of those laws, or shall we comply with the laws in each state, thereby creating an additional expense of perhaps $200 for each state in addition to the amounts paid agents or solicitors? It is true that other associations are doing business now, and have been for some time without complying with these laws and have no trouble, and it is equally true that the Order might do so for years without trouble, but it is also true that complaint might be made at any moment and penalties inflicted that would end our existence, this without taking into consideration the moral view of whether or not the Order could afford to take the position of a willful law-breaker, simply because we think no one will enforce the penalties.

One great trouble, not only with our own Benefit Department, but all other associations of like character, is, that we begin by furnishing insurance for very much less than it is actually worth. Those who die early are "ahead of the game" and those who don't are left in the cold. Whenever one man gets something for nothing or for less than it is worth, some one else has got to pay for it and it don't make any difference whether it is in insurance or the Louisiana lottery.

I now come to my good friend from the malarial bottoms of the Wabash. Bro. Cutter and I can agree on one thing for a starting point, viz: the need for a sum of money placed at interest for the support of the association, to be procured by collecting at the start from each member, a sum that more nearly approximates the actual value of the insurance that is given him, than we have heretofore done, and I don't care whether that sum of money is called a "reserve fund," "sinking fund," "reserve portion" or anything else. I am as indifferent to the name as the boy who didn't care what they call him, so "it wasn't too late for supper." If we can get the "supper" in the shape of $500,000 at interest, properly protected, I don't care what it is called.

Bro. Cutter has, on different occasions, questioned the expenditures of the Benefit Department for "expenses," or rather, let me correct in advance what might result in a misunderstanding, and say he has questioned the wisdom of the laws providing for the work of the Department as causing too much expense, and I understand went to Denver with a cannon loaded, but for some reason failed to shoot it. As a first criticism he quotes from a report made by Bro. Wheaton when chairman of the Insurance Committee, which in the way it is quoted would lead the reader to infer that all the work connected with the Department occupied about two months, and Bro. Wheaton and his associates on that committee wished to pay some one $2,000 for doing that two months' work. I can hardly believe that Bro. Cutter so understood the matter, and I can hardly understand just what point he wishes to make by the quotation. The language quoted was used by Bro. Wheaton in his report as chairman of the Insurance Committee and referred solely to the work of the chairman, and he merely said that the time occupied by him as chairman of that committee in certain specified cases and other insurance work would "amount to not less than two months," but it has not the slightest reference to the work of the Department generally, or of any other person than himself. Bro. Cutter is right in supposing that "the assistant, (who is Bro. Sackett), does not receive half" of $1,000 per month, but he does receive nearly half of $2,000 per year, viz: $900 from the Benefit Department, because fully half of his time is occupied in the work of that department, and if there is any reason whatever for complaint in regard to the proportion of salaries paid by the Benefit Department, it is with those members of the Order who are not members of the Benefit Department. One-half of my own salary is paid by the Benefit Department and while one-half of my time is not occupied by the work of that department, still a large portion of it is and a much larger proportion of the cash handled, and for which I am held responsible belongs to it. One-half of the salary of the book-keeper, one-half of the salary of the stenographer and one-half of the salary of the messenger is paid by the Benefit Department in accordance with the adjustment arranged and approved by the Grand Chief Conductor and the Executive Committee, to which Brother Cutter refers. Of the time of the book-keeper and messenger, more than one-half is occupied for the Benefit Department, while with the stenographer it is probably just about even, though during the past year more than half his time has been given to the Benefit Department on account of the issue of the new certificates. Of the entire furniture and fixtures of the general office there is but very little indeed that would not be required by the Benefit Department, if it were managed entirely by itself, and certainly one-half of the fixtures owned by the Order at the time the law adopted at New Orleans took effect, is not an unreasonable sum to charge the Benefit Department for them when you consider that the Order thereby gives to the Benefit Department an equal ownership in them. This whole matter was fully reported to the Grand Division and by them approved, without a dissenting vote, if my memory is correct, and Brother Cutter was a member of the body which approved.

Brother Cutter then quotes from the report of a Finance Committee which would indicate that the total value of the property of the Order is only about $1,000 and that as a consequence "something must be wrongsomewhere," when more than that sum is charged to the Benefit Department for a half interest in that property. If Brother Cutter will turn to page 204 of the same proceedings, he will find that an invoice of the property of the Order and Benefit Department, which was checked and found correct, shows the actual cash value of the furniture and fixtures to be $3,095, and in arriving at this value a large discount is made each year to allow for depreciation in value on account of wear. The committee did not fully explain what they intended to in the language quoted, and they leave room for the inference which Brother Cutter seems to draw and which may readily be drawn by anyone reading his letter and unacquainted with the facts. When the offices of the Order were located in Cedar Rapids, the best location for the offices when rental and everything was taken into consideration, was the entire floor of a building, which was then one large room some 50x120 feet, which could be leased for five years at $600 per year, provided the Order would do the necessary work, or for $750 per year and the owner would fit it up as we wished. The former was chosen and it was this expense of fitting up and putting in the necessary partitions that cost the $1,000, including some additional furniture which became necessary on account of the increased room and business, and it had no reference to anything else or any other property or fixtures. The statement that the committee "find them (fixtures and furniture) neat, but do not think them too expensive," was inserted by them by request of the Grand Chief Conductor, because a member of the Executive Committee had criticised the new furniture as being too expensive and nicer than was necessary, and so far as furniture is concerned this new furniture was all that was referred to by them in the report and the fixtures referred to by them meant the partitions and permanent fixtures that are not the property of the Order but which revert to the owner of the building when we leave it. The members of that committee are all on deck and all readers of the CONDUCTOR will correct me if wrong.

In regard to the statement in the circular of November 1st, the item of salaries is misleading, although not noticed at the time that it was printed. It should show that this salary item was a lump sum for the entire year of 1887, all who were consulted in the matter agreeing that it was the intent of the Grand Division that the amendment should cover the entire year and not from August 1st merely, and the amount specified was agreed upon as a fair one to cover salaries and all other expenses except for furniture, &c., up to that time and salaries for the balance of the year. From January 1st, 1888, the salaries have been apportioned as shown above in this letter. The statement given on page 195 of the proceedings, is as Brother Cutter or any one else, should see at a glance incorrect, the total expenditures shown there being some $2,000 less than the actual amount, and while I have not had time to look up and see just where the trouble is, I note that one item of $1,342.57 for furniture and fixtures is omitted entirely, and the only item of incidental expenses, (which includes an almost innumerable number of items of all sorts,) shown in the proceedings, is the express charges paid on money received. I am inclined to think that the written report presented to the Grand Division at Toronto contained these items and was correct, for certainly if there was a discrepancy of $2,000 the Finance Committee would have discovered it. However, as the proof reader of the proceedings, I am responsible for the errors occurring there. The presumption that "fur. etc.," in the report to the Grand Division is what is reported in the circular as furniture and fixtures is correct, only it should have been a separate item in the proceedings as it is in the circular. Brother Cutter has my thanks for calling attention to this matter, for I had not noticed the discrepancy before. Now, however, by way of "getting even" for your discovery of my "general debility" as a proof reader in permitting the errors in proceedings to escape until figuratively taken by the ear on account of it, "I have you on the hip," and when you explain to me how you arrive at the conclusion from the circular that there was a balance of $872.13 on hand in the Expense Account of the Department, you won't have much time to congratulate yourself on having "got my scalp." A careful observation of the statement in said circular will lead almost any one to the conclusion that having expended $5,565.63 and received only $5,693.50, the Expense Account was $872.13 in debt instead of having that amount on hand, and that quite likely the secretary of the department deserves censure for failing to notice the fact sooner and apply to the committee for authority to make an expense assessment as soon as the balance was reduced to $500 instead of waiting until there was a deficit of $900. The only excuse the secretary has to his failure to make the application is that the state of the expense account until the annual balance was made at the close of the year. The same oversight and a natural disinclination to make an expense assessment, is responsible for the same thing in a greater degree, when the last expense assessment was made. I honestly believe that the time between (no, not drinks,) only expense assessments, seems much shorter to me than it does to Brother Cutter or any other member of the department, not because it costs me a dollar the same as the rest of the members, but because of the complaints it brings out about the cost of the insurance.

The present proportion of salaries paid by the department to persons in this office is $293.33¹/₃ per month; adding the $100 per annum paid to each of the committeemen, makes it $318.33¹/₃; amount paid the medical director and attorney and for expenses of the committee depend on circumstances. If Brother Cutter or anyone else has any honest idea that any one man can do the necessary office work for an assessment association of 4,000 or 5,000 members, it would be a revelation to him or them to give it a trial. And again, we have a comparison with the Mutual Aid and Benefit, and before I conclude I shall make some comparisons myself, and I shall be careful in referring to the above association to state facts. I shall show that although Mr. Huntington gets but $1,500 per year, the expenses of that association are proportionately greater than ours and that they would be much more so if the said association paid its legitimate expenses. I wish it distinctly understood that I shall say nothing in enmity to the M. A. & B. No member of the Order can truthfully say that I have advised him to withdraw from that association, but on the contrary, many will testify that I have told them to keep their membership, that I have always and on every occasion testified to the fact that it is a good association and that the conductors of the United States should support it, but when it is continually asserted that it is better, cheaper, better managed and more prompt in its payments than the Benefit Department, I owe it to those who pay me my wages not to let such public challenges go undisputed. This association would not be mentioned by name by me were it not for this fact, that it is continually being held up as a cheaper insurance than our own. It is a cheap insurance; cheaper than it ought to be, and like the Benefit department of the Order, that very cheapness is its weakness. It is too cheap for the benefits it gives, but it is not cheaper than the Benefit Department of the Order.

Brother Cutter's reason for not giving his plan is certainly a very unreasonable one, although I might consider it very flattering to myself as conveying the inference that there is no use of presenting any plan that does not meet my support. I am inclined to think that Brother Cutter does not wish that inference drawn, and that he does not give us his real reason for not presenting a plan. He certainly does not give the correct reason for my unwillingness to support his plan, if I correctly guess what that plan is. Brother Cutter has in the past been in favor of adopting the plan of doing business that is used by the M. A. & B. and in conversations, he has often referred me to them. I certainly am not willing to be held responsible for money handled by others who are not under my control, but there is no question of my responsibility for money handled by any one in considering the plan heretofore urged by him. There are several objections to the plan, the first of which is our own experience in the past. For some fourteen years we tried the plan of notifying division secretaries of assessments, they notifying the members and collecting from them and for fourteen years it proved a dismal failure. There are today many members of the Benefit Department who lost their membership through the failure of the secretary to perform his duty. One division with over thirty members in the insurance, all but one forfeited, and he saved himself only by writing to the office and making inquiry. It is asked why the plan works well with the M. A. & B. and will not with the Order. To this I can only say that the system of selecting the local secretaries is entirely different. If a system of selecting a secretary on each line of road where we had members, was adopted and then these secretaries paid for their work, it would probably be successful and a large amount of work in the general office could be saved, but the amounts paid to these local secretaries would overbalance the saving in the general office, and the net result probably be an increase in expenses, certainly it would if the Order complied with the laws of the different states and procured the necessary license and certificates for its agent, [local secretaries,] to do its business. The whole idea of the "plan" is to get work done for nothing and, to disguise the amount, distribute it among enough persons so it will not be noticed. If Brother Cutter will present his plan to the Grand Division he will find there a number of members who can talk about it from experience and who may give him food for thought. Unload this time, Albert, don't carry it home with you.

Now, to come back to the vexed question of cost. Brother Cutter gives a table, showing cost of insurance from the age of 25 to 60, on each $1,000 of insurance, presumably being the average rates charged by level premium companies for the two classes of insurance given, and it emphasizes the general idea advanced in the article quoted by him, which is in brief that many members of assessment associations including our own, drop out because they "cost too much," when they are ignorant of what the cost ought to be or what they are really paying in comparison with other insurance. In considering this table, one important factor should not be lost sight of. These rates are for the ordinary class of people who insure, that is including what are known as preferred, ordinary, hazardous and extra-hazardous, while in our insurance the risks are all what is known as hazardous and extra-hazardous, and for which a much larger than ordinary premium is charged by level premium companies. Taking the lowest age given in this table, 25; we find that the straight life premium is $15.42 per $1,000, or $38.55 for $2,500, 55 cents more on a preferred risk for life insurance alone than was given by the Order for life and disability both, during 1889. Our disability risk adds one-third to the cost so that adding the disability risk to the "straight life" premium, we find that it would make the cost $51.40, or $13.40 more than ours, while the ordinary premium would be $49.72 for life and $66.29 with disability added, and this, remember, is for the age of 25. The average age of members of our insurance is 35, and taking the rates in the table for that age we have $47.47 life and $63.29 life and disability on the "straight life" plan, and $65.95 and $87.93 respectively on the ordinary premium plan. The deduction from this is, that the youngest of our members are getting their insurance for less than its actual value, while the older ones are getting it for very much less.

I clip the following from the published report of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association;

Ninth—That these grand results have been attained while collecting from the members but $17.14 upon the average, at all ages, for each $1,000 insurance exposed, which sum has provided for the death claims, for the reserve or emergency fund, and for all the expenses of the association of every kind and character whatsoever, and these collections were based on age of entry of the members.

Tenth—That the average sum collected by all of the old system companies for the year 1888 was $53.24 on each $1,000 of insurance exposed, or more than three times that collected by the officers of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.

Here it will be seen that a company doing a straight life business at very low rates, charges for life insurance only, without any disability feature, an average of $17.14 per $1,000 or $42.85 for $2,500, $4.85 more than the Order furnished both life and disability for during the same year, 1889, while their statement of the average cost of insurance in old line companies during the year 1888 was $53.24 per $1,000, or $133.10 for $2,500 life insurance alone, or $95.10 more than the Order furnished both life and disability.

A Masonic association, of which I am a member, which I believe to be well and economically managed and which has some features that are better than any association that I know of, including a small reserve fund, reports its expense during the last fiscal year, as follows:

Total salaries.....	$15,421.61
Printing, etc.....	1,454.40
Postage.....	1,519.55
Incidental expenses.....	5,627.53
Collecting assessments.....	1,969.04

Total.....$25,991.63

It has 8,000 members, making a cost of something over $3 per member for expenses.

The M. A. & B. collected during the fiscal year ending Sept. 30th, 1889, $52,596.91; it paid in benefits, $47,000, (a little more than one quarter the amount paid by our Benefit Department.) It paid for expenses, $2,511.39; it has 1232 members, thus making its expenses a trifle over $2.00 per member. It sends its assessment notices by railway mail in violation of the postal laws, thus effecting a saving where the Order pays hard cash. A large part of its work is contributed by members and although under these circumstances its expenses should be less in proportion than the Order insurance, we find it a trifle greater. It made during the fiscal year, seventeen assessments for $2.50 each, making a total paid by each member of $42.50, as against $38.00 in our insurance. Among the claims paid I note that Brother W. L. Collins, who lost the use of his arm some years ago, whose claim was filed with the M. A. & B. about the same time that he filed one with the Benefit Department of the Order. He received his money from the Order March 20th, 2885, there being at that time less than 2,500 members, Brother Collins received but $1,726, but the cost for that year was $17.00, or $10.00 per $1,000. It is but fair to state that this is an exceptional case and that ordinarily there is no such delay in the payment of just claims by this association. It pays as promptly as can reasonably be expected, but no more promptly than our own department, as can easily be shown if necessary. Finally, to any reader who happens to be a member of M. A. & B., do not permit your membership to lapse; the association is a worthy one and deserves your support. To the conductor who is not a member of any, become a member as soon as possible; you owe it to your profession to give the preference to associations composed of your fellow conductors, and to give to your aid in behalf of the widows and orphans of conductors, particularly so long as they furnish you cheaper insurance and better insurance than you can get for the same cost elsewhere.

To conclude, the statement made in the article quoted by Brother Cutter, that "the applicant can find in any well-managed association a temporary insurance at cost or less," is absolutely true. Shall the Order of Railway Conductors demonstrate that the next proposition, that all such must be temporary so long as new associations continue to attract the best risks, is not true, by establishing an association that shall be permanent and enduring and provide a sure protection for those of us who have passed the half-way post of life?

Mr. Editor, when you have more spare space to devote to insurance, call on me again.

Yours very truly,

W. P. DANIELS.

ST. PAUL, March 13, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

In looking over the insurance department I find a great many views regarding this important subject. I am pleased to see this; as from the many views there may come some idea of great value, and an improvement made over the present manner of doing business in that department. But, I am frank in saying the only one I see so far offered is in giving the Brothers the privilege of obtaining one-half the full insurance $1,250 for half the money—other than this I can see no need of any radical change. Our Brother from Colorado Springs who says he is not a member of the insurance department (ought to be) wishes it made obligatory. Now, Brother, there are a good many of the Brothers that took out a life insurance before the O. R. C. insurance was thought of, and have got all they can pay for now, and are not willing to give it up for a new one. This would work injurious to them. Now as to there being cheaper insurance than the O. R. C. you are right, but the benefits are also cheaper. Brother Madera quotes the Hartford; now this can not be compared to the O. R. C. If you take a straight life in the Hartford, then you cannot get it ~~more~~ as cheap as the O. R. C., beside you won't cent out of it for the loss of the sight of your eyes, or the loss of all your limbs, while this one will pay the full amount for either. If you take an accident policy in the Hartford, then you would get nothing for death by natural causes which our's pays for in full. Besides if insured in the Hartford as the Brother says, $4,000, and $20 weekly (instead of $25) will cost $30 as a passenger conductor. But if you should leave that occupation and take a job as a freight brakemen, then you would be the proud possessor of $300 and $7 per week indemnity. Now, while there is nothing the matter with this plan of insurance, it is easy to see that the O. R. C. is much the cheaper for railroad men, when you take all things into consideration. I feel as though all members ought to carry this insurance, as well as an accident insurance, and as our Brother speaks of one advertised in the back of the CONDUCTOR, which can also be found in the B. L. E. Journal; also in the Fireman's Journal, which is not only cheap, but reliable as an accident insurance. This one is the Railway Officials & Conductors Accident association of Indianapolis, Ind., W. K. Bellis, secretary; this corporation insure railroad men only. It is composed of railroad men. It employs railroad men only to do the soliciting; then why not patronize a company who patronize you. This company is in its seventh year, and has never contested, compromised, or discounted a claim; never caused an injured member to wait for his money. Now, Brothers, why not patronize the benefit department of the O. R. C. for your life insurance and total disability; and the Railway Officials & Conductor's Accident, as your accident insurance. This latter named is not connected with the Order of Railway Conductors, but is connected with all classes of railroad men and works entirely to their advantage. Do any of you know of a claim that has not been promptly settled, or of any one case of litigation, regarding the settlement of a claim, or do you know of any other accident company, who has never discounted, compromised, contested or litigated a claim?

Yours Respectfully,

INSURANCE.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., March 3, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

MY DEAR SIR: I have just been reading the article on insurance, written by Brother U. L. Upson, of Buffalo Division, in No. 5 of March 1, and it meets with my hearty approval. I wish every member of the Order could read it. It seems strange to me that any one should be unable to meet the assessments as the insurance is now. I am at present, braking at the small salary of $40 per month, and I find no trouble in keeping up the assessments, and also keeping up the premium of $107.40 a year, on a $5,000 policy in the New York Life. If there are any members who are unable to carry the insurance as it is now, I would approve of Mack's plan in No. 4 of Feb. 15, giving such members a chance to carry $1250.00 at 50 cents each assessment. Does Brother Madera, who writes an article in No. 5, realize when comparing the Hartford Insurance with the O. R. C., that the Hartford is merely an accident insurance and that a man must be crippled or killed by some accident, before he can get any benefit from the company. While in the O. R. C. if he dies from any disease, or any accident, his family is protected, and if he loses a foot, hand, arm, leg, eyesight, or the use of same, he gets the full amount of insurance to set himself up in business.

I tell you the Hartford is not worthy of the first degree of comparison with the O. R. C. insurance, and the insurance advertised in back of our journal is accident insurance, and I fear too many of the Brothers are deceiving themselves by putting too much dependence in accident insurance. There is not one of you that expects to be killed in an accident, while you all know you must die either by accident or disease. Why then do you not prepare for what you know must come, by providing yourselves with an insurance that covers death in any form, and also keeps you if you are disabled. I am no lover of assessment insurance, started as many of them are, by a few men as an investment, giving them a soft snap in office and feathering their nests till the members begin to die; and then after all members of the company are rich, quit business, leaving the poor policy holders with no protection. But an assessment insurance like the O. R. C., whose stockholders are its members, bound together by the principles of Brotherly love, and Perpetual Friendship is entirely different.

I have had three years experience in the insurance business, and I must say that I know of no insurance so valuable to a railroad man, and at so little expense as the O. R. C. insurance. It makes no limit of travel, residence, or occupation; so there is no danger of a man finding himself without insurance as long as he keeps up his assessments, while in most other insurance a man is liable to find himself, or his poor family find themselves without protection when it is most needed, simply because he has broken some law in the policy, which he was not acquainted with. And now, Brothers, let me say if you have no insurance, or nothing but accident insurance. I beg of you, make out an application for the O. R. C. insurance at once. Do not wait till you lose a limb, or your life, and then have your Division be compelled to issue a circular calling for aid for you, or your poor family. Remember if your Division should have to come to your assistance, the amount obtained in that way would come far short of the noble $2,500 you would receive if you have a certificate. I wish to urge all members of the insurance to pay their assessments as soon as they come, and not keep the poor widows and orphans waiting 60 days, and then perhaps forget about having the notice in the house and forfeit their membership, and take the great chance of leaving their own family to the cold charity of the world. In conclusion I wish to answer Mack's question by saying that if I should die, my wife would expect to pay all assessments for deaths that occurred prior to mine.

Wishing the O. R. C., and especially the insurance department greater prosperity in future, than has been known in the past, I will "let you go." Remaining, very truly,

Yours in P. F.,

N. E. RETALLICK.

Battle Creek Division. No. 6.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 10, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Another circular from the G. S. & T., and a long list of members who have forfeited in the Mutual Benefit Department, which means perhaps that some of these Brothers will meet with misfortunes, and leave their loved ones to the charities of a cold world unprovided for. Division No. 38 has been talking over this matter lately, the result of which is, we believe, the idea has become prevalent that our insurance is too high, or else is not in the shape most desirable. Now, if this be a fact, would it not be wisdom for all Divisions to take this matter up as a special order of business and talk over, and arrange for some plan of action, and when we meet at Rochester in Grand Division, do something that will place our insurance within the reach of every member, and forever do away with these appeals for charity. And in order to be prepared we should discuss the matter in its various bearings, so that when the Grand Division meets we may be ready for legislation. Would like to have the different Divisions give us through the CONDUCTOR their ideas that we may discuss them over. So now, will give you one from Division No. 38, which I may present to the Grand Division, which is this: "That the Grand dues be increased to (say) \$25 per member, and that all members of the Order become members of the Mutual Benefit Department." Now this has its objections, and many will say that if we adopt it, we will have to raise \$100,000 for deposit with the state. Well, what if we do? Had that ought to stop us, if we think this is the best plan? We have about 15,000 members, and if we wish to raise this amount for deposit, it would only be 6 $\frac{2}{3}$ dollars for each one, and I believe that \$25 will provide funds for losses, so that we may all have insurance at far less money, with this included than we now have. I hope that our insurance may be talked over among all Divisions and that the delegates will go to Rochester, and put it on a basis so that we may feel secure, and that at our meetings there may not be so many circulars read asking for charity, for I have never known of one that gave satisfaction in its results. Hoping to hear from many of the Brothers through the columns of the CONDUCTOR, will close by asking you to give this an early insertion if you think it worth the space.

Yours, in P. F.,

HOWARD CASE.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., March 31, 1860.
C. S. Wheaton, Grand Chief Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BRO.: I herewith submit my report of the organization of Gogebic Division No. 253, at Ashland, Wis., March 30th.

I left Milwaukee accompanied by several Bros. from Division No. 46, at 7:40 p. m., Saturday, arrived at Ashland at 9:30 a. m. Sunday, and was met at the depot by Brothers Friend and Lyons.

A special session of the Grand Division was opened in due form, at 10:30 a. m., in I. O. of O. F. hall, for the purpose of organizing a division of the Order of Railway Conductors, with the following officers in the chairs: W. J. Durbin, C. C.; W. H. Sherman, A. C. C., Division 46; E. A. Sims, S. and T., Division 46; T. W. Tucker, S. C.; W. D. Steese, J. C., Division 130; T. Meaher, I. S., Division 46; P. W. O'Niel, O. S., Division 46.

Visiting Brothers present: S. M. Green, O. F. Willis, Division 46; W. A. Webster, J. McKie, V. L. Bartlett and M. E. Galvin, Division 211.

The following charter members were present and instructed in the work of the Order: J. A. Field, E. Cleary, E. A. Quinlan, J. J. Creamans, T. Kennedy, W. L. Lyon, C. M. Beattie, J. B. Carlin, B. W. McCarey, J. W. Connors, W. A. Redner, J. H. Friend.

Brother P. W. O'Niel, C. C., Division No. 46, was invited to take the chair for the purpose of conferring the degrees on Mr. Connors. Mr. Connors was then introduced, and the first, second and third degrees conferred upon him in due form.

We then took a recess for one hour, during which time we were escorted to the Colby House by the Brothers of the new Division, where a magnificent spread had been arranged for us. I found seated at the table a number of the representative men of Ashland, and a number of representatives of other societies, of which there seems to be quite a number, one and all of whom extended a hearty welcome to Gogebic Division No. 253 O. R. C.

Division was called to order at 2:30 p. m., and proceeded to the election of officers with the following result: C. C., Ed. Cleary; A. C. C., W. L. Lyon; S. and T., J. B. Carlin; S. C., W. A. Redner; J.

C., J. A. Field; I. S., T. Kennedy; O. S., J. J. Creamans; Delegate, J. B. Carlin; Alternate, J. Friend. The above named officers were then duly installed by Brother W. A. Webster, of Division 210. Brother T. W. Tucker, of Division 46, acting as Marshal for the occasion.

The work of the Order was as fully exemplified as could be, owing to shortness of time, many of the Brothers of the new Division were obliged to leave the city at 5:30 p. m., to enable them to get home in time to take their runs. I feel confident, however, that the division is in good hands and will prosper under their management; especially with Brother Webster at their right hand. I desire to extend to all the officers who so ably assisted me in the organization of Gogebic Division No. 253, my sincere thanks, particularly to Brothers O'Niel, Webster and Sims. I also desire to speak for one and all of the visiting Brothers, and extend to the Brothers of Gogebic Division No. 253, and the citizens of Ashland, our most sincere thanks for their very kind hospitality shown us while in their beautiful little city.

Yours truly in P. F.,

W. J. DURBIN,
 D. G. C. C.

CHICAGO, March 22d, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Leaving Chicago for Portland on Thursday p. m., I arrived in Boston on Saturday, and meeting several of the Brothers of the Divisions located there, I found that if I laid over until Sunday a. m., I should have company to Portland, so I accordingly did so, and at 8:30 a. m. Sunday, a special train with 117 on board, left over the eastern division of the Boston & Maine R. R. for Portland, Me., and at North Berwick Junction we were reinforced by about 40 Brothers who left Boston via the western division of the Boston & Maine at 8 a. m., most of them, however, joining the party enroute. Arriving all safe and sound, we were conducted directly to the hall, where at 1:00 p. m., a special session of the Grand Division was opened with the following officers in the chairs: G. C. C.,

C. H. Wilkins; A. G. C., L. P. Bourne, Division 157; S. and T., W. R. Mooney, Division 157; G. S. C., T. S. Richardson, Division 122; G. J. C., E. W. Cassidy, Division 219; G. I. S., Elias Munday, Division 75; G. O. S., A. H. Brown, Division 157. The following charter members were then introduced and instructed in the work of the Order, after having been obligated:

E. G. Chase, Wm. Hooper, David Pratt,
L. D. Cobb, D. L. Foster, C. M. Benjamin,
E. M. Young, Geo. P. Thomas, C. E. Hartshorn,
F. L. Gardner, D. Conway, G. E. Whitney,

The three degrees were then worked in full upon M. F. Healey; after which the Division was regularly constituted. A recess was then taken to attend the banquet which had been provided, and 301 Brothers and invited guests sat down and did full justice to the bountiful repast. Among those present were a number of railway officials. After the banquet the visiting Brothers took their leave via special train, well pleased with their visit to Portland, and firm in the belief, that a new link had been forged in the chain of Perpetual Friendship, of which they would all feel proud. Those of the visiting Brothers, together with the members of the new division again repaired to the hall, and the new division proceeded to the election of officers which resulted as follows: C. C., W. Sprague; A. C. C., G. E. Whitney; S. and T., S. S. Cahill; S. C., M. F. Healey; J. C., F. L. Gardner; I. S., Geo. P. Thomas; O. S., C. M. Benjamin; Delegate, S. S. Cahill; Alternate, W. Sprague; Division Committee, L. D. Cobb, 3 years; E. G. Chase, 2 years; D. Conway, 1 year. The name of the new division is Pine Tree, and its number, 66. They will meet for the present at 10:00 a. m., on the third Sunday of each month, at Rossini hall. The officers were then installed; after which the new division were given some instructions and closed in due form.

I predict, that Pine Tree Division 66, will in the near future, be a shining light among the divisions of the Order. They have the material and the ability, as well as the manifest interest, to make a mark for themselves, and that they are determined so to do I am well assured. I don't believe that any division of the Order was ever organized under more auspicious circumstances than this one. There were about 150 Brothers representing Divisions 75, 122, 146, 151, 157, 198, 201, 219 and 237 present, giving, not only the members of the new division an idea of what the Order is, but those upon the outside as well.

Payson Tucker, the general manager of the Maine Central, did all in his power to aid and assist the Brothers in the work of organizing, and if any one thinks that it was not appreciated, they should have been present and heard the cheers given for the gentleman in question. The management of the Boston & Maine, also tendered a special train over the eastern, and also over the western division, to accommodate those of the Brothers who were desirous of attending, for which many thanks and kind words were expressed on all sides.

On the whole, I don't think I ever spent a day in my life, of which in the future I can look back to, with as much satisfaction and congratulation, as the 21th day of March 1890; and I believe that the whole Order can congratulate itself upon this accession to its ranks, as I believe it to be one of which they may well feel proud. I desire to publicly thank all those Brothers who aided by their presence, and more especially to those who assisted me so ably in filling the chairs, and conferring the work. To Brother Mooney, I feel that I am more indebted than any other, as he was of material assistance to me, both before and after, as well as at the time of organizing, and I sincerely trust, that all who were present at that time may feel, that the day was well spent, and that the Order of Railway Conductors is the gainer by adding to its roster Pine Tree Division 66.

Yours truly, in P. F.,

C. H. WILKINS.

A. G. C. C.

PUEBLO, Colo., March 22, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Since writing to you, I have had more business than a "cranberry merchant." On the 21st of February, I attended the ball of Division 60, an account of which I handed you in Sedalia paper. I can only emphasize what the papers say about the elegance of the arrangements and the enjoyable time had. On the 22d and 23d, attended Union meeting with Division 60. The meeting was quite well attended, and matters of vital importance which will come before the Grand Division were exhaustively and intelligently discussed. Brother Daniels was present, also many visiting Brothers. From Sedalia, Brother Daniels and myself went to St. Louis and spent the day most pleasantly with Brothers Fitzgerald, Lewis and other Brothers of Division 3. From St. Louis, I embarked for Temple, Texas, where I spent three or four days with the members of 217. I was very pleasantly entertained by Brothers Helm, Kelsey, Garlick, Bachman and others. The reports which have been floating around about this division are grossly exaggerated. They have not committed any such childish act as they are reported to have done. Division 217 is still Division 217, and I predict with confidence, they will there remain. I came back to Denison and met 53, the banner division of the state, at their regular meeting, March 2d. Here I again experienced the unexcelled hospitality of the many members of 53, whom I always am glad to see.

From Denison I went to Parsons, and spent a day most pleasantly with Brother Maxwell and others of Division 161. Brother Maxwell has blossomed out a wholesale groceryman.

Having an engagement with Division 35 for the 9th, I returned via Kansas City and Cedar Rapids, spending one day at the office, securing information and making arrangements relative to important work to be done immediately. If it were possible, I had intended to spend the latter half of this month and April, in visiting Divisions in Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin. Other work that could not be delayed has prevented. Cases of grievances, the details of which would hardly be in place here, demand prompt attention.

Sunday, the 9th, and Monday, the 10th, I spent at North Platte, Neb., with Division 35. We could not have any meeting Sunday, but had one on Monday, the time being spent in practice on the ritual work. From North Platte I went to Dodge City, Kas., where we have no division, but where several of our members are located and who are unable to attend the meetings of any division. I spent a day with them and instructed several of them in the work, being ably assisted by Brother Deering of Division 11. From Dodge City I went to Topeka to visit 179. From some cause unknown to me, no meeting was held. I next proceeded to Newton to meet with No. 11. and spent two days as pleasantly as it is possible for days to be spent. All of Sunday afternoon and evening were spent in the division room, and both sessions were well attended. This is certainly one of our banner divisions. Leaving Newton I started for Leadville, the "City of the Clouds," where was a division to organize. Brother J. S. Scott, of No. 11, accompanied me from Newton, and Brother F. H. Scovill, of 44, from Denver. On the 20th, I organized Holy Cross Division 252, at Leadville, Colorado. The charter members number sixteen, of whom nine were present. Very ably assisted by Brothers Moran, of 244, Scott, of 11, Madison 244, Dunn, Grom and Scovill, of 44. I opened a special session of the Grand Division and the new division was organized. The entire day and evening was spent in the work, and very thorough instructions in the ritual work given. The following officers were elected and installed: C. C., R. C. Bowdish; A. C. C., W. P. Dale; S. and T., C. D. Robinson; S. C., E. S. Dunn; J. C., L. A. Singleton; I. S., W. Henderson; O. S., George Hewett; Division Committee, W. P. Dale, C. D. Robinson and R. C. Bowdish; Delegate, C. D. Robinson, and L. A. Singleton, Alternate. They will meet at K. P. hall, 127 East Fifth street, Leadville, the first Sunday, at 7:30 p. m., and the third Sunday, at 1:30 p. m., each month. Speaking for Brothers Scovill and Scott, as well as for myself, I emphatically announce, that we were royally entertained, and every minute of the time spent in Leadville was most happily spent. The time we spent at the home of Brother C. D. Robinson and wife, being by no means the least pleasant. The division starts out with a very good prospect, having some of the best of material, and being very efficiently officered. The choice of the division for their most important offices being most wise. We will always remember our very pleasant visit, and the handsome efforts of Brothers Bowdish, Dale and others to make it enjoyable.

We have come to Pueblo to attend Union meeting with Division 36, and from the way the boys are dropping in, the meeting promises to be well attended. I will tell you of it later. My time for the next two or three weeks will be wholly taken up in grievance matters, and I cannot give details here. I left home the middle of February, and there is no prospect of returning before May first. I am glad to see and hear of so many Union meetings throughout the country. It evinces a new interest and I predict they will assist the Grand Division in taking such action as will place the Order in a much better position to do for its members, that which organization should accomplish. I look to see a new day breaking through the clouds after the Grand Division, and our organization march steadily on to most eminent success.

With most earnest hopes and best wishes for the welfare of not only the organization, but every individual member, I am very truly,

Yours, in P. F.,

E. E. CLARK.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia, March 31st, 1890.

Editor Conductor:

My attention has been called to articles going the rounds of the press, that I interfered with the action of the Order in the recent N. Y. L. E. & W. book examination case. I have no official knowledge that any of our members objected to this mode of examination, and know of but two persons who personally did object, as I was not called into the case at all. When on my way east on another matter, I met Brother M. Clancy, a member of our Executive Committee, and for the past twenty-five years a conductor on these divisions, and after consultation with him, I wired the officers that "John F. McVean did not represent the Order of Railway Conductors or its members on the N. Y. P. & O. division." McVean was at that time a suspended member of the Order and could not represent the Order even if directed to do so.

C. S. WHEATON,
G. C. C.

ROLL OF MEMBERS XXII GRAND DIVISION.

GRAND OFFICERS.

C. S. Wheaton, G. C. C.
W. P. Daniels, G. S. and T.
F. P. Silvernail, G. J. C.
P. J. Collins, G. O. S.

C. H. Wilkins, A. G. C. C.
E. E. Clark, G. S. C.
E. Munday, G. I. S.
W. C. Cross, Ex. Com.
H. Evans, Ex. Com.

M. Clancy, Ex. Com.
J. H. Latimer, Ins. Com.
W. J. Durbin, Ins. Com.
C. E. Weisz, Ins. Com.

DELEGATES.

Div. 1, J. P. Esmay,
" 2, H. S. Chapman,
" 3, W. F. Lewis,
" 4, T. M. Landon,
" 5, Geo. Dewey,
" 6, C. C. Rice,
" 7, J. E. Archer,
" 8, J. D. Shults,
" 9, J. H. Stowell,
" 10, M. Dearborn,
" 11, J. C. Weeks,
" 12, F. Transue,
" 13, G. Gillespie,
" 14, C. P. Hodges,
" 15, M. Wade,
" 16, J. McAuliffe,
" 17, R. A. Purdon,
" 18, J. H. Decker,
" 19, G. W. Huntley,
" 20, T. Harrington,
" 21, C. E. Drew,
" 22, G. K. Klein,
" 23, F. R. McKelvey,
" 24, E. D. Nash,
" 25, G. W. Howland,
" 26, E. W. Purrett,
" 27, J. L. O'Brien,
" 28, W. J. Brownson,
" 29, W. M. Dickson,
" 30, T. H. Riley,
" 31, D. E. Dana,
" 32, C. W. Everts,
" 33, W. H. Crosby,
" 34, F. Champlin,
" 35, N. R. McBride,
" 36, A. K. Waddell,
" 37, Sam. Phipps,
" 38, H. Case,
" 39, W. H. DeWitt,
" 40, F. M. Sanders,
" 41, M. Shehan,
" 42, S. R. Green,
" 43, M. W. Welch,
" 44, Levi Greer,
" 45, Wm. Moffatt,
" 46, W. H. Sherman,
" 47, A. E. J. Percival,
" 48, C. A. Sperry,
" 49, Ed. Jarvies,
" 50, F. M. Platt,
" 51, J. D. Hunt,
" 52, N. Decker,
" 53, C. N. Knowlton,
" 54, W. W. Appgar,
" 55, N. Watkins,
" 56, J. M. Stearns,

Div. 57, W. R. Bell,
" 58, J. R. Partland,
" 59, J. M. Chase,
" 60, F. L. Mead,
" 61, J. E. Young,
" 62,
" 63, Geo. Campbell,
" 64, S. Ingham,
" 65, Wm. Vahey,
" 66, S. S. Cahill,
" 67, T. J. Quinlan,
" 68, A. B. Robbins,
" 69, F. A. Pollock,
" 70, C. E. Trussell,
" 71,
" 72, A. L. Carey,
" 73, P. C. Lockwood,
" 74, E. H. Jones,
" 75, V. Pigeon,
" 76, L. Campbell,
" 77, B. F. Blount,
" 78, G. W. Ashford,
" 79, G. W. Scott,
" 80, S. H. Vernal,
" 81, E. D. Terry,
" 82, C. H. Kinzie,
" 83, D. S. Hecker,
" 84, F. L. Moore,
" 85, H. L. Keaggy,
" 86, J. Gibbs,
" 87, J. H. Ruben,
" 88, M. Dussault,
" 89, H. S. Reardon,
" 90, J. Mahoney,
" 91, Wm. Dunn,
" 92, L. L. Helmer,
" 93, E. A. Weston,
" 94, M. T. Coates,
" 95, F. C. Stuby,
" 96, C. D. Judd,
" 97, H. A. Perry,
" 98, P. L. Coleman,
" 99, W. L. Leonard,
" 100, E. Morrell,
" 101, C. H. Haselton,
" 102, G. H. Higgins,
" 103, H. M. Mounts,
" 104, J. E. Brazee,
" 105, R. E. Harris,
" 106, Ira Yantis,
" 107, John Conley,
" 108, Wm. Murray,
" 109, S. H. Brokaw,
" 110, F. F. Barnett,
" 111, R. D. Simpson,
" 112, T. C. Borden,

Div. 113, J. F. McCaffrey,
" 114, G. E. Vance,
" 115, W. V. Stafford,
" 116, L. P. Charles,
" 117, G. M. Miles,
" 118, M. Kent,
" 119, I. M. Van Slyke,
" 120, C. C. Cronin,
" 121, R. Addington,
" 122, C. D. Baker,
" 123, L. R. Jeter,
" 124, E. E. Clark,
" 125, J. Sullivan,
" 126, Wm. Flynn,
" 127, C. D. Knowles,
" 128, John Flinn,
" 129, T. Summerton,
" 130, E. McKenna,
" 131, M. Malloy,
" 132, W. J. Patterson,
" 133, J. W. Simmers,
" 134, G. M. Dillon,
" 135,
" 136, C. W. Killgore,
" 137,
" 138, J. G. Philbrick,
" 139, R. G. Yearwood,
" 140, C. A. Alvis,
" 141, D. Leddy,
" 142, C. Culross,
" 143, J. P. Stutsman,
" 144, C. S. Shaffer,
" 145, D. C. Hugaboom,
" 146, J. G. Dobbie,
" 147, J. Mahan,
" 148, W. E. Rape,
" 149, J. E. Barry,
" 150, J. P. Smith,
" 151, J. Abbott,
" 152, A. J. Blanton,
" 153, J. Rimmell,
" 154, M. F. Collins,
" 155, H. T. Bolles,
" 156, P. F. McQuade,
" 157, W. R. Mooney,
" 158, A. A. Davis,
" 159, J. H. Sayers,
" 160, J. F. Cavanaugh,
" 161, W. K. Maxwell,
" 162, H. O. Leary,
" 163, S. Church,
" 164, W. Winebrenner,
" 165, W. H. Churchill,
" 166, W. H. Budd,
" 167, G. R. Donovan,
" 168, N. Devoe,

DELEGATES—Continued.

Div. 169, H. D. Staats,	Div. 198, A. Beale,	Div. 227,
" 170, E. G. Blaisdell,	" 199, C. E. Cole,	" 228, No delegate elected.
" 171, T. G. Ross,	" 200, E. Langworthy,	" 229, Wm. Boate,
" 172, W. A. McCurdy,	" 201, A. S. Ostrander,	" 230, C. M. Fouchi,
" 173, A. M. Wright,	" 202, J. A. Hobbs,	" 231, J. T. Savage,
" 174, J. Baughman,	" 203, W. J. Dickson,	" 232, J. Webber,
" 175, H. McDonald,	" 204, F. W. McVeigh,	" 233, M. Severance,
" 176, R. E. Maleady,	" 205, T. J. Lassiter,	" 234, W. T. Darby,
" 177, M. R. Mathews,	" 206, F. G. Schmitt,	" 235, B. Van Vliet,
" 178, W. H. Scholes,	" 207, J. E. Coulter,	" 236, T. J. Kelley,
" 179, A. J. Rader,	" 208, S. C. Gilbert,	" 237, E. E. Bryant,
" 180, R. A. Broyles,	" 209, R. Hunter,	" 238, C. J. Blanchard,
" 181, T. A. Brown,	" 210, W. C. Butler,	" 239, C. H. Petry,
" 182, H. Leach,	" 211, E. Hamilton,	" 240,
" 183, D. Maloney,	" 212, C. N. Pettegrew,	" 241, W. C. Turner,
" 184, A. J. Frenger,	" 213, E. F. Ryan,	" 242, H. A. Washburn,
" 185, W. E. Stoddard,	" 214, Y. C. Campbell,	" 243, G. McCauley,
" 186, W. C. Rabb,	" 215, O. E. Hughes,	" 244, W. C. Sanders,
" 187, A. J. Jones,	" 216, T. Minahan,	" 245, E. D. Gow,
" 188, T. J. Preston,	" 217, G. A. Helm,	" 246, L. C. Lawson,
" 189, H. McIntosh,	" 218, W. H. Wright,	" 247, E. S. Mabie,
" 190, M. H. Shields,	" 219, F. J. McPeake,	" 248, J. P. Graham,
" 191, J. M. Rapelje,	" 220, F. E. Ketchum,	" 249, J. S. Page,
" 192, R. Laughlin,	" 221, T. S. Clarkon,	" 250, M. C. Savage,
" 193, B. N. Utterback,	" 222, F. W. Kimball,	" 251, O. J. Kingsbury,
" 194, J. W. Wayland,	" 223,	" 252, C. D. Robinson,
" 195, H. H. Wells,	" 224, W. Pierce,	" 253, J. B. Carlin,
" 196, J. C. Hill,	" 225, T. B. Holmes,	" 254, S. W. Merrill.
" 197, W. H. Cummings,	" 226, W. H. Fawcett,

PERMANENT MEMBERS.

Archer, J. H.	Davidson, I. F.	Hammond, C. F.	Loughridge, G. M.	Permar, W.
Arnum, B.	Davis, J. L.	Hammond, G. R.	Maxwell, W. J.	Phipps, S.
Baker, C. H.	Defries, S. H.	Harris, W. N.	Millard, C. A.	Randolph, J. S.
Belknap, E. H.	Duffy, P. F.	Hoadly, M. S.	McBane, L.	Reese, F. H.
Blakslee, E. H.	Ellis, J. L.	Howard, John	McDonald, T. J.	Richmond, E. J.
Brigham, C. S.	Fay, E. L.	Howe, J. B.	McKain, J.	Robinson, J. N.
Brown, A. G.	Fessenden, C. B.	Hunt, E. B.	Mitchell, G. S.	Roberts, J. R.
Bunnell, F. A.	Fitzgerald, R. E.	Hurty, H.	Mitchell, T. M.	Rosenkrans, F.
Bycraft, R.	Flack, W. W.	Ingram, W. H.	Moore, S. F. Jr.	Sackett, O.
Carver, L. R.	Flint, F. W.	Jackman, W. J.	Morford, J. B.	Sheehan, W. P.
Chittenden, S. D.	Forker, W. E.	Johnston, J. B. W.	Ogilvie, J.	Soule, E. O.
Collins, W. L.	Gardner, A. H.	Johnson, J. T.	Park, W. L.	Stanchfield, C. A.
Coman, E. B.	Garretson, A. B.	King, C. T.	Parker, A. S.	Stone, E. A.
Cowardin, R. C.	Gaylord, A. E.	Kitto, J. B.	Parker, C. C.	Strang, W. J.
Cutter, A. H.	German, L.

HALL OF CRAWFORD DIVISION, No. 109, }
March 17, 1890. }

WHEREAS, An All Wise Providence has permitted the removal from earthly scenes our beloved Brother, John Carter; therefore be it

Resolved, That in his death we lose one of our truest Brothers, the community an honorable and popular citizen, and his family a dutiful and affectionate son.

Resolved, That we extend to the family of our deceased Brother, our profoundest sympathy in their great affliction.

Resolved, That our thanks be extended to Bro. John Swisher, train master of the Indianapolis Division of the C., C. C. & St. L., railway, and Brother C. A. Allen, train master of the Western Division, N. Y., P. & O. railway, for courtesies shown on this occasion.

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for thirty days in honor of our deceased Brother.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this division, be published in the Galion Sun-Review, Galion Inquirer, The News, at La Rue, and the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, and a copy sent to his relatives.

S. H. BROKAW, }
L. S. NELSON, } Committee.
L. MCBANE, }

At a regular meeting of Trenton Division No. 42, O. R. C., held February 16th, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Chief of all conductors to remove by death from the home of Brother P. D. Watson, a devoted and loving wife; therefore be it Resolved, That the members of this division most sincerely sympathize with Brother Watson, and extend to him our deep sympathy in this, his hour of sorrow.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of our division, and that a copy be sent to Brother Watson, and that they be sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

She was a gentle, loving mother,
A wife most kind and true,
But has gone to her Ida in Heaven.
To wait for her Nellie and you.

Mrs. Watson was a Miss Pillsbury, and was born at Stafford, N. H., March 23d, 1843; married Bro. Watson January 27th, 1861, and departed this life January 15th, 1890. Brother Watson has one daughter to share with him his sorrow and great loss.

Committee,

C. C. HATCH,
E. A. STONE,
W. R. HALE.

TRURO, N. S., March, 1890.

At a regular meeting of Howe Division No. 203, O. R. C., held in their hall, March 16, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to take from our midst our beloved Brother, Joseph McDowell;

Resolved, That we the members of Howe Division No. 203, desire to offer our tribute of respect to our departed Brother, and tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved widow and fatherless children.

Resolved, That by the death of Brother Joseph McDowell, Howe Division No. 203, has lost an earnest and worthy member, and his mourning family are deprived of a kind and indulgent father, whose vacant seat in our division will ever remind us of the dangers that surround us, that in the fullness of life, we are in the midst of death.

Resolved, That to the widow and family, we offer our heartfelt sympathy in this, their hour of affliction, and tender our aid and protection in a time of need.

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days, and that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this meeting; that a copy be presented to the bereaved widow, and that they be published in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR and local papers.

JAS. CRAIGIE, }
W. MCCLAFFERTY, } Committee.
H. D. ARCHIBALD. }

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

Mrs. Harriet G., wife of ex-Conductor Seward Goss, died at her residence on Paige street, in this village, on Saturday last, of pneumonia, aged 62 years. Mrs. Goss was born at Poland, Me., in 1828, and became the wife of Mr. Goss in 1848. Four years thereafter she came with her husband to Oswego, where they have since resided. She was the mother of two daughters, one of whom (Anna, the wife of Rev. H. W. Sherwood, of Rondout, N. Y.), survives her. The deceased has been long and well known in Oswego for many Christian excellencies, and will be long remembered for her sympathy with the sorrowing and for the aid which she rendered the destitute.

EAST SAGINAW, March 16, 1890.

At a regular meeting of East Saginaw Division No. 192, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased an all wise Creator to remove from this earthly sphere, the wife and mother of our worthy Brother, John Madden, we feel that it is meet that we extend to him in his bereavement, our condolence and sympathy; therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Secretary be instructed to extend to Brother Madden, the sympathy, sorrow and condolence of the members of East Saginaw Division 192, and that a copy be sent to the CONDUCTOR for publication.

R. LAUGHLIN,
CHAS. MATHIAS,
Committee.

EAST SAGINAW, March 16, 1890.

At a regular meeting held on Sunday the 16th, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted, death having entered the family circle and removed the mother of our worthy Brother William Beal; therefore, be it

Resolved, That East Saginaw Division No. 192, extend to Brother Beal their sincere sorrow and sympathy in this the hour of his bereavement, and commend him to that all wise Being, that doeth all things well. Be it further Resolved, That a copy of the above be sent the CONDUCTOR for publication.

R. LAUGHLIN,
CHAS. MATHIAS,
Committee.

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Grand Chief Conductor of the universe to remove from our midst our beloved friend and Brother, George Robinson, who was drowned in the Ottawa river, at Vaudreuil, on the 23d of November, by falling from the bridge while in the faithful discharge of his duty.

WHEREAS, While we humbly bow to the will of Almighty God, we do not the less mourn the loss of our Brother, who has been so suddenly taken from us.

Resolved, That by the death of Brother Robinson, Division No. 75 has lost a worthy member, the company an efficient conductor, and his bereaved wife and only son are deprived of a kind and indulgent husband and father, and whose vacant seat in our division will ever remind us, that 'in the midst of life, we are in death.'

Resolved, That while our sympathy cannot mitigate the sorrow which time alone can heal, yet realizing keenly the loss this division has sustained in the death of our Brother, we wish nevertheless, to extend to the wife and son of our deceased Brother, our heartfelt sympathy in their great affliction; remembering that He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb will never forsake them, but love and care for them to the end.

Resolved, That the thanks of this division be tendered to Mr. J. Stephenson, our worthy superintendent, on behalf of the company, for the kind words of consolation and assistance he rendered us in our efforts to recover the body of our lamented Brother from the watery depths.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our late Brother Robinson, one to Mr. J. Stephenson, and that they be published in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

J. S. RANDOLPH,
J. H. ELLIOTT,
Committee.

AURORA, March 4, 1890.

At a regular meeting of Belknap Division No. 96, Sunday, March 2, 1890, it was Resolved, That as death has entered the home of Brother E. A. Nall, and taken from the midst of his family the little nineteen months old Clara; therefore, be it Resolved, That the sympathy of Belknap Division No. 96, be extended Brother Nall and his sorrowing wife, in this their hour of sorrow and gloom.

P. B. CRANCE,
ROBT. CHILVERS. } Committee.
C. D. ROSSETER. }

The arrival of a bright boy baby at the home of Brother T. E. Sheerin, is the latest announcement. "Tom's all right."

Brother James Moore, of Elmira Division No. 9, has secured a deserving promotion from the local freight to extra passenger conductor, on Buffalo division of the D. L. & W. Ry.

Brother G. C. Peifer of Division 114, had the misfortune to lose his hand, February 27. He held two certificates in the Benefit Department of the Order and will receive $5000.00.

Any one knowing the present address of Frank A. Jackson, will confer a favor by notifying G. O. Miller, 119 Manson street, Waterloo, Iowa, Secretary and Treasurer, Johnson Division No. 67.

Brother E. O. Soule, train master B. C. R. & N., Iowa Falls, this state, dropped in on the Grand Secretary one windy day in March 1890. He reports business good in his territory and hopes of an increase in the future.

Brother R. A. Traver, member of Division No. 2, Buffalo, N. Y., called on us a few days ago. He was taking a trip west in order to see what kind of people live here and whether they are of the same race as those who live east of the world's fair city.

Brother J. B. Gauss of Division 34, Boone, Iowa, spent part of a day with the Grand Secretary and the editor. The Brother was on his way to accept a position on the Santa Fe, at Fort Madison, Iowa. He was with the Northwestern for many years and later with the Northern Pacific.

Geo. W. Ashford, C. C., Savanna Division No. 78, Savanna, Ill., and at present agent for the Traveler's Accident Insurance company, paid us a visit a few days ago. He looks hearty and well, and thinks that a little breeze from the tranquil waters of the Genesee river in Rochester, will give a little tone and color to his naturally pale and delicate cheeks.

We are just in receipt of the notice of the resignation of Brother Ira Yantis, as Secretary of Division No. 106. To Brother Hyde, his successor, we wish to say, that only the strict and prompt attention to his duties as Secretary will enable us to say that Division No. 106 has lost nothing by this change. Brother Yantis, you have done well. May your track be level and straight, your orders plain, and your train always "on time."

An officer who has served his division long and faithfully, is J. T. Johnson of 123, who retires from the office of Secretary on account of a change of location. If the new Secretary, Brother J. G. Visscher, whose address is 658 First street, looks after the interests of his division and the Order as well, in the future, as Brother Johnson has in the past, neither the division or the grand officers will have cause for complaint.

Brother N. B. Travis, member of Division No. 67, Waterloo, Iowa, gave us a call a few days ago. He was on his way to the great state of Wisconsin, where the judges instruct their juries to indict all parties who are caught in the act of playing "cinch" for prizes, and punish them as gamblers. We do not live in that great state, but if we were a resident there, would be obliged to plead guilty of at least 500 counts. From there the Brother goes north to accept a position, and will give his P. O. address and also occupation.

"Sam" Phipps, of Phillipsburg, is the oldest conductor on the Central railroad, and perhaps in the United States that has run one train twenty-five years. "Sam" was a despatcher in the Phillipsburg yard two years ago, and was then asked to conduct the construction train, which he took charge of from that time until now. He is considered the best conductor of what is known as a "wildcat" train in New Jersey. He always has his train safely side-tracked when other trains have the right of way, and manages to accomplish a vast amount of work for the company every day. During all the years he has never had a car broken or cost the company a dollar for damages through his negligence. While despatcher at Phillipsburg, when in the act of running to a switch, his foot was caught in a frog. A car was thrown in the switch and came upon him before he could extricate his foot, and the wheels tore off the sole of his boot and crushed the foot so badly that the two physicians called insisted on amputation. He would not consent, and they insisted that he would lose his leg and life by refusing. He very coolly bet them a keg of beer that he would walk across his room on that foot in six weeks. They took the bet and in just six weeks from that day accomplished the feat, but remarked to a friend afterwards that it nearly killed him. He reported for duty in three months, but has a hitch in his gait to remind him of the accident. He is genial at all times and a great favorite with all the employes of the road. He has refused several offers to conduct a passenger train, and says he prefers a "wildcat" train, as it requires more brains to run it successfully.

E. H. BELKNAP, EDITOR.

W. N. GATES, ADVERTISING MANAGER, 10 Public Square, Cleveland, O.

WM. P. DANIELS, MANAGER.

The City Hall, Rochester, N. Y., in which the 22d Grand Division will hold its sessions, is located between Fitzhugh street and Irving Place. It is a magnificent stone building, erected in 1880, costing $500,000.00. It is in the same block with the Livingston House, one block from Powers' hotel and fire proof building (in which is located the noted Powers' art gallery); one block from Hotel Bartholomay, two blocks from New National hotel, four blocks from New Osborn House, five blocks from Whitcomb House, six blocks from Congress hall and Brackett House. The hall in which the Grand Division will assemble, will be furnished with tables and chairs for all members. Street cars leave the "Four corners," one block from the hall, every few minutes, running past the doors of the hotels. Charlotte, on Lake Ontario, nine miles from Rochester, is the "Coney Island" of the city, and will probably be open to the public during our stay in Rochester. Powers' art gallery will be one of the places of interest to be visited by all. The Falls of the Genesee river, over 100 feet in height, are within the city limits. A great piece of engineering is the elevated tracks of the New York Central railway, at the east end of which is located their magnificent passenger depot. The "Erie," B. R. & P., and the W. N. Y. & P. R's, all have new and elegant passenger depots in this city.

"The Livingston," which will be the headquarters of the Order while in the city, is a fine new fire proof building, erected in 1888, and is modern in every respect. Is the nearest hotel to the hall; has 150 rooms, and from personal acquaintance with one of the proprietors, Mr. John I. Harmon, we do not hesitate to assert, that all who make this their home during their stay in the city will be well taken care of, in fact there is not a hotel in the list which is not "first-class." Mr. Irish, proprietor of the Rossin House, in Toronto, has written to some of the hotel people of Rochester commending us to them, as ladies and gentlemen to be well taken care of. Rates of these hotels to our members and ladies will be given all in a circular to be issued soon by the Grand Secretary.

WILL THEY PERMIT STRIKES.

"The twenty-second annual meeting of the Order of Railway Conductors will be held on the second Tuesday in May at Rochester, N. Y. There is considerable anticipation regarding the meeting, inasmuch as a member of the Executive Committee has intimated that the clause in the ritual prohibiting strikes will be stricken out. From this, he said, he did not wish it understood that from that time the conductors would strike if they had any grievances, but it would place the various divisions on a basis where they can resent any injustice in such manner, should they choose to do so, without making them liable to lose their standing with the Grand Division. There are now 254 divisions, and the membership has reached over 18,000. Grand Chief Wheaton is quoted as saying, that at the next annual meeting the Order of Railway Conductors would place themselves on the same ground regarding strikes as the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers."

The above paragraph is going the rounds of the press. The Grand Chief Conductor states that he has had no interview with a reporter on the subject, and has made no such statement.

Will the readers of the CONDUCTOR forgive us this time? We are a little late and do not claim very much for this issue anyway. We have been confined to our house (and bed most of the time), since March 28th. Have had an attack of congestion of the brain, followed by rheumatism and symptoms of the "Grippe;" as yet unable to use our eyes to read or write. The "boys" are doing the work for the CONDUCTOR this time, Brothers Wheaton and Daniels both being absent from the office. If health is restored, we promise to make up for present shortcomings in next issue.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., MAY 1, 1890.

NO. 9.

ROCHESTER.

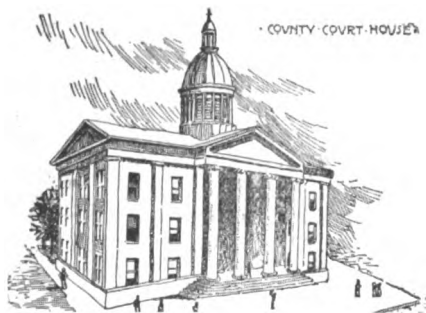

CITY and port of entry, capital of Monroe county, N. Y., 229 miles west of Albany. The first house was erected in 1812; incorporated as the village of Rochesterville, 1817; as a city in 1834.

Population—in 1820, 1,500; 1830, 10,863; 1840, 20,191; 1850, 36,403; 1860, 48,204; 1876, 82,500. The site is upon a level plain on both banks of the Genesee river, 7 miles from, and 263 ft. above Lake Ontario. In the course of the river through the city there are three falls of 96 feet, 26 feet and 83 feet respectively, below the last of which the stream becomes navigable for all lake vessels. From the upper fall, near the center of the city, nearly to the lake, the river banks are of precipitous rock, varying in height from 100 to 210 feet. The immense water-power afforded by these falls is the foundation of the prosperity and rapid growth of the city, the water being thrice used in its course through its limits. The main line of the New York Central R'y crosses the city at the upper fall, and there are three branches of the road centering here—one to Syracuse via Auburn, one to Niagara Falls, and one to the mouth of the Genesee.

Other railways having termini here are the New York, Lake Erie & Western, the Northern Central, the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh, and the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg. The Erie Canal crosses the river by a fine stone aqueduct 848 feet long, on seven arches, and the Genesee Valley Canal coming from the south ends here. The city has an average length of four miles by about the same breadth. It is laid out in broad streets, well paved and lighted, and abounding in fine shade trees. There are also numerous and spacious parks. The dwellings are, to a much greater degree than as usual in cities of its size, detached and stand back from the streets, and are surrounded with lawns and shrubbery. The business portion is notably well built. Among the public buildings, the City Hall, Court House, Free Academy and Savings Bank form a conspicuous group, while in their immediate neighborhood is Powers' Commercial Fireproof building, one of the finest in the country, erected at an expense of over $1,000,000. The churches are sixty in number, including the Roman Catholic Cathedral, a fine edifice of moderate size, but effective and correct in style. Other examples of good taste in architecture are afforded in the First Presbyterian, St. Peter's and the First Baptist churches. In the matter of education,

Rochester has for many years been prominent among the cities of the land. The University of Rochester, established 1850, has taken high rank among the colleges of the United States. It possesses a spacious building, containing the chapel, cabinet and recitation rooms, 100x60 feet, constructed of red sand-stone, and Sibley Hall, constructed of a similar material, costing $125,000. and containing the University library of 13,000 volumes, both situated in a campus of twenty-three acres finely laid out. The endowment (including buildings) is about $600,000. The Theological Seminary (Baptist) is located in a fine four-story brick edifice on East avenue and was established in 1850. It is the largest of that denomination in the United States, and has besides a German department in a separate building. Value of real estate, $100,000; of endowment, $250,000, with a library of 8,500 volumes. There are twenty-three public schools of fine size and proportions, divided into primary, intermediate and grammar schools, and the Free Academy (cost $125,000) which affords instruction in the higher branches. Two hundred teachers are engaged in these various schools in the tuition of about 10,000 pupils. The value of the buildings and furniture is $500,000. Connected with this system is the Public Library of 8,000 volumes. It is estimated that 6,500 pupils attend the parochial and other private schools. The Atheneum, a literary association, has been in existence some forty years, and possesses a reading room and a library of 18,000 volumes; and the law library, located in the Court House, has 10,000 volumes.

There are two hospitals (City and St. Mary's), well located in airy situations, with spacious buildings capable of providing for 500 patients, and each is under the care of a competent corps of physicians. The other benevolent institutions are St. Mary's, St. Patrick's, St. Joseph's and the Protestant Orphan Asylums; the Church Home, of the Episcopal church; the Home for the Friendless; the Industrial School, and the Home for Truant Children—all possessing fine buildings. The House of Refuge for juvenile delinquents (a state institution) is located in an enclosure of forty-two acres in the north part of the city. The buildings are 382 feet front, with two large wings at right angles therewith, and several large workshops, etc., in the rear and detached. About 430 boys are confined here, and are instructed in some useful trade. They are sentenced for no fixed period, but are dismissed when by correct behavior and proficiency in work they are deemed by the trustees reformed and capable of earning a support. There has been recently established by the state, a department for the correction of female juvenile delinquents, and a large and beautiful building, capable of accommodating 200 inmates, has been erected near the house for males. Both are under the same supervision and receive prisoners from the central and western parts of the state. The Monroe county Penitentiary, Almshouse and Insane Asylum, located south of the city are a spacious, new, and imposing group of buildings, well constructed with a view to heating and ventilation, and vastly superior in all respects to such institutions in general. The penitentiary receives convicts from many of the counties of Western New York, and is admirably conducted.

Mount Hope Cemetery, one of the oldest of its kind in the United States, was established in 1838, and possesses 200 acres of land on the southern boundary of the city. It is agreeably diversified with hill and dale, and many of the original forest trees have been preserved. The grounds are laid out in a picturesque manner and are admirably kept and cared for. A tower on the highest summit affords a fine view of the city and vicinity, and there is a substantial granite chapel in the grounds, and a beautiful keeper's lodge at the entrance. The Roman Catholic cemetery of the Holy Sepulchre, established 1872, is located north of the city on a fine site of 140 acres, upon which a stone chapel is to be erected. There are two gas companies, one on each side of the river, with a total capital of $1,200,000, and with sixty miles of mains. A street railway company operates its lines on the principal streets. The four savings banks have an aggregate deposit of $13,000,000, and there are six banks of discount, with a combined capital and surplus of $1,800,000, and four private bankers, all with a total deposit of $3,500,000.

A magnificent system of waterworks has recently been constructed at a cost of $3,250,000, with two sources of supply—one from the river, the water being forced through eight miles of mains in the business center by the Molley patent, and is used for suppressing fires and running light machinery—the other is from the Hemlock Lake, twenty-nine miles south and 400 feet above the city. There is a receiving reservoir of 85,000,000 gallons capacity, and a distributing of 45,000,000 gallons, from which the water is sent through sixty miles of mains along all the principal streets. The pressure on the mains is such as to throw from the hydrants a stream 130 feet perpendicularly, and no city is more perfectly guarded from fire. The nursery business, owing to a singular adaptation of soil and climate, has assumed vast proportions. There are 3,500 acres under cultivation in the city and vicinity, yielding an average yearly product of $1,000,000.

The manufacturing interests of the city, owing to its fine water power, are both immense and diversified. In earlier years flour was the chief product, and although now dwarfed by other branches it is still of great importance, there being eighteen mills, grinding annually, with seventy-five run of stone, 2,500,000 bushels of wheat. Ready-made clothing is by far the largest manufacture; capital $2,500,000, with 6,500 employees, and annual sales of $5,500,000. Boots and shoes rank next—$1,250,000 of capital, annual product of $3,500,000 and 2,000 hands. The Leighton Iron Bridge Works employ 300 men and sell $1,000,000 yearly. Eighteen breweries make nearly 100,000 barrels of beer and ale per year. Five tobacco factories produce 1,250,000 pounds, and seventy cigar makers, 9,000,000 cigars. $500,000 is employed in furniture making, with 1,000 hands, annual product, $800,000. The Stewart Rubber Co., recently established, with 100 employees, makes 1,500 pairs of shoes daily, and has ordered machinery which will increase this product to 10,000 pairs per day. The largest carriage factory in the United States is located here, and has a capacity for 800 hands. Among the other larger branches of manufacture are optical instruments, perfumery, steam engines, blast furnaces, fruit canning, glassware, bank locks, agricultural machinery, and two immense establishments for garden and flower seeds.

The city is becoming a great distributing center for coal, which is loaded from railroads on the banks of the river directly into vessels, which convey it to all points on the lakes in yearly increasing quantities. The business center of the fertile Genesee Valley, Rochester exhibits a steady growth in wealth and population, which has never been seriously checked since its foundation. It is divided into sixteen wards, and its assessed valuation is over $60,000,000.

The above is from Johnson's Encyclopedia, edition 1876. In comparison with the present date, Rochester now has thirty-three public schools, with an average daily attendance of over 13,000 pupils, employing 471 teachers. Sales during the year 1889 were as follows: Dry goods, $9,575,000; clothing, $8,325,000; boots and shoes, $7,250,000; groceries, $4,900,000; hardware, $2,500,000; nursery stock, $2,820,000. The railroads now entering Rochester are, B. R. & P., station, 62 West avenue; N. Y. C. & H. R., station, Central avenue, corner North St. Paul street. N. Y. L. E. & W., station Court street; Rochester & Lake Ontario, station, North avenue; Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg, station, 434 State street; Western New York & Pennsylvania, station, 121 West avenue.

Running the Gauntlet.

Among savage tribes of Indians in possession of this country at an early day, was a custom of treating a prisoner, some times, which delusively held out to the captive a hope of escape, called by historians: "Running the gauntlet."

A double line of savages arranged themselves at given distances apart, armed with clubs, whips, knives, &c. This line was composed of warriors, boys and old women. The chiefs, while not taking part in, approved of the performance. Between these lines the victim must run. If he escaped the whole line with life and strength sufficient, after men, boys and women had clubbed him, he was allowed to go. If he escaped—rarely only to find life a burden from wounds received in the attempt.

We profess to have outgrown the savage element in our nature by the aid of civilization. Yet, men are running the gauntlet daily, with almost as little success as did the prisoner of the savage.

It is proverbial, once thoroughly committed to the railway service, a man becomes unfitted for other occupation. This seems especially true of the train service branch of the calling. One may be said to be a prisoner to his profession. Visions of freedom may come, seldom liberty. In the discharge of his daily duty, the conductor runs the gauntlet. Not between double lines, but along a line full of obstacles which he must encounter. There is danger to him in every one. In the majority of cases bringing defeat. If he escapes all, and honorably completes his course, he is a curiosity as rare as the Indian captive, who reaches the end of the line successfully.

THE SOCIAL CLUB.

Lamentable as it may seem, he is in danger from his fellow prisoners, who, through a mistaken social sense of fraternal attention, place serious obstacles in his way. Away from home, at one end of the line or the other; with weary body and lonely heart, the offer, "take something?" finds, often, too ready acceptance. Thus the most formidable club he encounters is wielded with friendly intention, but deadly effect, making him an easier victim for others awaiting him.

THE GAMBLING CLUB.

Another club in the hands of his friends (?) is the invitation to "play" for stakes, persuading him, a game for small sums is "only to relieve the monotony of waiting his 'turn.'" Here often friends (?) cripple him seriously. If he neither drinks or "plays," he escaped two deadly clubs, so often fatal.

THE CHIEF CLUB.

Girding himself for a "start," he consults the bulletin board, often so filled with orders that "must be obeyed;" some of them "aged" yet respectable, so many of them "in force" since not recalled. Some B. B's are like political office holders: full of "hangers on," who seem never to resign and never die. He must run the gauntlet of consequences should he miss one of the manifold notices, and be clubbed with the fact, that "no excuse will be taken," etc. Here is an improvement (?) on the savage method since our starting, the chiefs, through bulletins, take a "whack" at the prisoner.

THE SNEAK'S CLUB.

Escaping the chief's club by successfully dodging, he gets started. Hardly is he out of the station, ere he meets the man who insinuatingly states: "he patronizes freight trains because he thinks them cheaper than those coaches, see!" This club is avoided at the expense of time, by stopping a heavy train in a "hard place" to put the passenger off, since not allowed to carry passengers, this club may cripple him unless promptly dealt with. If allowed to carry passengers, he then is daily in imminent danger from what may be called

THE BRIBER'S CLUB.

The peddler and drummer with mileage tickets, between the leaves of which is concealed money to tempt the conductor to carry them for less than tariff rate. If fencing avoids this club, he next meets the HYPOCRITE'S CLUB.

This is a wily warrior, detailed to see if he carries passengers at all. This warrior, too frequently, succeeds in getting his scalp. The plea of poverty, sickness, or fraternal relations, causes him to be blinded to the club concealed behind the representations of this specious pleader, until the shadow of its decent is quickly followed by its fall. If he is in the passenger service, he must equally make the "running" as perilous as the former, only under somewhat different guise. The peddler and drummer are there with same club, also the wily warrior, who in this case uses a

NOTCHED CLUB.

The watchful warrior carries a mental stick, upon which he cuts a "notch" every time a cash fare is paid. The knife being exceedingly sharp, sometimes, when not strictly attending to business, slips and an extra notch is the result. The warrior is not furnished with "duplex indicators" to check him, and there is no evidence the knife slipped until, akin to savage custom, the victim's head drops. Then if accused of improper notching, and proven, he replies, "for good of other prisoners and as a sanitary "correcting" measure the knife had to cut somewhere."

LITTLE (?) CLUBS (CUBS).

The Indian line contains old women, who take part in the effort to cripple the runner with their weapons, but no pappoose. Here we improve upon them. Women with half-fare clubs are as much of a terror to the average conductor, as the warrior with a knife to the captive. When a lady with little (?) children gets on the "line," is it not wonderful how fast those children "crowded" each other to see the light of day? She may have four, six, eight, or even ten, none of them over half-fare, mostly under five years.

If the conductor's heart is touched by such an epidemic as eight children under five years, he may, if not stony, accept the situation, risking the "extra notch." If he insists on protecting the company in their rights, admitting they have some rights, although the traveling public think otherwise, talk of squaw abuse of prisoners, if one can exceed the angry, civilized lady (?) when she fails to "work" a conductor who doubts her word, where the evidence of his eyes, and the tender (?) years of her little (?) ones bear him out, she should be imported as a curiosity, as the "only" one of its kind.

KICKER'S CLUB.

Under this head may be classed the man with the limited reduced rate ticket, who was given to understand upon its purchase, "No stop over" would be granted, besides the printed instructions to that effect upon the ticket. Out comes his club to be flourished to compel the conductor to give the stop over, and let him do what he was told he could not do.

TINE CLUBS.

Some Indian curs will bark, as the prisoner goes fleeing down the line. We, also, here improve upon them, and have the educated, civilized hog who grunts a clubbing to the conductor. This specimen occupies two seats by exerting himself with grips, feet and spread-out-ims. Common politeness failing to contract his proportions to make room for some one else, the conductor must interfere, then comes the clubbing.

PETTIFOGGER'S CLUB.

This is wielded by the man who prides himself upon his legal knowledge. If you charge an excess, according to instructions, he clubs you. If more than the proper per cent. a mile, from his view, he clubs you. He refuses this and that, "dares you to do this and that." If he don't cripple you and his club is faced, one almost invariably finds it stuffed, and not dangerous.

QUESTION CLUB.

The questions put to a conductor, entirely foreign to his business, which he is supposed to correctly answer, is surprising. A minister may be ignorant of mechanics; a mechanic of theology; a lawyer of electricity, an electrician of law, with no disparagement to their self respect to say so. Think you a conductor dare admit to a passenger who has paid his fare (he may be a D. H.) he "don't know" the connections at Hong Kong; the "time" due at Bombay; the "speed" of Patagonian railways, or the best hotel in India? If he has no self respect, yes; otherwise, no; or quickly falls the club upon his ignorant head, in shape of exclamations of: "I should think this company would keep men who knew something, or 'you don't know a little bit.'" A conductor, to run the gauntlet successfully must have the patience of Job; the courage of Daniel; the foresight and inspiration of Isaiah and last, but not least, the meekness of Moses. Not having these endowments is why so many faint and fall by the way.

S. E. F.

Trade in Old Bottles.

SOME CURIOUS FACTS ABOUT AN HUMBLE BUT EXTENSIVE INDUSTRY.

Beaming smiles irradiated the countenance of the aged daky as he was shown in a corner of the cellar two large barrels full to the brim of empty claret bottles.

"Ten cents a dozen for the lot," he said.

On a venture 12 cents was demanded by a Washington Star reporter, whose property the bottles were.

"All right, sah," responded the man of color, after a moment's seeming dubita-tion. "I'll jest put 'em in dese yar sacks an' kerry 'em off wid me. My kyart is at de front door."

With this he unloaded himself of half a dozen ancient meal bags—his own clothing look as if it were made from the same material in patches sown together—and proceeded to fill the biggest of the sacks from barrel No. 1. When he had counted into it fourteen bottles, he said :

"One doz'n!"

From this point he kept on up to thirty-two bottles, when he remarked :

"Two doz'n!"

The fifth dozen was "fo doz'n" according to his reckoning, and the eighth dozen was "six doz'n" in like manner. Thus, when all the bags were full and the barrels empty, it was found that there were only twelve dozen altogether. However, the purchaser made it up to some extent by giving some interesting information.

"Dere ain't much fun in dis business, sah," he said, "but it pays big. Dese wine bottles I take to de wine men or to de grocer men. I wheel dis load up to de door ob de shop in my hand kyart, and I go in an' say ;

"Mister, how much is yo' gibbin' a pore ole nigger fer eighteen doz'n clar't bottles ter day—twelve doz'n, dat is, I mean."

"De gem'man says he's gibbin' 18 cents a doz'n, and, ef I can't get him to pay no mo', de sale is made and I kerry de bottles down into de cellar. Dat makes 6 cents ahead on ebery doz'n. But 18 cents am awful low fer clar't bottles. De price is all de time agoin' up and down, and next month it will be 25 cents or mebbe 35 cents a doz'n. April's de great time for shippin' wine dat is brought heah in barls and casks and bottled. It is sent all ober the country, no'th, south an' west, and it uses up a lot of glassware. Why, clar't bottles in Washington sometimes fetch as much as 60 cents a dozen. De furrin ministers an' folks like dem offen pay as much as dat when dey want ter bottle wine. But dey don't buy 'em off us; dey go to a bottle house for 'em. No end ob bottles is sent away from dis yar city to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Toledo, and udder places, all ober. You see, sah, dat so many bottles are allus bein' used and smashed dat no one town kin keep itself supplied, and so de bottles of de country am all de time movin' roun'."

"What is this 'bottle-house' you speak of?" the old man was asked.

"It's a 'stablishment where bottles are bought and sold by millions. I sell all de bottles I git at de bottle-house 'cept de clar't bottles. I git a better price for dem from de grocers an' wine men. But all de rest I take to de bottle-house and dispose ob fer all sorts ob prices. De bottles wot sells de bes' am dese great big ones dat mineral water comes in from Buffalo. Sixty cents a doz'n day is wuth, but I doan git berry many ob 'em. De nex' biggest price I git fer de patent-stopper beer bottles. Ob course dey allus b'long to de beer-sellers and people hab no right ter sell 'em. But dat's none ob my business, and I grab 'em ebery time when I kin. De udder day I bought off a servant gal fer 25 cents a beer box and two doz'n empty bottles dat it held. I sold it fer $2, but de servant gal dun told me yistidday dat her missus had to pay de beer company $6 fer it. But dat wasn't my fault; I was offered de box an' I tuk it. Champagne bottles are wuth 25 cents a doz'n and magnesia bottles 3 cents a piece. Ornary beer bottles ob de sort corks is used fer sells fer 10 cents a doz'n sometimes an' sometimes fer 12 cents. As fer 'poth'caries' bottles, I don't handle 'em, 'kas dere's no money in it. Drug stores won't offen buy old bottles fer medicine, but use new ones, so der is no sale fer goods like dem. De bes' kind ob quart whisky bottles is wuth 5 cents apiece."

"What is done with the bottles after you have delivered them at the bottle house?"

"Well, sah, dey has to be washed fust. De man wot runs de bottle-house has five people washin' bottles fer him all de time. Dey takes de corks out dat have been punched in by dropping a loop ob string froo de neck, gittin' it around de cork, and gibbin' it a yank. You couldn't git out a cork dat way, but day kin do it like streak. Wine bottles kin be washed easy nuff wid cold water, 'kase day has nothin' more in 'em than a leetle dust an dregs, mebbe. But greasy bottles need hot water and ef anything is stuck in 'em pebbles is put in and shaken 'round. When de bottles is washed dey is ready ter be sold or packed in straw an' shipped to udder cities by freight. Dat's about all dere is to de bottle business, sah. Ob course bottles are comin' into Washington by de thousands ebery day wid beer in 'em an' wine and other things. It's de same way in ebery city, and de empty bottles must be a goin' out agin all de time, or wid sumpin' in 'em, ef all de bottles in de country isn't ter collect in one spot."

A Country Idyl.

"Have you dug your grass?" asked the city-chap

Of the staring farmer man,
For he thought he would not crush the swain
Beneath his social ban.

"How was your crop when you dug your grass?
Did the weavils hurt your peas?
And did the canker worm destroy
Your young cucumber trees?

"I love, good sir, the country air,
From the town I fain would flee
And lose myself in rural dreams
'Neath the potato tree.

I would pluck the turnip from its vine,
Thro' the parsnip meadow push,
And rest beneath the grateful shade
Of the bending cabbage bush.

"Oh, I fain would be a simple swain
And drive my yoke of cows,
And rest at noon beneath the shade
Of the rutabaga boughs.

Oh, I'd hunt the woods for the cocoanut bush
The whole of the livelong day,
Or start at noon with the rustic hoe
To dig the hills for hay.

"And if at the noonday I grew faint
With my labor's strain and rush,
I would mix the milkweed's luscious milk
With the mushroom's luscious mush.
I would pluck the pineapple from the pine—
But why has your color fled?"
But the farmer fell with a sickening thud—
The farmer man was dead!

—S. W. Foss in Texas Siftings.

What They Are Worth.

Mme. Modjeska could raise $75,000 to-morrow if anything happened to her. Mrs. Mary Livermore has $75,000 of the $120,000 made from her lectures, and hapless Anna Dickinson, who cleared $25,000 in one season and $160,000 in ten, hasn't a dollar of it left. But she is wiser than she was. Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford published ten books in the last forty years, the proceeds of which amounted to about $6,000 each. Ouida has earned more money than any other woman of the century with the exception of Mme. Patti. Mrs. Southworth's novels brought her a fortune. Mrs. Harriet Hubbard Ayer is coining money. With the exception of Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Mary Ann Connelly, who came to this country forty odd years ago as a steerage passenger and who pulled basting stitches for two years, has more money in her own right than any of the Vanderbilt women, every penny of which she made with her needle. She owns about ten cottages at Long Branch, facetiously known as the party dresses, one which is fit for a king and brings a kingly rent every summer. The most successful money-maker among modern women is Lydia Van Finkelstein, a native of Palestine, a woman of about twenty-eight, and something of a linguistic wonder. She lectures, or talks, rather, on the Holy Land, knows the whole geography of Asia Minor and could enlighten Colonel Ingersoll on the mistakes of the bible, which she knows from cover to cover. In a little less than six years this large blonde biblical talker has cleared $100,000. She gets $100 a lecture, with a percentage of the receipts, and talks from October to May, often giving three lectures in a day.

The Chicago Elevated Railway.

The Lake Street elevated railway, of Chicago, is now in progress of construction. The line is from the east end of Lake Street along that street to the village of Oak Park, about four and one-half miles. In order to get a franchise for the line, it was necessary to obtain the consent of fifty-one per cent. of the owners of the property fronting upon it, exclusive of public property. This has been done, says the Railroad Gazette, and the company has contracts with the property owners and receipts for payments for right of way, thus preventing future questions of damages.

The posts are placed on the curb line. The stations are to be built in the middle of the blocks, in buildings bought or erected by the company, leaving the sidewalks entirely free. It is proposed to build the "up" and "down" stations on alternate blocks, and to make them architectural improvements to the street. The entrances and exits will be entirely within the buildings, and many applications have already been received for renting office room in the stations, and the company expects to make them a considerable source of revenue. By the requirements of the ordinance, the company is compelled to build sixteen stations for four and one-half miles of road, but it is contemplated to start with thirty-two.

The plans and specifications for the structure have been prepared under the supervision of Mr. Theodore Cooper as consulting engineer. A contract for all of the iron work and erection has been made with Messrs. Cofrode & Saylor, of Philadelphia, and erection has already begun. Between twenty and thirty spans are now up. Messrs. Alberger & Fitzgerald are the general contractors for building and equipping the road.

The structure is of wrought iron posts and girders; the posts having a horizontal section of 14 in. by 15 in. Provision for expansion and contraction of the longitudinal girders to the amount of $\frac{3}{4}$ in. will be made in each span; one end of the girder being free to move, and the other bolted to the cross girder. The clear spans of the girders will be of wrought iron with upper and lower chords and web members riveted up of plates and angles.—Scientific American.

train going west was running in sections. The first section got stuck in the snow at Wall Cut, and the second section came up with two powerful engines to pull out the first section. Roadmaster Dobbins was standing in front of the head engine, superintending the work, when in an instant an avalanche of snow came down, swooping him away. He was completely covered by the flying mass of snow and carried a distance of several thousand feet, entirely across the river and onto the Rio Grande tracks, where he managed to extricate himself with great difficulty. He was severely injured. The tremendous volume of snow was piled entirely over the four engines, putting out the fires, and completely buried the mail cars, in which was the mail agent, George Roberts, and Baggage-master Mason, of Denver. It took some time to extricate the men, but neither was injured. Fireman Culbertson was badly scalded.

His Prayer Answered.

A certain Chicago coal man enjoys nothing more than he does a romp with his two pretty boys. After supper every night he has great fun with them. One evening last week his wife was taken sick and he cut short his usual romp, much to the disappointment of the boys, who had been looking forward all day to his homecoming. He told them it was time for them to go to bed, and, like obedient boys, they walked off without a word of remonstrance. Silently they disrobed and prepared to retire. The larger boy said his prayer and found his way between the sheets. Then the little fellow knelt down by the bedside, uttered his prayer and added: "Please, God, make papa funny some more." And the father, who had been waiting just outside the door to see that they retired all right, overheard the petition and went in and gave his two boys another great romp. The little fellow then retired in the firm belief that his prayer had been answered.—Chicago Herald.

Perils of Winter Railroading Among the Mountains.

A great snowslide recently occurred near Wheeler, Col., at what is known as Wall Cut, on the High Line Division of the South Park Railroad, in which two passenger trains came near being sw

"Down Here Among My People.

The parish priest
Of Austerity
Climbed up in a high church steeple
To be nearer God,
So that he might hand
His word down to His people.

When the sun was high,
When the sun was low,
The good man sat unheeded
Sublunary things;
From transcendence was he forever reading.

And now and again,
When he heard the creak
Of the weather vane a turning,
And said, "Of a truth
From God I now am learning."

And in sermon script
He daily wrote
What he thought was sent from Heaven,
And he dropt this down
On the people's heads
Two times one day in seven.

In his age God said,
"Come down and die."
And he cried out from the steeple,
"Where art thou, Lord?"
And the Lord replied,
"Down here among My people!"

—Brewer Mattocks.

Listen.

Who ever you are, as you read this,
 Whatever your troubles or grief,
 I want you to know and to heed this:
 The day draweth near with relief.

No sorrow, no woe is unending,
 Though heaven seems voiceless and dumb,
 So sure as your cry is ascending,
 So surely an answer will come.

Whatever temptation is near you,
 Whose eyes on this simple verse fall;
 Remember good angels will hear you
 And help you to stand if you call.

Though stunned with despair, I beseech you,
 Whatever your losses, your need,
 Believe, when these printed words reach you,
 Believe you were born to succeed.

You are strong, I tell you, this minute,
 Than any unfortunate fate!
 And the coveted prize—you can win it;
 While life lasts 'tis never too late!

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, 1890.

SISTERS: Once more you have seen fit to elect me as your presiding officer, and once more I have accepted the trust. Not because it was my wish; as my plans and purposes were entirely different for the coming year; but the thoughtful kindness shown me at the closing of the past year was not without its teaching. And as it seemed to be the wish of all that I should fill the chair for the coming year, and be the head as well as the servant of this Order. I accepted. Now, hoping to have the co-operation of every officer and every member of this Order (banded together as Sisters should be), let us start in on the new year, acknowledging our weakness and frailties, praying that our minds may be enlightened, our reason strengthened, and our hearts purer, and with help from above we will be strong in truth and abundant in virtue, and that charity shall flow as a stream, wide spread among us.

Now, conscious that we are in the right path, doing our duty, and that with the help of our Heavenly Father we will try to do better than we have the past year; not only having the interest of each and every member of this division at heart, but their families also. And if any one of us are at fault in anything, we will correct, and bear correction, that we may show those who are prejudiced against our Order, that we are banded together for the good of, not only ourselves and families, but the railroad people in general, and those who hear us, and whosoever we come in contact with in our daily walk through life.

Now, let us remember none are perfect, no not one, but yet it is the duty of each and every one, because of the obligation she has taken in this Order, to do no wrong toward another, nor allow any worthy Sister's good name assailed if in our power to prevent it. Do not forget we are banded together to assist the Order of Railway Conductors for moral, social and charitable improvement. Our object is to extend fraternity and promote sociability. Thus admonished, we should be friendly with each other, and render such mutual aid and comfort as may be consistent, without neglect of home duties or injury to ourselves. Our obligation, duties and rules, we are to observe with loyalty, cultivate sisterly love, and remember our motto "TRUE FRIENDSHIP."

May our good influence and power be a silent magnet, not only pervading this division, but at our own homes, that the conductors, (our husbands) may find home the dearest place on earth to them, and that when they go forth on their daily trips, may they remember the lives entrusted to their care and do as they would be done by.

MRS. GUS SHIPLEY,
 President Division 3, L. A. of O. R. C.

ATCHISON, KAN., April 5th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

When we read in the papers of an accident that happened in some far away city, it does not affect us much and we soon forget it, but let it be in our own city, we begin to realize it and to wonder what we would do had it been one of our own loved ones who had been called away so suddenly, or who in the discharge of his duty had been disabled for life. Let me tell you a case in point. There were two men, they were railroad men and neighbors, kind and loving to their wives and little ones, but as too often the case with railroad men, one was a little careless about laying by a trifle for a rainy day. He was what you would call a good fellow, always ready with a new story to tell or a good joke; always ready to stop and take a drink, and then to treat, for it would look mean if he did not, and he was such a good fellow; but when pay-day came his money failed to pay all he owed, and month after month he delayed getting his life insured, as he always intended to do. The other was called a stingy fellow by those who did not really know him, for he did not smoke or drink, therefore did not have to treat; but his wages were spent in providing a little home for the wife and little one that had been given them and in paying his assessments for others, as they would do for him should death call him away. The time still goes by; one is still unable to join the other faithful to the Order. One morning they leave home to go out on their run, with a good-bye and kisses to loved ones, and all seems well. 'Tis time for their return, the supper is ready and waiting, little ones grow impatient, the wife wonders what is keeping him; too soon she knows, a friend comes in and tries to break the sad tidings to her; there has been a wreck, and he who started lately away so full of life and strength, is brought home all crushed and dead. It is the one that was not insured, the one that was such a good fellow. The other is badly hurt; the doctor thinks it doubtful if he lives, but hopes he may; he lays for weeks between life and death, but no skill can save him. He, too, must die! But what a comfort and satisfaction to him in his last moments to know that the little laid away had paid all his assessments and the home he had tried to provide for those he was about to leave, could be paid for and not taken from them! Which of these two do you really think was the good fellow? I think it the duty of every conductor's wife to try and do all in her power to have her husband join the noble Order of the O. R. C.

We can none of us tell, as the days go by, what of joy or sorrow they will bring. May we all be able to say when we die, I have tried to do right in everything.

MRS. S. D. B.

AURORA, April 18, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

When I read in the November number Brother Severence letter on the Sabbath day, I felt that I must sit right down and enter a protest on such an article.

I have since felt glad that I did not do so, as others have answered him far more ably than possibly I should have done; and all I wish to do now is to congratulate the O. R. C. on having men who are so ever ready to stand up for Christianity and the Sabbath day, and I also wish to congratulate the editors of the CONDUCTOR on the pure tone of the magazine which they edit. I have never discovered any ill-will or malice toward any one. All has been for the promotion of friendship and the desire to make men better and nobler in the work which has been assigned them.

Hoping that this may continue to be as it is, I remain, yours in P. F.,

A CONDUCTOR'S WIFE.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., April 15, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR: Mr. Wm. A. White, member of the Neptune Division 169, whose former address was 311 Sixth street, has removed to 230½ Pine street, Jersey City, N. J. I should miss your book very much for I find it very interesting, and look for its coming with as much anticipation as my husband. It touches upon subjects not in common with every day literature, but it teaches us more of the duty of a railroad man and our duty to them, their sacrificing nature, and true noble hearts, than anything that I ever read.

Dear Editor, I wish you success in all your undertakings pertaining to a railroad man, and may God bless every one of them, is the wish of MRS. WM. A. WHITE.

Editor Railway Conductor:

As there has been no communication from the L. A. of O. R. C No. 2, for some time in the columns of your valuable monthly, I send you a short one, hoping that it may be of interest to all our friends interested in the cause, and of our success as ladies of the O. R. C.

The terms of our first officers having expired, we elected and installed new ones for the ensuing year, who are as follows: Mrs. Wm. Stonehouse, President; Mrs. Ann Crabbe, Vice-president; Mrs. Ed. Butcher, Secretary and Treasurer; Mrs. L. B. Perry, S. S.; Mrs. M. M. Mitchel, J. S.; Mrs. Geo. M. Loughridge, Guard; Mrs. William Stonehouse, Delegate to Convention. We have twenty members in good standing, and several applications in. We feel that we are doing a good work, and Loyalty Division No. 2, is in a flourishing condition.

During the past year we have given sociables once every month, which have been liberally patronized, and been the means of bringing together, and more firmly uniting, families of railway people in this city, trying in this way to elevate the word—sociability. The collections taken up at our sociables has replenished our treasury, from time to time, and our books show a splendid account for so young an organisation. Our last social was held at the elegant home of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Stanchfield, who are noted as being most royal in the art of entertaining. Refreshments were served, and a very interesting program given under the supervision of Mrs. Stanchfield and daughter, which was highly appreciated by the large number present. After spending a delightful evening, the "good-nights," were said and each one returned to his home, wishing that the time might fly swiftly by when we would all meet again at our next social.

Yours in P. F.,

MRS. C. A. ROUSE,

Corresponding Secretary L. A. of O. R. C.

Creston, Iowa.

Two Society Queens.

ONE ATTEMPTS TO RULE BEYOND HER TIME, WHILE THE OTHER GRACEFULLY ABDICATES.

Two of the prettiest girls in a town where pretty girls are by no means rare have recently passed the point beyond which they cannot with propriety be spoken of as "girls." Both of them once possessed unusual beauty; both were considered, though in widely different ways, attractive. They were spoken of as "belles" in the circles in which they moved.

One of them, who, with a little touching up of the cheeks and eyebrows and the assistance of a skillful dressmaker, is yet handsome, still considers herself a "belle," and makes her desire for admiration and social supremacy uncomfortably evident. She is unmerciful in her criticism of the younger girls who are just entering her set; she likes to snub and disconcert them; she speaks of them as "chits" and school-girls. She has no feminine friends, and as her old admirers marry, or desert her, she finds her native place growing more and more dull, and finally gets out of it as often as possible.

Every summer, with many huge trunks filled with gorgeous clothes, she goes to a large hotel at some gay resort and spends the season in "showing off." Some people laugh at her, but there are some who admire, and she will be able, doubtless, to play at being belle a few years longer.

The other belle belongs to a family rich in children, beauty, health and good temper. Her dresses have never been costly nor especially elegant, but no one ever stopped to think what she had on. She is still pretty, without touching up, but the first fresh bloom of her beauty has departed, and people are beginning to lament that she does not marry.

Not that they make ill-natured remarks on the subject, but they say she is not the kind of a person who ought to be "an old maid."

She is so capable, so domestic, so sweet tempered, so fitted to be a wife and mother, that she ought certainly to be the mistress of a home.

It is rumored, moreover, that she has had a great many offers; and it is known, though not through her telling them, that she has had several. To be sure, in talking over her suitors the gossips agree that they were nice enough young men, but none of them half good enough for her. It seems to be on general principles only that they wished she had married.

Meanwhile, before any one realizes what she is doing, or that she means to do it, still less to think it is time for her to do it, it is found that this belle has abdicated! There is no formal announcement of the fact, but so it is.

She goes seldom to parties. She ceases to act in theatricals or pose in tableaux; she "manages" instead for those who do. At church fairs she is found no longer as flower girl, or peasant waitress, or gypsy fortune teller in coins and gay scarfs; instead she smiles at you across the apron table, or shares the distracting labors of the supper committee, or is placed in charge of the children's march.

As sweet, serene and gay as ever, she shares the enjoyment of every festal occasion, and adds to its charm. But people come to her now with compliments, not for herself, but for her sister next in age, just budding into womanly beauty; or for the little brother, who played the page so well; or for the younger sister, who was so quaint and graceful in the minuet. She flushes with pride and pleasure as such pleasant things are said to her.

She is yet more pleased when a gracious word is spoken concerning the other sister, the shy and awkward one, not blessed with the family beauty, and takes pains herself to mention, when the rest are praised, how sweet tempered that one is, and how helpful at home. What she herself is at home only the tired housewife whose burdens she lifts and the little flock to whom she is a second mother will ever know.

One cannot be a belle for a whole life. The time comes when, if a girl would not be pushed down, she must step down, unless indeed she will step up instead. That is always possible to do, and she who does it loses nothing and gains much. Even her beauty often does not vanish, but merely changes in kind.

People may not say so often, "How pretty she looks!" but they will be more than ever likely to say, "How lovely she is!"—Youth's Companion.

As Jacob Served for Rachel.

'Twas the love that lightened service!
 The old, old story sweet,
 The yearning lips and waiting hearts
 In melody repeat,
 As Jacob served for Rachel
 Beneath the Syrian sky,
 Like golden sands that swiftly drop,
 The toiling years went by.

Chill fell the dews upon him,
 Fierce smote the sultry sun;
 But what were cold and heat to him,
 Till that dear wife was won!
 The angel whispered in his ear,
 "Be patient and be strong!"
 And the thought of her he waited for
 Was ever like a song.

Sweet Rachel, with the secret
 To hold a brave man leal;
 To keep him through the changeful years,
 Her own in woe and weal;
 So that in age and exile,
 The death damp on his face,
 Her name to the dark valley lent
 Its own peculiar grace.

As Jacob served for Rachel
 Beneath the Syrian sky;
 And the golden sands of toiling years,
 Went swiftly slipping by;
 The thought of her was music
 To cheer his weary feet;
 'Twas love that lightened service,
 The old, old story sweet.

—Christian Intelligencer.

She Is a Rebel.

A pretty woman of New York, who has been accused of being a rebel, who invariably wore the red and white colors of the Confederacy, writes in reply: I am not going to deny it, but wish to state that I am and always have been a rebel with a large R. At the minute of my birth I rebelled against my coming into the world with the most piercing of yells, and I have been rebelling against something, from dirty streets to tiresome women, from badly fitting frocks to badly managed governments, ever since. As to wearing red and white, I also confess to both sins. Having a drop of Quaker blood in me, I had a craving—the craving for forbidden fruit—for red. In time I got it; first, because I liked it; then because the man I liked liked it, and lastly because it was becoming. The same reasons apply to white; but I never appear on the streets in either of them, and don't expect to until the streets are cleaner and the world is more appreciative of colors. I rebel against making a guy of myself.

What else do I rebel against? Insincere friends and malicious gossip.

Thick cups and over big soup spoons.

Grass green gowns and shiny dress suits.

Tight shoes and tight stays.

Lack of loyalty to one's own people.

Early dinner and late teas.

Badly cooked terrapin and canvas back sacrificed to ignorant cooks.

A great many diamonds and no manners,

Impertinent children and insolent women.

Bad actors and worse plays.

The man who has a scheme on hand, and the woman who takes you to a dressmaker so she may get a percentage off.

Politicians who are not polite enough to have their subordinates work well,

So called Christians to remember your trespasses and forget their own.

Yes, I'm a rebel, and shall be until the gentleman with the scythe approaches me, and even then I shall rebel against his cutting down like the grass her who is known as ——. —New York Sun.

The Wrong Boy.

A curious story is told at the Capitol at the expense of a member of congress, who, while of no small caliber intellectually, has not been blessed with an abundance of avoirdupuis. He has a wife much taller than he is, and who also is well-known to her children as a strict disciplinarian. One evening, so the story goes, she heard a noise in the nursery after bedtime. She promptly seized her slipper and started for the scene of the uproar. Just as she reached the door the children extinguished the light. Stretching out her hand, she captured one of the boys, and to judge from the outcries he made the spanking was thoroughly effective.

But the mother was somewhat surprised at the conduct of the second sufferer. Instead of sobbing, he yelled protestations in a strong voice, and at last swore roundly. The mother, astonished, jumped up and letting him fall from her knees to floor, exclaimed tenderly:

"Is that you, hubby?"

Overwhelmed with confusion, he admitted that it was her "hubby" she had been spanking. After they had retired amid the muffled laughter of the children, who were trying to restrain it by stuffing pillows into their mouths, explanations followed. He, too, had heard the noise and with the same object in view as his wife, had gone to the nursery, where he had been caught by his spouse.—New York Tribune.

A And The Reason.

Once a man to his fellow unjust,
He avoids him, though erstwhile his friend,
A reason he will give if he must,
And his act of ignoring defend,
But the reason he passes him by
With a look always preoccupied,
In conscience he truth won't deny,
Is because of mighty false pride..

There are men who seek dissipation,
A reason for manhood thus hiding.
"Sorrow produced consternation,"
Say they, to avoid others chiding,
The reason boon companions are sought,
For congenials they burn to get sight,
Dearest claims to such mortals are naught,
When weighed 'gainst their cursed appetite.

A woman, fault finding and scolding,
Her presence but an aggravation;
Gives a reason for thus unfolding
Her complaints upon her relations:
"Small things jar her sensibility,"
"So sensitive small things excite her,
The reason, her tongue's agility
Proclaims her by nature a fighter.

A preacher with eight hundred a year,
Is "called," where a thousand is offered;
A reason given for change of sphere:
"A larger field to save souls is offered."
Would he tell the truth to his own heart,
And own what it was that controlled him,
The reason this "call" caused him to part
With his flock: two hundred consoled him.

Some ladies attend church quite devout,
A reason, "they would show devotions;"
Of their devotions no one should doubt;
"They must give each service a portion."
The reason, their poor hearts are distressed,
As they enter the church demurely.
"Some ladies may be there better dressed
Than themselves," this would they know, surely.

Madam Social, her alms dispenses,
A reason is: "kindness and duty,"

Given under other pretences,
Would despoil such deeds of their beauty.
The reason she gives rather often,
Since she would lead in society,
While hearts of the poor it may soften,
She gains by it, notoriety.

Could the world know the reason for acts,
In place of a reason when stated;
Could it but know what are concealed facts,
Getting the for a reason prated,
Many hypocrites would be unmasked,
Some reformers (?) lose their ammunition,
Diplomats suffer by the contrast,
Truth gain from this altered condition.

FARGO, Sunday, March 30, 1890.

Mr. Editor:

As I have been so busy extricating myself from the various suits of libel brought on from the effects of my last article in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, I could not get my correspondence to you for the last issue. But having settled these matters satisfactorily, I find myself to-day a free man—free in a double sense of the word. First, all suits have been withdrawn; second, my wife is away on a visit.

Mr. Editor, do you know what it is to be free in the second sense of the word? Do you know what it is to be able to go to lodge and come home at 3 a. m., without being received on the sharp point of an instrument, namely: a woman's tongue? Oh! what bliss it is.

What a happy thought came over me this morning at 2 a. m., as I crept up stairs—no I did not creep this time, I came up boldly, for I knew I was free. I knew I was safe from the rebuke of woman.

Brothers, if any of you are contemplating matrimony, don't let this article influence you in the wrong. There are only a few things you must deprive yourself of to be happy after marriage, namely: don't go to lodge or caucuses more than four or five times a week; don't smoke; don't drink; don't flirt with young ladies along the line; don't speak with your lady passengers; don't praise your mother's cooking; don't tell your wife the good qualities of another man's wife, and when that great and glorious day comes, that day looked forward to by one and all, namely: pay day, reach down into the inside pocket of your jeans and pull forth those almighty dollars, which you have earned so well, and present them to her. She will take them; yes, take them all, and allow you to go out into the cold, cruel world alone, to make another trip with only enough left to change a 75 cent piece.

It is reported that Brother Walsh of this Division is about to enter into these trials. He has been south during the winter months seeking a partner for life, health and various other curiosities, some which he found. He discovered, when the landlord at Memphis levied on his trunk, that there were more than one kind of levee. He also discovered that the walking was not as good down that way as in the north; gravel being scarce, the tracks are not leveled up between the ties as well. For the benefit of those who have never met him, I will state, that his walking propensities are good, he measuring 6 feet 6, in his overshoes. He is not as large as he was last year at this time, having lost a thumb last fall from the effects of a felon. Now, this is not the first time he has associated with felons, but this one proved more disastrous to his physical health than the other ones.

Now, I have never been in the south, thus I do not know the exact height of a persimmon or orange tree, but it is said he plucked their fruit from the topmost limbs. It is reported, that the aforesaid partner which he sought and found, was not quite as light complexioned as himself, but time will tell. I will say, however, that he has returned into our midst with more health and less wealth.

Brother Neal, who has been promoted to regular passenger conductor, is a bald headed man, but looks all right with his hat on. They say he is quite a favorite with the ladies along the line, but his wife don't know it. I would say in his favor, that he is one of the most earnest workers we have in this division, and we wish him success.

Brother McLannon, also a young man of large brain, but little hair, has been promoted to the same position. Mc. is also our present Secretary and Treasurer, which position he fills to perfection.

Brother Sloan, the shin kicker, is still alive, although we do not see him often, his run takes him out early and in late, every day in the year. But we don't care to meet him often. Did you ever meet him? If not, I will tell some of his peculiarities: he has a very pleasant way of saluting friend or foe, by kicking him on the shins.

Now, some may like this friendly way of his, but I object. Then again, he may take a notion to cut off a button or two from your coat, thinking you have a surplus, or imagine your gloves will fit him better than they do you. Now, it is said, that there is a permanent cure for that peculiar disease called the grip, but it has never worked successfully on him. He has it yet, and has always had it since I first knew him. Everything he gets his grip on disappears, although it is a well-known fact, that he has never taken anything he could not lift. I have known him to take a cold, several times in a year when he had no use for it whatever. All I can say in his favor is, that he is the handsomest man in the division, and a true member of the O. R. C. I wish they were all like him in this respect. Hoping the proof reader will survive this, I will close.

C. B. GILBERT.
Division 72.

DECATUR, Ill., March 30, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BRO.: In the April number is an article, or rather two of them, one from Butte and the other from Helena, Montana, that I can not suffer to pass unnoticed. The first wants it to be made a criminal offence to issue an appeal for aid to benefit a poor Brother's distressed family, and with supreme indifference asks: "What matters it to him if a conductor's widow and children are starving." Division 243, with a spirit which would make the king of the Cannibal Islands turn green with envy, comes out flat-footed and says no more crumbs from their table. Shame on such sentiments. I would advise all such hide-bound members to familiarize themselves with a certain clause in the obligation of the third degree, and remember the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and that charity extends beyond the grave to the boundless realms of eternity.

In conclusion, let me say, I am a member of our most excellent benefit department, but I do not feel like taking a prattling infant by the throat and choking it, because its father did not.

Yours Truly in P. F.,
E. H. JONES,

CHATTANOOGA, March 23, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Well, there is not much to write about; business has fell off some, and the conductors on the N. C. & St. L. are not making as much as they have been, on account of two spans of the bridge across the Tennessee river, at Johnsonville, being gone. They had a fearful storm, and the wind blew so hard it took two spans of the bridge away.

We have a Brother running on a branch road here that had a collision on it a few days ago. Now, mind you, there is but one train on the road; he was coming west, and met a handcar, with a stove on it, going east. When he struck the car, he stopped to see what damage had been done. The man that was in charge of the train going east, swore that he would have pay for the damage or blood. "Why," says the conductor on the train coming west, "what are you doing on my track and on my time, without orders?"

Our G. C. C. was with us a few hours on the second of the month, and gave us a good talk on the Order, and made things plainer to us than they were before, corrected several false reports, and I think he changed several of the Brother's opinion of the Order.

In my last letter I failed to mention the Lookout Mountain Incline. We have a Brother upon it, and he was "red-headed" about it. Well, Brother Mc., I apologize for overlooking you. Brothers, when you want to go on the mountain, take the Mountain street car, and it will take you to the foot of the mountain, where you will connect with the incline; you will take the incline and go to the point of the mountain and there you will get off in the hotel that belongs to the Incline company. If you wish to go to Sunset Rock, or the Natural Bridge, you will take the train at the hotel. They have a narrow guage railroad which runs from the hotel to the top of the mountain, two and one-half miles long.

Where the mists have risen in granduer,
Far above Mt. Lookout's brow,
And the morning sun in splendor,
Casts its brilliant rays below;
When the valleys broad and smiling,
Like the hills are decked in green,
And the rippling river wanders
Through this heavenly sunlit scene;
When the birds are blithely singing
And bright flowers crowd the way,
And all nature glows resplendent
Neath the fiery god of day;
Then wander forth, and stand you,
On Mt. Lookout's rocky brow—
Let your eyes in silence wander
All around, above, below,
O'er great nature's panorama,
Like a sea with rock bound shore;
Stretching down, then upward, onward,
'Till the eye can see no more—
And your soul will fill with rapture,
As you view the glorious scene,
And your heart with awe and pleasure,
Praise the Mighty hand unseen,
Who created all this boundless,
Grand and glorious land of ours.

Valleys clad in verdent beauty,
With sublime and rocky towers,
Rising upward from the surface
Of the river's crystal stream,
To the very clouds of heaven,
Like enchantment's magic dream;
Would you see it real and truly?
Would you see what I have seen?
Then stand you on Point Lookout,
When the earth has decked its green,
And you'll see what I've attempted,
In the frail, weak words of man,
To describe and paint, but useless!
Go and see it, ye who can.

Yours in P. F.,

LOOKOUT.

FORT WAYNE, Ind. April 9, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

Brother G. Tuckey, of Wayne Division 119, and a conductor on the P., F. W. & C. Ry, was most brutally assaulted, while in the discharge of his duty, at Lima, Ohio, on Sunday April 6th. On arriving at Lima, six tramps boarded his train, and when Brother Tuckey ordered them to leave the train and stay away from it, the dirty vagabonds, being somewhat under the influence of liquor, drew their revolvers and fired one or two shots. Brother Tuckey being a man from the bottom of his feet to the top of his head, and a man that would die, rather than run or give his train over to such brutes, and when they found that Brother Tuckey would not concede their wishes they took hold of him and held him, while one of them placed a gun against his left breast and fired, sending a bullet through his lungs just above the heart, the pistol being so close that it set fire to his clothing. They have caught all of the villains but one, and Brother Tuckey has identified them. The Brother was kindly cared for. Brother M. O. Ginty of Wayne Division 119, being in the city hastened to his side, and the officers of the P., F. W. & C. run two special trains, one from Fort Wayne taking his wife and daughter, and one from Crestline, Ohio, taking his brother, C. F. Tuckey, who is a conductor on the P., F. W. & C., and a member of Wayne Division 119. The special train from Fort Wayne making the run of 60 miles in 61 minutes, making two stops; and the run from Crestline to Lima equally as good. Brother Tuckey is resting very well at present, and we have hopes of his recovery. He does not want for anything, the railroad company spares neither money or time, the Brothers of the O. R. C. are in readiness and keeping a constant watch over him, and his loving wife is constantly at his bed side and cannot be persuaded to leave him. The kind people of Lima were up in arms to catch the murderers and to give aid and comfort to the poor unfortunate conductor. I was with Brother Tuckey on Tuesday, and found him resting easy with bright prospects for his recovery. I will keep the CONDUCTOR posted.

Yours in P. F.,

A Member of Division 119

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 15th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR BROTHER: I write this to advance the thought, that one-half the world don't know how the other half live, neither do the one-half know how the other half enjoy themselves.

On the 11th inst. I left the above city to be present at the organization of what was afterwards called the Chattahoochie Division No. 71, O. R. C. I spent the night in Atlanta, meeting and having a good time with the indefatigable Ish Dunn, Vandever and other Brothers.

On the morning of the 12th, I had the honor of joining and accompanying Brother Joe Latimer of Atlanta Division, to Columbus. On our arrival in Columbus we were met by some fifteen or twenty of those fellows who constitute the best material of Columbus, who had in waiting for us the nicest carriages in the city. We were driven direct to the Rankin Hotel, where we spent a few minutes in preparing for dinner. Well, you know, there are different ways of preparing for dinner—but let that be as it may, we all prepared each in his own way, the every one of us had a good dinner, and we then, each of us, met in the K. of P. hall, to do, and did do what we were sent here to do; organize the above Division, with, I think, some twenty charter members. The work was nicely exemplified by Brother Wilkins, assisted by others. After this we returned to the Rankin House, where a banquet was given in honor of the noble men who had met there from all parts of the country to assist in the organization of a division. This banquet was certainly splendid, and did honor to those who prepared it. It was attended by men of all classes, and the very best feeling prevailed. Many were the nice toasts responded to by all the different departments represented, which were presidents, superintendents, agents, express men, mechanics, engineers, &c. This enjoyable affair ended about twelve or one o'clock, when by motion of Brother Latimer, a collection was taken up for the waiters, which resulted in a nice little sum, and was highly appreciated and deserving. Who could have thought of such a motion but a man of experience. Do not misconstrue my meaning, I do not say experienced as a waiter, but, experienced in the broad views of charity and sympathy for those who do wait and labor.

Now, for the Union meeting; it was well attended and we met brethren of fine intellect and broad views, and upon questions of interest it was well to hear Atlanta's Broyles, Nashville's Latimer, and Florida's Hill, expand and develop the hidden beauties and good of those things, so often we know and think too little of.

After having what we all called a real good time, we gave unto Division 71 the gratitude of our hearts for the royal style in which we had been received and then parted; if never to meet again under the Chief Conductor of Division 71, to all meet under the Grand Chief Conductor above, "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary shall find rest."

Yours fraternally,

J. M. BURNETT.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., April 9, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

DEAR SIR AND BRO.: I do not see any correspondence in our RAILWAY CONDUCTOR from this section of God's world, and as our own division has a great many Brothers away from here, I thought it would be a good way to reach them and our friends, so I know you will never be guilty of putting this in the waste basket. We have been favored the past winter in our railroading work; no snow, mild weather and plenty of business, so we are pretty well satisfied (that is for railway men). Our Division has been continually getting new material in the Order. The M. C. intends to build about 60 miles of track this year, as follows: from Welland to Dufferin; Springfield to Yarmouth; Basset to Bismark; Essex Centre to Maidstone, and when this is completed, it will be one of the best single track lines on this continent, as the grades are all light, and a great deal of level line very straight, as there are portions 40 miles and more from one tangent to the other. Business has been very brisk on the Grank Trunk all winter and still holds out good.

Union Division No. 13, easter reception and ball at the Grand Central hotel, was a magnificent affair, and reflects great credit on the arrangement committee, Messrs. W. Smith, G. Gillespie, L. Jones, A. W. Martan and J. McKenzie.

About nine o'clock the grand march was struck up and about 200 ladies and gentlemen took part in it. Thanks to the efficient floor managers, Messrs. T. C. Jones, N. H. Ryan, A. Smith, S. J. Callacott, J. Noonan, J. Lowry, H. B. Paddon, T. Cahill and L. Jones, everything passed off pleasantly from the opening quadrille till the closing circassian circle, and everybody enjoyed themselves to the fullest.

There were a large number of Brother conductors and other well-known railway men present.

The officers and members of Division 13, have reason to feel elated over the successful issue of their Easter reception and ball, and future receptions will be looked forward to by their friends in this city and elsewhere with more than ordinary interest and expectation.

Yours in P. F.

J. MCKENZIE.

NORTH BAY, Ont., April 17, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

I would like to ask one question before I proceed to "gush," for I expect this will be a gushing letter, as it is my first attempt, and I don't know what my capacity is in this line, although I am considered a good "head," (by myself). Excuse me, the above mentioned question. Did any one of the many readers of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR ever hear of, read about or run foul of any of the members of a Division of the Order, known as Nipissing Division on the time card No. 242, supposed to be situated at North Bay, Ontario? Echo answers, no!

Thinking there was room for doubt in this matter, I have deliberately taken upon myself the task of letting you know that there is such a Division, and that she is alive and well, and doing business at the old stand; office hours 7:30 p. m. to 12:60 a. m., (and longer if necessary) every second and fourth Wednesday. Commutation tickets, good for every regular and special, for sale at the home office. Terms—character, experience and cash.

Well, now that I have established the fact that there is such a Division as Nipissing, No. 242, I want to say a word or two about some of the members of said Division, and then I "quit you."

Our worthy C. C., Brother Harry Hughes, has been "jacked up" with a severe cold for the past few days, but thanks to our C. P. R. "Tombstone Agent" and Mackey House broth, he is able to again resume his duties.

Brother C. F. Boyce is at present confined to his room with the old bronchial trouble, which came so near ending his career two years ago. I am happy to say that he is improving and hope to soon see him at his old place, punching the pasteboards.

Brother W. O. Washburn, our P. C. C., has just returned from Northfield, Vermont, where he has been for the past two months, anxiously watching by the bedside of his sick wife, hoping and trusting that a change for the better would soon come. But alas! those fondly cherished hopes. So soon to be crushed and their fragments scattered to a sorrowing life of loneliness by that grim monster, Death, who, on April 4th, claimed her as his victim.

Brother Adam Torrance is wearing the "Hoe Peak" cap in Brother Boyce's place on the Winnipeg.

Brother Pennock is enjoying a "raise," having recently been promoted to a regular passenger run on the Winnipeg. But say, Brother P., didn't you pick that coat before it was ripe?

Father O'Neil is doing the timber train act up at Chelmsford.

The good people of Chapleau got tired of the "shot-gun nuisance," so Brother T. Jackson was taken from the west run and put on the North Bay and Ottawa run. Of course there are none of Tom's ducks (ravens) in Ottawa, so he is perfectly safe down there.

Brothers Cavanaugh, Nidds and Donovan (Parnell) are watching for "spotters" on the Soo run. Brother Harry Draeny is away on his holidays (one month) on account of attempting to haul a car a few miles on the ties. Experience teaches us, Harry, that they will not work that way worth a cent. Old Cole is running between the Mackey House and Chalk river, with headquarters at Ruthraglen. Fine girl that, Jack.

And now, Mr. Editor, if you will kindly excuse my abrupt departure, I will say, "so long."

C. O. D.

P. S. Should you ever be writing an article on the "Great writers of the day," in mentioning me kindly use my non de plume, as I am strongly averse to publicity.

C. O. D.

ELKHART, Ind., April 18th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Please allow me a few words in the Journal and I will agree not to waste any more space for some time. Brothers, the time is close at hand for our convention at Rochester. Are you ready to tackle any question that may come up? There is lots of work to do. Have you instructed your delegate what to do when he gets there? If not, do it at once. Let him know just what the majority wants. If you fail to do so, and he goes there and does something you think is wrong, don't kick, for he will probably do the best he knows. If you see anything that you think it is for the good of the Order, get up in the Division room and express your opinion, if it is wrong; there will be no harm done, but don't talk outside, and when you are in the Division room don't sit still and say nothing. I have just as good a right to air my views as any other free born American citizen, and so have you.

It is my opinion there can be changes made that will help the members of our Order, financially at least. (Morally, I think we can cope with other organizations). One thing that must, and I believe can be done, is to keep all good Brothers employed, not as brakeman, but as conductors. You ask, how are we going to do that? I can only give my idea. Brothers, you read the Journal carefully each month and you will find an average of one O. R. C. man promoted to position of train-master, superintendent or some other high position, wherein they have the power to employ men. Do they try to keep all good Brothers employed? It don't look much like it to me. I have known Brothers to travel over a great deal of territory and could not get a job. If they did, it was braking.

Brothers. I am braking and have been for two years. Why? Because it is impossible for me to find a position as conductor. I have written to every Brother that I could hear of that held the authority to employ conductors, and have not received one favorable answer yet, (in fact have only received a few answers, three or four,) the balance even kept the postage I sent for an answer. Is that right? It certainly don't seem so to me. According to one answer I did get from an O. R. C. train-master, there must be lots of Brothers out of jobs. I asked him for a situation, and here is part of the answer I received :

"While my heart is inclined to give all good Brothers positions, it is a matter of impossibility. We have two engineers and two crews that compose the outfit, and men enough promised to supply. I was going to say 1,000 miles of road."

In God's name, can it be possible they are all O. R. C. men. If so, the Order should try and remedy it in some way. Now, you Brothers that hold high positions, you can change that if you choose, or don't you take any interest in the O. R. C., after you get to a high position.

One more idea. Our Grand Officers are traveling all over the country and tell us the favor we are gaining with the railway managements of the country. Why can't they manage to man these new roads that are being built all the time with good Order men? Can it be possible that the Conductors of this country have got to serve an apprenticeship two or three times? (I am serving my second term after thirteen years in the train service). Hoping some of these matters will be looked after and brought up at Rochester this year,

I remain, yours in P. F.,

R. L. M.

Elkhart Division, No. 19.

VICKSBURG, Miss., April 22, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BRO.: It seems, that Vicksburg Division 231, has lost its place in the ranks of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, for I have been looking in vain for a word from some good literary Brother, but I suppose they have concluded to "wait 'till the clouds roll by," or, in other and more appropriate words, "wait 'till the water goes down." The Mississippi river has been the principle topic of conversation for the past two months, its rising and falling has been noted with much interest. Business has been nearly all suspended here for more than a month, and prospects are not very encouraging, even at the present writing. The Mississippi Valley (L. N. O. & T.) railroad runs within sight of the river for about 150 miles, between Memphis and New Orleans, and even a greater mileage than this is subject to overflow when the levees break. The road is now, and has been for sometime past, submerged at several points, and the efforts of the superintendent of roadway have been untiring to keep the road in condition for traffic, but his adversary, the Mississippi river, has come out ahead in the second round.

All through trains have been suspended, and there is only a daily local passenger train between here and New Orleans, and occasionally a freight to do the local work.

We have a good division here, and the only difficulty is, we can not often get a large attendance on account of our runs being long, and we can not be at the meeting as often as we like.

Our Brother C. C., John T. Savage, is going to represent us at Rochester, in May, and all are looking forward to the result of this convention with pleasure.

Brother A. L. Jaquith, our popular Secretary, and agent of the Mississippi Valley at this place, is an efficient and worthy member of this division.

Brother Morris, Lawrence, Gove, Howard, McIlvaine, Bellinger, Sherrin, Rials, Coburn, Schofield, Williamson, Hawkins, Prichett, Powell, Gurley and Marion, are a few that are identified with the interests of the Mississippi Valley. Bro. R. T. Powell is our efficient and genial road master of the second division. Brother Gurley is train master of the entire southern division, and is well liked as a Brother and an officer. Brother B. Marion is superintendent of bridges and buildings.

Captain A. A. Sharp, formerly superintendent of transportation, resigned his position, and was succeeded by Mr. Geo. D. Lawrence, April 1st. Mr. Lawrence is from the C. R. & C., and has a splendid reputation, and long experience in this avocation. Captain Sharp will be presented with a handsome memento as a token of esteem, by the employees. It is rumored that he will accept a position in the freight department.

Hoping I have not trespassed on your time,

I am Yours in P. F.

JOHN B. WHITE.

PALESTINE, Texas, March 26, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

The time for the meeting of the Grand Division is fast approaching, and as it is one of the most important measures that will be up before that Grand body, I want to say just a few words on insurance. While perhaps my ideas may not have much weight, and the "subject" be "as a tale that is often told," yet I want to place before the Brothers that will meet in May to deliberate upon such changes in the law as they deem best for the good of the Order, the subject of a different class in our insurance. The one now in use is admitted by all to be inadequate to the demands that are likely to be made upon it, when a few more years will be added to its history. In fact, all assessment associations (by mutual plans), become too burdensome; as they become older the death rate is usually larger than the increase by new members, and I don't believe that any one will attempt to deny this fact, and admitting it to be a fact, then shall we not take time by the forelock and remedy the evil, while yet we may, without detriment to us. The plans formulated by the old, and presented by the Jurisprudence Committee in Denver, last May, is, I am sure, the best plan yet devised by any member of the Order; while it is not perfection, yet in the absence of something better, I am sure it should be reconsidered and passed, so as to become "The Insurance Law of the Order.

The main objection urged against it in Denver was, that it would ultimately kill the insurance as it now stands (which we call Class A). That, Brothers, should be an argument in its favor. If it is so much superior to the old that it will rob it of its members, let us have it by all means. And another objection that was urged against it was, that members of the old insurance could not, after the expiration of Class A, join the new insurance, or Class B, on account of infirmities that had come on them since joining Class A. There is an express agreement on the part of Class B, to accept any or all the members in Class A, at the rate of two certificates of $1,000 each in Class B, for one in Class A. So you see there can be no injustice to any one on that score. And Brothers, you can hold five shares of $1,000 each in Class B. Another objection is, that it costs more for older than for younger members. That is precisely what it should do; and there is no insurance in the world, that is conducted on first-class business principles, but what does; nor could they exist if they did not; for the very reason, that the death rate is greater among old, than among young persons. Our object is to make an equitable insurance. Those with a shorter expectancy should pay a greater rate, as their risk is greater; and in ours, the object is attained by charging a premium, based upon the percentage of mortality, without interest discount, and loaded with a small margin, which increases in rate with advancing age, so as to guard against adverse selection by old persons, by reason of the advantages of low costs; for, however harsh it may seem, no association can stand unless it is based on strict business principles, shorn of sentimentality.

And, another good thing that should not be overlooked, and that is the reserve, consisting of about 25 to 33½ per cent, out of the assessments collected. They go into the mortuary or reserve fund, which under judicious investments, will add to the mortuary fund, without additional expense to the assured, thereby diminishing the calls for assessments.

Brothers, I am sure I would like to be able to make such an exhaustive and convincing argument on this subject that would bring you all to see this as I see it; but alas, I am not so gifted. For this is of vast importance to us as an Order, and as members of the Insurance Department, and I hope that a majority of the Brothers will think favorably enough of this to make the change, and let us have not one of the best insurance departments of any railway organization, but the best.

Brothers, please take this matter up with your divisions; each one of you have a copy of the proposed law (or at least should have), if not send to Brother Daniels, who I am sure will gladly furnish you with one, and discuss it thoroughly, and either come prepaed to vote for it, or to offer a better one.

Yours in P. F.,
B. F. BLOUNT.

BELLEVUE, Ohio, March 12, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BRO.: Much has been written, said, done and suggested, which shows that the time has come when there should be a radical change in the laws of our insurance. We would lack courage, intelligence and eye-sight if we did not see and admit this. Our object is complete in itself for its own great ends, but is it fair, is it just, for the Grand Division to insert in the laws of the insurance a clause, that debar a member of the insurance from receiving the benefits he so much needs, if he is injured in such a way that he is not able to follow his calling as a railway conductor, although he could fill the lucrative and dazzling position of flagman, at some dirty street crossing, or if he was an expert at slinging ink, he might fill the position of bill clerk in some freight office at thirty dollars per month. I ask, in all goodness, (tinged with a shade of charity) is it fair, is it brotherly, is it what we are banded together for? Are we not obligated to assist all worthy Brothers? Then if we do not assist a Brother when he is in distress, and what greater distress could he be in if injured, or through sickness that he will ever after be incapacitated from following his calling as a railway conductor. It must be a pleasant feeling to that poor Brother and his poor wife, and perhaps his little ones, to look forward to—what? Nothing, unless it is charity, for he cannot receive any benefit from the insurance, unless he dies, or is killed, or what is worse than death, a burden to every one. What is he a member of the Order for? And why does he take out a policy in the insurance? It should be, to assist him in starting some little business, or getting himself a home for wife and little ones, when he is not able to fill his calling as a railway conductor. Do we not require of a man seeking admission, to be a conductor of two years standing, of good report, and if he is not a conductor at the time, he must show that he has had five year's experience as a conductor, and be employed at the time on a surface railroad? Then if he become a member of the insurance, should he not be entitled to the benefits of the same? If we look back for causes which are causing some of the dissatisfaction and uneasiness among the members of the Order, and the small percentage in the insurance, we will see that it is that one clause. Strike it out at our next grand convention, and you will see how the members will apply for membership in the insurance. Leave it where it is, and I here make the assertion, that within two years there will not be a membership of five hundred in the insurance. Strike it out, and in less than two years the membership will be doubled, and the assessments will be less than they are at present, for the membership will be greater in proportion to the permanent disability or death rate.

There must be something done at our grand convention to give an incentive, something that the members will have an assurance, that if they are incapacitated they will get their insurance. Then strike them from the rolls as a dead member, as far as the insurance goes.

Look at the other orders, even though they are inferior to our own, yet they have a greater hold upon their members, why? For the simple reason they have a greater assurance in their insurance. We find it the activity of those forces who rescue the drowning in life's whirlpool, who teach the ignorant, who guide those that know not the right, who comfort the sick, raise up those that have fallen, who feed the hungry, clothe the naked and educate the orphan; these are the secrets of the successes of other orders and why not ours? Without them, we are in St. Paul's position when punished according to the Roman practice, by having a dead body bound to him, and we may all cry out: "who shall deliver us from the body of this death?" Therefore we say to you in a Brotherly way, let us open our eyes to the possibilities, and let the actions of our next annual convention enact such laws that will improve our insurance as well as our Order.

Yours as ever in P. F.,

TROM.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., April 20th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

I am one of those individuals that does not believe that our Mutual Benefit Department gives the cheapest and best insurance in the world, and I will give my reasons for so believing, and in so doing will probably contradict some points in Brother Daniels' rather lengthy article in THE CONDUCTOR of April 15th.

First. Our Mutual Benefit Department gives each member insured $2,500 in case of death, permanent disability, loss of both feet or hands, etc., for the sum of $38 last year, but it is liable to increase if the amount is kept up, or a decrease in amount if assessments are not increased as the reports will show that less insurance was in force and less policies have been written each year for the last three succeeding years.

Second. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, will insure a life policy of of $2,500 to a man thirty-five years old, (which is the average of our Conductor's) for $37.33 per year. This is straight life and gives no disability benefits, but you do not have to die to beat the game, as at the end of fifteen years you can draw your $2,500 out and still have your policy remain in force by paying the same premium as has been charged. Not being compelled to have another medical examination or rerating, and the same thing can be repeated at the end of another fifteen years if the insured should happen to live so long. Or the policy holder can take a paid up policy which, if he lives any length of time, cuts down the cost per year, every year he lives after taking the paid up policy.

Third. In connection with this life policy a conductor can get an accident policy for $2,000 and $15 per week for $15 per year, which gives the policy-holder a weekly indemnity, full face of policy case of losing hand and foot, both hands, both feet, one hand, one foot or both eyes, one-half face of policy. Now in case person is killed he gets $4,500, at cost of $52.33 per year. To sum the benefits up, they stand:

O. R. C.
$2,500 in case of death or total disability, at a cost of $38.00 per year, if it does not increase, and too many policies are not allowed to lapse.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE.

$2,500 for $37.33 per year in case of death, or at the end of fifteen years, or take a paid up policy for $2,500, which costs nothing more if it runs 100 years.

$2,000 accidents for $15 per year giving $15 per week for 52 weeks, with full face of policy in case of loss of both hands, both feet, one hand and one foot, one-half for loss of one hand or foot or both eyes.

These two policies cost $52.33 per year, and believe anyone giving this matter much thought, would choose the two policies in preference to the Order Benefit Department, although the cost is a little more, the different benefits to be received more than over balance the difference in cost. I do not wish anyone to understand that I am trying to belittle our Benefit Department, for I am not, but I believe I can get better insurance, and I give facts and figures to substantiate my belief.

and I, as well as a great many others, are decidedly opposed to any measure being introduced into the 22d G. D., leading toward compelling all members of the Order being members of the Benefit Department.

I copy the following report, compiled from "official statistics for five years of assessment associations:" In 1887, the Mutual Benefit Department of the O. R. C., had 4,768 certificates in force, $2,497,500 written during the year, with an expense for management of $5,417; in 1889, they had 4,297 certificates in force, or members, $732,500 written during the year, at an expense of management of $9,833. Less business done in 1889, while expenses were nearly twice as much for handling the business. Perhaps there is a satisfactory explanation of this matter, but I do not know of any.

Respectfully yours in P. F.,

J. A. COURTER.

[NOTE—Year 1887 commenced August 1st, the date at which Benefit Department began to pay its own expenses, and supplies and machinery on hand are included in amount charged as expenses. Year 1889 is charged with a large amount of supplies which are still on hand.—Ed.]

COMO, Col., March 29, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BRO.: I see by the CONDUCTOR, No. 6, March 15, that you say the highest railroad in the United States is the Denver & Rio Grande at Marshall Pass, Colorado, 10852 feet above the level of the sea. This is a mistake. Alpine tunnel, on the Denver, Leadville & Gunnison Division of the U. P. R. R., is 11590 feet above the level of the sea, and Alma, Colorado, on the same road, is the highest incorporated town in the United States. Last Sunday I took dinner at the Telegraph mine, 14125 feet above the sea level, situated on Mt. Bross, Park county, Colorado.

Yours in P. F.,

E. E. GORDON.

A Woman as Steamboat Mate.

Helena has within its boundaries a lady, who has the distinction of being the only female steamboat pilot in the United States. She is a young married lady named Mrs. Mary Simmons. She is only 24 years of age, and has lived continuously on the river for eight years, and is perfectly acquainted with all the details of the management of steamboats. Her husband is Mr. W. W. Simmons, captain of the transfer J. F. Joy, owned and run by the Lineham Ferry company of this place. Mrs. Simmons applied for a master's license, but, owing to a recent act of congress requiring a year's experience as mate before one was qualified as master, she was unable to procure the license. She procured her license in December, 1889, in the Galena (Ill.) district, to act as mate on steamboats and railroad transfer boats on the Mississippi river and its tributaries, on steamers of 200 tons burden or less.—Memphis Appeal.

COLUMBUS, Ga., April 16, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Another link has been added to the chain of perpetual friendship, at Columbus, Ga. At 3 p. m. on the 12th day of April, a special session of the Grand Division was opened with the following officers present: C. C., C. H. Wilkins; A. C. C., J. H. Latimer, Division 180; S. & T., J. T. Johnson, Division 123, S. C., A. A. Mathis, Division 218; J. C., J. C. T. Hill, Division 196; I. S. T. F. Kidwell, Division 196; O. S., P. L. Coleman, Division 98. Division being opened in regular form, the following were introduced and given the obligation and instructions in three degrees, they being signers of the application for the charter: R. H. Blandford, A. W. Hill, T. M. Deignan, T. X. Carraway, W. E. Dubose, W. H. Brittenham, N. M. Gilmore.

The following were admitted by card: E. H. Musgrove, J. R. Darden, R. B. Coleman, E. L. Persons, E. T. Davis, T. L. Gordy, J. T. Johnson.

The three degrees were then exemplified on M. S. Howard and J. B. Sullivan. Brother J. H. Latimer acting as C. C., Brother Kidwell, A. C. C., and Brother Burnett, of 148, as J. C., in conferring the degrees on J. B. Sullivan; Brother J. T. Johnson working the second and third as C. C., after which the division was constituted according to law, and the election of officers resulted as follows: C. C., J. T. Johnson, Columbus, Ga.; A. C. C., E. H. Musgrove; S. and T. R. H. Blandford, Columbus, Ga.; S. C., R. B. Coleman, J. C., E. L. Persons; I. S., A. W. Hill; O. S. J. B. Sullivan; Delegate, R. B. Coleman, Columbus, Ga.; Alternate, E. L. Persons; Division Committee, E. T. Davis, M. S. Howard and T. L. Gordy.

The name and number of the new division is Chattahoochee 71. A goodly number of Brothers from neighboring divisions were present, adding very much to the very pleasant occasion; the following divisions being represented: 98, 123, 148, 166, 180, 196. I take this opportunity of thanking all those who assisted by their presence, and especially those who so kindly and ably assisted me by filling the chairs. The superintendents and the train master of the Central road did all in their power to enable as many of the Brothers to be present as possible, and it was fully appreciated by all, and the thanks of the meeting were expressed accordingly. Mrs. D. D. Curran, wife of the superintendent, who is a member of Division 98, presented the Brothers a beautiful basket of flowers, for which the thanks of the meeting were expressed, and many kind words were spoken of her, who by her kind action showed that she was interested in the Brothers.

After the division closed, all repaired to the Rankin House, where a bountiful repast was partaken of by the Brothers and their invited friends: after which Brother L. C. Young was made toast master, and those who know Brother Young can well be assured, that he was equal to the task imposed upon him. There were a number of toasts, two of which were to be responded to by the general manager and master of transportation, but they being unable to be present, letters were read from both. A general good time was had, and at 12:30 a. m., we parted for the night, well pleased and satisfied that all had enjoyed a very pleasant time and one long to be remembered by those in attendance.

On Sunday the 13th, a Union meeting was held, at which questions of interest to the Order were discussed; the discussion being taken part in by a large number of the Brothers present, and I believe was the means of great good to those present. At 5 p. m. the meeting closed to allow the Brothers to leave for home, and they were all earnest in the wish, that those who were instrumental in making the occasion so pleasant for them, might get their reward some time in the future. Great credit is due the Columbus Brothers for the interest taken in making the occasion so pleasant, and that they succeeded needs no assurance from me, all those who were present will testify to that fact, and will be most happy to do so.

At 7:10 a. m. on the 14th, I left via Montgomery, in care of Brother Coleman, and having to stop over from 11:30 a. m. until 7:45 p. m., I had a very pleasant visit with Brothers of 98, which is located at this point.

At 7:45 p. m. I left via L. & N. for the north, well pleased with the trip south, and firm in the belief, that another good division can be counted to the Order of Railway Conductors.

C. H. WILKINS.

WASHBURN.—The many friends of conductor W. O. Washburn, will be pained to learn of the death of his estimable wife, which occurred at her father's residence in Northfield, Vermont, on Friday, April 4th, 1890. The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by Nipissing Division No. 242, Order of Railway Conductors, of which Mr. Washburn is a member:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God, in his infinite wisdom, to remove by death the beloved wife of our esteemed and worthy Brother, W. O. Washburn; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, his Brother members of Nipissing Division No. 242, extend to him our sincere and heartfelt sympathy in this, his irreparable loss, and hope, that in Heaven he will meet the loved one gone before; further,

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the records of our division, a copy sent to the bereft husband, also to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, and that they be published in the North Bay Times:

Committee,

HARRY HUGHES,
THOS. JACKSON,
ADAM TORRANCE.

On April 7th, 1890, Brother T. J. McCabe, while passing over his train, at Hopewell Junction, fell between the cars and was instantly killed.

The following resolutions have been adopted and are sent you for publication:

WHEREAS, Almighty God, in his infinite wisdom, has taken unto himself our highly esteemed Bro., it is befitting for us, as members of Hartford Division No. 50, O. R. C., that we should place on record our appreciation of his merits as a conductor and Brother; therefore be it Resolved, That in the death of Brother T. J. McCabe, the deep and heartfelt sympathy of this division, go out to the bereaved widow.

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved Brother, Hartford Division loses a noble member a kind and considerate Brother.

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved Brother, the New York & New England railroad company loses a faithful conductor.

Resolved, That while words of sympathy can not assuage the deep sorrow placed upon the bereaved widow, we can only refer her to Him who doeth all things well, as her only comfort in this her sad hour of affliction.

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days, in memory of him who has crossed the dark valley and entered into the brighter realms of an eternal home.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the grief stricken widow, under seal of the division; also, to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication, and to be spread on the minutes of this meeting.

Committee,

F. M. PLATT,
P. M. McCABE,
A. D. SIMMONS.

Harry, the only child of Brother S. F. O'Brien, who after a short illness was called to that home on high, where sin and sorrow are no more.

At the regular meeting of Huron Division No. 121, held February 16th the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, God, in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to remove by death, from the happy home circle of our Brother, S. F. O'Brien and wife, their only child, Harrold, aged three years and six months, causing pain and sorrow to their happy home; and

WHEREAS, We bow to the will of a just God, we feel that our Brother has sustained a great loss; therefore be it

Resolved, That the heartfelt sympathy of this division be extended to Brother, S. F. O'Brien and wife, in their sorrow; and, be it further Resolved, As a token of respect and esteem for our afflicted Brother and wife, that these resolutions be spread upon the records of this division, and a copy of the same be presented to the bereaved family and published in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

Committee,

JOHN CONNORS,
M. H. MARKEY,
ED. RYAN.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., April 7, 1890.

Died, March 28, 1890, Jennie May, daughter of Clem and Sadie Logan, aged 5 years, 5 months and 8 days, at Springfield, Ill. The body was shipped to this city for burial, and was met at the Wabash depot by a large number of friends and members of Division 119, of which Brother Logan was a member.

The funeral took place Sunday, March 30, from the home of the parents of Brother Logan. The pall bearers were selected from among the little friends of the deceased, and were Stella Jackson, Clara Nufen, Madge and Jessie Williams. The floral offerings were numerous and fine: a massive floral pillow, composed of the choicest flowers, and inscribed "Our darling," was presented by relatives; a large and very beautiful wreath, the gift of Lincoln Division 206. The little body was almost hidden from view by the beautiful lillies and roses.

She was called to her Maker by that terrible disease La Grippe. She bore her sufferings triumphantly and without a murmur. The last thing she said was: "Mamma, mamma, help me to say my prayers;" and pointed her little finger heavenward, to join her Savior, of whom she talked so much.

Beyond are the sunlit leagues of sea,
And towering peaks lingering—sunshine kissed,
Where Heaven's light doth—shine eternally.

MRS. ED. ERICKSON.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., April 11, 1890.

At a regular meeting of Montgomery Division, No. 98, O. R. C., the following resolution was adopted and the following committee appointed:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Great Conductor of all earthly concerns, Him who rules the ocean and the storm, who holds the boundless universe in his hands, to remove from amongst us in the very flush of his splendid promise, our friend and Brother, E. B. McCurdy; therefore, be it

Resolved, By Montgomery Division, No. 98, Order of Railway Conductors, that in the untimely death of Breck McCurdy, which sad event occurred in the city of Mobile on the 21st of March, 1890, this Order has suffered a loss which cannot be filled as long as he is remembered. On this occasion we gather in spirit around his honored tomb and hang upon the run the garlands of filial affection and gratitude. He was the very soul of honor and integrity, and the whole course of his magnificent young life was governed and shaped by the highest moral principles; his feelings were familiar to us, his manly breast even had a window in it for our inspection, and it never exhibited a cowardly thought or a dishonorable sentiment. Like a bright meteor he came and went, leaving us the melancholy pleasure of endeavoring to emulate his gentle virtues, his inflexible friendship, his devotion to duty, and sublime courage, all of which we shall guard and cherish with unending affection.

In his dying moments, cruelly murdered while in the faithful discharge of his duty, conscious that the dread summons was surely and rapidly approaching, physically agonized by the tortures of the assassin's bullet, even then he fully and grandly exemplified the beauty and heroism of his strong and blameless character.

Death darkens his eye,
And unplumes his wings,
Yet his sweetest song,
Is the last he sings.

Resolved, That to the mother and other members of the family of our deceased Brother, we offer our deep and sincere condolence.

Resolved, That to Mr. J. I. McKinney, Superintendent L. & N. R. R., Mr. E. L. Tyler, General Manager, and Mr. L. B. McGuyre, Train Master W. R. R., for valued and unremitting attentions during the sickness and funeral obsequies of our departed Brother, we are grateful beyond the measurement of words.

G. W. ELY, } Committee.
C. W. SAYNE, }
P. L. COLEMAN, Chairman.

Letter of Condolence.

At a meeting of Union Division, No. 13, O. R. C., the following letter of condolence was ordered to be sent to Messrs. M. and J. Lordan, M. C. R. conductors, whose father, Mr. Jeremiah Lordan, died in St. Paul, the remains being taken to Port Hope for interment:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: If any consolation can be offered under so heavy an affliction as you have just experienced, it must come from a higher power. Your own strong sense of religion and of the duty of resignation to a power that is beyond our control, and a will that is ever beneficently directed towards our good, must uphold you in this most bitter trial. I well know how painful the well-meant, but often mistaken officiousness of friends, may be on such occasions, or we should have hastened to your assistance. The subject is painful to us, but we sincerely hope your father is in the enjoyment of an everlasting happiness, such as you could not have given to him on earth. I hope that you will support your spirit, both for your own and your family's sake, and look forward to that brighter and happier world, in which we shall go to those that cannot return to us. God comfort and console you, is the wish of Union Division, No. 13, Order of Railway Conductors.

Yours in P. F., JOHN MCKENZIE,
Secretary.

By order of Division.

Carriers of Passengers—Injury—Depot Grounds—Sunday Travel.

In an action to recover for personal injuries held,

1. That the duty of common carriers, with respect to transportation of person or property, is a duty independent of contract, arising by implication of law in the reception of person or property in due course of business.

2. When the plaintiff, a passenger, received an injury in leaving the depot grounds at her destination through the company's negligence, held, that the fact that she was traveling on Sunday, in violation of the act concerning vice and immorality (Revision New Jersey 227) did not preclude her from maintaining the action.

3. The duty of a railroad company, as a carrier of passengers, does not end when the passenger is safely carried to his destination. Safe provisions for access to and from station platforms must be provided and maintained.

4. Where a stairway leading up to the depot platform was built and kept in repair by private persons residing in the neighborhood, for their own convenience as well as that of the public, as a means of access to the depot; and where plaintiff's train reached the depot at 9:30 on a dark and stormy night, no lights in the depot, and no one to direct the passengers how to leave the platform, and the conductor volunteered no assistance, but hurried away with his train, whereby she fell over some timbers at the head of the steps and received injuries, Held, (a) There being no other road visible to plaintiff by which she might have left the depot she was justifiable in making the attempt. That it was immaterial at whose expense the stairway was built and kept in repair. (b) That the company was not absolved from the duty to keep this passage way reasonably safe from obstruction by the fact that it had provided another isolated passage way, which plaintiff might have taken.

Judgment affirmed.

Delaware L. & W. Ry Co., vs. Trautwein, N. Y. Ct. App. Feb. 20, 1890.

Contributory Negligence—Jumping From Moving Train—Conductor and Brakeman.

In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries consequent upon jumping from a moving train, plaintiff testified that he was standing on the rear platform of the car, when the conductor took his ticket, and that afterwards some one told him that the train would not stop at his destination, but that he must jump when the train slowed up, which he did. Both conductor and brakeman testified that they told plaintiff no such thing, and that the signal was given to stop the train, but plaintiff was found to have left the platform before the train was stopped.

Held, That the evidence is not sufficient to show that it was with the knowledge or consent of either conductor or brakeman that plaintiff jumped from the moving train, and hence no recovery could be had. Judgment reversed.

Herman vs. Chicago M. & St. P. Ry Co., Iowa S. C. Jan. 29, 1890.

NOTE:—The authorities generally hold that where a passenger is induced to leave a moving car under the direction of a conductor, and the act is one of ordinary prudence, and an injury results, the company is liable. The trial court jury believed that the conductor had ordered plaintiff to jump from the train while in motion and gave judgment. This court rules that the evidence is insufficient to carry such a verdict.

Flag—Station—Failure to Stop Train—Jumping From Train—Damages—Reversal.

Where a passenger purchased a ticket for M. station, which was a flag-station on the defendant road, and the conductor entered the car after his having gone on board, and took up his ticket, but through some inadvertence, the train failed to stop at M. station and the plaintiff jumped from the train, at his destination, but sustained no injury whatever, but brought this suit for damages. The trial court under instructions gave him a verdict for exemplary damages in the sum of $200. On appeal

Held, That where a train fails to stop at a flag-station which is a passengers destination, and he jumps from the train, receiving no injury, he cannot recover exemplary damages, but can recover nominal damages only, for the neglect of the conductor to stop the train at the destination named in his ticket. Judgment reversed.

Kansas City M. & B. Ry Co., vs. Fite, Miss S. C. Jan. 27, 1890.

Injury to Passenger—Sudden Starting of Train.

Where a train in charge of a conductor, stopped so short a time at a station that a passenger without bundles could scarcely get off before it started; and where a passenger incumbered with packages was found at the station to which he had bought a ticket, mortally wounded by the cars; and, where the evidence shows that no one saw him get off, but the only witness testifies that the train stopped and started so quickly that he had no time to step to the platform, before the car started, but he left it while in motion, that he was the only passenger to leave the rear car of the train,

Held, That a jury could infer that the accident was caused by the sudden starting of the train and that the deceased was on a forward car and was jerked down and dragged to his death. Judgment for plaintiff affirmed.

Flanagan vs. New York & N. H. Ry Co., N. Y. S. C Feb. 12, 1890.

NOTE:—The rule of duty upon the defendant company as to the passengers, is so plain and well settled as to need no authority. The deceased passenger was entitled to have sufficient time in which to get from the cars to the ground. The proofs show that this was not done, hence, the liability.

Railroad Companies—Regulation—Heating Cars—Legislative Powers.

In an action by the people of the state of New York against the defendant company, to recover the penalties for the violation by defendant of the statutes regulating the heating of passenger cars of steam railroads. From a ruling adversely the company appeals.

Held, 1. That under the laws of New York 1887, C. 616 as amended by laws 1888, C. 189, forbidding any steam railroad doing business in the state of New York to heat its passenger cars by any stove or furnace kept inside the car, or suspended therefrom, but providing that the act shall not apply to railroads less than 50 miles in length, applies to all railroads doing business in the state having 50 miles and upward of road in use, though not all within the state.

2. That the act being a police regulation, is not conflicting with any federal or state restrictions on the legislative power, and is valid, though the road sought to be regulated is only partly within the state.

People vs. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., N. Y. S. C. Jan 24, 1890.

NOTE:—This is an important decision, upholding important legislation. It is to be hoped that other states will soon declare it unlawful for carriers of passengers to longer imperil the lives of such with the deadly car stove.

Injury to Female Passenger—Nonsuit.

When plaintiff entered defendant's train as a passenger at a station on the road; entering the car at the rear end, carrying a satchel, and walked along the aisle of the car looking for a seat, and while so walking, and looking she stumbled over two satchels, which were then in the aisle, and fell receiving the injuries sued for. The complaint alleged and the proof showed that none of the employees of the train were in the car, at the time of the accident. The car was well lighted so that a person entering the same could, by looking, see whether there were any obstacles in the aisle.

Held, That the company was not liable for the injury, and that plaintiff was properly nonsuited in the trial court.

Stimson vs. Milwaukee L. & S. & W. Ry Co., Wis. S. C. Jan. 7, 1890.

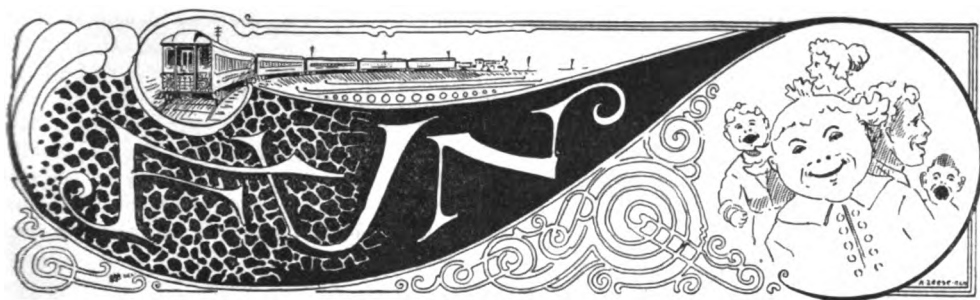

NOTE:—The duty of train servants to assist passengers to a seat in a car was discussed in this opinion, but no opinion stated as to how far that duty was made incumbent under circumstances similar to this one. It was held to be the duty of the company to keep the aisles of its cars free from obstructions, and if the employees knowingly suffer them to become obstructed with satchels or other obstructions in such a way as to endanger the safety of passengers entering or leaving such cars, it will be liable for injuries arising. But there must be reasonable evidence of such negligence, and in the absence of such in this case a nonsuit was ordered.

Contributory Negligence—Injury to Passenger.

As defendant's train was approaching a station, the name of the station was called, and the train was stopped very soon thereafter, the object being to take the side track for the passage of another train. When it stopped, plaintiff, whose destination was the station called, went out of the rear door of the car, and was descending with one foot on the first step of the car, and the other about touching the ground, when the train moved to go forward to the depot, which caused him to fall. The place of stoppage was in a cut, about 200 yards from the depot building. It was about one o'clock, p. m. All the surroundings indicated that the spot at which he attempted to leave the train was not the proper place for alighting.

Held, That the defendant was not liable for the injuries caused by the fall.

Smith vs. Georgia Pacific Ry Co., Ala. S. C. Jan. 15, 1890.

Had His Way.

A Boston journal says: "Among the passengers of the St. Louis express, yesterday, was a woman very much overdressed, accompanied by a bright looking nurse girl and a self-willed, tyrannical boy of about three years.

"The boy aroused the indignation of the passengers by his continued shrieks and kicks and screams, and his viciousness toward the patient nurse. He tore her bonnet, scratched her hands, and finally spat in her face, without a word of remonstrance from the mother.

"Whenever the nurse manifested any firmness, the mother chided her sharply.

"Finally, the mother composed herself for a nap; and about the time the boy had slapped the nurse for the fiftieth time, a wasp came sailing in, and flew on the window of the nurse's seat. The boy at once tried to catch it.

"The nurse caught his hand, and said, coaxingly:

"'Harry mustn't touch! Bug will bite Harry.'

"Harry screamed savagely, and began to kick and pound the nurse.

"The mother, without opening her eyes or lifting her head, cried out sharply;

"'Why will you tease that child so, Mary? Let him have what he wants at once.'

"'But, ma'am, it's a—'

"'Let him have it, I say.'

"Thus encouraged, Harry clutched at the wasp and caught it. The scream that followed brought tears of joy to the passengers' eyes.

"The mother again awoke.

"'Mary!' she cried, 'let him have it!'

"Mary turned in her seat and said, confusedly:

"'He's got it, ma'am.'

Get on The Platform.

Sam Jones was talking to a man of weak faith one day. The doubter asked him if he could give him a demonstration of religion.

"None," was the reply. "You must get inside the fold, and the demonstration will come of itself.

Humble yourself, have faith, and you shall know the truth."

"In other words, I must believe, accept it before it is proved, and believe it without proof."

"Now hold on right there! Out west they have a place for watering cattle. The cattle have to mount a platform to reach the troughs. As they step on a platform their weight presses a lever, and this throws the water into the troughs. They have to get on the platform through faith, and this act provides the water and leads them to it. You are like a smart steer that slips around to the barnyard and peeps in the trough, without getting on the platform. He finds the trough dry, of course, for it needs his weight on the platform to force the water up. He turns away disgusted, and tells everybody there is no water in the trough. Another steer, not so smart, but with more faith, steps on the platform. The water springs into the trough, and he marches up and drinks. That's the way with religion. You've got to get on the platform. You can't even examine it intelligently until you are on the platform. If you slide around the back way, you'll find the trough dry. But step on the platform, and the water and the faith come together—certain, sure, and abundant.—Detroit Free Press.

What She Wanted to Know.

A Bismarck woman was inquiring about a wreck. She had expected her husband on a train that was thrown from the bridge. The conductor did not know of a man of her name on the train, but said a man who was talking about the 'Missouri Slope' just before the accident, was killed. "How did he talk, enthusiastically or indifferently?" "Enthusiastically—very!" "O, indeed. What were his last words?" "Well, as I remember, the car was lying on top of him, and he was in an argument with another passenger, who was also about squeezed out. The last words he said, were: 'I tell you, my friend, if you say that Bismarck won't have another railroad—this—year—you—are—a—liar.' Then turning his eyes on the man who escaped he said: 'If you want that lot you'd better close the deal quick. There will be three more roads in Bismarck this year, electric lights have been secured, water-works will be——' but he died before the sentence was finished."

"Ah, yes, 'twas he," the woman murmured in a heart broken tone, "but did he make the sale, and do you really think we will have another railroad this year?"

A Cure for Talking Barbers.

"I've the remedy for that nuisance," said a Hoboken man to a party of friends recently. United States Revenue Inspector William Wolf had joined the group, remarking that a barber had talked him into headache, and the gentleman was referring to that.

□ Of course everybody wanted to know this sovereign cure, and they eagerly asked for an explanation.

"Well," said he, "I puzzled a long time for a cure, and I finally hit upon this plan. It pays me, too. When I go in to my barber I make a bargain with him. I promise to give him an extra quarter if he does not speak once to me while shaving me. If he does speak he forfeits the quarter and has to shave me for nothing. I'm ahead of him so far, because you might as well try to stop a dog's tail from wagging, almost, as to bridle a barber's tongue. But he's rapidly getting into trim, and I suppose after a few more shaves I will have to pay half a dollar each time. He's long headed, and I've heard that he told a friend he would make me pay up for this."

A Child's Reason.

A Buffalo father was reading aloud from the paper at breakfast the other morning about the musical prodigy, Josef Hofman. When he had finished he remarked to his little daughter, who was demurely eating her hash and Johnny cake: "There, Ethel, that boy is a bright boy. Vow, why are you not as brilliant as he?" "Why, I ought not to be," said Ethel. "Ought not to be? why not?" asked her father. "Well, in the first place," said the little, with an air of much seriousness, "that boy probably had intelligent parents." The father did not pursue the subject further.

Relationship Mixed up With Marriage.

A marriage that took place at Eatonton, N. J., a few days ago, results in odd relationships indeed. The bride was Miss Ella Clayton and the groom was Albert Phillips. The bride is not quite 14 years old while the groom is 56 years. A few years ago Cyrenius Clayton, the bride's father, who was a widower, married one of Mr. Phillips' daughters. By Mr. Clayton's daughter's marriage to his wife's father Ella Clayton becomes her father's stepmother-in-law. Mr. Phillips' daughter, who married Mr. Clayton, is also her father's stepmother-in-law. Mr. Phillips is Mr. Clayton's father-in-law and Mr. Clayton is Mr. Phillips' father-in-law. Each of the husbands is the other's son-in-law, and each woman becomes the granddaughter of herself and also her own grandmother.

"So Near and Yet so Far."

A minister in Amite county, Miss., made an address before a Sunday school, and in his address he told the children about Cain killing his brother. He told them he would ask them some questions about what he had said when he came again. A month later when he was at the same place he asked the children who killed his brother. It was some little time before he was answered, but finally one little boy said he knew, "Who?" asked the minister. "Sorghum," answered the little fellow with perfect confidence.

Something That Happened.

Foreman to Grand Jury (to witness)—"Did you say that the 'regulators' visited your house on the ——day of ——, 18——?"

Old Colored Woman—"Yes, sah, dey did, sah."

Foreman—"Well, tell us what you know about it."

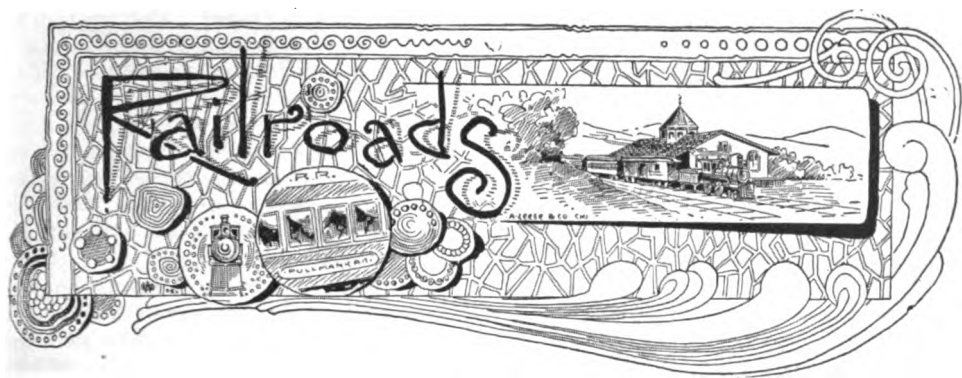

Old Colored Woman—"Well, sah, all I know is, dey cum to my house an' call fur my ole man, an' he ws'nt at home, an' I tuck de lamp an' hel' it out de do' an' dey all run away; an' I axed 'em if dey run f'om my little light, what dey gwine do when God's great light shine on 'em. Dat's whut I knows 'bout it, an' some ob dem same ones is right in dis room now."

Foreman—"That will do, auntie. You may go."

A Gritty Joke.

Customer: "I'll have some more of that brown sugar I bought last week." Grocer: "You like it then?" "Yes, and so does the canary." "Why, the bird doesn't eat sugar, does he?" "Oh, no; I use the sugar to spread in the bottom of the cage. Beach sand is a little too sharp, you know."

"Ah, Lionel, that poem is beautiful!" "Yes, Agatha, it is the crowning effort of my life." "And, Lionel—my Lionel! it will bring you fame, eternal fame, will it not?" "Yes, Agatha—and perhaps two dollars."

The Northern Pacific will begin work in May on a $40,000 hotel at Tacoma, Washington.

A train was thrown down an embankment in Germany, April 9th, and twenty-seven workmen were injured.

The Mexican Central railway has ordered five Mason-Fairlie locomotives, with three pairs of drivers, of the Baldwin Locomotive Works.

We see, the Strong Locomotive company have decided to locate their works near North Bend, on the Ohio river, twelve miles from Cincinnati.

The new steel bridge across the Rio Grande river at Eagle Pass, Texas, was formerly opened April 12th, in the presence of over five thousand persons.

The Schenectady Locomotive Works are to build fifteen special locomotives for the limited and other passenger trains on the New York Central railroad.

James T. Hayes, treasurer of the Switchmen's Union, at Buffalo, N. Y., is reported to be short in his accounts to the tune of $300. Bad luck for Mr. Hayes.

We notice that there has been a great increase in the earnings of the Atchison system. The new management has cut down expenses to a great extent, which of course accounts for this increase in part.

The Pennsylvania company prohibit agents of the Union News company from selling any of their wares on passenger trains except papers, magazines and books. As a result of this, all fruits, confectionary, pop corn and peanuts included, will have to go, but it will be an unlucky day for the poor newsboy when he cannot go through every car on the train and sing out in his affected manner: "Oranges, nice Messina oranges, three for a quarter of a dollar! Fresh peaches! Nice pop corn, and peanuts just roasted."

A naptha train of 38 cars on the Trans-Caucasian railway took fire near Bielogoev station a few days ago. A terrific explosion took place in which every soul on board was killed, amounting to twenty in all.

Mr. Leland Stanford has resigned the presidency of the Southern Pacific Railway Company, but has been chosen chairman of the executive committee of the same company, and continues to be president of the Central R. R. Company.

Joseph W. Sweet, a lad of 20 years who lost an arm recently by being run over by a train on the Boston & Albany road, on which he was braking in September, 1887, entered suit against the company for damages, and last week was given a verdict for $18,000.

A new ordinance has been passed by the city council of Chicago regulating the speed of trains within the city limits, dividing the city into three districts. In the first passenger trains are allowed to run 20 miles an hour, in the second, 25, and in the third, 30 miles an hour.

George Francis Train left Tacoma, Washington, March 18th, on his trip around the world. He expects to complete it within 60 days, but if he fails in this, as he has in many other things in his life, it will be a long time beyond 60 days when he reaches the end of his journey.

We see by a dispatch, that orders have been issued to division superintendents of the Philadelphia & Reading road to reduce expenses as much as possible, and to discharge employes wherever their services are not absolutely indispensable. It is said that the order will result in the discharge of over 2,000 men. It is a repetition of the same old story, the poor employe gets it at every turn.

A special train on the Scioto Valley & New England road, carrying some officials of the line, recently made the run from Portsmouth, Ohio, to Columbus, a distance of 100 miles, in 2 hours and 11 minutes, including the ten stops, the actual running time being 50 miles an hour.

We see the passenger rate war still continues between the Missouri river and Colorado points, and all roads are taking a hand in it. One road carries passengers from Atchison to Denver (832 miles) for $7.50, and all of them from the Missouri river to Colorado for the same amount of money.

The Brooks Locomotive Works, of Dunkirk, N. Y., have recently built two passenger locomotives for the Milwaukee & Northern road, and ten locomotives for the New York, Chicago & St. Louis Ry. They are also building 25 locomotives for the C. C. C. & St. L., and two for the Cincinnati, Wabash & Michigan.

The American Supply Company, of Kansas City, Mo., report a few of their sales as follows: Ten cars black powder for railroad works in Utah; twenty box cars, ten flat cars, ten gondolas, to the New Orleans & Northeastern R. R.; 1,000 tons rails and fastenings, to the Fort Smith & Texarkana railroad; 400 tons rails and fastenings for Augusta, Ga.

The New York Central road has ordered 2,000 box cars, thirty-four feet long, from the Michigan Car Co. of Detroit, and 1,000 cars from the Buffalo Car Manufacturing Co. In addition to this the company will build 3,000 cars at their West Albany shops. They will all be equipped with the Westinghouse brake, 3,000 with the Gould coupler and 3,000 with the Dowling coupler.

The Westinghouse Air Brake company have decided to give their employes a chance to provide homes for themselves, having purchased a tract of land for this purpose at Wilmerding, Pa., where the new shops are located. They will sell to any of their employes a lot with house upon it at its actual cost price, payable in monthly installments during the next ten years.

The Baldwin Locomotive Works are just completing 15 engines which are among the heaviest in the country. The cylinders of these engines are 20 inches in diameter, with 24 inch stroke; the driving wheels 5 feet in diameter; the boilers 65 inches in diameter of barrel. They are built for the Philadelphia & Reading railroad, and are intended to run on fast freight runs; so says the Railway and Engineer's Journal.

The court of appeals of New York has sustained the decision of the lower court which gave damages to three conductors of the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg railway company. It seems that these conductors were discharged in the old customary way on the evidence of spotters who were in the employ of the company, and they brought suit against the road to recover back pay which had been withheld.

We notice that some of the gentlemanly general passenger agents, who met in the City of Mexico a few days ago, attended a bull fight. It is not long since that a party of railway conductors took a trip to this same city; they were invited to and accepted the invitation to witness one of the same performances. So since the conductors and the general passenger agents have both learned to fight their way through this world, we shall soon expect that there will be a union formed between the general passenger agents and conductors, that will bring this great art to perfection.

The Great Northern railway, we learn, has succeeded in breaking up a gang of freight thieves at St. Paul, Minn. We have heard of, and read a great deal in our life, of gangs of passenger thieves, but this is about the first instance where we have known of a gang of freight thieves being broken up. There must be something wrong with these freight men; they must have had some excellent trains, at least better than we had when we run a freight. But, boys, you must take your chances with the rest, the bitter with the sweet,

We see that Mr. W. R. Woodward has resigned his position as general superintendent of the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago railway, and has been appointed general manager of the Louisville & Southern company, which has heretofore been operated by the L. N. A. & C., under a lease. Mr. Woodward has been general superintendent of the Monon road for five years. He has been many years in the railway service, a long time with the Hannibal & St. Joseph, having commenced his railway work as telegraph operator. He was at one time division superintendent of the Missouri Pacific, also assistant general superintendent of the same road, general superintendent of the Missouri Pacific & Texas, also the Ohio & Mississippi, and general manager of the Texas & Pacific.

The Union Pacific Railway has intimated its intention of having a large amount of additional mileage in Washington and Oregon, to the amount of about 3,000 miles. One of the most important extensions in view is that from Portland to Tacoma and other points on Puget Sound, which indicates that they intend to be strong competitors of the Northern Pacific in a territory in which the latter has at the present time almost undisputed sway.

* *

We notice that Senator Cullom has introduced a bill to amend Section 12 of the Interstate Commerce Act, so as to provide that the commission shall have authority to inquire into the management of the business of all common carriers, so that it can keep itself informed as to the method in which the same is conducted. If this bill should pass it undoubtedly would be a great help to all that class of persons who are disposed to know all about "the other fellow's" business.

* *

A car in a Chicago, Burlington & Quincy freight train got afire at a point four miles east of Corning, Iowa; the contents were packed with hay, consequently the flames spread rapidly. The engineer pulled for Corning with all possible speed, the car being a running sheet of flames before that place was reached; it was run under a water tank, and with the aid of the fire companies it was extinguished before the flames were communicated to the rest of the train, but unluckily, there was not much left of the car.

* *

There was a report circulated some days ago that Mr. Henry B. Stone would retire from the position of Vice President of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway system, and would be succeeded by Mr. George Harris, of the Burlington & Northern. From all that we can learn, this at the present time would seem to be merely a canard, and we hardly think the C. B. & Q. would be willing to part with Mr. Stone, more especially as that system is apparently doing more business to-day than ever before in its history.

* *

The Strong Locomotive Company, recently incorporated in Ohio, has received a flattering offer to locate its works at Springfield, in that state; the citizens of that thriving city propose to donate the immense works heretofore used for the manufacture of the Champion reaper and mower, controlled by Wm. M. Whitely. The Whitely Company failed some time ago, and the great shops, which cover forty acres of ground, are now idle. The offer is equivalent to a bonus of one million dollars.

Cutting rates appear to be the order of the day on all railway systems between Chicago and the Missouri river and also points in Colorado. We notice lately a rate of $5 to Kansas City, for 480 miles; to Denver, $15, 1,062 miles; to San Francisco, $40, 2,657 miles; to Los Angeles, $40, 2,712 miles. Being all the way from 1 cent to 1½ cents per mile. It is true that the public will undoubtedly be very much pleased with this state of things, but it appears to us that it is and will be a losing game on the part of different lines of leading railways.

* *

We see from late dispatches that Mr. John B. Carson has retired from the position of Vice President and General Manager of the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railway, to which he was appointed in 1884. Prior to this date he was connected with the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railway, six years as General Manager and one year as Vice President. From 1866 to 1873 he was General Freight Agent of the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway; from 1873 to 1878 General Manager of the Blue Line. Mr. Carson is President of the Chicago & Western Indiana Railway of Chicago.

* *

Great improvements are being made on the Philadelphia & Reading sea shore line, in anticipations of a great increase in travel to that favorite watering place, Atlantic City. The road has been double-tracked over the entire distance from Philadelphia to the sea shore with 76-pound steel rails. They have a new depot in Atlantic City which is said to be the finest railway structure on the coast; it is 550 feet long, with a frontage of 300 feet on Atlantic avenue; the train sheds being 450 feet long, with room for six tracks, and between these are platforms twenty-five feet wide. The beautiful waiting rooms are finished in oak, with mahogany furnishings, and rich curtains.

* *

The Michigan Central will put on a new limited vestibuled train to run between New York and Chicago. It is intended to be the fastest train in the world, the running time between the two stations being 23 hours. The Wagner Palace Car company are building the new cars for it. The Detroit Tribune says this train will carry no coaches, will have a combination baggage car and smoking car next to the locomotive; next comes another combination car containing bath room, tonsorial rooms, and an extensive library well stored with elegant books, also an elegant drawing room fitted up in oriental style; adjoining this will be another car which will be taken up with a cafe, dining saloon, etc. Sleeping cars make up the rest of the train.

The Rio Grande Railway on March 13th, had 250 snow shovelers at work upon a snow blockade across the San Juan Range, on the east side of the divide. The snow is reported to have been sixty feet above the top of telegraph poles, and for miles on each side it was from twenty-five to forty feet deep, being the deepest ever known in this part of the country. The weather is very severe, the temperature being twenty-two degrees below zero. This is the third time the pass has been snowed up this winter. It seems to be almost certain that the Rio Grande has not made much money off from this portion of their road the past winter.

* *

We notice that Mr. Leland Stanford retires from the presidency of the Southern Pacific Railway Company, and is succeeded by Mr. C. P. Huntington. For twenty-five years Mr. Stanford has been at the head of this vast enterprise, represented by the Central and Southern Pacific companies, and the growth of these two great systems of railways attests to his ability, as they now comprise something over 6,000 miles, and it certainly is a great credit to the perseverance of this gentleman. Mr. Charles Crocker, Mr. Charles P. Hunt, and Mr. Mark Hopkins have also been associated with him, although Mr. Hopkins died many years ago. Others have also passed away, leaving Mr. Stanford, at the age of 66 years, almost alone.

* *

Mr. C. L. Nicholls has resigned his position as superintendent of the Kansas City division of the A. T. & S. F., having been with this system since 1880. We have known Mr. N. for many years, when he was poor like ourselves, was only a telegraph operator on the C. B. & Q. We have this to say about him, having been personally acquainted with him, that he is a fine gentleman and a practical railroad man, and whoever is fortunate enough to secure his services in almost any branch of the business pertaining to railway service, will not only be glad that they have been able to secure such a man, but the employees who are under him will find that while he is willing at all times to work for the best interests of the company that has engaged his services, he will always be a friend to them.

* *

Mr. Wm. F. Black, who takes the place vacated by Mr. John B. Carson, as General Manager of the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago R'y, has been Superintendent of the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis road, of the Pennsylvania system, having been with them since 1885. This gentleman is only 36 years of age. He began his railway work in 1867, and has been Pennsylvania road ever since. His first position was as telegraph operator on the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis R'y; he held that position for four years. He was then for ten years private secretary to the general manager of the P. C. & St. L. In 1881, was appointed Superintendent of the Cincinnati & Muskingum Valley railway, retiring from that position in 1885 to become Superintendent of the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railway.

* *

The United States Express Company have informed their route agents, and also the officers of their company, that on and after a certain time a reduction will be made of from 10 to 20 per cent. their salaries. General Manager C. H. Crosby, has given his reasons for same in the Chicago Tribune. The first is the cost of transportation, railroads now demanding nearly double what they did years ago, and the competition which fast freight lines have brought about, has affected them, and as the railroads will not give them any more advantageous rates than they do, they are compelled to reduce the salaries of their employees. If these are the true and only reasons for the reduction of the salaries of these men, there might be a show of reason in it, but it may be a fact that the United States Express Company in order to do a large amount of business have, as it were, almost forced themselves onto many a road (perhaps a new one) where there would be but little money to the express company for the work done if they should receive twice the sum they now do for carrying freight. It is not always a good thing for a company to be doing a large amount of business at a small profit, and when they can do a large amount of business with no profit at all, it would look to the average man as if there might be some fault in the management of that company. But, whatever the true reason may be, it appears that the poor employee, who works from ten to twelve hours a day, probably averaging a ride of 130 miles, being in charge of thousands of dollars worth of property and money, at a salary of $60 to $90, perhaps at the most $100 per month, must bear all the discomfort of the reduction. The good Lord knows it is small enough now, and whether this great company will receive any material benefit, even if the men accept the reduction, is a very deep question to the ordinary man. Would it not be better for the company to do a little less business and receive more for it, and in this manner be able to deal justly and honorably with their men so that they can always have good ones in their employ, that their business may be done in a manner that is not only satisfactory to themselves, but to the public as well? According to our mind, this is a question well worth looking into.

The Central R. R. of Georgia has contracted with the Safety Car Heating & Lighting Company for lighting its cars with the Pintsch system.

.

The Lehigh Valley road is having ten new parlor coaches, with twenty-seven chairs, each built at the South Easton shops. They will be sixty feet in length, with a smoking room in one end which will accommodate ten persons.

.

The poor Italian laborer of the Long Island road is to go, or at least must keep out of the passenger coaches and is only allowed to ride in smoking cars. This is sad for the poor Italian, but very comfortable for the balance of the passengers.

.

There is a ticket scalper in the country who pronounces the Interstate Commerce law a failure. This is a sad thing to say, and if the Interstate Commerce law is any more of a failure than the ticket scalper, our opinion is that there is one thing that is very certain—honors are easy, to say the least.

.

We note the fact that the C., B. & Q. has just issued its 36th annual report. Its gross earnings during the year 1889 amounted to $26,778,312; its operating expenses amounted to $16,569,314; the capital stock of the company is $76,394,505; the total number of miles operated by the company is 5,141. In addition to the mileage operated by the C., B. & Q., this company controls 1,379 miles of road, giving the Burlington system a total of 6,520 miles.

.

We notice from an exchange that eight passenger conductors on the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway have been discharged as a result of the work of detectives. We know nothing of the facts of the case; have no evidence whether the conductors should have been discharged or not, but the end reminds us of a small boy who uses the toy pistol on the Fourth of July, the results are always the same, the conductor gets discharged and the detective retains his position.

.

Mr. John Van Nortwick, who for several years was president of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, died at his home in Batavia, Ill., April 15th, at the age of 81 years. A civil engineer by profession, he was chosen engineer during the construction of the old Galena & Chicago road, now a portion of the Chicago & Northwestern. After this he became consulting engineer of the C., B. & Q., and was for eight years president of that company. We remember this kind old gentleman as he appeared to us over thirty years ago; kind hearted, and always a pleasure for any of his acquaintances—it made no matter whether they were enrolled among the officers of the company or as employees—to meet him, and it always seemed a pleasure to him at all times to meet any of them, for he counted them all as his friends. He has lived to a ripe old age, and died (we are confident) having the respect of all persons with whom he came in contact.

.

We have been very much amused during the past year at the signatures of prominent gentlemen which have appeared in the pages of that first class periodical, the Railway Age. We have examined them with a great deal of pleasure, perhaps with no small amount of profit, and have received a great degree of satisfaction from looking at them. It is said, that misery loves company, and as we cannot read our own writing after we have jotted down the words, it is very consoling to us when we see the signatures of these elegant gentlemen to know that we cannot even read them.

.

The following circular has been issued by General Manager J. W. Hobart, of the Central Vermont Ry, under date of April 21st, 1890.

TO CONDUCTORS:

On presentation of proper credentials, you will pass Delegates and their wives over roads under this management when traveling to and from the twenty-second annual session of the Grand Division of the Order of Railway Conductors, to be held at Rochester, N. Y., May 13, 1890.

You will also pass upon similar credentials, Delegates and their wives when traveling to and from the annual meeting of the Train Despatchers Association of America, to be held at St. Louis, Mo., June 10, 1890.

Conditions Contrasted.

The report of Carroll D. Wright, commissioner of labor, on foreign and domestic railway affairs, has already been published in the Democrat and Chronicle. A feature of special interest was that referring to the wages of railway employees. In order that it may be more clearly understood, we reproduce it in tabulated form. The average daily rates of pay and yearly earnings in Great Britain and the United States are given as follows:

Class of Employees.	Great Britain.	United States
Engineers, per day.....	$ 1.46	$ 3.22
Firemen, per day.....	91	1.79½
Conductors, per day.....	97	2.63
Switchmen, per day.....	85	1.50½
Flagmen, per day.....	81	1.13
Engineers, yearly earnings...	457.00	1,007.00
Firemen, yearly earnings...	285.00	562.00
Conductors, yearly earnings..	304.00	824.00
Switchmen, yearly earnings..	266.00	471.00
Flagman, yearly earnings....	254.00	354.00

—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

E. H. BELKNAP, EDITOR.

WM. P. DANIELS, MANAGER.
W. N. GATES, ADVERTISING MANAGER, 10 Public Square, Cleveland, O.

We are again compelled to apologize for THE CONDUCTOR, as our illness still keeps us confined to the house, and we are unable to give our personal attention to all matters in relation to the publication of this issue. Shall do all that can be done at home to make a readable number, but we are not satisfied, and feel that many of our readers will be disappointed with it. As soon as health will permit, we shall make extraordinary efforts to fulfill the promise made in our last issue and do what can be done to make amends for failures in this and the last number.

"CAPITAL VERSUS LABOR."

It is the same old story, the same old discordant notes which have been rung on the bells of time for many a year. But notwithstanding all this, and also admitting that the subject may seem a trifle threadbare, it may even be obnoxious to the ears of many who are not directly (or perhaps indirectly) affected by the results of the settlement of so vexatious a question, still it is today the one that affects the prosperity of this country more than any, yea perhaps more than all others combined. It asks for a solution at the hands of every business man in the land. It knocks for an answer at the threshold of every industry in this country. It appeals in earnest tones and solemn entreaty, in language too plain and imparative to be misunderstood, at the humble cottage door of every honest and honorable laboring man in America. What will be the end of all this dread uncertainty? It will not do for us to fold our arms and content ourselves with the thought, that time alone will work out all things for our good. For if we be content with this the seeds of discontent will ere long have become so prevalent that anarchy, nihilism, and all the lesser elements will have exerted their power in a manner that will be very hard to overcome. The laboring classes have waited impatiently for many long years anticipating and hoping that among the great and master minds of our eminent statesmen, some plan would be devised that might in the near future remedy this evil and relieve the doubt and uncertainty that now exists. But so far they have waited, and are waiting still. Weightier and more essential matters (to them—our statesmen) have claimed their attention—the "Interstate Commerce Bill," "High or Low Tariff," whether a criminal who is to be executed shall satisfy the demands of the law by means of a rope around his neck, or be provided with a pair of electrical slippers for the occasion, whether this and that city shall be provided with a costly building at government expense but paid for by the tax payers of this country. So this branch of the service has its time taken up in looking after the interests of state and nation, while the interest and welfare of the man who labors ten hours or more each day for a pittance that is barely enough to keep soul and body together with nothing laid up for a rainy day, is left to his own fate, except, perhaps once in a while when his vote is sadly needed, when beautiful promises come second handed in great profusion. There are also a host of industries that are affected in no uncertain way that bear their proportion of the loss which this unsettled condition of affairs so often brings about, because capital and labor are at variance. So we have looked in vain for some "Nemesis" to wave the wand of a happy future, but no "Nemesis" has yet appeared. We have watched for a "Moses" to appear to guide the children of toil to a happier state of existence, but no "Moses" has thus far put in an appearance. But in place of this we find in the hearts of a large class of the laboring men a deep-rooted feeling of unrest, disappointment and dissatisfaction. So we go on from day to day, from year to year, the problem unsolved, the great question unsettled. Even the author of "Looking Backward," gifted as he is, and in his dreams of years to come he fancies the ills of the labor question will all be settled, seems a little undecided whether the success will be as great as the dream was beautiful. One thing is certain, before the end is reached, before this question is settled, there must be something done besides idle dreaming or resting on the assurance of the oft repeated tale. "Time will remedy all defects."

Thus far we have spoken of these matters in a general way. To give a remedy, or propose a cure for the ills that afflict this country to-day in every branch of the labor service would be a task that no one would dare to undertake, no matter how wise he might feel or how willing he might be to make the attempt. But we will in our humble manner give a few thoughts which we honestly believe if carried into effect by those interested, would in a short time do much toward mitigating the troubles that environ the great question, "Capital versus Labor," at the present time.

In days gone by, capital has, as a general thing, united all its energies. In many cases where great efforts were necessary to carry forward to a successful issue the improvements of this age, thereby insuring the success of these gigantic undertakings, this has been necessary. No one man is apt to risk his all in any branch of business that may seem at all venturesome, and on this account A, B and C put in their share, and the work goes forward under the name of a firm or corporation. Then assessments are paid in from time to time. Cotton and woolen mills have been built, and other factories put in successful operation. Railroads have been built, etc., etc., and at all times, whether this capital was furnished by one man or a thousand different ones, the same result has followed. The rule has been that capital has been united and has in nearly every case been a source of revenue to the men of capital with nothing of pecuniary advantage left for the laborer. While on the other hand the laboring man, or at least the poor man, with no means at his command to mass his energies with those of his co-laborer towards preventing any encroachments by united capital and a dishonest desire and purpose on the part of united capitalization, awakes to the important discovery, that he is the loser at every turn of the wheel, and at every figure where the dial stops is written the same letters, CAPITAL, and as usual the poor laborer gets left—so far in the play have been unorganized. Capital (so the poor man finds out) has not only been well and judiciously organized, but has also become tyrannical, abusive and unjust. And at this time, at this very day and hour, had the combined wealth of this country, or rather the possessors of this wealth, been wise enough to have felt strong instead of weak, wise instead of foolish, willing to "live and let live," could they have been impressed with the truth of the saying that, "the laborer is worthy of his hire," the sad spectacle that is confronting the people of this country to-day of hundreds of our industries either closed entirely or running on half-time and little pay, would have been averted. But alas, and also unhappily for both sides, they failed to learn a very important lesson at a time when the primary branches of the labor enigma were being taught in ever school district in America. And whether wisely or unwisely they find themselves confronted at this time with a danger they at that time so little anticipated—a combination of laborers and working men which far outnumbers the gentlemen who control the monied interests of this country. And the great lever at their command to-day is the fact that whenever an honest ballot shall take the place of that which was once bought and sold to the highest bidder, the poor man who has not a dollar in the world, the one who is never for sale at any price, the one who is willing to work at all times and all that he desires is a fair recompense for his work, will step up to the polls and deposit his vote, and it will count just the same as the one placed there by the millionaire.

Do not tell me that the larger portion of this laboring class are anarchists, nihilists, etc., are even in sympathy with this class of people. Human beings who are ripe for a division of the prosperity of this world which has been accumulated by those who have worked hard with brain and muscle to bring this state of affairs into existence, while the party first mentioned have remained in idleness. For there is no anarchy or nihilism in Americanism, and if there be in any other ism, drive all who have come here holding these views from our shores as swiftly as they came here, and see that no more ever land in this free America.

So today we are confronted with a question, and a matter of fact that is very essential to the health and prosperity of the entire country. There was a time when the agents of capital could have met the man who for years has been poorly paid. They could have consulted together, and in doing this the poor man would, or at least might have thought that their interests were identical, and although he received but a trifle more from time to time, his manhood would not have been sat upon. Not a dollar of money would have gone out of use, neither out of existence. The rich man might have been worth a few paltry dollars less than he is today (although we very much doubt even this theory), but the poor man would have been satisfied, because good treatment bringeth satisfaction, and capital and labor might today be walking hand in hand, each respected by the other. But, alas! alas! Riches and prosperity are never afraid until their interests are assailed. That hour it seems to us is fast approaching, unless, perhaps, it has already come.

AND NOW FOR THE REMEDY.

The great question to us as conductors, is this: Is there a remedy? And if so, where can it be found? If the gentlemen who are in power, those who control the railway interests of this country, those who have their capital centered in this industry, together with those who deal directly with the men employed, are anxious to see a general settlement of this vexatious question effected, it can can very easily be done, (and this applies to other branches of the service as well as to ours). The plan is very plain and simple. It will take but little time to set the ball in motion that will soon bring this dissatisfied feeling to an end. First—employ none but competent, faithful and honorable men. Consult their interests in what pertains to their personal welfare, as if their labor was a part of your capital if you have any in your employ that are not receiving wages enough so that by a careful use of the same they can live comfortably, and at the commencement of the journey of life that goes down the grade when too feeble to work, a little left to keep the wolf from the door, see to it at all times that this be your standard of dealing with such men, and that this law, or practice is lived up to at all times. Let them see that you are interested in their welfare. Do not shun them if they (by chance) might feel that they were members of your business family. Quickly right the wrongs inflicted upon them by injudicious persons. Listen to their complaints. Investigate the matter, and if they are worthy see that justice is done them. Weed out the unworthy until they reform. Pay them wages due them that will be commensurate with what all honorable business men pay in other branches of business that require the same tact and judgment, the same intellect and strength of mind and purpose in a business more dangerous than any that I could quote in comparison. Give this a trial just once, and see what the result will be. It will be no more expensive in the end. It may be far less so, while there will be one thing that will be a certainty—The right will then be on your side, public opinion will then be with you, there will be no danger of labor troubles or strikes, your men will naturally feel that they are human beings; and there is but one shadow of a doubt on earth that this would not settle this question inside of six months, and that is that you will fail, utterly fail to try it. We may be mistaken in our views. But really we firmly believe, and honestly, too, that we know just what we are talking about, for if we did not we would never have said one word on this subject. It will come to this in the near future in every legitimate business in this country. It will not be what the agitator may chance to imagine he can get, nor the soulless man of wealth, nor the dispenser of the finances of any corporation may be able to make his employes satisfied with, but the result of the unbiased judgment of the rational, honorable members of a corporation acting in unison with its employes, where right and justice is the arbitrator at all times and in all places.

== MENTIONS ==

Secretary B. F. Blythe, would like to hear of, or from, T. W. Berry, formerly a member of Division 60, Sedalia, Mo.

.

The requests upon the office of the Grand Secretary for "Credentials" indicate a large attendance at the session of the Grand Division in Rochester.

.

For the information of those who wish to go to Rochester on the special train via Chicago & Atlantic; N. Y. P. & O., and the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh Ry's, Bro. Ayers will be at Dearborn station, Chicago, Sunday a. m. May 11th, to assign sleeping car berths.

.

Brother C. A. Millard, train master of the Pacific Short Line, at South Sioux City, Nebraska, reports fine progress in the construction of that line. They have over 30 miles of track laid, and are laying at the rate of two miles per day.

.

In addition to the arrangements for transportation as given in the circular the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Ry, will issue passes for delegates and their wives on request of officers of the road on which the delegate is employed. The Georgia Ry will pass members of the Order on presentation of their credentials.

.

If every member of the Order, who intends to go to Rochester, via C. & At., N. Y. P. & O. and B. R. & P. Ry's will send their address to Brother O. H. Ayers, 276 Michigan Ave., Chicago, they will be provided with a special ticket for that trip. Please be quick, as time is short. You will also need request for transportation over C. & At. N. Y. P. & O. and B. R. & P. Ry's. Please provide yourselves with these requests.

.

We call the attention of our subscribers to the ad of the Cactus Blood Cure, on page 3. The name having been changed from Alva's Brazilian Blood Specific. It is strongly endorsed by members of Division 159, Order of Railway Conductors, city of Mexico, and also by members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and perhaps among the endorsers you may find the names of old companions who are now in Mexico. Bro. H. H. Moran, an old conductor, is interested in the company, and we wish them the success that a remedy so strongly endorsed, deserves.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., MAY 15, 1890.

NO. 10.

A TRUE STORY.

"Is Mr. Sanders in?" inquired a well-dressed and fashionable young man of somewhere about thirty years of age, as he met the porter of the general manager of one of our western railways, at the outer door of his elegant office, a few years ago.

"He is, sir," was the quick reply.

"Will you hand this note to him?"

The faithful colored man, who had been in the service of the company for many years, took the envelope, little dreaming what the contents might be (although it was none of his business.) Still, had he known, his steps might not have been quite so nimble. He opened the door to the general office and passing through another, appeared at the desk of Mr. Sanders, who sat in his private office busily engaged in looking over some papers which appeared to be of great importance. He looked up as Robert entered and kindly said :

"A note for me, Rob?"

"Yes, sir, and the gentleman is waiting outside for an answer."

Mr. Sanders broke the seal, took out the letter and read, (not aloud but to himself):

"MR. G. P. SANDERS, Gen. Manager T. P. & S. R'y.

DEAR SIR—This will be presented to you by Mr. H. L. Sykes, one of our most trusted and efficient men. Any business that you may have to entrust to him will receive prompt attention. You asked us to be particular in sending you a man who would be strictly honorable in every particular, and we can thoroughly vouch for this in the person of Mr. Sykes. Should it be found necessary to have the service of one or more in addition, it will be a pleasure to us to serve you to the best of our ability. Resp'y yours,

ADAM GILCHRIST,

Manager Arion Detective Agency."

"Robert, you may tell the gentleman to come in, and also say to Mr. Cummings that he will admit no one until he receives orders from me to do so."

After passing out of the private office, Robert delivered the message to Mr. Cummings, (the private secretary), and then bade Mr. Sykes to enter the office of the general manager.

As Mr. Sykes approached that gentleman's desk he made a courteous bow to the officer, remarking as he did so :

"This is Mr. Sanders, I believe."

"Yes sir," was the reply. "And this is Mr. Sykes, I presume?"

That gentleman nodded an assent and was requested to take a chair. Taking a chair opposite Mr. Sanders the two sat there for a moment, evidently bent on forming an opinion of each other as best they could without letting each other know that this was the object they sought. Finally Mr. Sanders said :

"Mr. Sykes, you are connected with the Arion Detective Agency, I believe."

"I am sir," was the ready reply.

"How long have you been in the service of this agency?"

"For the past five years," was answered.

"Have you ever been engaged in any work pertaining to our branch of business; or, in other words, have you been in active duty in ferreting out any discrepancies that there may have been in the business transactions of the conductors on any line of railway?"

At this the eyes of Mr. Sykes seemed to glisten with delight, as he quickly answered.

"I have, sir; that has been the special branch of business to which I have been assigned for the last four years by the manager of our agency. And it may seem to you, being a stranger, a little egotistical for me to say this; yet I am proud to say that I have been very successful in this branch so far, and have never failed to make out a case where I have had the entire charge."

The General Manager made no reply, but notwithstanding the fact, that in his opinion, he was about to entrust very important business to this gentleman, it dawned upon his imagination that it was certainly a little curious that Mr. Sykes had never failed to meet with success in every case that he had undertaken, for if this be true, then there must most assuredly be all the more necessity of carrying out his determination in regard to purifying the service which they were receiving from their employes.

"Am I to understand from your remarks," asked Mr. Sanders, "that you are of opinion that you can make a case against all whom you are ordered to watch? "Are there, in your opinion, no exceptions?"

"As far as my experience goes," remarked Mr. Sykes, "I am compelled to say there are no exceptions."

As the speaker said this, Mr. Sanders eyed his visitor very closely, and was somewhat surprised to see that seemingly he had trained himself to deliver this speech to fit all occasions, for not a moment's time elapsed before every answer was given.

"I am about to pursue a course," said the General Manager, "that to me is very obnoxious. It is a policy that has been framed by those who have the power to do so, and I have been directed to see that it is put in force. It has been reported that one of our oldest and most trusted employes has been in the habit of taking money that he should turn over to the company. And the management have determined to ascertain the facts of the case, no matter how much it may cost. There are also others who are suspected, but to this one our attention will first be given."

"Is it one of your conductors?" asked the wily detective.

"It is."

"I suspected as much," was the answer.

Yes, he suspected as much—perfectly natural conclusion—for it was not only his business to suspect as much, but also a great deal more. And it is also true, in a great many cases, that a case well and thoroughly suspicioned is, many times at least, half won. And Mr. Sykes was well aware of this fact and had always acted on this plan of operations. For it was true in many instances in his line of business that the suspicions that had been presented to him by the officers of the different companies who had employed him, coupled with his own, had done more toward making out a case (as he termed it) than all the proof that he could possibly find. And no one in the world was any better aware of this fact than Mr. Sykes, the noted detective of the Arion Agency.

"And now," said Mr. Sanders, "you are not expected to manufacture evidence to prove that this conductor is guilty of defrauding this company. You are not to take the evidence or testimony of any other person, unless it be some one that is in charge of this case in connection with yourself. And all reports must be made to me in person and to no one else, with the exception of what you are compelled to make to the chief officer of your agency."

Taking up a sheet of paper, the general manager penned the following lines:

"G. B. Shepherd, Gen. Passenger and Ticket Agent T. P. & S. R'y: Sir—You will furnish the bearer, Mr., with transportation over all lines of this road for the next ninety days, and charge the same on your books to account "Special Service." G. P. Sanders, General Manager."

Placing this in an envelope marked "personal" he handed it to Mr. Sykes, saying, as he touched the button that sounded the signal for the porter's return:

"My servant will show you into the office of our general passenger and ticket agent, who will give you any information that you may desire regarding the rules of the company to their conductors, the manner of making out their reports, and the name of the one you are to watch. He will also supply you with a number of tally sheets used on his division and all transportation which you may need. Of course you will be your own judge of the proper course to pursue in the work which is placed in your charge. But of one thing I wish you to be sure and use great care. I do not wish you to bring to this office any information which is based on suspicion or conjecture, for no one in our employ will be allowed to suffer in any way except it be upon proof of the most positive character; beyond the possibility of a single doubt."

After this Mr. Sykes bade the officer good day, and repaired to the office of the general passenger and ticket agent, in charge of Robert, the faithful. After this duty had been attended to, Robert returned to the little room which was used for those who sat in waiting till their turn might come to have a hearing, and seating himself in an easy chair, held the following conversation with himself:

"Something done goin' wrong here suah. Dat fellow ain't no honest business man. Dem eyes look ebery where in a minute. Fust wid de general manager, den de general ticket agent. No use under de heb-bins for dat fellow. Suthin' wrong, you bet; can't fool me. Dis darkey railroaded too many years to hab de wool pulled ober his eyes." And he rubbed them with a degree of satisfaction that was plainly visible. "I'll fool dat feller yet, or else my name aint Robert Washington Perkins." Then opening the door he stepped out in the spacious hall, and standing up against the wall, seemingly deeply interested in his own thoughts, waited for something to turn up. "Guess I'll take a little hand in de business myself. Les' see; tall'r sheets, transportation, eberyting else you need. Dat's it."

Just then a gentleman came up the stairway and was passing along on the other side of the hall, carrying a little red box in one hand. His clothes, of darkest blue, were covered with dust and his tired countenance told too well of a hard night's work.

"Good mornin', Mr. Chambers," said Robert, and bending his finger in a curious shape, as if to say, just a moment, then added in a whisper: "Go put up your box, den stan' in de hall kinder keerless by de side ob de general ticket agent's door, an' watch dat feller dat comes out de door. Don't neber forgit nor eber ask any questions. Don't tell enybody, but keep your eye peeled. Good-day, sir."

And Robert returned to his waiting room once more to attend to any calls that might be made. While sitting there he soliloquized as follows:

"Curous tings goin' on nowdays. Suthin' cum cross Mr. Sanders lately; didn't use to do no such tings. Don't like de 'pearance ob dat chap dat war in der fo' tree hours today. Black man mighty unsartin: dat feller more so. An' I hope de Good Massa will forgib dis poor nigger for tellin' dat conductor to kep his eye peeled for dat chap. I didn't tell him to say anyting to de res' 'bout it. But let him 'lone for dat; mighty fine man, him; he has worked for dis company goin' on twenty yea's to my pus'nal knowledge, an' der am no snide, two-faced chap goin' to scrape up a lot ob lies an' mark 'em down on a tall'r sheet agin' him ef I can help it, as long as my name is Robert Washington Perkins, Esq. Guess Mr. Sanders 'smised he had done got tro' talkin', for he rung de bell for dis culled gem'm. I see dat blink-eyed chap looked at dis frame as ef he would like to clim' up on top of it once. O, Lord, how I wish he hed felt de notion hard 'nough to hab sailed in. He would nebber be boddered wid any of Mr. Shepherd's taller sheets nor any means fer transportin' hisself ober de line ob de T. P. & S. Seen too many ob dem fellers gittin' up to git a drink at 2 o'clock in de mornin' when dis gemmen was puttin' a Chicago pollish on de parishoner's shoes. Dey am de mightest, meanes' chaps in de sleeper I eber seen. Too thin Mr. Pikes, Likes or Sykes, or whateber you call you'sef, and two to one you hab got a dozn' names.

Just then Mr. Sanders came out of his office and gave instructions to Robert that he might have two hours to himself as he did not feel very well and was going home.

At one end of the middle division of the T. P. & S Railway, some two months after the commencement of our story, were seated in one corner of the village hotel two gentlemen apparently 35 or 40 years of age. They were dressed very nearly alike, suits of dark blue, and a stranger might have guessed them to have been conductors, as they sat there seemingly busy with their own thoughts and conversing in a low voice, but earnest manner.

"I had a chap down with me this afternoon," said one of them, "that seemed to be very busy."

"How was he dressed,," said the other.

"A black stiff hat, black coat and vest, and brown, striped pants, and low shoes that tied with tape. He appeared to be about 35 years of age, black hair, a trifle long, black eyes, short face, long nose, and had on a blue necktie with polkadots."

"Some fellow went up with me last trip," said the other, "and handed me a book for transportation. Let's see, I put his name down in my book," drawing it out of his pocket at the same time, "here it is; Sykes."

"The very same chap," said the other.

"Well, all we can do is to look out for the fellow; the innocent must suffer as well as others."

And they parted, resolved to do their duty, but also to keep a watchful eye over this much observed gentleman, Mr. Sykes, for it was none other. And one of these two gentlemen was the same gentleman who waited in the hallway several weeks before upon the advice of Robert, as the "great detective" came out of the office of Mr. Shephard, the general passenger and ticket agent.

As the two went out of the hotel they accidentally dropped into a billiard room and one of them proposed a game of billiards. They had picked out their cues and were banking for first shot, when in stepped a couple of fellows, apparently sports, who were evidently bent on having a game, but there being no table but what was being used, they seemed a trifle crest fallen. Finally one of them spoke to our gentlemen:

"What do you say to making up a four-handed game; my friend and I are strangers here, and there is nothing to do to pass away the time, so we just dropped in to have a game, or two. We do not wish to intrude on good nature, but if agreeable would like to pass away an hour or two in a pleasant way."

So it was arranged to commence a game, the two friends of each party being partners.

"My friend, Mr. Spencer," said one of the new arrivals, addressing the two who had just come in. "My name is Larimer; we are both unlucky enough to be classed as drummers. Mr. Spencer is from Chicago, while I hail from the aesthetic city of Boston. Do you ever imbibe," said he, turning to his opponents in the game.

"I do not care for anything," said one of them, and the other remarked that, "he seldom indulged, and he hardly believed that there was anything to be had in the town, as this was a prohibition state."

So they played on for an hour or two, the strangers having found out the occupation of their friends, as they styled them, (just as if they did not know before.) At last our friends said it was getting late and they must retire, as both were obliged to take the early train in the morning. Then bidding the others good night they departed. As soon as they were outside of the room the two who remained, seated themselves in the corner, when one of them said to the other:

"Can you guess who those fellows were, Jim?"

"No," said the other.

"It was Sykes and his partner."

"No?"

"Sure as preaching; I know it."

The next morning at 2 o'clock found Jim at the depot all dressed in blue and ready to go out on the train. All aboard! and they moved out from the station, and Jim commenced the oft repeated routine of labor. The passengers rapidly handed out their tickets until he reached the rear end of the first coach. Here he found a gentleman who was apparently fast asleep. The conductor gently tapped him on the shoulder, at the same time saying: "Ticket if you please;" when with a terrible yawn, as if he had been sound asleep for a week, he straightened himself and rubbing his eyes declared it was too bad to be disturbed every time they changed conductors.

"I am going to Amity; how much is it?"

"$2.25," answered the conductor.

"A deuce of a price for a ride of 50 miles," was the reply.

"It is 75 miles, sir, and the fare is $2.25."

"Well, take it out of this."

And he handed him five dollars, which was taken and $2.75, returned in change. After passing into the second coach he stopped long enough to write five letters on the back of the five dollar bill he had taken, and a keen eye could have read them, S y k e s. Nothing strange occurred in the next car, but at the rear of the third coach was seated a man of about 35 years of age. As he reached forth his mileage book the conductor recognized the partner of Mr. Sykes. And in the two the opponents of himself and his friend the evening before. A terrible storm had been raging for nearly two days and nights and Jim and his engineer had received orders to use great caution, and whether the time was made or not, to proceed with great care. O, how dark it was this night, and the rain poured down in torrents. As they approached a little station where there was only a telegraph operator in the day time and no train ever halted at night, the engineer came to a full stop. The conductor looked out mid the darkness and the rain and could only discern a faint signal light on the platform of the depot.

"Orders for number 5!" cried the operator, as the engineer and conductor stepped into the little office.

"Here they are," said the ticker.

Jim took up a copy and read:

"It is reported that Bear creek run is rising very rapidly. Come to a full stop before crossing, and be sure that it is safe to do so. Signed: L. B. CHALMERS, Div. Superintendent.

To conductor and engineer, No. 5."

"Bad night this, Jim," said the engineer.

"Terrible," said Jim. "No one to get on?" said he turning to the operator.

"No, there has not been a person in sight except train men since the storm commenced."

"Let's see, this is Sharon, Bill," said he to the brakeman ahead, "I will get on the engine and may ride there for twenty or thirty miles. We have orders to stop at Bear Creek Run- Keep a good look out at the stations for any who may want to get on. There is none to get off this side of Amity. Go back and tell Pete to keep close watch of rear end," and then he stepped into the engine just as the engineer prepared to start.

"You sit over on the fireman's side," said he, "and we will both watch out so as to be sure to stop soon enough for old Bear Creek Run. Guess the boss is a little worried to night," said he. "Perhaps he thinks we will not be careful."

"I wouldn't like to kill anybody, Jim, for I always think my wife and babies are as dear to me as are the ones of those who are sleeping soundly in the cars behind us."

Perhaps half an hour had passed, when Jim exclaimed: "Ease her off there a little; we have just passed that big elm tree, a quarter of a mile this side of the run." And it was only a few minutes until they had stopped and were out in the terrible storm to see if it were safe to cross.

After a careful inspection they decided it would be safe, and they again got on the engine and pulling over cautiously proceeded on their way. On they went carefully and slowly until they reached Amity, where they must stop. The conductor saying "I will leave you, and if we get no more slow orders we will jog along at a slow pace, for it is too dark to run any risk by trying to make up lost time"

He then returned to the baggage car; exchanging his wet clothes for dry ones, and they jogged along in the darkness.

Some two weeks after this event, as

Robert was sitting in his old familiar place in the general office of the T. P. & S., there appeared at the door a well-remembered person, to him, who inquired if the General Manager was in- "He is, sir;" was the prompt reply. "Will you hand this to the gentleman?" he asked as he gave Robert a note. "I will, sir;" and immediately proceeded to do so.

Mr. Sanders took the note, opened the envelope, devoured the contents, then turning to Robert, said:

"You will admit the gentleman."

Mr. Sykes entered, and after the usual courtesies drew from his pocket a bundle of papers, handed them to the general manager, adding as he did so, please inspect these thoroughly and decide for yourself whether my work has been done satisfactorily or not.

Laying them on the table he said: "Mr. Sykes, you are willing to make oath to all that is contained herein?"

"I am, sir;" was the reply.

A little tap of the bell, and Robert entered.

"Tell Mr. Chapin to step here for a moment."

Mr. Chapin entered and Mr. Sykes took a solemn oath, that the facts (or rather lies contained therein) were absolutely true.

One week has passed since this interview, which lasted four hours. It is a beautiful morning, and the same conductor and engineer were at the depot ready to start out once again on their run. Just before the time was up, another old veteran in the service of the company, tapped the conductor on the shoulder and handed him a green envelope. He opened it and read as follows:

"You will deliver your keys to Mr. Bartell, as your services are no longer required. For further information enquire at the office of the general manager."

He handed the letter to the engineer, who read it, then in silence, said good-bye, and returned to his home, to his wife and children. The home he had left but an hour before, full of hope and joy.

Another week has passed, and this man stands at the door of the general manager's office and asks Robert the same familiar question: "Is Mr. Sanders in?"

"Yes, sir;" answered Robert, "and I will ask him if he will see you."

"Step right in," said he a moment after.

"Good morning," said Mr. Sanders.

"Good morning," was answered.

"I have called," he added, "to inquire the cause of my being discharged."

"For retaining money that belonged to this company," was the reply.

"Are you willing to show me the proof," he asked.

"I cannot show it to you, but I will tell you what we have, and it is of the most positive kind;" and he added, "Jim, I would not have believed it, but it is so formidable that it cannot be overcome." And then he told him of the counts that were against him. The most prominent of which was this: The receiving of two fares from a flag station to Amity, on such a night, on No. 5, ("The night of the great storm.") "But," said Jim, "I was not in the train between those places, for I rode on the engine all the way to assist the engineer in looking out for danger places." And he related the whole story, just as it was, but it was of no avail. Did not Mr. Sanders have the sworn statement of Mr. Sykes, in his possession; and was not this person hired to tell the truth? It was his business to do so. Of what avail then was the word of one who had been deemed competent to have the charge of thousands and thousands of precious lives; of millions of dollars worth of property, in the last twenty years. What was the worth of the sworn evidence of his engineer and train hands in this instance against the sworn evidence of Mr. Sykes, the trusted employe in the service of the "Respectable Arion Detective Agency?"

And now, kind readers, we would that we could truthfully say to you, that this is all a work of fiction, but we cannot. And should this conductor read these lines he may be able to say also, it is too true.

E. H. B.

He Identified Himself.

HOW SENATOR CULLOM WORKED HIS WAY INTO A CONVENTION HALL.

Senator Cullom met a newspaper man here to-day, writes a Washington correspondent, who recalled to his mind a curious incident of the national convention of 1880, in which both took part. Cullom was then Governor of Illinois, and the newspaper man was a keeper of one of the inner doors at the convention. When they met the newspaper man remarked:

"Senator, you may not remember it, but you owe me a debt."

"How is that?" asked the Senator.

"Do you remember the young man that got you into the convention one day in 1880?"

"Why, of course I do; you are not the young man, are you? If you are, I do owe you a debt, sure enough."

The conversation brought out the incident. Governor Cullom forgot his ticket one day, and, when he told the outer doorkeeper that he was Governor of the State, the man would not believe him. Governor Cullom affected the hayseed in his manners and dress in those days. He insisted on being let in, and, finally, the guard consented to take him as far as the inner door. There he presented him to the young doorkeeper, saying:

"Here's a fellow who says he's Shelby Cullom; I don't take any stock in him, but if you're a mind to let him in you can do it."

The Governor took the matter good naturedly, and assured the doorkeeper that he really was Shelby Cullom.

"There's a lot of fellows that come here with just such stories as that every day," said the doorkeeper. "If you're Governor Cullom you ought to have a ticket."

After some arguing, however, the doorkeeper said: "I'll tell you what I'll do. You come inside and I'll tell you mighty quick whether you're a fraud or not."

The Governor said all right and followed the young man to the platform. When they were where they could get a good look at the people sitting there the doorkeeper said: "Now do you see anybody you know?"

Before the Governor had time to pick out anyone Bob Ingersoll saw him and called out:

"Hey, Shelby, come over here."

"It's all right, Governor," said the doorkeeper, "and I'm sorry I made you any trouble, but you'll admit that I did the square thing."

"Yes, young man, you did, and I owe you a debt," said the Governor, and the incident ended until to-day.

Blissful Ignorance.

The cable car was passing Ross street, when the bright-eyed young woman said to the wooden-faced young man beside her: "Look! there's the bridge of sighs."

The stolid youth directed his attention toward Richardson's exquisite link joining court house and jail, and remarked: "That bridge ain't much of a size."

"Oh, that's not it—they call it a bridge of sighs," rejoined the owner of the bright eyes, "because it's like another bridge of sighs in—in—in Spain. The nihilists cross over it on their way to Siberia—it's the last one they cross, and so—and so they call it the bridge of sighs."

"Oh!" said the young man, a look of deep respect for his fair instructor lighting up his vacant face for a moment.

When ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise.

The Railroad Hog.

"If there is any thing under the sun that I despise," said the meek-eyed stranger, as reported by Paul C. West in the Lawrence American, "it is the railroad hog."

"Indeed?" replied his seat-mate, laconically.

"Yes"; I mean the man who is continually—confound it! this wind on my back will give me a cold!—the man who is continually grumbling at the management of the—Say! would you mind sitting a little further over? You're taking up considerable room—who is always grumbling at the management of the road. and—that's right! Hang these brakemen, anyway! There're always coming along and hitting a man's elbow!—and complaining of the employees, and—Well, I swear! He's left that door open, and O! there's a cinder in my eye! Bless me, sir, you're a deucedly hard man to ride with; please move over a little bit, and—Oh, yes; I was talking about the railroad hog. I hate him! I hate the man who makes remarks about the passengers—By the way, madam, a little paregoric would quiet that baby of yours—and making a fool of himself gen—Say, young man, I told you I didn't want to buy a copy of the 'Quick or the Dead,' so you take it away, and—a fool of himself generally. Why can't a man of that sort stay at home, where he—look here, madam, if you think this is a nursery, you're mistaken. Why can't you keep that bald-headed infant calliope of yours still? I'd—where he belongs? When a man travels, he ought to be able to put up with a few incon—Say! would you mind keeping that paper still? The rustling jars on my nerves—And, look here, why can't you move over? You are taking up two-thirds of the seat. My valise is crowding your feet, is it? Well, my valise is going to stay where it is, and—By George! Whew! Look here, young man, I believe you have been smoking cigarettes, and I'm sure there's musk on your handkerchief! Will you kindly get out of smelling distance? I say, confound it, old woman, you're rubbing that market basket against—No, I don't want to buy a package of Philadelphia caramels—and that blamed door is open again, too! Sneakville? Why, sir, you're not going, are you? Well, if you must, good—Well, I'm blessed if he hasn't left the door open! Some of those—Yes, this seat's engaged, madam. Leave me alone!"

And we wonder whether the railroad hog is extinct or not.

Repartee Extraordinary.

"How does the world smell to you, with that long nose?" said the donkey to the elephant.

"About as it sounds to you with those long ears," replied the elephant.

"How does the world taste to you with those big teeth?" said the donkey.

"About as it feels to you with those big hoofs," replied the elephant.

"Are those two tails you have," said the donkey, "one before, and one behind?"

"Are those two wings you have," replied the elephant, "one on each side of your head?"

"Old pipe line," said the donkey, "let me see you blow your nose."

"Old frog-horn," replied the elephant, "let me hear you sing."

"Your nose is too big for your body," said the donkey, "which is saying a great deal, and it must be very inconvenient for you."

"No more inconvenient," replied the elephant, "than it must be for you to have such a voice to sing, and such ears to hear with."

"I believe," said the donkey, "you could put out a fire with a spout from that piece of hose of yours."

"Not if you fanned it with those ears, or with a blast from that throat of yours," replied the elephant.

And the donkey gave it up.—Life.

Bridgton, Maine., has at least one absent minded citizen. He met with an accident and was confined to the house for several weeks, but forgot entirely that he held an accident policy entitling him to $25 a week.

Novel Life-Preserver.

"My life was saved by having my salary reduced," said a robust, middle-aged man to a Philadelphia Call reporter.

The remark naturally excited surprise.

"Yes," continued the man, "that was what saved me. I was assistant book-keeper for a wholesale house and was earning $1,200 a year. Something happened, no matter what, and I was thrown out. I was idle for two months and then went to work for $750.

"At that time I was thin and weak, and couldn't walk a mile to save a dollar. At any rate, I thought I couldn't. But when my income was so fearfully reduced I found it absolutely necessary to economize, and I did so by walking home from my work, a distance of about five miles.

"It pretty nearly killed me at first. Then I began to enjoy it. Within three months I was walking both ways, and I've kept it up ever since. Ten miles a day, summer and winter, unless during a hard storm, and look at me! One hundred and eighty pounds, the appetite of an ostrich, and not a day's sickness in ten years.

"You see, gentlemen, how it was that the cutting down of my salary saved my life."

A Lesson.

I dropped the burden of my life, and cried :

"Dear Lord, I can not bear
To struggle longer, for life's ebbing tide
Recedes, and all the fair
Sweet flowers of promise float off on its breast,
And here I stand alone!
Even when nightfall comes I can not rest,
My bread has turned to stone.

"Lo, I have loved, and love has mocked my woe,
And, laughing, sped away;
And I have hoped and hope would promise so,
And perish in a day;
And I have toiled, and the reward seemed nigh,
Then storm and blight would come,
And now, Dear Lord, to Thee, to Thee I cry:
Take Thou my spirit home."

A single withered reed was standing there,
Bending before the wind,
And all of earth was cold, and brown, and bare,
And suited to my mind,
And as the wind swept by it, the lone reed
Bent low, and seemed to say :

"Poor is your life, ah, very poor, indeed,
If you for death can pray.

"Has not the good God given to you strength,
Fitted life's cares to meet ?

Do you expect to reach Heaven's joys at length,
Through meekly-met defeat?
See, here I stand, a withered reed, and yet
I pray not for the end,
For I believe that God will not forget
Even me, a reed, dear friend.

"And so, though withered, brown, and left alone,
I do not fret nor weep—
I feel the Father will not me disown,
When through death cometh sleep;
And here, amid the darkness, storm and wrath,
I think of hours more bright,
When sweet flowers clustered in my earthly path,
And sun and stars gave light.

"God's love is vast, so vast, the smallest thing
Is held within His care;
When tempest rage, or when the robins sing,
And earth with bloom is fair."
Then ceased the words the lone reed seemed to speak.

And reverent bowing down :
"Dear Lord," I said, "bearing my cross, I seek Through faith to win my crown."

—Thos. S. Collier, in Youth's Companion.

When Fortunes Come.

A STATEMENT THAT WEALTH IN AMERICA IS AC-QUIRED BY MEN OF FORTY.

One of the brightest young men in public life said to a New York Sun man the other day that he was going to make his everlasting fortune some day when he grew tired of politics. "But there is plenty of time for that," said he. "Do you know that it is almost a rule in this country that men do not make their fortunes until they are forty years old or older? The grand exception to the rule is Jay Gould, but the contemporary fortunes were nearly all made when their founders were at or beyond middle age. Commodore Vanderbilt, John Jacob Astor, A. T. Stewart, and all the others prove what I say."

The reporter to whom this was said turned over the pages of the biographies and other works of reference at his hand, and found enough in them to warrant the assertion that at least a great many rich Americans have been beyond forty years of age when they have accrued riches. Certainly the richest body of men in the land, the United States Senate, is composed of elderly men, but in the lower house of congress we see millionaires who look scarcely old enough for the rule.

Alexander T. Stewart came here in 1823 from Ireland, where he was born in 1803. He opened a little linen store on Broadway, and gathered wealth very slowly at first, as most other men had done. He was prudent, shrewd and original, and gradually became a heavy importer; but he was forty-five years old when he became able to put up the first of the two great stores in which he afterward transacted his business.

Henry Clews is an example. He spent his early manhood as a clerk, and when the war broke out and found him a broker in a small way he began to make money. He and his partner, Mr. Livermore, who retired at the close of the war with half a million, jobbed in certificates of indebtedness, and laid the basis of the wealth which Clews afterward accrued. He failed, but further demonstrated the rule by making his way over again, as Henry Villard has done.

Henry Villard is about fifty-five years old. He came here from Germany at twenty years of age, and sold subscription books at first, then became an irregular writer for the press. He studied law later, but gave that up and adopted journalism as his profession. He was forty years old when, in 1874, he began the great Oregon railway operation that made him wealthy. Nine years later, when the famous golden spike was driven through a Northern Pacific railroad sleeper he was worth $5,000,000. He impoverished himself in trying to maintain the value of his property, and went under. Next, at more than fifty years of age, he rose again as a financier.

Warner Miller is fifty years old. Beginning in the humblest way, he managed to organize a mill company, and worked sixteen hours a day for ten years to make his fortune. He was past forty when his bank account showed him that he could afford to take the world more easily. He is a millionaire now. Levi P. Morton is about sixty-three years old. Twenty-five years ago, when he was thirty-eight or thirty-nine, he founded his banking house. He was fifty-one when his wealth enabled him to devote a part of his time to public life. His great stroke was made when he established his London house in 1868, and soon afterward went into the syndicate for funding the United States debt. He was past forty-three then. Charles Crocker was past forty when he began to be a millionaire. Edward F. Jones, the rich scale maker and Lieutenant-Governor of this State, was born in 1828. He began his business career at the close of the war, and was long past forty when he became rich. Henry B. Courtney, the marble millionaire, now dead, started with fifty dollars in 1853, when thirty-three years old. He was beyond middle life when he got his pile.

John B. Slawson, the car-fare box inventor, was twenty-five years old when he went to New Orleans in 1840 from this state. There he slowly made his way upward. But for the war he would have pushed his invention at forty-six years of age, but he had to wait, and he was past fifty when his big money began to pour in. His friend Stephenson, the horse car builder, also a millionaire, had to wait for middle age to get great riches. So did the elder Bennett, of the Herald, so did Hon. Oswald Ottendorfer, and so did the late Marshall O. Roberts.

Jay Gould's early life was a failure, but this phase of it was very short. He was born in 1831, and went into speculating in railroad stock in 1859, when he was only twenty-eight years old. He was very successful, and made use of the war, when it broke out, to give large returns on small or shrewd speculations. His fortieth year found him, in his present opinion, only starting in life, but the world already knew him as a master money maker, for he had been more than three years president of the Erie railroad, and his associate, Fisk, had startled America with his share of the partnership.

Samuel J. Tilden made his first considerable money as a lawyer, but he was more than forty years old before he put other aspirations aside for the time and began that devotion to his profession which was quickly distinguished by his connection with the greatest law causes of the day. He was forty-one when, in 1855, he was defeated as a candidate for attorney-general of the State. After that came his greatest legal triumphs, and after them his still greater financial operations.

The Standard Oil fortunes nearly all prove the rule. Mr. Rogers made his share of that pile while younger than forty years old, but Messrs. Rockefeller, Starbuck and Flagler were beyond that age when they grew rich. In Philadelphia, George W. Childs is probably an exception. He is only sixty years old, and has been rich more than twenty years; but John Wanamaker only began the making of his fortune in 1876 when he was thirty-eight. He was nearer fifty than forty when he became really rich.

Augustin Daly is fifty-two years old. He was thirty-four when he began his brave struggle with the dramatic company that is now world famous. Wealth did not reach him till he was beyond forty. The ministry contains numerous examples that are to the point. Rev. Dr. John Hall was thirty-eight years old when he came to America on the mission that introduced him here. He was thirty-nine when on his return to Europe he received and accepted the flattering offer that made him the recipient of a salary which professional men consider the making of a fortune. Rev. Dr. Talmage was as old when he began to feel comfortable; so was Beecher; so was Dr. Paxton.

An Historic Powder Horn.

WON AT VALLEY FORGE THOUGH A LOTTERY SUGGESTED BY WASHINGTON.

HONESDALE, Pa., Feb. 28.—Charles F. Rockwell, of Honesdale, Pa., has an ancient powder horn which has an interesting history. His grandfather, Jabez Rockwell, was a revolutionary soldier, having enlisted in the continental army at the age of 16. The regiment he was in was recruited in Connecticut under the direction of Benedict Arnold. He fought under Arnold at Saratoga, where he was wounded. After recovering from his wound he was transferred to the division of the army under Washington and Lafayette. He was among the hardy patriots who suffered in the terrible winter quarters at Valley Forge. The vicissitudes of the campaign had resulted in the losing by a large number of the soldiers of their powder horns. From the heads of some of the cattle obtained by foraging about Valley Forge, the camp butchers had saved the horns, and there was great strife among the soldiers who had lost their powder horns to obtain possession of one of these. There were so many applicants that no satisfactory division could be made of them. One day, as General Washington was riding by the camp, the situation was explained to him, and he was asked to suggest some way by which the horns could be fairly disposed of among the men. He took a paper and wrote a number between 1,500 and 2,000, and said that the ten soldiers who guessed the nearest to that number should have the horns. The guesses were made. The number Washington put down was 1,776. Jabez Rockwell was one of ten who were near enough to the lucky number to get a horn, his guess being 1,750. He carried the horn through the rest of the war, and it is the horn now in possession of his grandson.

A Story With a Moral.

The story has reached us of an Italian nobleman who at the altar refused to marry a young English heiress because her bridal dress was trimmed with the dead bodies of white doves. The tale is good enough to be true, but unfortunately such stories are not always true, and the use of birds for ornamenting the person is not wholly dispensed with. Ornithologists, however, assure us that the decided progress already made by the press in creating public sentiment against this cruelty and barbarism has largely increased the song birds at the Northern nesting haunts. Any woman who persists in the use of real birds and birds' wings should be socially ostracized. Let her lay aside her prayer-book and learn mercy and grace, and to be faithful to her natural obligations.

An Accidental Declaration.

A young clergyman tells the following: In a certain country parish I had the good fortune to board with a farmer whose daughter was of that nature and appearance which equally attract men of all professions.

The young people of the neighborhood gradually became convinced that a "match" was in progress, and many were the insinuating winks and nods when we two were together. But I managed to escape embarrassment pretty well until an unlucky evening during one of those meetings where every one tells his or her "experience." This young lady had just spoken, when, as she took her seat, I started the good old Methodist hymn:

I love thee, I love thee,
Thou knowest very well;
But how much I love thee
I never can tell.

It was too much for the congregation.—New York Press.

Longevity of Birds.

The swan is the longest-lived bird, and it is asserted that it has reached the age of 100 years. Knauer, in his work entitled "Naturhistoriker," states that he has seen a falcon that was 162 years old. The following examples are cited as the longevity of the eagle and vulture: A sea eagle captured in 1715, and already several years of age, died 104 years afterward, in 1819; a white-headed vulture, captured in 1706, died in 1826 in one of the avaries of Schoenbrunn castle, near Vienna, where it had passed 118 years in captivity. Paroquets and ravens reach an age of over 100 years. The life of sea and marsh birds sometimes equals that of several human generations. Like many other birds, magpies live to be very old in a state of freedom, but do not reach over twenty or twenty-five in captivity. The nightingale lives but ten years in captivity and the blackbird fifteen. Canary birds reach an age of from twelve to fifteen years in the cage, but those flying at liberty in their native islands reach a much more advanced age.

To Take the Place of a Hen.

Rensler B. Dayton, of Speonk, L. I., is interested in chickens, and recently had a hen setting which, through perversity or other cause, did not hatch out the eggs which were put under her, as a dutiful hen should. Believing that the eggs had been brought far along toward a condition when they might be expected to hatch, the young man taxed his brain to produce something which would take the place of the hen, and after a series of experiments he succeeded. Taking an ordinary tin pan he put the eggs in it and then placed this in another pan containing water. Then the two pans, one inside the other, and covered with an old quilt, were placed in a standard or frame, which suspended them over a kerosene lamp, the chimney coming within an inch of the bottom of the pan. The lamp heated the water in the pan, and thus the eggs were warmed. A thermometer was placed in the pan with the eggs, and in this way the heat was regulated until this primitive hatcher had done its work, and out of twelve eggs all but one had produced a chicken.

Origin of Proverbs.

EXPLANATION FOR WHICH BOB BURDETTE IS TO BE HELD RESPONSIBLE.

Robert J. Burdette explains the origin of some familiar proverbs, as follows:

"Great cry and little wool," is original with Bacon, who was in favor of going the whole hog.

"Man wants but little Herr Ballou, nor wants that little long"—[Fellow.

"Whistling girls and crowing hens" sounds like He-mans.

"Don't get your back up at trifles," are the words of Campbell.

"A thorn in the hand is worse than two in the bush," is from Hawthorne.

"A soft answer turneth away wrath," shows how much Wordsworth.

"Mightier than the sword," were the words of William Penn.

The horse leach hath two daughters, crying: "Give, give." That is Moore! Moore!

"The nearer the bone the sweeter the meat," is evidently Lamb.

"He doesn't know enough to come in when it rains," were evidently the words of one who loved Dryden.

"Not so black as he is painted," might have been Black, after all.

"As close as an oyster," sounds Shelly.

"Devil take the hindermost," were probably the words of Pope.

"Why don't you run a newspaper like that!" a grocery merchant in a country town said to his editor, throwing out a Chicago daily. "For the reason you don't run a grocery like that," the editor replied turning to a five column advertisement of a Chicago house, showing him a twelve story building. The grocer looked attentively at the advertisement and the picture for a moment and then said: "Ah, um—yes, I tumble."

Deer in the Adirondacks.

For the past month many reports have been made that the deer in the Adirondacks are being hunted down by dogs running wild in the woods. One day recently a force of men who were engaged in cutting ice on a small lake discovered a stray dog driving a deer toward them. The dog drove the deer upon the ice near them and then commenced biting it in the hams. The deer bleated most pitifully.

The men drove the dog away, while one of them, who had a rifle near at hand, tried to shoot him, but failed. A guide followed the dog's trail, but failed to overtake him. The deer came to the men for protection and they patted and soothed it with their hands. During the night the poor deer died from exhaustion and fright.—Buffalo Express.

The Worst Form of Slavery.

To do wrong, or, what is the same thing, to refrain from doing right, when the time for action arrives, because we are afraid of what other people may say or think, is the worst form of slavery. To break such bonds we need a deeper consecration to truth and duty. We may admit all the arguments against such bondage, and yet fail to escape from it; but, if we are faithful and loyal to the good and the right—if in our inmost heart we love and honor them above all things—we shall find continually growing within us that moral courage which wins for us our best freedom.

Exciting Times to Be Expected.

Some exciting times may be expected at no distant day in the Hamilton club of Brooklyn. It is said that at the next meeting the question to be discussed is, "How Shall We Train Our Wives?" The gentlemen will have their say all to themselves and women will not be permitted to expostulate or controvert anything that is stated either as facts or fancies. The ladies of the club have announced their intention to have a luncheon, at which they will discuss the subject, "How Shall We Educate Our Husbands So that They Can Train Their Wives?"

At a recent duel between two young men at Warsaw both fired and hit, but the bullet of one was flattened against the cigar case of the other, and the bullet of the other was turned aside by the pocket knife of his opponent. The seconds decided that the young men were not born to kill each other, and declared the affair off.

Daffodils.

I wandered lonely as a cloud,
That floats on high o'er vales and hills,
When all at once I saw a crowd,
A host of golden daffodils
Beside the lake, beneath the trees,
Fluttering, dancing in the breeze.

Continuous as the stars that shine,
And twinkle on the milky way,
They stretched in never ending line
Along the margin of a bay.
Ten thousand saw I at a glance,
Tossing their heads in sprightly dance.

The waves beside them danced, but they Outdid the sparkling waves in glee.
A poet could not but be gay
In such a jocund company.
I gazed and gazed, but little thought
What wealth to me the show had brought.

For oft when on my couch I lie,
In vacant or in pensive mood,
They flash upon that inward eye
Which is the bliss of solitude;
And then my heart with pleasure fills
And dances with the daffodils.

—•—
WORDSWORTH.

Jill's Silver Spoons.

A FAMILY DISTURBANCE ABOUT THEM.

"Jack," said Jill, one evening in February, as they sat before the fire, "I think I shall try and have a recital for my music class soon. You know what a help the one I had last summer was to them."

"Very well, my dear; just as you say."

"What bothers me," said Jill, taking up pencil and paper, "is to know how to make room for all the papas and mammas. We were crowded before, and I have more pupils now."

"Oh, we can manage, I guess. You can borrow chairs of the Greys."

"Yes," said Jill, slowly, "but I shall be obliged to invite thirty anyway."

"Let me see; there are the Deans, the Updegrafs, the Hills and——"

"The Greens, the Palmers, the Deweys and the Lesters—well, you know who they all are, and as I said, there will be thirty."

"Maybe they won't all come," suggested Jack

"Oh, of course they won't, but I shall have to plan for them all, and I've only a dozen coffee cups."

"I hope you are not going to the bother of having refreshments," exclaimed Jack.

"Certainly. Do you suppose any one could have company in Eldredge without having refreshments? To be sure, no one thought it necessary in Independence, where Madam Sterling gave her recitals in different private houses, but here——" Jill's expressive pause was meant to convey some idea of the enormity of such an offense against general custom.

"But, my dear," persisted Jack, "how can you do it? You know it is too cold to cook on the gasoline stove in the little kitchen."

Jack and Jill had been taking two meals a day "out" since the coming of winter had made the garret kitchen uninhabitable. The little hall bedroom had been transformed into a breakfast room, which, in mild winter, was easily heated by the gasoline stove, but now that the thermometer was down to zero, they were obliged to get what they could on the base burner in the sitting-room.

"I shall only have coffee and two kinds of cake, and I believe I can bake them in this stove," said Jill, referring to the base-burner, which had an oven in the rear.

After the evening had been decided upon the cold "snap" continued so long that the event was postponed until the following Tuesday. One of Jill's particular friends, Mrs. Dewey, living on the outskirts of the town, offered to bring a freezer of ice cream and also to help her that evening, so Jill felt that with Jack's help, she could get along nicely. Her music pupils took their lessons on Wednesday, so that she had Monday and Tuesday in which to make her preparations.

Monday morning was so cold that she brought the extension table into the little sitting-room and took her long unused china and glass and silverware from the closet and washed and polished it. When noon came, Jill, more accustomed to musical and literary work, was nearly tired out, and Jack, seeing her weary look, and—shall we tell it?—hearing some cross tones, declared his intention of assisting in the cake baking. This cheered Jill wonderfully, and she made rapid preparations for the work. Nearly nine months had elapsed since she had made a cake, but she was quite an adept in making certain kinds, and she felt no uneasiness on that score. She first prepared a white cake from a familiar recipe, which had never failed her. One cupful of butter, two cupfuls of pulverized sugar, one cupful of sweet milk, whites of five eggs, three cupfuls of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, essence of almond.

Jack beat the batter so faithfully that it went into the oven beautifully smooth and white, and when Jill peeped in, fifteen minutes afterwards, it was coming up like a feather, but beginning to brown. Now, her trouble began. She knew an oven ought not to be changed, but she was obliged to close all the dampers to prevent the cake from burning. Consequently, the oven cooled too much, and it was an hour and a half before the cake was done. Meantime, a gold cake had been made, which she intended to cut in small squares and cover with yellow frosting, but, through the delay in baking the white cake, the second one fell when she took it from the oven, not a great deal, but enough to vex Jill, whose feet and back were aching. She next made a chocolate layer cake, and this was a perfect success. At the same time, she was endeavoring to make some fondant icing, following the directions in "Ten Dollars Enough." Five times did she boil this before it would cream, and she wished a hundred times that she had never attempted to have refreshments. But finally she succeeded, and she had two nice cakes, in spite of the slow baking the white cake received.

The next day was a busy one, spent in sweeping, dusting, and getting everything ready for use. When evening came Jill was thoroughly tired out, but received her guests with a smiling face.

Recitals are something new in Eldredge and her little pupils were most of them thoroughly frightened. Some played very creditably, but two or three almost broke down. But teacher and parents knew that the object of these recitals was to gain confidence, and they were neither surprised nor disappointed.

While the music was in progress Mrs. Dewey and Jack were making the coffee in the little kitchen, and after the last number was played the refreshments were served. The coffee and the two cakes (Jill did not pass the gold cake which had proved such a failure) and the ice cream were enjoyed by all.

As soon as the last good-night was spoken, Jack and Jill prepared some dishes of ice cream and cake, and Jill took them to their neighbors down stairs who were not at the recital.

Going to the kitchen again, Jill proposed, as it was only a few minutes past ten, that they wash the dishes that night. Jack was willing, and they began their work with considerable meriment. The glasses and silverware were carefully washed and Jill proceeded to count her teaspoons, of which she had two dozen and a half of solid silver ones. There were the dozen Cousin Julia gave her and the half dozen from mamma and only ten of Aunt Benson's dozen. Thinking they must be among the china, Jill said nothing until the last piece was washed.

"Jack, I wonder where the rest of these spoons are; there are only ten of Aunt Benson's here."

"I expect they are here somewhere," said Jack, peering about, looking on refrigerator, table, stove and window sill.

"Maybe they are in the other rooms," suggested Jill.

They both went and looked on tables, chairs and floor, but no spoons were to be seen.

"That's strange," said Jack, becoming somewhat annoyed. Jack, by the way, is a very careful fellow, and never loses so much as a pencil, while Jill is apt to be soaring in the clouds, and consequently is apt to be much more careless about small matters.

"Did you count them? Are you sure you took out a dozen?" questioned Jack.

Jill, who was now putting away the dish-pan and hanging up the towels, did not reply at once, for she was not at all sure whether she had, but finally said, rather curtly:

"I don't know whether I did or not. I suppose so."

"It's very strange you don't know. Do you know whether you got them all back from Mrs. Jones that time you loaned them to her?"

Now, Jill had forgotten that she had loaned them, but now she recalled the fact it seemed certain to her that the missing spoons must have been lost at that time, but she would not acknowledge to Jack that she had been careless. Her heart sank, for really she was feeling very badly over the loss of her pretty spoons. Besides, although Aunt Benson was well able to duplicate her gift, it was an understood thing that nothing more was to be expected from her. But Jill maintained a stoic like silence and merely said:

"I can't swear whether I did or not. I suppose I counted them, though."

"Well, I shall ask Mrs. Jones," said Jack doggedly. "I remember well hearing her tell you to count them and see if they were all there."

"Jack Hilton," said Jill, in her severest tone, "if you want to make trouble you just ask Mrs. Jones how many spoons she returned, as two are missing now, you'll have the biggest fuss on your hands you ever had."

"Well," said Jack, weakening a little but determined not to give in, "perhaps Susie might have carried them off when she went home."

Susie was Mrs. Jones' hired girl.

"Well, suppose she did," said Jill, promptly, "you couldn't go out in the country and search her father's house!"

"Well, it's mighty strange you could not keep those spoons?"

"Are you sure you didn't throw them out in that pail of water you emptied?" questioned Jill.

"I don't know," said Jack, taking up a lamp and going out into the darkness.

His search was fruitless, for he returned with a scowling face.

Jill meantime had gone to the closet where she kept her stock of bed and table linen, thinking that possibly the missing spoons might have fallen out of the box and become hidden in the folds of sheets or tablecloths. No spoons came to light, however, and Jill emerged red-faced and disappointed.

"I guess if you get any more spoons you'll know it," said Jack savagely.

"Well, I'm not going to worry myself to death over two tea spoons," said Jill in sharp cutting tones. "The only thing I am sorry about is that they came from your side of the house."

"You wouldn't have had any if they hadn't," said Jack cruelly.

"That's all very true," replied Jill in her coolest tones, "but I thought they were given to me, and I don't see why you need to make such a fuss over them."

"I don't intend you shall lose them if I can help it, and moreover, I intend to see that you don't lend them to any one else."

"It's no use fussing any more, and I'm perfectly willing for you to count them and take care of them," said Jill, preparing to retire. "Some day I'll buy two spoons in the place of those that are lost."

"Oh, you don't need to do that."

"Jack, are you very mad with me?" said Jill in a coaxing tone.

"Oh, well, it's no use to talk any more about it," rejoined Jack, showing plainly that he did not feel very amiable.

Jill was naturally very sensitive, but while she was sorry for the loss of the spoons, she felt in her heart that it was not worth while to worry very much over so insignificant a matter and she knew that Jack's anger would soon wear away.

The next morning they were scarcely awake before the subject of the lost spoons came up again, and Jack, while yet "en disabille," peeked cautiously out of the window to the spot where he had thrown the water.

"Well, if they were on the ground some one has made way with them already."

"Jack," exclaimed Jill, fifteen minutes later, holding the brush in mid air, her long brown hair falling about her, "didn't you put those spoons on the dishes of ice cream I took down to the Greys?"

"That's what," said Jack slowly, as he recalled the fact. "That is just where they are."

"Funny neither of us thought of that," said Jill with brightening face.

Jack continued buttoning his shoes, and as he put on his necktie, said:

"I am very sorry, Mrs. Hilton, for being so cross last night, and I hope you will forgive me."

"Of course I will, Jack," said Jill, as she fastened her collar. "You know I forgive you every time you say anything you ought not to."—E. E. J. in Good Housekeeping.

The Open Door.

Beating his breast on the cold window pane
 Poor little bird,
 Striving the free, blessed air to regain,
 Yet ever deterred;
 Something invisible, pitiless, bright,
 Walling him in,
 Beyond it lies liberty, sunshine, light,
 This is between.

Tiny, passionate, terrified thing,
 Struggling in vain,
 Pulsating heart and quivering wing,
 Throbbing with pain;
 Far too bewildered to notice the door
 Spread open wide,
 Only to turn, and gain freedom once more,
 Naught to divide.

So we beat ever 'gainst destiny's pane,
 Fear stricken bird,
 Yearning for happiness, striving in vain,
 Hope e'er deferred.
 Doorways to peacefulness, liberty, life,
 Woo our advance.
 When in the midst of our toiling and strife,
 God has a chance.

—M. G. McClelland in Belford's Magazine.

Storm-Tossed.

BY MAUD MORNINGTON.

I toss upon a stormy, treacherous sea,
 And just in sight the beauteous, smiling shore—
 The wind comes blowing chill and stormily,
 And all around I hear the surges roar.

I see frail shallops struggling with the waves—
 "Oh! for a mild, auspicious breeze!" I cry—
 Before my eyes they sink to cruel graves,
 Down 'mid the rocks and coral caves they lie.

I toss upon a cruel, treacherous sea,
 And just in sight the beauteous, peaceful shore—
 Will leagues grow less between the land and me?
 Or must I storm-tossed be for evermore?

*All Around the House.*DECORATIVE NOVELTIES OF THE SEASON—REVIVAL OF OLD FASHIONED FANCY WORK.

One of the novelties for the spring is silk, 32 inches wide, in all the season's new art colors, viz., Nile green, flame color, magnolia, old rose, old pink Edison blue, Eiffel red and pink heliotrope, which may be used for curtains and light draperies with charming effect.

For sash curtains, which are more used than ever, there are silk grounds, with satin discs thrown over, all in two shades of the same color; again, there are hair line stripes, with moons and crescents scattered between. Floral designs and geometrical figures predominate in this season's goods; while metallic colorings are shown in all the choicest fabrics.

Pillow rolls are round, fluffy affairs, stuffed with hair or down, with cords attached at each end, to fasten securely to rattan chair, steamer chair, etc. These are shown in muslin and silk, the covers being full on in long, slender divisions running to a point at each end. They are filled with sachet powder, and are the necessary accompaniment to luxurious repose. The barrel pillows are shaped like a barrel, with round ends and stavelike sides. There are long and square pillows for sofas and divans in muslin and silk, and flat, fluffy discs, sixteen inches in diameter, which are used for chair seats. These are all done up in the newest art materials to match any furniture or room.

Many ladies will be glad to know that the old fashioned Berlin wool work and cross stitch embroidery is coming into vogue again. Panels for the wall and screens with the designs worked all ready for filling in are shown.

Gauze silks, printed in gilt, are very popular for draping mirrors; the new art colors are extremely handsome and will be found to harmonize with the surroundings in any room. For dining rooms leather hangings with cut fringes are very much used.

The above are among novelties noted in the shops by Decorator and Furnisher.

Some Women Are Angels.

Not all women are angels, but some are, as this dispatch from Birmingham, Conn., proves: Miss Christina Mansfield, a handsome young woman of this city, promised her hand in marriage some months ago to Albert Bersinger. Before the date of the wedding the young man developed symptoms of consumption and went south for his health. Three weeks ago he wrote to Miss Mansfield saying his illness had developed into quick consumption, and, as his case was considered incurable, he would release her from her engagement. He added that he intended committing suicide, but would live long enough to get an answer to his letter. Instead of writing Miss Mansfield answered the letter in person. She went south, brought her lover back and had him placed in the New Haven hospital, where she asked for and was accorded the privilege of nursing him. She sold her dresses and jewels to get little luxuries for her unfortunate lover. Saturday night Bersinger died, and yesterday Miss Christina saw him decently buried. The expense of the funeral will be borne by her, and will be paid out of the wages she hopes to earn as a seamstress.

An interesting story is told of a lady ninety years of age, who resides in a town on the line of the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg road not far from Utica. The lady possesses a very charitable disposition, and was never known to speak ill of any one. This characteristic is well known to her friends, and one Sunday in the Bible class, to see if she could be induced to condemn anything, she was asked what she thought of Satan. The reply, made in her usual way, was: "Well, I think he is very industrious."

A skull has been found in Rome in a tomb of the fourth century before Christ, the lower jaw of which contains a case of gold with four false teeth in it.

A Chicago lady gathered some moss in Florida and brought it north with her. She hung it on a chandelier in her parlor and it bloomed in the room. The moss retained its vitality for over a year.

Miss Mary L. Booth, the late editor of Harper's Bazaar, was opposed by her father and mother in her desire to support herself by literary work, and she, therefore, learned the vest maker's trade to pay the necessary expenses, and devoted her evenings to her loved studies. Although Miss Booth became so celebrated as a translator, she never could speak a word of either French or German. Her struggles seem incredible, the amount of work accomplished marvelous, and the pay for years was simply in books. She often walked four miles because she had not enough for an omnibus fare in her pocket. Eventually she received the largest salary ever paid to any woman in America.—New York Herald.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe is living in a mental twilight, yet though the fires of genius are ashes, she has no violent fancies. Her trouble seems to be a gradual wearing-away of all the faculties. She is fond of crooning the old church hymns of fifty years ago, and is constantly humming "Rock of Ages" and kindred ancient melodies. One of her favorite hymns is, "Oh, come, angel band, come and around me stand; Bear me away on your snowy wings to my immortal home." And so the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" awaits the peaceful quiet of death and the final folding of hands.

TRACY, TENN., April 5, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Not many days ago my husband handed me a bundle of magazines; the covers not being familiar, I began to investigate, with a sigh, for I thought it was The Forum, The Century, The North American Review, The Atlantic, The Round Table, and others; and now here is another magazine, saying: "Look at me; be just; see what I am."

I seemed to realize at once the good that your magazine can do: good in the broadest, fullest sense; good that a literary and scientific journal could not do; for you say to men, be honest, kind and true, and make them feel that you love them for themselves, and do not consider them a machine to run a train.

As I am a perfect stranger in your midst, I want to know some one, and I want that some one to be "Aunt Kate." Aunt Kate, you are a gem of the first water, and I want to be your niece; and I hope sometime that I will be as good as I think you are. Would that every woman in the land would read and profit by the latter part of your letter.

Perhaps you are not aware, Mr. Editor, that there is a Rock City Division at Nashville, Tenn.; but there is, and you cannot find a better-hearted, more honest, accommodating—yes, or better-looking—body of men in the United States and Iowa. I read your editorial on "Pay of Conductors." Do you know the mere intimation of conductors being dishonest jars and grates in every fibre of my being. My heart goes out in pity to every wife that cannot look in her husband's face and know full well that his is the soul of honor and integrity; and, oh, wives, beware lest by your own extravagance you bring your husbands to dishonor and shame.

Appropos, I think if the world should ever arrive at that blissful state portrayed by Mr. Bellemay in his "Looking Backward," that there will be more Christian dry goods clerks, for then ladies cannot have every bolt of goods in the store taken down and buy a spool of thread. Ladies, a hint to the wise, you know; but if you are not wise I didn't mean you.

We are very near the Southern Chautauqua, and perhaps I will write you a letter some time this summer, and tell you of some of the many interesting lectures and concerts that are so improving and enjoyable.

It has just occurred to me that I am making myself very much at home to be a

TENNESSEE STRANGER.

Baby's Bedtime Song.

Sway to and fro 'in the twilight gray,

This is the ferry for Shadowtown;

It always sails at the end of day,

Just as the darkness is closing down

Rest, little head, on my shoulder, so,

A sleepy kiss is the only fare;

Drifting away from the world we go,

Baby and I in a rocking chair.

See where the fire logs glow and spark,

Glitter the lights of Shadowland;

The pelting rains on the window, hark!

Are ripples lapping upon its strand.

There where the mirror is glancing dim,

A lake with its shimmering cool and still:

Blossoms are waving above its brim,

Those over there on the window sill.

Rock slow, more slow, in the dusky light,

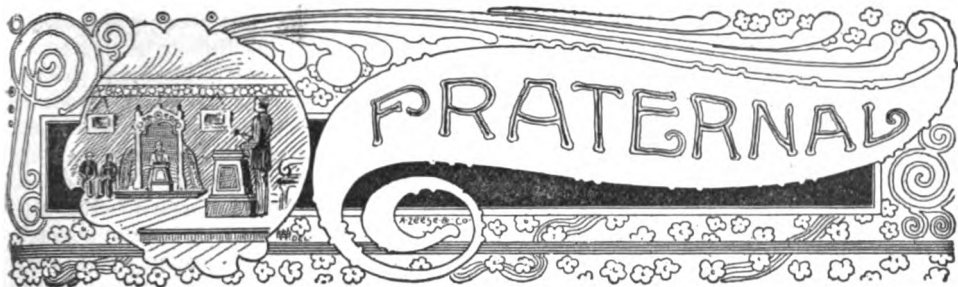

Silently lower the anchor down;

Dear little passenger, say good night,

We've reached the harbor of Shadowtown —Frederick News.

Somebody has discovered that the berry of the Florida palmetto shrub is an excellent remedy for soreness of the throat, cough, catarrh and colds in the head.

CLIFTON FORGE, Va., March 29, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Please publish the following in the CONDUCTOR:

REWARD.

As we have never seen a line in the CONDUCTOR from the corresponding secretary of Division 184, and fearing he is indisposed or some trouble has overtaken him, we offer as a reward for him, or information regarding the trouble which prevents him from writing, one large water melon, in season. If it was melon season now, we could excuse the Brother, for not writing, as we understand he was busy last season. All widowers, however, are busy certain seasons of the year in this section of the country: they are an industrious set of people.

GET THERE.

SOUTH QUEBEC, April 20, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Please grant me a little space in the CONDUCTOR as you have not heard from us for a long time. I will try and give you and the readers of the CONDUCTOR a few items:

First.—Defries Division No. 88, at one time was to have its charter arrested, as trouble arose through the location of the division, and not having the proper members to keep it alive and working, as it should. They had no hall to meet in—simply no money to lease and hold one, although there were about ten worthy Brothers who met in the B. of R. B. hall, at the foot of Patons Hill and St. Lawrence street. They decided to work up No. 88, and make it a good and prosperous division, which they did, and it is now in good working order.

For our success, too much praise cannot be awarded to Brothers, J. Couturier, J. Barry, F. Dorwin, M. Dussault, J. Huppe, Geo. Walker, etc. But for them, 88 would have given up its charter. May God bless and protect them in their walks and runs through life, and may they help to hold the charter until time shall be no more.

Brother Huppe, C. C., and Brother G. Walker, are hard workers, and make the members be on time, or Couturier side-tracks them, and Alexander handles the books.

Business on the I. C. R. is very good at present. There have been some changes in the system. T. Crockett, our chief despatcher, has resigned to accept the position of general manager of the Tumsconta Ry, Quebec, with headquarters at Rivir Du Loup, P. Q., having control of the traffic and operating departments. Mr. T. Crockett is highly spoken of as a good, reliable business man, and has been associated with railways for a number of years, and what few of the employes that have come in contact with him, speak in the highest terms of him. You will hear from 88 at some future time through the regular correspondent,

Yours truly P. F.

M. A. T.

WATERLOO, Iowa, April 26, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

We did not elect a correspondent at our election of officers, and, therefore, cannot blame any one in particular, that Johnson Division No. 67, has not been heard from through the columns of the CONDUCTOR.

Although we are rather quiet in our part of the world, we take a great interest in the welfare of the O. & C. There are several very important questions before the Order to-day; some of them will be acted upon by our Grand Division at their next meeting, I presume. I would like to urge upon all those who are members of the Grand Division, in particular, to discuss these questions in a fair, honest, unprejudiced spirit, ever keeping in mind the golden rule; "Do to others, as ye would that men should do unto you," which, if there is no hereafter, is a good rule to follow in the practical duties of every day life. After these question have been fully discussed, let them be acted upon according to the very best judgment, regardless of personal feelings. The division room is the place for those of us who compose the rank and file, kickers included, to discuss these matters. I am sorry to say our division has not done this as much as it ought. Other business and want of time have prevented us.

In regard to federation, I am first, last, and all the time opposed to it, as I understand the end to be attained by the projectors of the scheme. The majority of the Brothers in Division 67 with whom I have talked on the subject, and a few from other division are opposed to it. We are willing and anxious to be on friendly terms with all orders—with all men. But we are not willing to bind ourselves in a manner which may compel us at some time to do something which we do not want to do, or withdraw from the Order. As one Brother has said: "the engine will be too ponderous to handle." Not only that, but the train of dissatisfaction it is sure to haul, will be very likely to break in two. Let us stand by our colors. This is an age of progression; but I do not believe that interfering with our "strike clause" means progress for us.

In regard to compulsory insurance, I am not in favor of it. While every railroad man ought to carry insurance of some kind, many of us have other insurance that we do not care to give up. The insurance is a very good thing, but we should not forget, that the Order of Railway Conductors has other matters of great importance to its members to consider. I believe if compulsory insurance is adopted, it will keep many from joining our Order, who would otherwise become members.

I am in favor of every division being represented by one of its own members in the Grand Division. I am also in favor of biennial sessions. It will reduce the cost very materially. We all know that the greatest expense for a division to bear, is in sending a delegate every year to the Grand Division. It seems to me we have had experience enough, to place men at the head of our Order who can be trusted to hold their office for two years; that any law which may be made, ought to be good enough to last that length of time.

Division 67 is again in good working order. Nearly all who are near enough to attend take an interest, especially the officers; some of them laying off and losing a round trip, rather than miss a division meeting. We have not failed to have a meeting with a fair attendance, since the election of officers. We have initiated four candidates in the last three months, and have four more applicants for membership.

Hoping and praying that the next meeting of our Grand Division may be the beginning of an era of prosperity and harmony for the O. R. C.,

I remain, very truly yours in P. F.,

G. O. MILLER.

While it is a common saying that a conductor is simply a brakeman who is for the time being promoted, and who may at any moment drop back to his position in the first rank, we may say on the other hand that every brakeman and freight conductor is justified in looking forward to the time when he will be running a passenger train, and every man in the lower grades who attends properly to his business is entitled to consider himself a passenger conductor of the future. The average passenger conductor of to-day has served a long and arduous apprenticeship in the past, an apprenticeship which has cost nothing to his employers, for he has continually performed duties responsible and dangerous, in lower grades, at smaller wages, and at the same time, by observation and the nature of his work, has fitted himself for promotion. How dangerous his experience has been no one knows better than he, who, looking backward, is appalled as he counts up the number of his fellow-workers in the past whom he has seen killed or crippled for life while in the pursuit of their vocation.

To be a success as a conductor he must have some educational qualifications to commence with, and while a thorough college course may not be necessary, a good business education most assuredly is. He must be a good check clerk, quick to notice any errors in the thousands of way-bills passing through his hands, careful to note the condition of all the varieties of merchandise he handles, competent to write a plain and terse account of the many matters requiring report to his superior officers, ready to do all these things in the minimum of time, and with sufficient confidence in his own carefulness and accuracy to be prepared to make positive statements at much later dates, or he is not a success as a freight conductor, and his chances for promotion are but small. When he leaves the freight service to take a passenger train he must be able to bring other qualifications to bear to be a success. He must have a keen knowledge of human nature, and will require plenty of tact and self-control. He must be ready to listen to every one, no matter how limited his time, and while he must treat every one as fair and honest until he can positively prove to the contrary, he must be on his guard against fraud in every conceivable shape and variety. He must be often the corrector of errors in others and must be patient in temper and gentlemanly in demeanor under insult and abuse.

On the other hand, he will sometimes find it necessary to be vigorous and even aggressive; the force of Bismark and the biceps of Sullivan combined would not be too much to deal with some of the conditions the passenger conductor occasionally has on his hands. He must also have a thorough knowledge of the rules and laws relating to his business, some of which are of the most imperative nature, the slightest deviation from them perhaps resulting in frightful consequences, while others, apparently just as imperative, must be acted upon with judgment and with allowance for surrounding circumstances, or his zeal may cost the company an expensive lawsuit. Added to all this and of greater importance still are his responsibilities for the lives of his passengers and the safety of the company's property. How often he runs into a junction office and quickly but carefully checks up a register, gives a signal to his engineer, who, relying on him, pulls out with all the speed he can, and suppose the conductor has overlooked one delayed train, how fearful may be the result.

Have the owners and managers of our great roads ever noted the fact that for every bad accident caused by the neglect of conductor or engineer, there are ten caused by worn out or defective material, unsafe bridges, landslides and wash-outs?

The above are but a small portion of the duties of the conductor, and indeed a capitulation of the whole would be too much for our space, but surely enough is shown to prove his right to a better salary than he usually obtains. I wonder if our managers ever figure what it costs to support a family in a decent manner? First, deduct from the present conductor's pay sufficient to keep him in neat uniforms purchased by him at the company's request—in other words, their uniform paid for with his wages; then his expenses at the other end of the line. He must keep neat and clean or he will not give satisfaction, and the nature of his duties causes three times the wear to clothing than any indoor occupation. Added to all these necessary expenses must be some provision in case of accident or death, or his family is liable at any moment to be left unprovided for, and here again he is at a disadvantage, for every passenger on his train, with the ordinary insurance companies, obtains better terms than the conductor; he therefore in self-defense joins mutual insurance societies formed amongst his fellow-workers, and by the amount of his assessments learns the justice of the discrimination against him by the regular insurance companies.

Add to all this the fact that at the end of twenty years of active service, instead of being in his prime, he will almost certainly be prematurely aged and unable to follow his occupation. The constant jar while in motion renders him peculiarly liable to kidney complaints, nervous affections, etc., when he should be at his best. Rather a gloomy outlook this for a man with the attainments of the average conductor.

During all his service as a passenger conductor he is expected to handle the finances of his company in a perfectly honest manner, and our managers know that his conduct in this matter is much better than could be expected under the conditions, occasional cases of dishonesty and the regulation sneer notwithstanding. Take any other business where men of ability are entrusted with finances and see the difference in their pay and that of the men below them. What is there in the duties of the bank cashier or teller that calls for greater ability or faithfulness than is required of the conductor?

There is not a business man in America that pays wages so small for services of equal value as is paid the railway conductor.

W. V. STAFFORD.

BOSTON, MARCH 19, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

In regard to running trains on Sunday, "is it lawful to do good or to do evil" on that day? By Sunday, I mean the day Brother Wadleigh seems to refer to, the day we, as a people, understand is Sunday or the Sabbath. If we separate the two words as they are generally understood, we are trying to make a distinction without a difference. I am decidedly in favor of a day of rest and worship; a day that has been proven to be necessary to the best interests of man and beast. Our Great Teacher taught by precept and example that we were to do good and not evil, and this is a day that we have greater opportunity to do good and get good, and if we are wise we shall improve the opportunity. It has been proven beyond all controversy that one day in seven for rest is absolutely necessary to our best interests. Of course, we have a right to take any day for that purpose, but it is, as may be plainly seen, best for all, as a nation, that we have a national day, else the day of rest to some would be anything but restful to others who would prefer to stay quietly at home, or attend church with their families.

I have very much respect for the Brother who refused an office in one of our neighbor divisions because he was about to unite with the church, and he felt that his first duty was there with his family on Sunday. I would rather trust the happiness of my daughter to such a man than to an advocate of Paine or Ingersoll. Respt'y,

M. L.

GRAFTON, MARCH 16, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Mr. M. Severance says that Brother Wadleigh has some peculiar ideas in regard to the Sabbath. I think Mr. Severance has his peculiar ideas. He says this childish notion that Sunday is any better or more holy than any other day is all gush. Now, Brother Editor, it may be possible that there are some people in the State of Vermont that have been taught to believe and think so. But on the mountains of West Virginia we have been taught that our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ had risen from his grave on Sunday and triumphed over sin and hell. But that may be considered a small thing in the New England States. Again, he says, do not the clergy earn their salaries on Sunday? Nature performs her work; birds sing, sun shines, people are born and die on Sunday, and such a thing as the day of rest is unknown in Berlin. That is his argument for violating a positive law of God, delivered to Moses on Mt. Sinai, "Remember to keep holy the Lord's day."

Yours truly in P. F.,

JOHN C. DUFFY.

Division 190.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., April 18, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Notwithstanding the fact that I have long since, usurped far more space than should be allotted to any one correspondent, nevertheless, I wish to say something and trust you may find time and space for its use. Newspaper reports being true our Brothers at and east of Indianapolis, many of them are in trouble from the "festive spotter," who, like his prototype—the bed bug—can only leave his stink and bite. I am sure if you would ask any fair and high-minded Superintendent or General Manager, if he would believe one of these bipeds on oath, he would say, "No, sir." Then why are the oldest and best conductors in the country to be so unceremoniously dismissed without any show for a defense, or a knowledge of who are his accusers? Please note the difference in the opinion of Supt. Woods, of the Pan Handle system, and the chief officials of the Vandalia line. Mr. Woods says: "After a few years they cease to be useful." President McKern and Col. Hill argue differently, and claim that all of the latent qualities that go to make a perfect conductor, are drawn out by long and continued service. Statistics show that seventy-five per cent. of the accidents happening on railroads, through neglect and incompetency, occur in the first twelve months of the services of the conductor having the accident.

Let us hope that a storm of indignation may assume such gigantic proportions among all fair-minded officials, that this invisible creature must forever hide his diminished head, for there is so much injustice in these wholesale discharges, that something will come to the surface to even up such matters, or at least let us hope so.

For a fawning truculency and insufferable impertinence, please commend us to "Legetime," the colored potentate who presides over the "kinky heads" of Hayti, than to any individual that seeks such unfair method of dismissal of any man in the train service.

Fraternally yours in P. F.,

C. H. ARTHUR.

Division 92.

WILMINGTON, Del., April 10, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR: Since my last letter, Division 224 had a very pleasant trip to Richmond, Va. We left Wilmington in a special car attached to rear of Southern Fast Mail at 8:04 a. m., Sunday, March 23d, with the following Brothers in the party: C. F. Sherburn, J. T. Layfield, W. Pierce, F. J. Boylan, I. T. Parker, J. M. Young, N. J. Workman, C. T. Wilson, F. E. Emerson, B. F. Barker, W. H. Morris, J. H. Warfield, C. E. Wyman, C. D. Lack, T. A. Kane, J. G. Williamson, J. T. Sweeney, W. J. Johnston, H. B. Sweeton, W. E. Townsend, H. O'Neill, all of Division 224. W. H. Post and E. E. Bassert, of Division 162, J. S. Mewshaw, of Division 5, R. J. Foulon, of Division 204, A. H. Butler, of Division 229. We were joined in Washington by Brother J. R. Reagan, of Division 158. We had lunch served on the train after leaving Washington, and all enjoyed it very much.

En route we were shown the National Cemetery at Fredricksburg, the old frame house in which Stonewall Jackson died, and many other places made historic by our late war. At C. & O. Junction we were joined by Brothers A. J. Blanton, C. D. Goodwin and J. L. Pettus, of Division 152; at Ashland by Brother C. G. Blakely, of same division. Arrived at Richmond at 2:45 p. m., we were met at the depot by the following named Brothers of Division 152: E. W. Mosby, T. A. Goodman, L. C. Schwerckert, W. L. Harris, J. K. Michie, J. C. Daswell, J. F. Davis, J. T. Cook, C. G. Wright, W. J. Tyler, E. Bassunt and E. K. Grady, with cabs in waiting for a visit to the prominent places in the city. The first place was the home of the late Gen'l R. E. Lee; thence to white house of the confederacy, where Jefferson Davis lived during the brief existence of that government; the State Normal School; thence to the old building once occupied by Washington as his headquarters during the Revolutionary war, the site of old Libby Prison; from there to Libby Hill overlooking the James river and the city of Manchester on the opposite shore, where the boys enjoyed the splendid view; from thence to old St. John's P. E. church, in which Patrick Henry made his famous speech at a meeting of the Virginia House of delegates; from this historic house to Taylor's Hill, where another beautiful scene lay out before us. Almost the entire city of Richmond is to be seen from this hill, and presents, with the surrounding country, a panorama of beautiful scenes. Gamble Hill Park, Lee's Monument, Monroe Park and to Hollywood Cemetery, each and all of which were places replete with interest to the visitors. The tombs of ex-Presidents Tyler and Monroe, that of Gen'l H. A. Wise, Gen'l J. E. B. Stewart and the monument erected by the Hollywood Monumental Association, to the memory of the confederate dead were visited in turn, and at each place memories were revived and historic associations talked of, that made each one a marked point in the brief but entirely pleasant journey. At about 5:30 o'clock we reached Murphy's hotel, corner Eighth and Broad streets where supper was served in the best style, and we all enjoyed it, as we had done our trip through the city. And here we were permitted to grasp the hand of many Brothers we had not met before; and who did all they could to make our visit a pleasant one, and to say they succeeded does not express it.

The time to leave for home having arrived, the Brothers all went to the depot with us, where the good-bye was said, and we left for home, arriving at Wilmington at 2:50 a. m. We desire to thank the officers of the B. N. & B. R. R., the R. F. & P. R. R. for kindnesses, and Mr. C. E. Doyle, superintendent C. & O., who very kindly tendered us the courtesies of his line to Newport News. I was very much impressed with the manner in which we were treated and the kindly feeling that prevailed, and thought if we all would try to be happy and make others happy, what a power for good our Order would be.

I want again to thank every Brother of Division 152 and any others that helped in any way to make our trip so enjoyable, and our prayer is that God will bless all the members of Division 152 and their loved ones, and our whole Order.

Yours truly,

I. T. PARKER.

To Editor Railway Conductor:

Extracts from the minutes of a union meeting held in Philadelphia, April 6, 1890, at which there was an attendance of 302 members, representing forty-three Divisions of the O. R. C. G. C. C. Wheaton, G. A. C. C. Wilkins, G. S. & T. Daniels and C. E. Weisz, of Insurance Committee, Grand Officers, present.

Meeting convened at 1 p. m. and closed 11:20 p. m.

Motion—That the basis of representation be one delegate for each fifty members and an additional representation for over one-half of each additional fifty members. Carried.

Motion—That the G. Div. sessions be bi-ennial. Carried.

Motion—That G. C. C's salary be $3,000 per annum; G. Sec. salary be $2,500, and that no salaries be paid the G. A. C. C., G. S. C. and Editor of Magazine. Carried.

Motion—That one year's service constitute eligibility to membership. Carried.

Motion—That we are opposed to federation, but favor harmonious relations with other organizations of the railway service, avoiding entangling alliances. Carried.

Motion—The insertion in the statutes and corresponding language in obligation, "That no member of this Order shall engage in or be interested in the sale or traffic of intoxicating liquors, knowing them to be used for the purpose of a beverage." Carried.

Motion—That our laws and ritual should remain as at present on the strike question, and we hereby pledge ourselves to do all in our power to prevent any changes being made in our obligation and that we do all in our power to carry out the sentiments of the 20th session of the Grand Division at Toronto, Canada, when it stated: "That no coalition, combination or alliance, should be formed by the O. R. C. with any labor organization, and our Grand Officers are hereby forbidden to enter into any combination with them or any of them;" and that this resolution be published in our magazine. Carried.

Yours in P. F.,

F. W. MACVEIGH,

C. C. Div., 204.

Chairman of Union Meeting Committee.

Any one knowing the whereabouts of James C. Aldrich will confer a great favor upon G. O. Miller, Manson street, Waterloo, Iowa. Brother Miller is Secretary of Division No. 67.

* *

If any Brother has any knowledge of the whereabouts of Geo. W. Glessner, who was at one time yard master on the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville R'y, and also a conductor on that road, will he please correspond with R. J. Hull, Buckingham, Ill.

* *

We learn that Mr. E. P. Ripley, general manager of the C. B. & Q. R'y, has resigned, to accept the position of Second Vice-President of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R'y, and Mr. Geo. B. Harris, of the Burlington & Northern, succeeds Mr. H. B. Stone as Second Vice-President of the C. B. & Q. R'y.

E. H. BELKNAP, EDITOR.

W. N. GATES, ADVERTISING MANAGER, 10 Public Square, Cleveland, O.

WM. P. DANIELS, MANAGER.

THE PAST, THE PRESENT AND THE FUTURE.

It is but a few years since the Order of Railway Conductors was a mere handful of brothers united in one common cause for the purpose of mutual protection and for the advancement and prosperity of its members, as also the worth and benefits of its Mutual Benefit Department. Through tribulations and trials it struggled along for several years, until finally it gained a new impetus, and its growth since 1882 has been more than the most confident anticipated. Their laws were founded on certain principles that were different in some ways from those of other labor associations. And their prosperity has been steady and has (generally at least) afforded very sure evidence that as a society they were respected by all who were willing to be their friends. As to the benefits rendered its membership, all has not been accomplished that may have been expected or even desired. But while this may be true, it may not be amiss, indeed it may not be unwise, for every member of this Order to take a little of his time and look over the history of the past, dot down carefully the benefits we have received, and then gather up as far as possible the benefits gained and the losses sustained by other organizations, and then carefully compare notes. It might possibly surprise even those who, to-day are loudest in their assertions that we have accomplished nothing. We will venture to assert in all truthfulness and brotherly love, that there is a large percentage who have failed to do this in any way.

It is often remarked that "a tree is known by its fruit. This in a measure is true. But if you liken any society to a tree that bears fruit, you must be generous to both, and be willing to give a fair show to the tree at least. If the tree be healthy and vigorous, no rotten bark or heart, and every limb covered with animate being that gives glow and color to the green leaves and the buds and blossoms; if from the roots there flows the sap that gives strength to all these, then you may expect great and abundant fruit or foliage.

On the other hand, if some vile worm be at work in the bark, or the soil be so poor no nourishment is sent out, or if one half be dead and the other, turning its head, says (only in pity and sorrow), "I may as well die, too"—the beauty and the value of the poor old tree is soon lost forever.

It is just the same with any society, wherever and whenever every member thereof works together in the common cause, trying with might and main to see which can do the most. If controversies arise or difficulties come in your path, be a man, rise above and surmount them, and for God's sake, and more for your own a great deal, "look pleasant and don't grumble." Then you have a tree that will bear good fruit, and the hue of the green leaves will attest to its healthy condition. If the soil seems to be getting a little thin, enrich it with your best endeavors; sprinkle around its roots 30 per cent of kind intentions and active work for its good health. Do not, if you see here and there a dying leaf or a withered bud, go out every morning, frown at it, and get mad and throw stones and clubs at the poor thing. But on the contrary say a good word, and above all things "look pleasant and don't grumble."

And now if you will take this comparison home to your own hearts, and study it well, what will you see? We will tell you, but please do not tell any one that we said it. You will see the main cause of all the dissatisfaction in the Order of Railway Conductors to-day.

Now we come to the present. The time to act, the time to do. What? Just exactly what is right. You ask me what that is? I cannot tell you. Neither is there a human being that can. But you, the delegates and members of the 22d Grand Division, now in session at Rochester, can do so.

You ask what is the course to pursue? Look over the field carefully. See that the whole nine are in their places. Do not put a good third baseman on the pitcher's plate, who is good for nothing there. Do not ask a No. 1 captain to keep the score. Do not fill the infield with players who are so far out all the time that they cannot or will not see the ball. Read over carefully your rules. If they have helped you in the game in former days, let them alone. If there are some that have made you lose, change them, but above all things don't put in their place or add new ones that will defeat you. Then, after this is all accomplished, take your places. And do what? Nothing under the heavens but "play ball." Not as nine different players, but as one man. Then the victory will be yours and ours. The future will be assured.

Gentlemen and brothers of the 22d Grand Division, in all your work, just consider the interests and welfare of your membership. Be sure you do what is right. And then everybody "play ball."

SHALL WE BE DISAPPOINTED?

We are anxiously looking for the good things that may be accomplished by the delegates now in annual session at Rochester. Years ago there were but a tithe in number to what there are to-day. Consequently there is more diversity of opinions, and also more questions that come up year by year that are worthy of careful thought and study. Questions that are of the deepest interest to the railway conductor. Vital both in their bearing and in their reality. These cannot be ignored. They will not be passed thoughtlessly by, for every subject that is of importance will receive proper attention. No one can rise up from his seat and say the subject under consideration is of no consequence whatever. It may not be to him, but to others it might be of vital importance. One great cause for all this lies in the fact that the conditions and surroundings of so many members of the Order are so different that a general rule or line of operation will not fit the case of every one. We are not speaking now of principles nor of the policy that governs the general conduct of this Order, but more particularly of the work that may be accomplished whereby the individual membership may be assisted in all ways that tend to their prosperity as conductors. There is a portion of this membership that really need but little assistance at any time. They have either been wise or lucky, or both. They have accidentally or otherwise had the good fortune to be in the employ of some company who have deemed it to be to their own interest to reward them with at least fair wages for their labor. And have also learned the all-important lesson, to treat their employes as human beings instead of slaves. As if they were men instead of machines. And whose officers have learned one important lesson, which is that kind words are more active helpmeets toward bringing a return of good deeds than curses and fault-finding.

Where this is the condition of affairs between the company and employe, there is but little need of any great amount of help or assistance from either a society or from individuals. But, alas, this is only the bright and picturesque side of the painting, while the other is clouded and full of unhealthy colors on account of the injustice that is either thoughtlessly or purposely heaped upon them. Many a conductor who is efficient and capable, who has followed his profession (for it is a profession) for fifteen or twenty years, who draws a salary this month of $60, next month $55, the one after $50, and who is almost spit upon by his superiors if he dare to hope for better days, does not look at the good effects of any law or its workings as the one does who has no reason to be dissatisfied. The one who can go to his superior officer and meet him on common ground, converse with him as mortals alike, only in position, he gets kind words in return. A promise for a little more pay in the future as soon as it can be brought about (and one which he knows will not be broken). Still has faith in mankind and lives partially contented in what he now has and hopes by good conduct to gain in the future. There is another class, and their names are many, who get even more than this as far as volume is considered. They get elegant promises year after year, even told that they are doing well; we think everything of you; could not spare you under any circumstances; keep up the good work until the proper time arrives. Even this class of conductors, if promises were bank notes, would be millionaires to-day. But lack-a-day. Promises will not buy clothing nor any of the necessities of life.

Then there is still another class, who get less than this. That is, less in benefits and money, but more in something else. In addition to these promises, easily made, they are honored with curses, short, crusty answers, made to feel that the pleasant and good things of this earth were made for the service and not for the one who performs such service. Even men of this class feel quite different from the ones who are at least well rewarded for their labor and well used by those who have the opportunity to exercise a little power. So you can see that there are two sides to every story. There are two sides to a conductor's life, and the side that needs the benefits is the side that can be given all that we as an Order can bestow.

So in the work of this Grand Division, although we cannot tell what laws will be enacted, neither what changes can be made, let us hope, and rightfully hope, that one important measure will be strengthened to the end that justice may always prevail. See to it that some provision is made, so that you as the representatives of the railway conductors can approach any of the official regime of any corporation, and explain to them in detail (not to one but to all) the impunities that are inflicted upon worthy, deserving men, entitled to better, far better usage. And now you will undoubtedly ask this one important question, what good will this do? We will be honest, however, and say we do not know. But one thing we are certain of: it will do no harm, and we will have done our duty.

And now we look with great and abiding faith to the good sense of the delegates to this 22d Grand Division for the enactment of such laws as shall make us stronger as a society. More firmly resolved to act as brothers, one toward another, to the end that we may all be worthy of bearing the name.

THE DIGNITY OF LABOR.

This may be a new idea to some of our readers. We are aware that it is a false idea to many, who have no conception of there being any dignity to anything that comes through any channel but that of blood, birth and riches. No matter how imbued the blood may be with the taint of things unworthy, or the birth with sins of former generations, or how unholy may have been the ways in which these riches may have been secured. It is enough for them to know, that the two first can be traced back to some place or person, that boasted of a royal heritage and royal name. While if the latter is obtained, no questions are asked. No exceptions are taken, no bar placed in their pathway which savors of reproach or scorn. And the idea to this class of people is a very humiliating one, that there is such an element in life as "Dignity in Labor." And, after we have given a little careful thought to this subject it is not so very strange a thing to us, that so many in the world have never beheld any worth, beauty or dignity in things they have never had any taste for. In things they know nothing about. In an element in this world's prosperity that they have been brought to believe is degrading. A sacrifice because of poverty. The natural condition of serfdom. The proper place for slaves. This class of people dwell not alone in the homes of those that are really wealthy and aristocratic. But, also among that class of people who live on nothing, and their only title to what they call dignity in this life, is snobbery. Of the two the latter is the most to be despised. While if our sympathies were to be enlisted with either we would be lenient to the first. Labor was the first element of success that ever greeted the annals of history. It was handed down to us by the Master and Creator as an heirloom, to be rightfully proud of, long before riches had even a home or a place in this world. By the hand and the strength of the Almighty it created this universe, and from the mouth of him who knows of no dignity but honesty, uprightness and purity of love, this work of labor was pronounced blessed. And it contained the wealth that was on earth at that time, and has gathered in all the riches that have been honestly obtained since the creation of the world. So the word had no degrading sound in olden times, and along the shores of Gallilee when the Savior of mankind and His apostles were rich in the field of labor and honest toil, we read but very little of the dignity that hovered around them on account of riches, of wealth, of caste, of position, of capital, or of trusts and combinations. Standing at the head of these working men, who were carpenters, tent makers, fishermen, etc., (all working men), was the Savior, whom Dr. Talmage says "Never possessed but sixty-five cents in all his life" (or at least there is no account of it). There appeared to be no dignity to Him in the fact, that he was possessed of this limited amount. But the dignity all centered in the fact, like an honest laborer among his fellow men, he had enough to pay his taxes. And among the chosen of his disciples there was only one who struck. Yes, for thirty pieces of silver, and he was sorry for it the next moment. Any person, who by dint of good management, who by practice of economy, good judgment and honest and honorable use of his best talents given him, who accumulates wealth and makes a proper use of the same, lends a dignity to the value of his accumulations in the same ratio as a proper return is shown that in any way benefits the world and its possessor. But the individual who never earned a dollar in his life in an honest manner; the one who inherited all his wealth, never adding a penny thereto unless at the expense of others, but is continually drawing from the principal to the end of his life, both the man and his wealth have lost all title to the name of dignity, and are as useless to society as the silent sands that idly lie on the shores of the sea. You may ask what branches of labor are entitled to have this name applied to them. We answer every one. There is the same amount of worth and dignity embodied in the results of the labor performed by the man who shoves the plane, or handles the shovel on the section, as there is in the work of the finished artisan, or the painter, who sits beside his easel, and with brush and crayon executes the finest painting in the world.

It is the interest which they take in their labors to make them perfect, that gives the dignity, and the use they make of the avails of such labor. All men are not endowed with the same treasures of skill, and cunning of the eye, and hand and thought; but he who does the best he possibly can with the means and ability he can command, and makes the wisest use of the returns which it awards, bears off the palm of dignity, that awaits honest toil and labor, no matter what his profession may be. While on the other hand, the man or men who live and profit at the expense of others; the ones who "sow not, neither do they reap," yet wax rich because they impoverish the poor man, because they gather wealth and abundance off of the sad necessities of others, is a cipher in society, a nonentity in the community. A meaningless stumbling block across the pathway of the men of toil. Yet, alas, this world is full of this class of human beings. Our prisons, jails and almshouses have delegates from their ranks. They stand on the street corners of every city and hamlet in the universe. They call at your door and mine, asking for a meal of victuals, not because they are in want from sickness or misfortune, but because this is the profession they follow. They break into your homes when darkness envelops the earth, and rob you of all they can find. In full dress paraphernalia, with eye-glass fixed, they play the gentleman in polite society, and the one who may be the dupe learns too late, that there is neither dignity or honesty, attached to his calling. But honest, honorable, righteous labor, wears the emblem of true dignity, that gains the admiration of all true and honorable gentlemen, no matter how rich they may be in this world's goods, and all there is yet to be added, is a proper recompense that will yet be awarded to all those who toil to make others happy, then will the dignity of labor receive its proper reward.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

In looking over the columns of a daily paper a few days ago, we noticed that there was one branch of business that seemed to be in a flourishing condition. The carpenters, masons, miners, shoemakers, carriage builders, coal hands, ship carpenters, and a host of people in nearly all branches of business were either out or preparing to go out on a strike, unless certain demands were acceded to and certain difficulties settled. We are here to acknowledge that this is a free country, and every individual, no matter how rich or how poor, has a perfect right to work, or be idle as best suits their convenience or pleasure. But we are of the opinion that in the end it is an exceedingly expensive luxury, that both sides are indulging in at the present time. The laboring man claims that it is not so much a matter of dollars and cents with him as some may consider it to be, but it is also a matter of principle and justice, that they are only asking for what is right, for what they are justly entitled to, and this they are bound to have. On what grounds the business men and the capitalists base their opinions it is hard work to determine. If is considered by them a matter of right and justice, or if a great principle be involved, and their rights as American citizens are invaded it would seem that there might be some way out of the difficulty, that at least for the present would be less expensive than the present method. A stubborn and earnest endeavor on the part of either class to widen the breach does not, to our mind, seem to be the cheapest way to settle the difficulty. It seems also, as if capital had resolved to hold up its head, rest on its dignity (if there be such a thing), while labor had got mad and stood in its madness laughing at the others. But while one side is on its supposed dignity and the other laughing in its madness, there are no shekels being gathered in by either one. How would it do for both to act on the supposition that each may have asked for a trifle too much, and get near enough to each other to reason among themselves, and for once do what is just and right between man and man? This would, if accepted, settle the difficulty, and the principle there is so much said about would settle and take care of itself. There may be lots of fun in being out of work or being out on a strike. There may be any amount of amusement to the other fellows when all the industries of this great country or so many of them are paralyzed, but it is certainly a luxury which involves a great deal of bitterness, and is very expensive.

It is a trifle over four weeks since were we taken down with the second attack of the Grippe, and this is our first appearance in the office. We came near bidding good-bye to our friends, but thanks to our physicians, to our excellent friends, and especially to our good wife, we are still on this side the river and will try once again to do the best we can for the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR. We wish to express our most sincere thanks to Brothers Wheaton, Daniels and Sackett, as also to their families for so many kindnesses that we may never be able to repay, and sincerely hope will never have the opportunity to do so in like manner. The kindness of Brother Sackett in the help he has favored us with in the work of the Magazine will always be kindly remembered. And the gentlemen who have been so lenient with us in the office of publication are not, neither will they be forgotten. And now a word to the readers. Have you ever made the acquaintance of "Grippe" the second time? If you say nay, then we beg of you not to use any extra endeavors to do so. His first visit is bad enough, but the second is the crowning effort of his life. Let him pass by if he will for the first time; he only introduces himself in a sort of an off-hand roundabout way, but when he comes again, look out; do not be enticed into entertaining him on account of his Russian airs or pretense of nobility. And if the promise is given, it will only be a slight attack like having the varioloid, don't believe a word of it. He is a liar from away back. When you are so weak that when you lie down you cannot sit up, and when you stand up you have not strength enough to fall down, you will be satisfied with the perfidy and lying to which he is addicted. When he gets you in his grasp and breathes in you a miasma that gets you down so that you do not know anything (even less than when you were perfectly well) you will acknowledge the truth of these remarks. When you have averaged about an hour's sleep for each night for four weeks and lain awake day times, you will feel like saying of Russia what Mr. Vanderbilt has been credited with saying in regard to public opinion: "O, the grippe, the grippe, the horrible grippe, as treacherous as you can be; If you come again, please let us slip, for you have no charms for me. You are a visitor that nobody wants; go back o'er the ocean's foam, Or go to the hades of darkest night—Go anywhere, but let us alone. You are full of aches and pains and woes, a bundle of pricklers and thorns; From the hair of your head to the tip of your toes, you ache like a surplus of corns."

Tuesday, May 13th, the 22nd Grand Division of the Order of Railway Conductors will convene in the city of Rochester, New York. The opening exercises will be held at the City Hall, and we learn that the reception committee and the committee on entertainment have done everything in their power to make this a "gala day" for the Delegates, visiting Brothers and their families. Eminent gentlemen have been invited to participate in the exercises while the citizens of this beautiful city have selected out of their representative men, a number who will welcome the visitors, to all its beauties and adornments, as also its individuals in every branch of business. All of these will be a pleasure to every visitor and the remembrance of them will last and grow brighter in years to come. We trust that everyone will appreciate every kindness shown them. No more beautiful offering could be tendered the citizens of this city than to leave behind you an impression that no company of ladies and gentlemen ever participated in and enjoyed their hospitality more thoroughly. In this matter let everyone try to exceed the other, so that the cities of the east will say with those of the west, "Sorry that you must leave us." "Happy to have you come again!" The worth and excellence of any body of men of every society is estimated by the conduct and behavior of the ones who are chosen to represent them, and on this account we trust that there will be nothing said that will mar the fair name of the Order of Railway Conductors.

We picked up a daily paper a few days ago and read an account of an order that had been issued by the officers of one of our western trunk railway lines, which in effect was nearly as follows: "On such a date a cut of such a per cent will be made, so that these salaries will be the same that they were previous to January 1st, 1890." "Also that these employees will be required to return to this company the amount of the advance they have received since that date." We certainly hope for the sake of common decency, if for nothing else in this world, that there is some mistake in this report. And if it be a mistake this company or any other that has been thus misrepresented cannot too quickly refute any such statement, even provided they could enforce any such arrangement.

We have in our railway experience seen some and heard of many more exceedingly cheeky things, but this one (if true) takes the palm; out Herods Herod and all his disciples. We are generally prepared to hear of anything almost that seems out of all character, but we must confess that this is a little too bold an experiment to seem likely to be true. The first portion of it is bad enough, but the second takes all the grocery and leaves no room for any one to make any discount.

We shall await with anxiety to hear a denial of this worse than abuse, but if we are disappointed, shall certainly speak in no uncertain terms in regard to this matter, that comes home to every railway employee. What is right in this world is right, no matter who the actors are, and that which is wrong, is governed by the very same principles.

We are not well enough to be in the office but a portion of the day, but it is a little bit lonesome even for that length of time. The familiar whistle of the Grand Secretary, (only excelled by the sweet tones of Mrs. Shaw,) are no more heard; neither the Grand Chief Conductor's gentle voice, as he says, "I believe I will indulge in a cigarette if you gentlemen have no objections." While Brother Sackett comes in no more and says, "What do you think the baby weighed last night?" And Joe, poor Joseph; you will all meet him and he will be glad to see you, and sing once more his favorite song, "My Marguerite." But the boys are busy, and there is enough for them to do, so that there is no mischief going on any of the time. But since we cannot be with you, we will offer you all this one toast: "Prosperity to the Order of Railway Conductors, and a happy time to all the delegates, their wives and sweethearts, the visiting members included."

MENTIONS

Brother T. J. Madden, of Division 65, who has been in the hospital quite a long time, at Philadelphia, returned home late in the month of April.

We wish to obtain two or three copies of the RAILWAY CONDUCTORS' MONTHLY for June 1889. Can any of our readers who do not care to preserve their files, accommodate us?

Brother James McPartland, delegate to the 22d Session of the Grand Division at Rochester, left the city Saturday evening, May 3rd. Brother Jim represents Valley City Division No. 58, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Mrs. C. S. Wheaton, with her sister, started for her home in Elmira, N. Y., a few days ago, where she will spend a few days before the meeting of the Grand Division, at Rochester. Bro. Wheaton will leave soon after his return to this office.

It is said by those who are posted in such matters, that the city switching at Colby, on the Kansas division of the U. P., is something enormous. It takes the wind out of the boys to think of it, at least it does to talk about it.

The "Bishop" has, after mature deliberation, decided to allow trains 601 and 602 to run a few days longer, and P. D. Q. says they can run if "it won't take more than five minutes." Bigelow thinks they should run "every day, sometimes" anyway.

Any brother knowing the whereabouts of Bro. A. B. Caldwell will please notify the Secretary of Britton Division No. 138, Garret, Ind., as matters of great importance are awaiting his attention. Should the brother chance to see this will he please correspond with Brother Blackburn at once?

On Sunday morning, May 4th, Brother Orange Sackett, wife and daughter, Irma, left on the early Northwestern train for Avon, New York, where they will spend a few days with parents and friends, before they go to Rochester in attendance at the Grand Division. The only thing they left behind them to take care of the house and garden was "Fritz," the yellow dog, and he, poor fellow, is boarding out, learning to talk another language, While wrestling with the "Sage of Russia" we were honored at our home with a pleasant visit from Brother Judd, of Division 96, Aurora, Ill. He is the delegate from that Division and a right capable and worthy one, too. It did us lots of good once more to meet our good friend and Brother, though his stay was short, as he must hie himself home again in time to go out on his run. Come again: stay longer, and we hope we may feel in better condition to entertain you as you deserve.

By a late decision of the higher court, it looks now as if whisky and beer would be as free in Iowa after a little, as the most sanguine might anticipate. And the prospect is, that the places where it can be purchased will be as numerous as are "base ball clubs. It appears to an outsider as if the Prohibition law (saying nothing of the effort or intention) had been much like the old saying: "Much cry, and little wool." We are thankful, that as far as the Grand Officers are concerned, it will make but little difference whether it be prohibition or extradition.

We trust the delegates to the Grand Division will not feel hurt, because we have taken the time and work necessary to mail them a copy of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR (issue of May 15). Scarcely well enough to be about, we have taken great pains to make it a spicy, readable number, both for you and your families. To all our friends, we kindly ask you, to read it carefully, in half as kindly a spirit as the articles are written and selected. To our enemies, wherever they may be, we especially entreat you to peruse it closely, and criticise every line and word, for if you do this much, you will at least know what it contains.

We hope that the delegates to the Grand Division at Rochester will feel it a pleasure to call at the offices of the Democrat and Chronicle and Union and Advertiser. Leave your cards, brothers; introduce yourselves, for they will have much to say of you. And a short acquaintance may be beneficial to you all. Let them know that you are a reading, thinking class of people, and appreciate a live, energetic, first-class newspaper, and are good judges of the same. Don't be bashful; walk in upon them at any time of day (for you know you will all be busy nights, with meetings, entertainments, etc., etc.) And above all things do not be afraid to give them all the information in regard to your labors that is consistent and proper.

.

One day last week this city received a visit from the "Southern California Exhibit train," in charge of Brother J. B. Lauck, member of El. Captian Division No. 115, San Francisco, California. We were not able to visit the palace of fruits, vegetables, minerals, wines and cereals, but our better half did the honors for us. She found our Brother and his estimable wife and daughter, as also another gentleman accompanied by his wife, nicely situated in their special moving car, living as cosily as if they were anchored to some fortress by the wayside. They have already visited New Orleans and other southern cities, thence to the Pacific coast and returned thus far, but will be gone from home yet a long time on their journey through the states. Success to you, Brother, and to the mission that carries you forward in your work.

.

Nearly a year has passed since we took charge of the "RAILWAY CONDUCTOR." That many of our readers have been sadly disappointed we are well aware. For what is said and written we must take for granted. Now, we are not going to write a list of excuses as long as a grocery order, or take up time in telling why we have failed to do better. We will, however, without attaching a particle of blame to anyone, mention, in all kindness, one or two things that are absolutely true. There are about 15,000 members. We are confident that what would or could be printed in these pages that would exactly suit or even please one, would in no wise be agreeable to the other 14,999. Notice, if you will, the difference of opinions expressed, and a thousand more felt on all other matters pertaining to the welfare of the Order and you can judge a trifle of the surroundings that are in the path of an editor of a Fraternal Journal.

Our health has been such for the past three months that we have been nearly nobody, which has made it up-hill business. Now, as to the future, we can only promise that we will direct our best endeavors to make the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR what we believe to be a periodical the best adapted to your wants and your wishes. Everything in our power shall be done for your good and for the best interest of the Order of Railway Conductors.

.

With sadness we mention the sad accident which befell our most worthy neighbor, Art Maxon, former delegate to the Grand Division, Past C. C. and member of Valley City Division No. 58. With his estimable wife and daughter, they were driving down First avenue with his span of spirited tony bays, when some one drove up rapidly in the rear and his team becoming excited they turned one side, and striking the street car track the buggy tipped over, throwing them out on the hard pavement. Brother Maxon sustained serious injuries. One arm was broken, the bone protruding through the skin, two or three fingers broken besides other smaller injuries. Mrs. Maxon and daughter were also injured but not seriously. In addition to the Brother's injuries he had at the time an attack of the "grip," pneumonia set in which makes the situation more critical. He is receiving every attention that can be afforded him, and his friends in and out of the Order earnestly hope that his recovery will soon be assured. Both the good Brother and no less his estimable family, will please accept the sympathy of all the members of the Order of Railway Conductors.

.

We are under great and lasting obligations to the Railway News Reporter for the compliment which was tendered us in the issue of April 26th, which we give space to below. It awakens within us a feeling of gratitude, that even one person will come to our relief and speak his mind in all the fulness of which it is capable. It certainly shows a Brotherly disposition which cannot but help add to the value of any exchange, as such comments must give pleasure to a large number of its readers. This one fact alone brings us enough joy to more than compensate for all the unkind things that our friends could say of us. Any other course that we might have pursued would have afforded them no such happiness, therefore we feel constrained to thank the gentleman for the beautiful notice so willingly tendered. We take the liberty to give it prominence, so that every member of this Order may know the writer's views, and also be given a taste of popular journalism:

It is regretted by a large number of the readers of The Conductor, the organ of the Order of Railway Conductors, that its editor has been confined to his home for several months, which fact has made it impossible for him to take any part in the present discussion of matters pertaining to the good of the Order. It may be out of place but we cannot help remarking that the policy of the journal appears to be very weak. Never to our knowledge since we became a member of the Order have we noticed the slightest resistance in its columns against the many outrageous attacks on members of the Order—made by men in many cases who are lauded to the sky by that journal. It is not necessary to secure a Herr Most to edit The Conductor, but it would not be a bad idea to secure a man who had a spirit without a string to it.

* *

Until very lately we have (with a very few exceptions) endeavored to give space to all the communications that have been so kindly tendered us. But there have been within the past few weeks a few that have asked for admittance, that we have deemed best for all concerned that we omit them, for the present at least. Since the matter of candidates at the next Grand Division has been agitated, and there has also been some controversy in regard to the course to be pursued in matters of importance to the Order at the next session, a few of the brothers have thought it wise, and we presume for its best good, to give their opinions in regard to divers persons and different subjects in a way that to us seems to be almost any way but the right one. We have, after careful study in regard to this matter, made up our mind that the only proper place to ventilate these opinions (more especially where personalities are so largely indulged in) is confined to just two places—the Division rooms and the hall of the Grand Division. This talking and writing at long range is too often fraught with unpleasant hereafters that are so apt to lead to everything else almost but what is manly and gentlemanly (say nothing about what is BROTHERLY), that we do not deem it to be right for us to take a hand in at the expense of the Order of Railway Conductors. And for this reason and this alone we have thought it for the best to omit all such communications. We are perfectly aware that there will be some that will feel very hard toward the worthless editor because he has seen fit to pursue this course. In answer to this we have only a few words to offer. If we had taken the opposite course, you would after it was all over with blame us a hundred fold more than you will now. Oftentimes in this life a person will feel himself very much agrieved at the way he has been used by another, but if the last named uses real good, common sense at the time when his has in a measure left him, he will in after years feel very much obliged and also very kindly toward the friend or brother who did him a favor when least expected. In no sense of the word whatever have we refused or deemed it unwise to give space to the opinions which have been expressed because they came from one side or the other; this has made no difference to us in one way or the other. We expect to give every one a hearing who is a member of the Order of Railway Conductors, but we do not feel that we can afford for your sakes to take up a long line of communication which would engender bitter feelings for a long time to come. Differences of opinion, different lines of policy, and ways and means for the benefit of the members of the Order of Railway Conductors, are natural consequences, which we must not only expect, but are also right in themselves. And if there is any vituperation to be used at any time (a question which I very much doubt), there are proper places and there will be proper times to place such things on exhibition. One thing seems to be very certain to us—that is that the pages of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR are the farthest from being the proper place of all others. And after the march has been formed, the battle is over, the smoke all cleared away, the dead buried, the wounded carefully taken care of, and the energies of all once more engaged in their respective duties; such as will be honorable alike to themselves and to all others, we are perfectly confident that at that time nine-tenths of the membership of the Order will then look at this matter just as we have already done.

All Watn to Play First Fiddle.

In the grand orchestra of life everybody is anxious to play first fiddle. Nay, almost everybody does play it; for although the first fiddle absolutely may take precedence of all the rest, yet every second fiddle is first fiddle to somebody. As "fleas have smaller fleas to bite 'em, and so on ad infintum," so every man who tickles a superior has an inferior to tickle him. If it were not for this pleasant arrangement we should have no social harmony, and it is only when this system of relations is disturbed that we experience discords and crashes.

A man went to a neighbor, a Scotchman, and asked him to indorse a note in order to raise money at a bank. The neighbor refused, saying: "If I was to put my name til't, ye wad get the siller frae the bank, and when the time cam' roun' ye wadna be ready, and I wad hae to pay't, sae then you and I would quarrel; sae we maun just as weel quarrel the noo as lang's the siller's in my pouch."

At a regular meeting of R. B. Hawkins Division No. 114, O. R. C., held April 6th, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Almighty Ruler of the universe, to remove from our midst by death, our beloved Brothers, Thomas Vaughn, and James Graham;

Resolved, That in the death of the Brothers, we have lost true and worthy members of the Order.

Resolved, That we extend our sincere sympathies to the bereaved wife and child of Brother Vaughn, and to the bereaved mother of Brother Graham, and commend them to Him who doeth all things well, even though they seem sometimes hard.

Resolved, That these resolutions be engrossed upon the minutes of our Division, and a copy sent Mrs. Vaughn and Mrs. Graham; also, a copy sent the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, for publication.

Resolved, That being desirous of showing our respect for the memory of our deceased Brothers, it is ordered, that our charter be draped in mourning for the next thirty days.

J. W. CHESMORE, }
JOHN HUEBNER, } Committee.
W. H. WATTS, }

BURLINGTON, Iowa, May 5th, 1890.

Died at his home in this city, on April 17, 1890, of typhoid fever, William H. Workman, son of William and Sarah Workman, of New London, Iowa, born March 21st, 1859.

It is seldom that death finds a victim whose removal from time to eternity, occasioned grief so universal and profound within the sphere of its acquaintance, as did the death of William Workman, in the thirty-first year of his age. His disease is characterized as being one of great pain and anguish, which he bore with so much patience and fortitude, always loving and kind to all who were associated with him in his last long illness, never murmuring, and at last the silent messenger steals softly in and lays the icy finger of death upon the brow of the suffering patient, the devoted husband, the kind father, the loving son. Called to dwell in a higher sphere by Him, to whose divine will all must bow.

Down through the valley of the shadow of death,
A Brother has gone to-day;
'Twas the voice of the reaper, who garners the sheaves,
Who has called him over the way.

Through the beautiful gates ajar he passed,
On his run to the heavenly home,
The Angels are there with their songs of praise'
And a calm, sweet voice says, "Come."

From pain and sorrow, from toil and from care.
His soul to-day is at rest;
Besides the still waters, in pastures green,
He numbers one more of the blest.

His wife and his darling child, that he loved,
His Brothers, his friends, do not weep;
Call him not back, he is happy to-day,
In Jesus, he is sweetly asleep.

MRS. C. A. ROUSE,
Creston, Iowa.

April 16, 1890.

LINCOLN, NEB., April 21, 1890

At a regular meeting of Claud Champion Division, No. 227, O. R. C., held in their hall, April 20, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from earth our beloved Brother Grant Norton,

Resolved, That we, the members of Division No. 227, desire to offer our tribute of respect to our departed Brother.

Resolved, That by the death of Brother Norton this division has lost an earnest and worthy member.

Resolved, That in his death his relatives have met with an irreparable loss.

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for thirty days, and that these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this meeting.

A. L. SNOOK, }
A. K. WALDRON, } Committee
J. T. WIESMAN, }

SACRAMENTO, Cal., April 14, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

At a regular meeting of Sierre Nevada Division No. 195, held on April 6, 1890, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in his infinite wisdom, who doeth all things for the best, to remove from our midst our worthy Brother, M. Norton, who died at Sutter City, Cal., on March 8th, 1890. Therefore, be it Resolved, That in the death of Brother M. Norton, we have lost a true and worthy member of the Order.

Resolved, That as a token of respect to the memory of our departed Brother, who was a charter member of our Division, our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days.

Resolved, That these resolutions be engrossed upon the minutes of this meeting and a copy be sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication.

J. F. CALDERWOOD, }
H. H. WELLS, } Committee.
M. V. MURRAY, }

At a regular meeting of Baraboo Division No. 68, O. R. C., held March 16th, the following was adopted:

Monday, March 10th, found the once happy home of Brother C. E. Hallisey in mourning for the loss of his only and beloved son, Leo, aged five years, a bright, healthy and happy boy, who had lingered in sickness until his infant weakness was no longer able to resist the strain, when the Angel of death relieved him of his suffering. It is sad indeed, to have our fondest hopes blighted by the hand of death, but the Angels have taken his pure and innocent soul to a brighter and happier abode, where he is safe from the trials and temptations of this world, to dwell as a guardian Angel of the fond and sorrowful parents; and when it pleases our Heavenly Father to call them hence he will be the first to greet them with the glad tidings of heaven and usher them into the presence of our God.

Lost! no not lost, but gone,
And we hope to meet our boy,
In the home that he has won.

The visitation of Providence that has reached the family of our hearty and genial Brother is, indeed, sorrowful; therefore the members of Baraboo Division No. 68, desires to tender their heartiest sympathy to the grief stricken family; and we hope, that, when it pleases God in his infinite goodness to call them home they may be united in a celestial constellation, in which their darling boy will be a bright and shining star.

Resolved, That this epistle of condolence be spread upon the records and placed in the pages of the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

J. P. DONAHOE,
W. F. FRENZ,
W. B. KENDALL.

ST. LOUIS, April 27, 1890.

At a regular meeting of St. Louis Division No. 3, O. R. C., April 27, 1890, the following was adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Supreme Conductor to remove from our midst Brother Francis M. Moore, by the hand of death; therefore, be it Resolved, That the Brothers of St. Louis Division No. 3, learn with regret the death of Brother Moore. In his removal Division No. 3 sustains an irreparable loss. His upright conduct and manly bearing has endeared his memory to us, and in our hearts will ever be cherished the memory of Brother Moore.

Resolved, That the Charter of our Division be draped for a period of thirty days in respect to his memory and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR for publication, and a copy sent to his sisters.

J. M. BABCOCK, }
W. F. LEWIS, } Committee.
F. D. HARTEL, }

DECATUR, Ill., April 24, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

At our last regular meeting, April 20th, the following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, The Grand Chief Conductor of the Universe, having seen fit to call away our worthy Brother, J. H. Wright, who died of consumption April 2, at Desoto, Mo., be it,

Resolved That we, the members and brothers of Division No. 74, extend to his widow resolutions of condolence, and,

Resolved, That the same be printed in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, and a copy of the same be sent to his widow.

Yours in P. F.,

E. H. JONES, C. C.,
L. M. MURPHY, A. C. C.,
F. W. WILLIS, S. & T., pro tem.

EMPORIA, Kan., April, 1890.

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Supreme Grand Chief Conductor to transfer from this imperfect to that all-perfect Division above, where the Supreme Ruler of the Universe presides, our worthy brethren, W. H. Wood and N. R. Hubbard, who were active, energetic and useful members of Newton Division No. 11, O. R. C.; therefore be it Resolved, That by the death of our esteemed brethren, this Division has lost two devoted members and the communities respected and progressive citizens.

Resolved, That while we tender the bereaved families our fraternal sympathy and condolence, we would direct them for comfort to the Grand Chief of the Universe, who looks with infinite compassion upon the bereaved members of families in the hour of desolation.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect for our deceased brethren the charter of this Division be draped in mourning for thirty days; and further, be it,

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of this Division and a copy of the same be presented to the families of the deceased brethren, and that a copy be furnished the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

T. H. SEARS,
R. J. PARKER,
E. A. BATY,
Committee.

FARGO, May 6, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

Regular meeting of Greer Division No. 72, O. R. C., held April 27th, 1890, at G. A. R. Hall, Fargo, Dak.

WHEREAS; It has pleased Almighty God to remove by death from the home of Brother A. L. Carey, a loving wife and mother;

Resolved, That the members of this Division most sincerely sympathize with Brother Carey, and extend to him our deep sympathy in this his hour of sorrow, No greater loss could befall man. What are riches compared with a loving wife? Never could money purchase the joys of man equal to that of returning home to a loving wife and happy fireside. Mrs. Carey was a true and loving wife; a true christian, and lived to make others happy.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the minutes of our Division, and that a copy be sent to Brother Carey, a copy be sent to the daily papers of her old home, a copy sent to the Daily Argus and Republican, of Fargo, Dak., and one to the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR at Cedar Rapids, for publication.

Why are God's brightest flowers
Taken from their earthly home,
To share those Heavenly bowers,
And leave us here alone?

A loving wife and mother,
No greater joy for man;
He may seek the world over,
But will find none in this land.

T. R. SLOAN,
J. TROTTER, } Committee.
C. B. GILBERT, }

DECATUR, Ill., April 19, 1890.

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Grand Chief Conductor of the Universe to call from our midst our beloved friend and brother, J. H. Wright.

WHEREAS, While we humbly bow to the will of Him who doeth all things well, we do not the less mourn the loss of our brother, who has been taken from us.

Resolved, That by the death of Brother Wright, Division No. 74 has lost a worthy brother, the company an efficient conductor, and his wife and children an indulgent husband and father, and whose vacant seat in our Division will ever remind us that in the midst of life we are in death.

Resolved, That while our sympathy cannot assuage the sorrow which time alone can heal, we nevertheless extend to the family of our deceased brother our heartfelt interest in their bereavement, ever remembering that we are traveling upon the level of time to that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mrs. Wright and published in the RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

Approved April 20, 1890.

E. H. JONES,
L. CLENDENEN,
F. M. PARKER,
Committee.

LEGAL

Leased Road—Injury to Passenger—Assault by Conductor—Exemplary Damages.

Where a passenger purchased a ticket from L. to H. and took passage upon a train and was found by the conductor in the ladies' car smoking ~~cigar~~, when and where a difficulty arose, resulting in the conductor assaulting him and injuring him, for which injury he brings this action.

Held 1. That where a railroad company chartered by this state permits a foreign railroad company to operate a part of its road under a verbal arrangement, and the two roads form a continuous line, etc., the domestic company will be liable for injuries sustained on that portion of the road so operated by the foreign company.

2. That a railroad company cannot be made responsible for exemplary damages on account of injuries done by one of its servants (conductor), even though the act was wanton and malicious, unless the act was expressly or impliedly authorized or ratified by the company. Judgment reversed.

Ricketts vs. Chesapeake & O. R'y Co., Va. Ct. of App., March 29, 1890.

Carriers—Regulations as to Tickets.

is an action to recover damages for being ejected by the conductor, where the evidence showed that plaintiff arrived at station A. too late to secure a ticket, that the train was in the act of moving when he got aboard; that the fare to his destination was fourteen cents, which amount he tendered to the conductor, but the latter demanded twenty-four cents, offering to give a receipt, whereby plaintiff could receive back ten cents from any station agent. Plaintiff refused to pay the excess and suffered himself to be ejected. The trial court gave plaintiff judgment and the company appealed.

Held, reversing. That a regulation by a railroad company requiring passengers who do not purchase their tickets at a ticket office to pay a uniform excess of ten cents over the regular fare, which excess the passenger is entitled to have refunded on the presentation at any ticket office of the conductor's check, is not in itself unreasonable or oppressive, or needlessly inconvenient to the traveler.

Held, That a provision that the collection of the excess shall be omitted as to passengers getting on the train at stations where there is no ticket office, or on trains where, on account of the excessive rush of business, it is impossible to issue the refunding checks, does not render the regulation partial or unfair.

Rees vs. Penna. R'y Co., Penna. S. C., January 6, 1890.

Injury to Fireman—Lease of Road—Liabilities of Lessor.

In a suit for damages growing out of an injury suffered by reason of a collision caused by the negligence of the conductor of his train, in attempting to run said train on the time scheduled to a passenger train going in an opposite direction. The defendant demurred to the declaration on the ground that plaintiff was in the employ of lessee company, and that the injury was done by the said train being collided with another train of the said lessee, under the management and control and conduct of another servant of said lessee company, viz., the conductor on said passenger train. The demurrer was overruled, and judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff for $10,000. Defendant appealed.

Held, That a railroad company which has, under authority of the legislature, leased its road, and transferred the exclusive possession and control thereof to another company, cannot be held liable for injuries thereon, sustained by a servant of the lessee, by reason of the lessee's negligence. Judgment reversed.

Virginia, etc., R'y Co. vs. Washington, Va. C. of App., March 16, 1890.

NOTE —Plaintiff brought action for $30,000 against each company. Now that the court holds that the lessee is not liable it is to be hoped that the lessor may be regarded responsible for the injury inflicted upon a servant through the careless conduct of servants in attempting to run a train on another's time.

Railway Train—Failure to Stop at Station.

The plaintiffs to this action went to defendant's railroad station to take passage upon a train. The train was behind time, and the conductor refused to stop at the station, though a flag was waived by the agent at said station. Plaintiffs were obliged to remain in the neighborhood until the next train, which passed late at night. The night was cold and the cars were without fire and uncomfortable. The injury alleged was that of cold, chills and fatigue, mental distress, disappointment and injury to the constitution. The trial court entered a non-suit, and plaintiffs appealed.

Held, That, there being no evidence of any pecuniary loss to plaintiffs, a non-suit was properly granted.

Martin, et al., vs. Columbus, etc., R'y Co. S. C. S. C., March 8, 1890.

Injury to Employee—Refusal to Undergo Examination—Power to Compel.

In an action by plaintiff whose declaration asserts that he suffered injury to his spine, and other internal injuries, at the hands of the defendant company, while in the line of his duty as conductor of a train, from which injury he has not recovered and which is permanent and incurable. The defendant asked for an order to compel plaintiff to undergo an examination by medical experts, which motion was resisted by plaintiff, but the court ruled that where plaintiff claims damages by reason of alleged spinal injury received through the negligence of defendant, such injuries being latent, in their nature the court will, on application of defendant, order plaintiff to submit to examination by inspection etc., by medical experts produced on part of defendant. And, the court may enforce such order by refusing to try the cause until a compliance is had with the order.

Hess vs. Lake Shore etc., R'y Co., Philadelphia Co. C. C., March 8th, 1890.

Carriers of Passengers—Regulations—Request of Conductor—Female Passenger

Plaintiff's husband bought for her a regular ticket, to be used on a freight train with passenger coach attached, which was run by defendant under special regulations posted at the stations along the road, to the effect that the train could not be required to stop at the platforms of stations to take on or put off passengers. Special tickets, in accordance with such regulations, were sold for this train, but the agent at the time had none on hand, and the husband was acquainted with the regulations. Plaintiff and her husband waited on the platform for the train to be pulled up, not as a custom, but because they had requested the conductor to do so, and when the train started failed to stop, but pulled out and left them. Plaintiff then purchased another regular ticket for the passenger train, which did not pass until night and brought an action against the company for damages by reason of the negligence of the conductor, etc.

Held, That as the regulations prescribed by the company was a reasonable one, plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Judgment affirmed.

Connell vs. Mobile & O. R'y Co. Miss. S. C. Feb. 17th, 1890.

Elevated Railroads—Injury to Passengers—Conductor's Negligence.

Where the conductor of an elevated train signaled it to start at the same instant that he opened the gate for a passenger to alight, and the motion of the train in starting caused the door to swing onto the passenger's hand, injuring it.

Held, That the company was chargeable with the conductor's negligence, and that the passenger's contributory negligence was for the jury.

Held, That a wounded hand seriously interfered with the work of a music teacher, and while no time was lost or money expended for surgical attendance, she could recover nominal damages. Judgment affirmed.

Baker vs. Manhattan R'y Co., N. Y. C. of App. Feb. 25, 1890.

Contract of Carriage—Conflict of Laws—Tickets

In an action for railroad fares where defendant's ticket has been refused on the ground that the time for which it was valid had expired, it is no defense that he purchased it in another state by whose laws it had not yet expired, where such laws have been construed by the court of last resort of that state to apply to transportation within its boundaries only.

Boston & M. R. R'y Co. vs. Trafton, Mass., S. C., Feb. 26, 1890.

NOTE: In this case the defendant's stop-over checks which he had secured, which were refused because the time had expired. Having traveled over the road three times without paying fare, the company brought this suit against him to recover for three journeys. The trial court gave the company judgment and this court affirms the same.

Relief for the Railroads—The Green County Judge Decides Bulletin Law Cannot be Enforced.

Judge Briggs, of the Green County Circuit Court, this afternoon rendered a decision that is of great interest to railroads of Indiana. Under State law the railroads must post on a black board at the depots, notice of the arrival and departure of all trains, if they are on time, and if not, how late they are. Failure to do this involves a penalty of $25 for each offense, part of the penalty going to the prosecuting attorney, and part to the school fund. Numerous suits have been filed in different counties, the Big Four alone having penalties amounting to $48,008 charged against it. At Bloomfield the Pennsylvania Company was charged with $4,000 in penalties. Mr. S. O. Pickens, of this city, went to Bloomfield and fought the suit, arguing against the constitutionality of the law. Mr. Pickens this afternoon was notified that Judge Briggs decided that the penalties can not be enforced against the railroad companies.

Here's Relief for Discharged Conductors.

The legislature passed at its last session what is known as the law against "black listing," one section of which would apply to the case of the discharged Pennsylvania conductors, who say they have been unable to secure any reason for their discharge. Under section 3 the person, agent, company or corporation discharging an employee must on demand furnish in writing a full and complete statement of the causes for his discharge, and if they fail to do so, it will be unlawful for them to furnish any statement of the cause of the discharge to any person or corporation, or anyway to blacklist or prevent such discharged persons from procuring employment elsewhere, under the penalty of a fine not more than $500 nor less than $100.

The Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley company has at length arranged to build two extensions this summer comprising about thirty miles of road. The first covers a short gap between Whitewood, the present terminus of the Black Hills branch, to Deadwood. The other is from Buffalo Gap to Hot Springs, S. D. The latter, though a short line, will, on account of an immense tunnel that must be cut through the mountain near Jones' ranch, cost a great deal of money. It is estimated that this tunnel will be at least 1,800 feet long, and be cut much of the way through solid rock. The company had expected to reach Deadwood eventually, but was not expecting to get there so soon until the Burlington commenced building a line from Crawford to that point. The Hot Springs branch has been demanded for two years, and since travel, as well as traffic, to that resort has increased so largely and promises to keep up, it has been decided to build this summer.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has decided in the case of a complaint brought against the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company for refusing to do local business between Kansas City and Topeka, that the duty of a railroad to serve local stations does not apply to a company that has only a running privilege for their trains over the track of another company, the track between the places named being owned by the Union Pacific Company. It would seem that this was a very plain and common sense decision, and it is very surprising to us that any man, or any set of men, should go to the expense and indulge in a suit to settle this question.

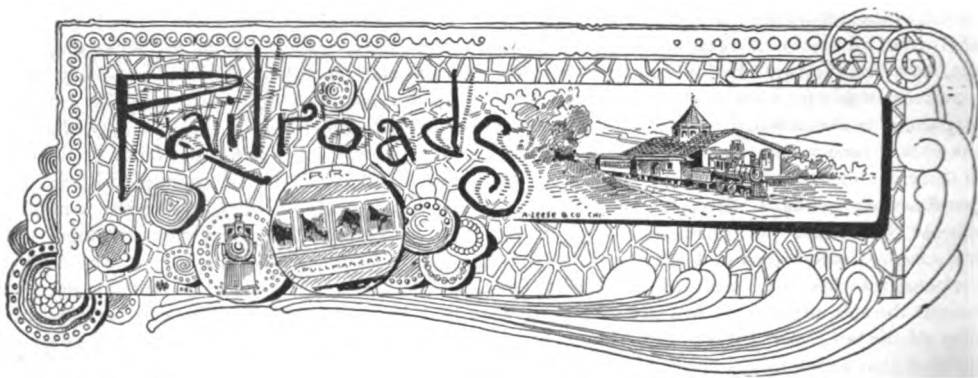

.

We notice an order recently issued by President Corbin, of the Philadelphia & Reading, which reads as follows: "All superintendents will be held strictly responsible for the enforcement of the rule relating to the use of intoxicating liquors by employees. Men who violate it must be promptly discharged, and proof that a man goes inside of a drinking place while on duty will be ample evidence to warrant his immediate dismissal. Men known to drink to excess, or to frequent drinking places while on duty must be discharged. When employing new men strict inquiry should be made as to their habits, and preference always given to those who do not use intoxicating liquors at all. Heads of departments must keep informed as to the habits of employees under them, and make sure that these rules are strictly observed."

.

"The Pacific Short Line is the name of a new road which is being built and will be completed next year, from Ogden to Sioux City, furnishing the shortest possible connection with Chicago, being 180 miles shorter than the Union Pacific route. This line has been surveyed and located over the greater part of the distance, and about 400 miles west from Sioux City have been graded and the work of laying the track well under way. Besides furnishing a short line to the east, this road will open up the vast coal fields of western Wyoming, said to be the richest in the west.

"Some doubts have been expressed as to the ability of the prime movers of the enterprise to finish the road, but these have all been dispelled by the information, that the Central Pacific is backing the Short Line and are determined to build it at the earliest possible date, as an eastern outlet to the Missouri river. Ogden is the western terminus of this road and has secured the location of the car shops of the road by the appropriation of a bonus of $300,000 and the grounds. The new road will come down the canon of the Ogden river, and when finished will vie with any road in the mountain country in the beauty of the scenery along its route. This road is Ogden's greatest hope."

□ The annual convention of the Yardmasters' Association meets at Kansas City, Mo., June 11th.

May 1st, the Northern Pacific Railway will add an additional passenger train between St. Paul and the Pacific coast.

There are 1,115 miles of railway in operation in the Indian Territory, and the right of way has been granted by Congress for 2,689 miles additional.

The voluntary relief department of the Penn. lines west of Pittsburg paid out in the month of March, a trifle over $19,000 for death, accident and sick benefits.

The total main lines of railway in the United States, January 1st, was 161,000 miles, and that of Canada, 13,009; total, including side tracks in both countries, 217,000 miles.

At Chicago, Judge Gresham entered a judgment for $20,000, in favor of Henry Rush, against the Northern Pacific Co. Rush was a fireman on the road, and was injured in a collision.

Objections have been freely offered to the Blair arbitration bill by the representatives of several organizations, among whom we notice the B. of L. E., B. of R. C., B. of R. T. Men., and the Switchmens' Union.

Senator Cullum has prepared a substitute for his bill requiring all common carriers to use safety brakes and automatic couplers. The substitute provides for a commission consisting of three railroad men and two mechanical experts.

As yet there has been no strike on the lines of the Pennsylvania R. R., and at the present writing it looks more than probable that the differences will be amicably settled without. When, O, when will the managers of all railways be ready to meet their employes and settle all their differences in the only true and manly manner known, and also be willing or half as willing to grant them what is their just due, as their employes are, in the majority of cases, to do right by them.

The State Statistician reports the earnings of the passenger departments of the thirty-five Indiana railroads at $33,350,036; of the freight departments, $70,208,954; from other sources, $1,444,854; total earnings of Indiana roads, $105,003,834. The total expenses, including taxes, were $77,083,323. The surplus earnings over expenses are thus seen to have been $27,920,511.

The number of employes of railroads of this state is reported at 74,575. These men's wages run from seventy-nine cents to $20 per day. General officers get from $6 to $20 per day; division superintendents, $4 to $6; civil engineers, $2.70 to $9.40; clerks, $1.16 to $2.87, with an average of $1.74; passenger conductors average $3.37; baggagemen average $1.71; passenger engineers, $2.16 to $4.85, average, $3.73; passenger firemen, $1.86 to $2.79, average $2.02; freight conductors, $2.12 to $3.50, average $2.87, freight engineers, $2.36 to $5, average $3.64; freight brakeman, $1.50 to $2.50, average $1.94; passenger brakeman, $1.25 to $2.37, average $1.76; station agents not telegraph operators, $1.14 to $4.16, average $2.02, station agents also telegraph operators, 79c to $2.33, average $1.53; telegraph operators not station agents, $1 to $2.50, average $1.56; carpenters, $1.25 to $2.30, average $1.84; section foremen, $1.25 to $1.78, average $1.53; section men, $1 to $1.25, average $1.11; bridge tenders and pump men, 98c to $2, average $1.27; painters, $1.30 to $2.30, average $1.44.

The roads in the state carried during 1889 through passengers to the number of 2,641,733; local passengers, 29,707,709; total, 32,349,442. The number of tons of freight carried by all the roads was 63,526,303.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., JUNE 1, 1890.

NO. 11.

TRUE-HEARTED JANIE.

THE POTENT INFLUENCE EXERTED BY FICKLE FORTUNE.

"Eight quarts of Huckleberries—there must be eight quarts, at least, I should think—at four cents a quart (and may-be five if the market is scarce; Mrs. Wright got five for hers last week), that will be thirty-two cents, and at reduced prices thirty-two cents ought certainly to buy the bonnet frame, and I've enough ribbon to trim it quite decently. And—oh, goodness, what a thunder clap!"

Jane Dunlap gave such a jump that the basket of huckleberries tipped off the mossy stone on the edge of the mountain cliff, where she had set it to rest her weary arm, and away went basket, leaf lining and purple fruit in one general avalanche into the ravine below. In fact, she might, in her panic, almost have followed it herself, if a strong grasp on her shoulder had not restrained her.

"Janie! What a pity!" cried out Adam Steele's voice. "But why are you crying? Not for a few huckleberries, surely?"

"I—don't—know!" faltered Jane, almost ready to follow the example of her fashionable sisterhood in the city and go into hysterics. "It's the thunder, I think; it was so sharp and sudden. And look how it is raining!"

"Come into Weir's cave," said Steele.

"It isn't a big place, but the projecting roof will be as good as an umbrella; and these summer showers seldom last long."

Adam Steele looked at the pretty, freckled face, with its innocent blue eyes, its fringe of red-gold hair, and the little dimpled mouth, for all the world like a half-blown damask rose.

"Janie," said he, "it's a shame that you should have to work so hard, a slim girl like you, when there's a great able-bodied giant like me ready and willing to do it for you. Let me buy the bonnet, Janie, and a gold wedding ring at the same time. I know I'm no great shakes, but I love you, and there's no man alive can take better care of you than I will."

Adam Steele was naturally a bashful man. He had this declaration on his mind for a long time, but now it had seemingly said itself and Janie's soft eyes had shone assent, and he had both her little huckleberry-stained hands in his.

"But there's mother," faltered Janie.

"I guess there'll be room in the old farmhouse for 'mother,' too," said Adam good-humoredly. "Aunt Lois has been dreadful uneasy to get out to her folks in Mackinaw this long time. Mother can have her room opening out of the kitchen, and a son's welcome into the bargain."

So the young pair sat and built air castles in their rocky fastness until the rain died away into the glittering dewdrops and the sun broke out again, and they made their way down to the little brown house under the stiff Lombardy poplars.

"Mother has got company," said Janie. "The best room window shades are rolled up and the front door wide open."

"Oh, hang company!" burst out Adam. "I wanted to talk it all over with her."

"I guess they won't remain long," soothed Jane. "Come in. Adam you must stay to tea."

Within the house an unusual commotion prevailed. Mrs. Dunlap was in tears, with her cap very much on one side; the camphor bottle stood on the table, and old Miss Betsy Banker was vehemently fanning her. A stiff, straight, white-neck-clothed little man sat in a chair by the window, looking over some papers.

"Is this your daughter?" said he, as Jane came in. "And your son?"

"Not yet," Adam valiently answered; "but he hopes to be one of these days. I don't know, though, who you may be, sir."

"I am Peter Payn, of the firm of Payn & Jekyll, of Nassau street, New York," curtly answered the stranger. "And I have come to tell Mrs. Deborah Dunlap that, being next of kin, she has succeeded to the fortune of Joseph Horn Dunlap, late of Canton, China, lately deceased of cape fever."

"I somehow can't believe it's true," said poor Mrs. Dunlap, with a clutch at the camphor bottle. "A—hundred—thousand—dollars! My poor uncle that I never saw! O! oh! somebody fan me!"

But after Mrs. Dunlap had slept on the news and received the congratulations of all her neighbors, it seemed more real to her.

"We are rich," she said, involuntarily straightening herself in her chair like Victoria on her throne. "My Jane must make a match worthy of her station. Of course Adam Steele is out of the question."

"But," said Jane, "I love Adam and Adam loves me."

"That's all nonsense!" said Mrs. Dunlap.

"And," added Jane, "I'll never marry any one else."

"Fiddlesticks!" screamed the widow.

The little world of Weir's Hollow all sided with Mrs. Dunlap. An heiress like Jane, said they, ought to look higher than a mere farmer who earned his bread, according to Scripture, by the sweat of his brow.

Mrs. Brutus Barlow, the city aunt, who heretofore had never taken the trouble to visit them, now arrived with her four children, her insignificant little husband, and a baggage-wagon full of trunks.

"I wish my Hugo was old enough for his dear cousin," said she. "But he's only thirteen. Jane ought to do well. I quite approve, dear Deborah, of your forbidding that young man the house. If you say so, I'll take Jane for a season at Tuxedo Park or Atlantic City. It's necessary to give her every chance."

Mr. Vedder, a shrewd oil merchant, who had never before discovered his relationship to the Dunlaps, also came to offer his services as to investments, etc.

"I've always intended to look you up," said he. "Mrs. Vedder will be delighted for you to make your winter home with her in Philadelphia. My son George is an artist. He would like to paint Jane's picture."

All the wealthier neighbors suddenly discovered how much they had esteemed Mrs. and Miss Dunlap all these years, and called with smiles, invitations and gracious nods, and with one accord they all denounced Adam Steele.

But Jane remained loyal to her colors.

"No, mother," said she, "I won't go to Tux—what's its name?—with Mrs. Barlow. And I should think Cousin Vedder would be ashamed to invite us to his house after all these years of neglect. Why, he never answered the letter you wrote him when father died."

"He says he never got it."

"Then he says what isn't true!" cried Jane, "for I directed it myself. He must have got it. Oh, mother, I always thought it would be so nice to be rich, but now I've changed my mind. You can be rich if you please, but I am going to marry Adam and live at the old farm-house, and be poor and happy."

"You are a fool!" exclaimed Mrs. Dunlap.

"There it is again," said Jane. "You never called me such names in the good old days. We loved each other then. Uncle Joseph's Chinese gold hadn't come between us. Adam is willing to take me, fortune or no fortune, and I love Adam and I am going to be his wife. Hush! What's that?"

"My name is Dunlap," said a deep voice outside. "Is this where Mrs. Deborah Dunlap lives?"

"As true as the world, another cousin!" sighed Jane. "Why did all these people never find us out before?"

"We can't accommodate you!" shrilly cried Mrs. Dunlap. "You'll have to go to the tavern."

"No poor relation was ever turned from the door in the good old days," sighed Jane. "This man looks old and tired. Mayn't I ask him in and give him a cup of tea and some of the pork and succotash that was left from the dinner, mother."

"No," said Mrs. Dunlap, authoritively, "How do you know who he is? The world is full of imposters."

"I can tell you who he is," said a well-known nasal voice, as Mr. Payn bustled in from the gate outside, where he had been directing the hackman to wait. "He's your relative all right enough—he's Joseph Horn Dunlap's own son, just turned up from the hill country in India, where he was supposed to be dead long ago. But he wasn't dead; only gone into the ivory business. Ran away from home as a boy; couldn't agree with his father—few people could. Joseph Horn Dunlap was very peculiar; had a temper like a buzz-saw, swift and stormy. But the proofs of identification are beyond question; he's Horn Dunlap's own son!"

"Eh!" gasped Mrs. Dunlap. "Have we to divide the fortune with him?"

"No, madam," said the lawyer dryly; every cent of it belongs to him. It never was yours at all."

Mr. Dunlap chuckled.

"The old woman takes it rather hard, don't she?" said he. "But law is law, and justice is justice."

So the great Dunlap fortune melted away out of the hands of Deborah Dunlap and Jane, her daughter.

The officious relations vanished as if by magic, the villagers whispered and stood aloof, but Adam Steele was true to his own name.

"Mother," said he, gently, to the broken-hearted little widow, "there's a room all ready for you at my house. Jane and I were married this morning. We want you to come and live with us. You'll be as welcome as flowers in May."

"But, Adam, I've behaved awful bad to you!" faltered Mrs. Dunlap.

"That's nothing," said Adam, cheerfully, "We're all liable to mistakes at times."

"And now that I ain't rich any more—"

"But you are rich," said Adam. "You've got Jane and you've got me. And I'll guarantee you plenty of clothes to wear and food to eat. If you had a million of money what more could you have than that?"

And Mrs. Dunlap was forced to admit, that her son-in-law was not far from right. —Saturday Night.

LEMUEL DRAYTON'S POCKET-BOOK.

CLARA AUGUSTA, IN PETERSON.

Lemuel Drayton was the only son of his doting parents, and was considered—by himself at least—the smartest young man in Meadville.

His personal appearance was somewhat striking. He was rather tall, lank, and inclined to feel encumbered with his hands and feet. To a close observer, it was evident that Lemuel was not quite decided as to whether his extremities were mates or not; for he was always observing his feet to see if they both were of a length; and he measured and compared his fingers so frequently, that you felt inclined to inquire if he had changed hands with anybody.

He was sandy haired, with eyes and complexion to match. When Nature planned Lemuel's personal appearance, she did not believe in contrasts, but in simple uniformity.

Lemuel had been brought up on a farm, and at twenty-two had never been thirty miles from home. At this epoch in his history, he sold a colt, which his father had given him, for seventy-five dollars; and with the possession of this sum of money his ideas of life grew very much wider. He began to realize how circumscribed his existence had been, and to have aspirations for something broader and more extensive generally.

After giving the matter much serious thought, he decided that he ought to travel. He passed many a sleepless night in profound cogitation before he spoke of it to his parents.

And one morning, at breakfast, he horrified his mother by exclaiming, as he transfixed a huge potato on his fork.

"I am going to Bosting!"

His mother sprang from her seat, upsetting the tea-urn all over her clean gingham apron, and the back of the unlucky cat, and flew to the side of her son.

"Lemmy!" she cried, "are you crazy? You're agoing to have another spell in your head, I know! You was took afore a-talking strange! Zebulon," to her husband, "you'd better harness the old mare and go after Dr. Jones. I'll make you some catnip-tea as quick as I can, Lemmy, and put a mustard draft onto yer stomach."

"Don't be spoony on a feller, old lady," replied Lemuel, with all the careless indifference becoming in a man of his property. "When a man has got money, it's nothing strange that he should want to visit furren parts. Don't they allers go the Continent in all the novels? I guess if you had as many greenbacks as I have got, you'd want to see a few sights!"

"Oh, Lemmy, my dear son! you can't be seris?" cried Mrs. Drayton, in great distress of mind.

"Yes, I'm as seris as ever Parson Brown was to a funeril. I've hern tell of Bosting, and I'm bound to see it! There's a powerful lot of great sights there! There's the Airtherkneum, and the Bunker Hill Monument, and the State House, and something they call the Hub of the Universe. It's a great name, and I reckon it's worth looking at. I expect it's one of the principal lions."

So Mrs. Drayton, understanding that Lemuel was in earnest, proceeded, with a heavy heart, to get his wearing-apparel in readiness for the proposed trip.

The news of Lemuel's intention had spread all over town; and the next morning, when he was ready to start for the depot, quite a delegation of friends and neighbors had assembled to shake hands with him, and bid him farewell—for Meadville was a backwoods place, and going to Boston was looked upon as a great and perilous undertaking by the simple-minded country folks.

Lemuel was resplendent in a suit of home-spun-gray, with steel buttons; and as he had spent nearly all of the previous day in polishing these same buttons, they they shone and glittered like so many full moons.

His vest was of scarlet; his neck-tie had long done service as a green-and-yellow ribbon on his mother's Sunday-bonnet; and his collar set up around his neck, unyielding as fate. On his arm he carried the "baled basket," full of cheese and dough-nuts; and agreeably to his mother's advice, he had taken along with him the old gun, which had been his grandfather's. He would need something to defend himself with, Mrs. Drayton said. The old gun had been destitute of a "lock" for twenty years; but Mrs. Drayton said most people was afraid of fire-arms, and if anybody attacked him, he could show them the gun and they'd be likely to leave.

His money was deposited in his father's old red-leather wallet and carefully pinned into the left-breast pocket of his vest; and every few moments our hero betrayed the consciousness of being a man of property, by tapping the pocket, to assure himself that the wallet was safe.

The cars drew up to the paltsform, and amid shouts of well-wishing Lemuel got on board, and plumped down into the first seat which presented itself.

He felt of his pocket to see if his wallet was there; felt of his dickey to see if Mary Ann's embraces had caused it to wilt, and then looked around on the passengers. One gentleman he decided at once, was a pickpocket. There could be no doubt of it. Pickpockets always had black whiskers, he had been told, and some rings on their little fingers. This gentleman had black whiskers, and a very handsome ring sparkled on his fourth finger. He occupied the seat in front of Lemuel, and was reading a newspaper.

Lemuel decided to keep his eyes open for this man, and to feel his pocket every five minutes to be sure about the wallet.

At the next station, a very handsome young lady got in. Lemuel thought he had never seen such an angel; Mary Ann Hinks was positively ugly by comparison. Such a stylish, gray hat, with a scarlet feather; such a very red-and-white complexion, and such a pair of saucy, blue-eyes, and such an enormous head of hair—all in curls down over her shoulders.

She paused beside the seat of Lemuel, and laid a daintily-gloved hand on the back of the settee.

"Is this engaged?" she asked, in a sweet voice.

Lemuel did not quite comprehend her, and answered, blushing and stammering like the veriest school-boy.

"Engaged? Wal, no, I hain't exactly, though Mary Ann Hinks has took quite a shine to me; and I bought her a bussum-pin last spring of a pedlar; but then that hain't nothing."

"Of course not," returned the lady. "May I sit down?"

"To be shure! Set right down! don't be afeared of crowding me! I guess I can stand it, if you can. Be you engaged, may I ask?"

"No," simpered the young lady, stuffing her handkerchief into her mouth.

"You hain't? Wal, now, that's curis! 'Spect yu've had a sight of beaux, though. Pritty gals allers does." And here Lemuel felt of his pocket, and looked at the black-whiskered stranger on the next seat.

"Why, how you talk!" said the young lady.

"Do I? Wal, I'm a man of truth, and whatever I say I'm in airnest about. I'm a man of truth, if I be a man of property."

"Oh! so you are wealthy?"

"Sarting! or else I shouldn't be a-traveling for pleasure. I've got seventy-five dollars in here," tapping his pocket.

The young lady endeavored to look suitably impressed, and inquired, "What shall I call you, sir?"

"Lemuel's my name—Lemuel Drayton. And yours?"

"Mable Orne."

"Mabel! That's a good deal like a novel-name. I read one tother day, where the gal's name was Mabel; and she killed two babies and an old woman to git some property. I hope you hain't like her!"

The young lady coincided in his hope.

"Lemuel looked at her attentively; and before they had traveled many miles together, it flashed over him that he was in love.

"Look here!" said he, placing his arm over the back of the seat, "why can't you and I make a bargain? I hain't engaged, and you hain't engaged, and we're both of us as good-looking as the next one; and I've got two cows to home—a red one and a brindle one—both of 'em the master-hands to turn out the butter that ever you seed! And butter's forty-five cents a pound, and I vum, if you'll have me, you shall sell all the butter them two cows makes, and no questions asked as to where the money gets to' And you shall dress in silk every day, and in satin, too—by jingo!" And at this stage of his declarations, our hero felt of his pocket.

He grew pale with dismay, and started to his feet instantly.

"He's got it!" shouted he; "stop him! Catch hold of him! don't let him escape! I knowed he was one of them fellers the minit I sot eyes onto him! Help me hold him, somebody! quick!" and he seized the astonished gentleman with black whiskers by the shoulder, and went on shouting and gesticulating.

"Seventy-five dollars! gone like a streak! Sarch him? I demand that he be turned inside out, rite on the spot! Conductor man, here! you jest see after this fine gentleman, if you please!"

"What's he done?" asked the conductor.

"Done? Hain't I jest told ye? He's picked my pocket of my fayther's red-leather wallet, and seventy-five dollars that I sold my colt for! That's what he's done! Sarch him!"

The train reached a way-station, and Mabel got out; but Lemuel was so nearly distracted with the loss of his pocket-book, that he did not observe her departure.

Quite a crowd had collected around our hero and the suspected individual, who seemed to take matters very coolly for a person in his condition.

"If the gentleman wishes to search me," said he, "he is at perfect liberty to do so. Go on, sir."

"Won't you strike me, nor grab hold of my throat, nor nothing?" queried Lemuel.

"I'll not molest you," said the gentleman—"proceed."

The search was short; but it developed nothing beyond a few papers—a tooth-pick, a knife with a pearl handle, and a black pocket-book containing eight or ten dollars.

"Are you satisfied," asked the gentleman.

"Sartin I am; but it's mighty queer where that wallet went to."

"The gentleman whom you have just had the honor of searching," said the conductor, "is the Rev. Dr. Truffant, of Boston—one of the most eminent clergymen in the place."

"Oh, my gracious!" cried Lemuel; "a minister! Marm would be the death of me, if she should find out that I called a pick-pocket a minister! I mean a pickpocket a minister!—hanged if I know what I do mean, anyhow. I'm so frustratimid, I can't seem to tell tother from which."

"It's my opinion, that if you've lost any money, the girl that sat on the seat with you has got it," said the conductor. "She looked something like that kind of a character."

"She?" exclaimed Lemuel, in profound amazement. "She? why, she was a pritty a gal as you'd see in an age; and I was about as good as engaged to her."

There was a general laugh at Lemuel's expense.

"You needn't laff!" said our hero, defiantly. "I know I never seed her till this morning; but there's such a thing as love at first-sight——"

"Especially when the object is a red-leather wallet, with seventy-five dollars in it," said the conductor. "It seems the young lady believes in love at first sight, also."

"Wal," said Lemuel, disconsolately, "the money's gone, and if she's got it, I'll never believe in nobody again. I wish I was home with marm—I don't feel well. I won't go to Bosting. I'll go back in the next kears that is going that way! Conductor, jest you hold up a minnit while I git out."

Lemuel was informed that he could alight at the next station, two miles ahead, and he accordingly did so. The return train came along in a few moments, and by noon our hero was safely landed in Meadville again.

He made his way to his father's house with lagging steps, and a dejected air generally.

Mrs. Drayton was feeding the chickens in the front yard, when she saw him coming. She dropped the dough-dish and spoon, and fled to the house in wildest alarm.

"He's killed!" she cried, pitching head-first into the arms of her husband; "he's killed, and I've seen his ghost! It's a-comeing up the road, with them same gray-kerseymers on that I spun and wove myself, and the red-veskit that Miss Grant made, and the gun and baled basket, and all! Jest as he went away! Oh, Lemmy! Lemmy!" and Mrs. Drayton seized the dish-cloth under the impression that it was a handkerchief, and wiped the tears from her eyes.

Just then Lemuel entered.

"Oh, good gracious marsy! he's come!" cried the nervous ol' marm; and immediately she dived under the bed, and peeped out from a hole in the coverlit.

"Lem, what are you back for?" asked Mr. Drayton.

"I've seen enuff of the world! Consarn Bosting! and consarn the whole world intirely! I've had my pocket picked, and I don't keer nothing about nothing!"

"Your pocket picked!" exclaimed Mrs. Drayton, triumphantly. "I said so! I I knowed you would! It was beat into me."

Lemuel threw his hat on the table, and out rolled the missing red-leather wallet.

"Gracious Peter!" ejaculated he, its here! it hain't been filtered! The gal was an angel, after all! Huray! Hail Columby! happy land! Come, marm, let's have a little dance!" and Lemuel seized his mother around the waist and swung her about in great glee, upsetting the churning of cream.

"I remember it all now, as slick as can be," said Lemuel. I was dreadful feared I should lose my money, and I took it out my pocket and put it into my hat Consarned fool! I guess it's jest as you say, marm, that I hain't fit to go into these furrin parts. I'll stay to home and put my money into the bank, and marry Mary Ann Hinks. I've seen enuff of the world.

Rambling in the Woods.

A CITY MAN'S RETURN TO THE SCENES OF HIS CHILDHOOD.

It was a hot, cloudless day in August. A gentle breeze was stirring, and, sitting on the little back porch of the old farmhouse and looking across a vista of yellow stubble-fields to the dark line of woods, nearly half a mile away, I could see the tops of the tallest trees swaying gently, and could almost, I fancied, hear the faint rustling of their leaves, of the music of which I have ever, since a child, been over-fond, writes Ed R. Pritchard, in the Arkansas Traveler.

It had been three years since I had visited the old farm, three long years of toil at the desk, amid the noise and busy strife of a great metropolis, and this was my first day of a short week's vacation at the old home, among the friends of my boyhood days and the scenes of the happiest years of my life.

I had reached the farm about ten o'clock in the morning, and, after a bounteous dinner at noon, was sitting on the porch, the coolest place, as I well knew, about the house, feasting my eyes on the dear old landscape that I had known so long, and which, during all the years that I had been away from it, was always a charming picture that, though paradoxical it may sound, I had only to shut my eyes to see at will.

I must get to those woods, and that at once. No matter that the afternoon August sun was sending down its fiercest rays, no matter that I must walk half a mile across stubble-fields, which from where I sat, I could see were almost quivering with heat, I know what sweet, familiar sounds I shall hear, what a refreshing coolness and quiet I shall find when I have reached their green and shady depths. Even while I am thinking of these things, a solitary crow with a loud "caw!" "caw!" flies swiftly over the stubble-fields, high in air, and lighting on the top of a huge oak sends forth a series of exultant "caws!" to his mates whom he has left in the orchard back of the barn. To me he seems to say to them: "There are no hen's nests in that old straw-stack. Why stay over there in that hot, broiling sun? Come over here into these grand old woods. Hard by is the creek, and I know a dark and shady pool where we can bathe, and below it a shining, singing ripple, where we can wade and play to our heart's content."

Evidently, they understand the meaning of his cries, for a moment later a bevy of the black and saucy rascals go scurrying across the fields and join him, where they all set up a perfect chorus of "caws!" which I take to be expressions of approval of their companion's suggestion.

Hastily divesting myself of coat and vest, for in the country it is no breach of etiquette "to go in your shirt sleeves," I step into the hall and take from the rack a wide-brimmed straw hat, and after a brief stop at the old spring-house at the foot of the hill, I am off, as the crows fly, across fields for the woods.

On reaching them I find I am sweating profusely. What? You say sweating is vulgar, I should say perspiring? Well, no matter; I know I am heated and flushed, but I never felt better. The air is pure and sweet, the birds are singing in the woods on the borders of the little stream, and now as I pause to mop my dripping face I hear a woodpecker beating his lively tattoo on an old beech stub and chirp, chirp comes from a saucy little ground squirrel as he streaks it like a flash of russet light along the rails of the old fence near where I am standing. I shy a rock at him, out of pure wantonness, and am murderous enough to wish I had a gun with which to take a crack at that wily old wood-pecker, who has, on catching sight of me, slyly slipped around to the other side of the old beech stub, where I can still hear him pecking away as busy as a nailor.

I hastily scramble over the fence, and five minutes later I stand under the thick shade of the wide-spreading branches of a grand old beech tree and on the edge of a steep bluff, at whose base runs the turbulent but romantic Little Wild-Cat creek. I throw myself down on the grass, which is here so luxuriant that it is softer than the heaviest carpet, and there I lie for half an hour idly listening to the soft and indescribable music of the waters below. Then, having cooled off, I go down to the water's edge and deliberately disrobe and—"go in swimmin'." Mind, I don't say bathing, for I had no bathing suit. I just did as we boys used to do years ago—"just stripped off and went in swimmin'." You see, there was nobody there to look except the birds and the squirrels and an old black-water snake which I caught sunning himself out on a rock at the water's edge, and which I ruthlessly killed with a club.

How I did enjoy that swim, that frolic all by myself in the water! Tired of that, I continued my stroll until a coolness of the air and rapidly-deepening shadows warned me that it was time to turn my face homeward.

When I reached the house I made a discovery, and that was that while in swimming I had done just as I had often done before when a boy—had sunburned both shoulders into blisters, one on each the size of my hand. Then, too, as in days long ago, a liberal application of sweet cream was given and I went to bed with the chickens, was up with the birds and the next day was able to go squirrel-hunting and had a glorious time. But of all my brief vacation days I shall not soon forget that afternoon's ramble in the woods.

A Dog's Experience.

The story of the Newfoundland dog belonging to Charles Tupper, a restaurant proprietor in New York, is one that will startle a great many persons who are studying the mysterious forces and powers of the electrical current, which human ingenuity has so far only partially harnessed and controlled, but scarcely yet understands. The dog ran against a dangling "live" wire of an electric illuminating company. A Western Union Telegraph lineman had only a moment before picked up the wire and been knocked down by the shock of electricity passing through it. The dog fell on the wire and lay there motionless. With due precaution the body was presently pulled off and every effort made to resuscitate the animal, which was a great pet. A veterinary surgeon was called in, who pronounced the dog dead. Two or three hours afterwards an electrical expert suggested making a pit in the earth and placing the dog's body in it, to see if the forces of nature might not carry away the electricity from the body. The plan was tried. All night and all the next day the supposed corpse was motionless, but on the second day there were signs of life, and on the fourth the animal revived and struggled to his feet a live dog once more, weak and stiff, but very much better than a dead dog. It has since been carefully nursed and now shows no sign of the disaster. The dog is two and a half years old and weighs sixty-eight pounds. The incident may well suggest inquiry whether persons receiving electrical shocks have not been buried before they were really dead, and it is sufficient to raise serious doubt whether the death punishment of murderers by electricity is sufficient.—Watchman.

Blunders in Composition.

The Printer's Register gives a series of illustrations of bad composition and punctuation. It is worth a careful thinking over by men and women who wish to be free in what they write from what may be called scandalous mistakes—mistakes, we are sorry to say, which are by no means unknown in what people write for their friends and the press.

A man who was suddenly taken sick "hastened home, while every means for his recovery were resorted to. In spite of all his efforts, he died in the triumphs of the Christian religion." "A man was killed by a railroad car running into Boston, supposed to be deaf." A man writes: "We have decided to erect a school house large enough to accommodate 500 scholars five stories high" certain railway the following luminous direction was printed: "Hereafter, when trains in an opposite direction are approaching each other on separate lines, conductors and engineers will be requested to bring their respective trains to a dead halt before the point of meeting, and be careful not to proceed until each train has passed the other." A steamboat captain, advertising an excursion, says: "Tickets, 25 cents; children half price to be had at the office." A hotel was thus advertised; "This hotel will be kept by the widow of the former landlord, Mr. Brown, who died last summer on a new and improved plan." "Wanted, a saddle horse for a lady weighing about 950 pounds." An Iowa editor says: "We have received a basket of fine grapes from our friend W., for which he will please accept our compliments, some of which are nearly two inches in diameter." Board may be had at No. 4 Pearl street for two gentlemen with gas." Over a bridge at Athens, Ga., is the following: "Any person driving over this bridge in a pace faster than a walk, shall, if a white man, be fined five dollars, and if a negro, receive twenty-five lashes, half of the penalty to be bestowed on the informer." A newspaper contained this: "We have two school rooms sufficiently large to accommodate 300 pupils one above another."

How Steam Pipes Set Wood on Fire.

Secretary Tracy's house is said to have caught fire from a steam drum incased in wood. The manner in which a heat of less than scorching intensity sets fire to woodwork is not generally known. The conditions necessary are, first, a degree of heat not less than 212 degrees; second, the presence of wood in close proximity to the iron steam pipes; third the existence of scale or rust on the iron; fourth, varying temperature. The heat drives the oxygen from the iron rust, which then becomes what is known as reduced iron, a finely divided metallic powder of the natural color of iron. The heat necessary to ignite the wood, which is in a tinder-like condition from its proximity to the hot pipe, is generated in the rapid oxidation of the iron. It absorbs oxygen so rapidly under certain atmospheric conditions of humidity and temperature as to glow for a few seconds, long enough to set the adjoining wood on fire.—N. Y. Sun.

Per Pacem Ad Ducem.

I do not ask, O Lord that life may be
 A pleasant road;
 I do not ask that Thou wouldst take from me
 Aught of its load;
 I do not ask that flowers should always spring
 Beneath my feet;
 I know too well the poison and the sting
 Of things too sweet.
 For one thing only, Lord, dear Lord, I plead:
 Lead me aright—
 Though strength should falter and though heart should bleed—
 Through Peace to Light.
 I do not ask, O Lord, that thou shouldst shed
 Full radiance here;
 Give but a ray of peace that I may tread
 Without a fear.
 I do not ask my cross to understand
 My way to see;
 Better in darkness just to feel thy hand,
 And follow Thee.
 Joy is like restless day; but peace divine
 Like quiet night;
 Lead me, O Lord, till perfect day shall shine—
 Through Peace to Light.

Holy Family.

"Ditto."

A GIRL WHO GOT THE BEST OF A TRAVELER
 IN AN INGENIOUS WAY.

There were three or four unoccupied seats in the car, but he stood for a moment, grip in hand, near the door, and then walked to a seat in which a young lady sat alone, and sat down beside her with an impudence that astonished all other passengers. The girl looked up at him and around the car, and evidently realized the situation, for she took pencil and tablet from her reticule and made ready for him. After about five minutes the man turned to her and observed:

"Beg pardon if I am mistaken, but don't you live at Utica?"

She looked up in a furtive way, and then wrote on the tablet and handed him:

"I am deaf and dumb."

"Oh! By George! Duced pretty girl to have such a misfortune. Well, I'm left, after all my smartness. Saw her at the window before I got on, and carried out the plan to a dot. Deaf and dumb, eh? First one I ever struck!"

He nodded his head to her to signify that he understood, and he would have been glad to change seats if he could have done so without loss of dignity. As the train thundered on he perused the contents of a couple of newspapers, yawned awhile, and then bought and finished a novel, and finally, after a ride of four mortal hours, the whistle blew, and he reached for his grip with the remark:

"I'll be hanged if I ain't glad this stupid ride has come to an end at last."

"Ditto," quietly replied the girl, as she turned on him.

"You—you—" he gasped, as he stood there looking down upon her with 12 kinds of emotion galloping over his countenance.

"Good-bye," she said, and he backed out and dropped to the platform like a man retreating from a mule's hind legs.
 —N. Y. Sun.

A Long String of Facts.

FIFTY YEARS AGO—SEA NOTES—ODD ORIGIN OF POEMS.

Fifty years ago the daguerreotype was invented in France.

Fifty years ago wooden clocks had only been in use one year.

Fifty years ago the Massachusetts abolition party was organized.

Fifty years ago the Mormons were driven from Missouri to Nauvoo, Ill.

Fifty years ago the banks in the United States resumed specie payment.

Fifty years ago the first normal school was organized at Lexington, Mass.

Fifty years ago John C. Fremont and Jessie Benton were secretly married.

Fifty years ago old Black Hawk, the noted Indian chieftain, died at Keokuk, Iowa.

Fifty years ago beet sugar was first made by David L. Child, of Northampton, Mass.

Fifty years ago John Ericsson was allowed letters patent on a steam "propeller" boat.

Fifty years ago a survey was made by John Bailey for a canal across Central America.

Fifty years ago the first patent was granted to Goodyear for vulcanized India-rubber goods.

Fifty years ago David G. Burnett began to serve as acting president of the "Republic of Texas."

Fifty years ago was established the first commercial college in America, "Comer's College," of Boston.

Fifty years ago the Cherokee Indians were removed from Georgia and placed west of the Mississippi river.

Fifty years ago a law was enacted against dueling in the District of Columbia. It grew out of the Cilly-Graves duel.

Fifty years ago 1,000 reformed drunkards marched in procession at the first anniversary of the Washington society.

Fifty years ago Frederick Douglass, the famous negro orator, journalist and politician, escaped from slavery at Baltimore, Maryland.

Fifty-one years ago the first steam fire engine ever made, was tested in New York. It was invented by Captain John Ericsson.

Fifty years ago the Sirius and Great Western, the first ocean steamships, entered New York harbor on their return trip No. 1.

Fifty years ago Joseph A. Adams, for the first time, made use of the idea now embodied in the art of electrotyping by reproducing from wood "cuts."

Fifty years ago the first railroad-spike machine was put in use, making fifty a minute, forming both point and head. Henry Burden, of Troy, N. Y., was the inventor. It ranked among the best paying inventions of modern times.

Fifty years ago (1839) the first wheat was shipped from Chicago, amounting to seventy-eight bushels. It was sent eastward by the lakes to Buffalo.

Fifty years ago the first power-loom for weaving carpets was set in motion by E. B. Bigelow, of Boston. Ten yards a day was its original capacity.

Fifty years ago Congress appropriated $1000 toward compiling agricultural statistics by the large importation of bread-stuffs shipped to America that year.

Fifty years ago the whig party held its first convention, at Harrisburg, Pa., nominating General William Henry Harrison, of Ohio, as president of the United States.

Fifty years ago the population of the United States was only 17,697,420. The census cost the government $833,427. There were slaves in all the states except Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont and Michigan. Iowa had 16 slaves; Wisconsin, 11; Ohio, 3; Indiana, 9; Illinois, 331; total in all the states and territories was 2,486,228.

Little Eighteenth Century Wonders.

The deft-fingered artist flourished just the same 150 years ago as he does to-day. Crotty, a London shop keeper of 1745, fashioned a tea-table, tea-board, a dozen cups and saucers, sugar dish, slop-basin, bottle, funnel, fifteen drinking glasses, five bowls, ten rummels, a pestle and mortar, and a set of ninepins, so minute that they were all kept in a filbert shell. They were all made of polished ivory, and so small that they could not be seen without a microscope. A rival named Boverick put on exhibition a cherry stone from which he took a table, twelve chairs, dishes of all kinds, and six ladies and gentlemen dressed so that they could be distinguished the one from the other by aid of a strong glass.

Coffee in Liver and Kidney Diseases.

It is now more than thirty years since Dr. Landarrabilco called attention in the medical journals to the great value of green or unroasted coffee in hepatic and nephritic diseases. After having continued to use the remedy for upwards of a third of a century in many hundreds of cases, he again appeals to the profession to give it a trial in those cases of kidney and liver troubles which have resisted all other treatment. His habit is to place 25 grammes, or 3 drachms, of the green berries (he prefers a mixture of 2 parts of Mocha with one part each of Martinique and Isle de Bourbon coffee) in a tumbler of cold water, and let them infuse over night. The infusion, after straining or filtering, is to be taken on an empty stomach the first thing on getting up in the morning. He cites many cases of renal and hepatic colics, diabetes, migraine, etc., which, though rebellious to all other treatments for years, soon yielded to the green coffee infusion. It is worth a trial at any rate.—Scientific American.

The Nicaragua Canal.

The cost of the proposed Nicaragua Canal is now placed at $65,000,000. The distance between the oceans is 169 miles, but only twenty-nine miles of canal will have to be dug. The San Juan river must be deepened and some artificial basins constructed in the valleys of other streams. Lake Nicaragua affords fifty-six miles of free sailing. The Suez canal, which was cut out of the sod and sand for 100 miles, cost $81,000,000.

Some Other Place.

"I wish you could help me out a little," he said as he looked in on a Gratiot avenue cobbler.

"Vhell?"

"There was a saying about the sluggard, you know. He was told to go to—to what was it? He was to go to something and learn wisdom, but what it was I have forgotten. It wasn't to the bee, was it?"

No.

Nor the grasshopper?

No.

Nor to the wasp nor hornet?

No.

Then what was it?

"It vas to go py Halifax und keep right ahway from me!" was the vigorous reply, as he pounded away on a piece of sole leather.—Detroit Free Press.

The most unique piece of architecture in the United States is the famous Egyptian Hall in the Masonic temple in Philadelphia. Four thousand dollars—the gift of Mr. Wm. J. Kelly—has recently been applied with great effect to make the hall as perfect as possible. It is probably the only perfect specimen of pure Egyptian forms on this continent. The ceiling is thirty feet from the ground, while the hall is sixty-five feet long and fifty feet wide. The decorations are in exact accordance with the peculiar style of the Egyptian period. Twelve elephantine columns stand on either hand in massive grandeur, surmounted by peculiar capitals, copied from the ancient temples on the Nile—Luxor, Karnak, Philæ and others. Each of these columns has an original in Egypt. There are the hooded viper (cobra de capello), the pyramid and the other decorations of the Ptolemies.

These columns, which stand clear of the walls, divide each other into sections, and these are enriched with the panel ornaments found in the Egyptian temples, there being borders of reeds and rushes, a fluted frieze, the globe, wings and cobra and the surmounting lion and cobra. Lotus flowers twine around the bases of the columns and appear in the panels, and there are reed decorations on the cornice, whilst pyramidal filling complete the panels. The cobra stares and hisses with multiplied heads and fangs extended, on all sides of the hall. The Egyptian idea is carried out in the furniture, and, in fact, the smallest details have been studied with great care. The Master's throne and chair are made of gilded ebony. At his right hand stands his pedestal, flanked by two spinxes, while his chair is flanked by eagles. The room has a seating capacity of about 200.—San Francisco Call.

The Men Who Miss the Train.

I loaf aroun' the depot jest to see the Pullman scoot
An' to see the people scamper w'en they hear the engine toot;

But w'at makes the most impression on my som'- w'at active brain,

Is the careless men who get there just in time to miss the train.

An' some cuss the railroad comp'ny an' some loudly cuss their stars,

An' some jest gallop down the track an' try to catch the cars;

An' some with a loud laff an' joke will poultice up their pain:

Var'us kin's er people get there jest in time to miss the train.

An' there is many depooos an' flag stations 'thout name,

Along the Grand Trunk Railroad that leads to wealth and fame.

An' men rush to these depooos as fast as they can fly,

As the train of Opportunity jest goes a-thunderin' by.

They rush down to the stations with their hair all stood on end,

As the platform of the tail-end car goes whirlin'
'roun' the bend;

An' some men groan an' cry aloud, an' some conceal their pain,

W'en they find thet they have got there just in time to miss the train.

But the cars puff through the valleys an' go a-whirlin' by,

An' float there banners of w'ite smoke like flags of victory;

They leap the flowin' rivers an' through the tunnels grope,

An' cross the Mountains of Despair to the Tableland of Hope.

The Grand Trunk Railroad of Success, it runs through every clime,

But the Cars of Opportunity they go on schedule
time,

An' never are their brakes reversed; they won't back up again,

To take the men who get there jest in time to miss the train.

—S. W. Foss, in Yankee Blade.

The Dog-Soldier.

"Who brought that dog here? Send him back at once."

So spoke, in his deepest and sternest tones, old Colonel Eugene Noirmont, as he rode out of the French fort at Briskro, in the Sahara Desert, at the head of a strong body of irregular cavalry, which had been sent to check the raids of a hostile Arab tribe.

"He is my dog, Colonel," answered the junior Captain, young Alphonse de Picardon, glancing apologetically at the small white poodle that was close to his horse's heels; "and I hope you will not object to his going with us, for it would break his heart to be left behind."

"And whose heart will it break," growled the Colonel. "if the brute begins barking just as we're going to take the Arabs by surprise, and warns them of our coming?"

"It is not for me to contradict you, Colonel," said the young officer respectfully; "but, with your permission, I can soon show you that there is no fear of that." Then he turned to the dog, and said sternly, "Jacquot, silence à la mort!"

Then at a sign from the Captain, several of the men began to shout, clap their hands, and make noise enough to set an ordinary dog to barking furiously, but Jacquot never uttered a sound.

"Very well," said the Colonel at length, "the dog may go; but remember, Captain de Picardon, that I shall hold you responsible for his behavior."

The young Captain saluted, and fell into his place without a word, and off rode the detachment.

It was weary work riding over stony ridges and sandy hollows, through the blistering heat and the blinding glare, while the hot, prickly dust rolling up in clouds at every step, clogged every pore and choked every breath. Mile after mile of the desert was left behind, hour after hour of the burning, weary, interminable day crept slowly past, but still there was no sign of the enemy, or of any living thing save a white winged vulture, which hung poised in mid-air, like a blot upon the bright, scorching, cloudless sky. The soldiers grew impatient, and began to murmur and growl.

But all at once the dog (which was still keeping pace with them) stopped short, snuffed the air uneasily, and then began to run restlessly backward and forward, uttering a low anxious whine.

"Do you think he scents the enemy?" whispered Colonel Noirmont to Captain de Picardon.

"I'll stake my life that he does," replied the Captain. "I've never yet found him wrong. There must be some hollow here that we can't see. Here Morel, Barbot, hold fast to each other while I climb onto your shoulders."

And then, supported by the two burly troopers, he raised himself high enough to make out a dry water-course a few hundred yards ahead, in the hollow of which a large number of men might easily be hidden.

"Ah!" cried the Colonel, when he heard this, "they want to catch us in an ambush, do they? Not so fast, my fine fellows! Half a dozen of you dismount, lads, and unsling your carbines, move forward about fifty paces and then fire."

The crash of the volley rolled like thunder along the silent desert, while the Colonel roared, in Arabic;

"Come out, you dogs! We see you plainly."

The effect was magical. Up started, as if rising through the earth, a swarm of savage faces and wild figures, while the flash and crackle of the answering volley followed as thunder follows lightning; but the Arabs, firing hastily and almost at random, only wounded two men.

"Now," thundered the Colonel, "upon them before they can reload."

Down swept the French upon their enemies like a whirlwind, and in a moment were hand to hand with them. The Arabs fought like tigers, but training and discipline soon began to tell, and the battle was over (as one of the troopers regretfully observed) "almost before one had time to enjoy it."

But when the Arabs began to scatter and fly, the Colonel (whose blood was fairly up) dashed off in pursuit of them so recklessly that he was soon almost alone, seeing which three of the enemy faced round and attacked him.

Captain de Picardon—who was famous as the best swordsman in the regiment—came dashing up barely in time to cut down one of Noirmont's assailants, while the Colonel himself disposed of another; but the third man was just about to stab De Picardon in the back, when his dog flew at the Arab's throat, and clutched it with such hearty energy that the man fell to the ground bleeding and half strangled.

"Form in line!" shouted Colonel Noirmont, when the fight was over, and all the wounded had been brought in. "My children, you have done well, and I thank you. To-morrow you shall be reported for good service, to to the Commander-in-chief himself, and he will not forget you; but I have one acknowledgment to make before that. Captain de Picardon, bring forward your dog."

The four-legged scout was at once produced, and when set down in front of the Colonel, he stood up on his hind legs and made a military salute with his fore paw, to the unbounded delight of the soldiers.

"A soldier who knows his duty so well," said the Colonel, with a grim smile, "must not go un-recompensed, and thus I reward his services."

So saying, he detached from his own uniform the cross of the Legion of Honor, and hung it around the dog's neck, amid thundering cheers from the assembled troopers, who declared with one voice, that his decoration had been fairly won by their "Dog-Soldier."—David Ker, in Harper's Young People.

Business is Business.

A YOUNG MAN ADOPTED THE ABOVE AS A MOTTO AND GOT RICH.

There lives in the city of New York a man who has accumulated quite a fortune by simply advising people what to do. There always will be a large number of persons who are unable to rely on their own judgment; and others come to a conclusion with ease and certainty.

A young man had accumulated a thousand dollars, and was debating whether he should buy a small candy store with it, or whether he should lend it on a mortgage. This latter he knew was a secure way; the other promised great profits. In this perplexity he saw an advertisement, "Advice given to those going into business."

After stating his case the counselor said: "My fee will be $5 in advance."

When this was paid he asked: "Do you understand the candy business?"

"No; I did not think it was necessary. I expect to supervise it generally."

"Then you will loose your money in three months."

"You think I had better loan the money on a mortgage?"

"I did not say that. What is your business; that is, what do you perfectly understand?"

"I know the pickle business through and through. I can make pickles of all kinds, but I don't like it."

"Never mind what you like. Go and get a small place and make pickle; go from hotel to hotel, restaurant to restaurant, and sell them. In ten years come back and see me; you will have $10,000 at least."

As the young man was going away he was called back.

"Here is a card. I want you to put it where you can see it a hundred times a day." These were the words on the card; "Business is business. Men don't do what they like to, they do what they can."

THE FASCINATING CARD.

The card had a strange fascination for him, he read it with care as he walked along the street. As he studied it, a new light entered his mind.

He found a dingy basement, and began to arrange for his operations. Of course vinegar must be got; several barrels of it. Some was offered at ten cents a gallon, and some more was shown at five cents. "Which shall I take?" He thought of the words on his card. He seemed to see people testing his pickles, and not liking them, depart without buying. "They will know good vinegar," thought he, and so he bought the honest stuff.

In a few days several tubs of materials were ready, and he knew he must market them. Now he greatly dreaded to face strange people and push his goods upon their notice. He never had courage when a boy, and now as a young man he felt more timid it seemed. But he thought of the words of the card, and entered a restaurant. The evident manager was a blooming young woman, and the pickle dealer was more afraid of women than men. But "business is business" repeated itself over and over in his mind.

The answer to his statement was that his pickles would be tried, and, if found all right, would be purchased.

"Glad I got that good vinegar," thought the young man; and he began to feel that there was a certain power in the maxim his advisor had given. He began to feel a courage he had never expected in meeting people and trying to sell his goods to them.

Calling at a store, to get, if possible, an order for pickles in bottles, he was quickly and rudely met with, "Don't want to see any such stuff." Noticing the utter dismay on the young man's face, the merchant said, short and sharp: "Don't you know enough about business to put up goods attractively?"

As he retreated, ruffled and disheartened the maxim repeated itself over and over again with this additional sentence; "It is business to put up goods attractively." He sought out a lithographer and had some handsomely colored labels printed. "They will buy the bottles," said the friend, "just for the picture you have on them."

APPRECIATED ADVICE.

When he had gained sufficient courage he again sought out the merchant who had rebuffed him. "I have come to make you a present of a bottle of fine pickles."

"Why do you make me a present of them?"

"Because that advice you gave me was worth a great deal."

The morning of one Fourth of July came, and he pondered whether to go to his store or not. All at once he thought, people going out on picnics will want pickles. It was the magic words on the little card that ran through his mind. He found as he had thought, a large number of buyers waiting for him.

The little card was consulted in all sorts of weather. If a man made a proposition to him of any kind, and he was in doubt, he would go and look at the words, though he knew them by heart already. One day a cheese merchant came to persuade him to buy his stock.

"People," said he, "who buy pickles always buy cheese; you will do a big trade." It was a temptation. He went and looked at the words and studied them intently, trying to think out their application to the case in hand. "Men do what they can," he reflected. "I would like to sell cheese, but I know I can sell pickle;" then he returned. Now he was resolute and firm, although by nature easily bent and swayed by the words of others.

"Business is business," he said. "I am in the pickle business; if I cannot make money in this I shall quit and go into something else; but I shall not have two kinds on my hands."

When the ten years were up, of course, he had the $10,000, and more too.—Treasure Trove.

Health Commandments.

THEY ARE SLIGHTLY IRREVERENT, BUT DECIDEDLY PAT.

1. Thou shalt have no other food than at meal time.
2. Thou shalt not take unto thee any pies or put into pastry the likeness of any thing that is in the heavens above or in the waters under the earth. Thou shalt not fall to eating it or trying to digest it. For the dyspepsia will be visited upon the children to the third and fourth generation of them that eat pie, and long life and vigor upon those that live prudently and keep the laws of health.
3. Remember thy bread to bake it well; for he will not be kept sound that eateth his bread as dough.
4. Thou shalt not indulge sorrow or borrow anxiety in vain.
5. Six days shalt thou wash and keep thyself clean, and the seventh thou shalt take a great bath, thou, and thy son, and thy maidservant and the stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days man sweats and gathers filth and bacteria enough for disease; whereupon the Lord has blessed the bathtub and hallowed it.
6. Remember thy sitting room and bed chamber to keep them ventilated, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.
7. Thou shalt not eat biscuits.
8. Thou shalt not eat thy meat fried.
9. Thou shalt not swallow thy food unchewed or highly spiced, or just before hard work, or just after it.

10. Thou shalt not keep late hours in thy neighbor's house, nor with thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his cards, nor his glass, nor with anything that is thy neighbor's.—New England Farmer.

Of all the sad and gloomy words

That mankind ever writ,

There are no sadder ones to me

Than these two: "Please remit."

—Punxsutawney Spirit

An exchange says: "A little girl who saw the ocean for the first time exclaimed. 'Oh, what a big drink of water!'"

Don't send a fox to tend geese or a cat to skim milk, unless they have a good reputation for honesty. Remember this when you put your money in the bank.

"That's a terrible looking hat you wear, Snooks." "I know it." "And carrying that big umbrella on a fair day makes it worse." "I carry the umbrella to whack those who make fun of the hat."

Johnny—"Wouldn't that fat lady in front make a fine haystack, mamma?" Mamma—"Sh-h, my dear, why do you say that?" Johnny—"Didn't the minister just say that all flesh was grass?"

Dissatisfied Star—I believed Boston is the safest harbor in the United States for shipping to enter Manager—What makes you think so? Dissatisfied Star—Because we have played to so many light houses there.

Mrs. Angelica—"Won't it be just too lovely for anything to have wings and harps forever?" Mr. Angelica (a dyspeptic)—"I don't want any of it in mine. We wouldn't be there a week before you'd want my wings to put on your hat."

A newspaper man of Farmington, Me., visited a remarkable family the other day. Calling at the home of Jonathan Scott Ellis he found Mr. Ellis, who is 96 years old, seated by the stove and reading a newspaper with glasses. His wife's sister, Miss Lydia Ballard, who will be 97 years old in April, was seated in a rocking-chair near by and knitting vigorously. Another sister-in-law, Miss Hannah Ballard, 84 years old next October, was cleaning up the dinner table and washing the dishes. Mrs. Ellis died three years ago at the age of 88. The old folks prefer to live by themselves and do all their own work, and Father Ellis yet refers to his sisters-in-law as "the girls."

From a Woman's Standpoint.

ROCKAWAY. May 5th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

It is one of the things I never could understand, why those who use tobacco are so indifferent as to the nature and properties of tobacco, and its effects on the body and mind. It seems strange that they should think so little of these, if they have no regard for the moral or social effects. Medical writers, without exception, describe tobacco as a poison. It owes its poison nature to a substance called nicotia, which can be extracted from it in the form of a liquid, by chemical process. Nicotia is capable of producing death sooner than any other poison except prussic acid. Experiments have been tried on animals, and one drop of the liquid killed a rabbit in three minutes and a half. Dogs to which tobacco is freely administered die in spasms and their blood is found after death not to be coagulated the same as from other poisons. Healthy blood coagulates on cooling. Birds and frogs confined in tobacco smoke are killed by it.

If a cigar be unrolled and moistened, then applied over the stomach of a child, it will soon bring on sickness and vomiting, and may endanger life. Soldiers have been known to apply it in armpit so as to cause sickness, that they might escape from duty. Some medical writers recognize what they call "the smoker's soar throat," resulting from excessive smoking. Sometimes a small blister appears in the mouth, which by the continued irritation of the acrid matter becomes an ulcer, and finally assumes a cancerous character. Cancer of the lip has been observed in Europe as a frequent occurrence produced by the pressure and heat of the pipe or cigar, in connection with the irritation of the acrid oil, the voice is often affected by it, the stomach and digestive organs can not fail to be disordered by it; in fact there are more ways than I have time to mention, by which the laws of nature are violated, by the use of this poisonous weed.

The good it seems to do is imaginary, and not real, and the evils it appears to remove are those of its own making. For instance: It is not uncommon for persons who have become addicted to the excessive use of tobacco, and who abandon the habit, to grow fat rapidly—the production of fat is sometimes so great as to induce them to resume the use of tobacco in self-defense. There is an old story of a man who, seeing a bear descending tail foremost from a tree, seized him as a valuable prize; but finding he could not manage the beast he determined to let it go. Immediately, however, the bear clutched the man in his powerful arms, and became master of the situation. So it is with our bad habits. We begin by adopting them for our pleasure or service. They clutch us before we know it, and we end by becoming their abject and helpless victims. "Do not attack the bear." This is the only true philosophy. Avoid the first step.

And then there is another thing I can't understand: Why some writers are wont to dwell with enthusiasm on the merits of tobacco as a luxury to the poor. They should bear in mind that the husband and father is usually the only one of the family who partakes of the luxury. The wife and mother on whom mainly rests the burden of the family, pursues her round of toil and drudgery by day, and of care and watching by night. For her there is no luxury, that is monopolized by the strong man who spends the day in healthful and not exhausting labor, and the night in unbroken slumber! Dear sisters I wonder what our smokers and chewers would think were they to find their wives and daughters following their example? Would they encourage the practice? I wonder if "my John" would be greatly delighted to find me, some evening, when he came from his work, sitting in a cloud of smoke, dreaming away my cares and trials, behind an old clay pipe? Would he cheerfully pay four or five dollars out of his months wages for tobacco. He is a husband who never refuses me anything that he can afford; but would this be granted as cheerfully as the rest? I doubt it. That women are capable of the same want, we know from the history of our own ancestry. It was written two centuries ago: She that with pure tobacco will not prime her nose, can be no lady of the time." Happily fashion, for once, taking the side of reason, has driven the vile custom out of female society. Would to heaven that the same capricious tyrant would co-operate with reason in driving it from the society of men. Won't some of the wives of the O. R. C. give their opinion, either for or against tobacco?

Fearing that I have made my article too long already, I will stop short, but would like to add that my husband is a member of the O. R. C., and is quite enthusiastic over THE CONDUCTOR. It is certainly a progressive little magazine, and the editors deserve great credit.

VOILA TOUT,
A conductor's wife.

T. De Witt Talmage in the Ladies' Home Journal, discoursing on "The Child of the Modern Rocker," says:

One of the great wants of the age is the right kind of a cradle and the right kind of a foot to rock it with. We are opposed to the usurpation of "patent self-rockers." When I hear a small boy calling his grandfather "old daddy," and see the youngster try to slap his mother across the face because she will not let him have ice-cream and lemonade in the same stomach, and holding his breath till he gets black in the face, so that, to save the child from fits, the mother is compelled to give him another dumpling, and he afterward goes out into the world stubborn, willful, selfish and intractable, I say that boy was brought up in a "patented self-rocker." The old-time mother would have put him down in the old-fashioned cradle and sung to him—

"Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber, Holy angels guard thy bed,"

And if that did not take the spunk out of him she would have laid him in an inverted position across her lap, with his face downward, and with a rousing spank make him more susceptible to the music.

Spring Openings.

BY LA CROSSE.

Have you been? Were they not lovely? Such beautiful flowers, in such profusion. And so on, and so on, through the whole gamut of female tones and opinions. New bonnets for all and every one.

Out in the country, too, come spring openings, crocus, violets, dandelions and green leaves on every bush and tree. Everywhere Nature's spring opening manifests itself, until the housewife of the farm-house pulls out "draws," and band-box and resurrects odds and ends of ribbons and flowers, and fixes up the bonnet of half a decade ago and puts in an appearance at "meetin'."

If spring openings only keep on, and open hearts, as well as pockets—and oh, how dusty some of the hearts would be. Such a world of sunshine, love and tenderness, as it would take to air them. Nothing but a breath of life from the Father could ever cleanse some reeking in sin and pollution; others narrowed down to such scanty dimensions, that to widen their vista would surely cause them to crack in twain.

I sometimes wonder if spring openings ever come in heaven. Perhaps the pearly gates may open wide enough to send forth a messenger to bring back (thoughts) peaceful and restful to earth's tired ones hear below, and whispers of a father's and brother's tender care that is wanting over yonder for all who may chose to accept, and learn of the way that leads onward and upward to a more glorious opening than will ever be witnessed on earth, whether furnished by nature or man.

In The Attic.

WRITTEN ON A RAINY DAY.

Of all the emotions that sudden the heart,
When the year from the summer has flown,
And the wind is about
With a flutter and shout,
And all of the leaves have been sown;
The saddest of all is to creep up the stairs
That leads to the old attic gray,
And close to the rain
Sit alone at the pane
And fold unused garments away.

We do not know why a fog falls o'er the eye
When we put the old dresses away,
Neither well can we say
Why the smile does not stay,
Nor why should the tear close abide;
But it always is so—I recall when a child,
How my mother and I used to creep
To the old, shakily loft,
And I think, too, how oft
She used to sit down there and weep.

By the long cedar chest where the baby clothes were,
And the low little splint-bottom chair,
Like a trusty old friend,
That is true to the end,
Through the summer and winter, 'twas there
By the old-fashioned crib where the first baby died—
That wee prattling gift of her love.
That passed like a flower
In the bud, one dark hour,
To brighten the country above.

Oh! that old attic room where the garden seeds hung,
The thyme and the sweet-smelling sage,
The long-handled gourd
Swinging there, and the sword,
And the little pet bird's empty cage.
How they all fill a space in the gloom of to-day
That finds me far and alone,
Up here by the pane,
And so close to the rain,
And the old-time radiance flown.

—Good Housekeeping

Grey Heads.

BY S. E. F.

Footprints of the flight of years,
 Mile posts, marking hopes and fears,
 Witnesses of joy and tears
 Are there combined.
 Monuments of Time's power,
 Not the passing but past hour
 Gave them knowledge for dower
 If so inclined.

Has their knowledge brought them pain?
 Do they think it loss or gain
 To have lived? Was it in vain
 As some appear?
 If the years they now possess
 Have not taught them to repress
 Many longings, they confess
 A failure drear.

Do they at life's retrospect
 Visions see they can't eject
 Crucified by their neglect
 Following still?
 Were their lives rightly begun?
 Ordered properly, well done?
 There and now in unison
 With higher will?

Some grey ones seen here and there
 Traveling life's thoroughfare
 Like girdled forest monarchs dare
 Uphold the head.
 While others, like ungirdled trees,
 Having bent to each fierce breeze
 Bushes hide their heads with ease
 Since bushes spread.

Background for face benignant;
 Enframing eyes indignant;
 Some bearing looks malignant;
 All marks of "days."
 Colored from forces within.
 Tinted, seeing wrongs begin.
 Stamped with their recorded sin
 Their offspring stays.

When the grey brings discontent
 Reminding of years misspent,
 Harvesting mismanagement,
 They reject it.
 If it brings an inward peace,
 Tells, in man, of faiths increase,
 Calmly waiting life's release,
 They respect it.

My Precious Pet.

BY CLARA AUGUSTA.

Did I ever write his history?

No. Now, that I think of it, I am certain that the history of my Precious Pet has never yet seen the light. So I will begin at the beginning.

When I was a little girl, five or six years old, I had a favorite play-mate, named Charlie Moreland. But let me tell you, in the first place, that Charlie was not the pet of which I spoke in the commencement.

We were deeply attached to each other in a childish way—so much so that we forgot to be selfish—one to the other—and this, with children, is always an evidence of sincere affection.

He would let me spin his top, and beat his drum, and ruin his pumpkin vine whistly; and I would consign my freshest picture books, and my reddest-cheeked dolls, to his clumsy fingers.

We used to sail cucumber boats in tubs of water; hoist pocket handkerchief flags on bean-poles; build long strings of stone wall, a couple of inches high, round imaginary gardens; and play "horse" till the whole road was clouded with the dust we managed to kick up.

Charlie was a nice little fellow, and, in my girlish days, there was nobody like him; but he is not my hero, any more than my pet.

As he grew older, he began to develop a taste for adventure, and, at the age of fifteen, he ran away from home, with all his capital tied up in a red bandanna handkerchief, and shipped on board an East Indiaman.

I was twelve years of age at the time, and Charlie's exodus nearly broke my heart. I cried full an hour, and had red eyes, and a swelled nose, all the next day, in consequence. I was only comforted, at the last, by the cook's promise of making me a gooseberry turnover. She kept her promise, and the turnover was excellent! I do not think I would object to one just like it now.

Charlie was absent seven years. When he returned to Barbush, he came over to see us the first of all, after his own family. He was a man now —tall, bearded, and bronzed, and I couldn't play
 "jack-straws," nor "horse," with him any more.

We were, both of us, surprised to find we were not little boy and girl, as we used to be. And we were both of us sorry, I do believe.

Just as Charlie was taking leave, he said:

"I brought you something from the Indies,
 Maggie—I mean Miss Cherleigh—but I hardly dare to offer it, now that you are a young lady."

"Indeed, Charlie!" I replied. "Why, you ought to know that anything you could bring me would be acceptable!"

He looked gratified, and said he would fetch it over next day. I waited with great impatience.
 What could it be? Cousin Bella Hanye, from New York, who was visiting us, said it could be no less than a camel's hair shawl; but papa insisted that it must be either a wax doll, or a new edition of Cock Robin, just translated from the original.

Well, it came the next day. Charlie brought it over. And what was it? Why, the blackest little monkey that you ever set eyes on!

Cousin Bella flew from the room like a lunatic, upsetting the what-not, with all my pretty curiosities, and overturning two chairs and an ottoman, in her frantic haste.

My favorite cat put up her back, and went round and round the new acquisition, uncertain whether to regard the whole affair as a joke, or a serious matter, requiring her growls to make it legal.

I was surprised first; then delighted. I had heard so many funny stories of the doings of monkeys, that I anticipated a continual fund of amusement from the tricks of my Shylock—that was his name—and I thanked Charlie so much, that the fellow actually came to the conclusion that he had done a good thing by importing that monkey.

His ship sailed a week afterward, and I was left in undisputed possession of Shylock. At that epoch the trials of my life began.

My Precious Pet soon grew attached to me, in his own peculiar way, but he never yielded a single freak to my wishes. I might as well have tried to get obedience from the north wind as from him. He seemed especially delighted with doing just what would irritate me the most. The little rascal knew, evidently, that, let his transgressions be ever so broad, his punishment would be light.

Nothing in the house was safe from his inquiring disposition. He filled my bureau-drawers with frogs, that hopped into my face every time I ventured to search for any article I wanted—frightening me half out of my wits. He put "cockle buttons" into my bed; pinned rags and strings to my dresses; scented himself with my costliest perfumes, and brushed his head with my hair-brushes.

He and the cat were, singularly enough, very good friends—though Shylock never scrupled to box her ears, soundly, if she displeased him.

To the neighborhood he was at once a nuisance and an amusement. Almost everybody was afraid of him, but still they liked to see his comical tricks played off on somebody else.

One autumn evening the Sewing Society met at our house. Elder Busby, a good old man, celebrated for his long-winded prayers, was present; of course Elder Busby must pray, and we all resigned ourselves to be martyrs for the next two hours.

Shylock was in the room when the petition began, and I knew by the expression of his little black face that mischief was brewing. Directly, he slid from the room, and I would have followed had not courtesy forbidden. Elder Busby would never forgive me if I left the room while he was praying. But I sat on nettles, I expected something dreadful—I could not guess what. Mother nudged me to keep quiet; and papa frowned at me over a suppressed yawn; and Miss Periwinkle, who was popularly supposed to have designs on the widowed heart of Elder Busby, gave utterance to an audible groan at my degeneracy.

Just as the elder had consigned us all to everlasting perdition, modified by certain sectarian conditions, (a proceeding, by-the-way, which he always seemed to take particular delight in,) there was a singular rumbling, shuffling sound in the direction of the chimney—we had an open fireplace. Another second, and down the flue, in a cloud of soot and ashes, came a black and white fluttering object, that I recognized as mother's Shanghae rooster, obtained by her at considerable trouble and expense.

The music that came from the poor bird's throat was most terribly indescribable, and the audience were frightened out of all sense of decorum. The women shrieked—the men looked around for their hats, and the celestial visitant, thinking, probably, that the firelight was the daybreak, hopped upon the bald head of the elder and crowed lustily.

The elder sprang to his feet, gave one look at the bold intruder, and, hatless as he was, fled from the house, to which he did not return that night. Miss Periwinkle fainted; and honest, but bungling John Jones got her everlasting enmity by flinging some cold water in her face, which washed the paint off, and left her fair skin three shades darker than usual.

I managed to explain things, at last; the monkey was at the bottom of it; and very soon he made his appearance, meek and innocent, but here and there a suspicious feather sticking in his wool:

The next day, Dr. Huntom, an admirer of my sister Clara, called. The doctor was a man of thirty-five or forty, remarkably young-looking, and possessing the most abundant hair of any one I have ever seen.

I was sitting in a recess of the parlor, and the visitor failed to observe me—but, not considering it worth while to show myself, I went on with my book.

The passionate tones of the doctor's voice arrested my attention, and warned me that I had better be some where else; but I could not reach that wished-for spot without being seen by the devoted couple—so I judged it best to keep quiet.

"My dearest girl," began the doctor, "I have long admired you above all others, and you must have guessed the meaning of my attention!"

Clara was blushing, and toying with the rings on her finger. The doctor leaned toward her, his arm half encircling her waist; and just then to my infinite horror, I perceived Shylock climbing the back of the lover's chair with the utmost caution. The doctor gave utterance to the words, "Will you be mine?" when the monkey's long paw dexterously removed the most cunningly made "scratch" from the head of the absorbed gentleman, leaving a spot, the size of a teacup, bald, bare, and polished as the top of a marble table.

Clara screamed with horror. The doctor put up his hand, and, discovering his loss, turned to wreak his vengeance on the guilty one—turned just in time to see Shylock disappearing through the window, his round head adorned with the profuse hair that had been one of Dr. Huntom's chiefest attractions.

As might have been expected, the doctor left without an answer to his question, and Clara accepted Will Adams the very next day.

About this time, a vacant farm next our own was purchased, by a gentleman from a distant state—the Hon. Zebulm Chester. The Elm was, originally, a fine old place, and, under the direction of its new proprietor, it grew absolutely beautiful. The old stone house was remodeled, and furnished with the costliest modern furniture; the grounds were laid out with elegance and taste, and, as the spring opened, the Hon. Zebulm removed thither.

Zebulm! How I did laugh at the name, and at the gentleman, too! He was so grave, and stately, and self-possessed. But he was a perfect gentleman—handsome, traveled, and—the gossips said—"a splendid catch!" But then, his name! Only fancy a wife, calling out to her husband, "Dear Zebby!"

From the very first, Shylock took a strong liking to this man. I hardly knew why. He was not given to forming new attachments, but he persisted in visiting The Elms every day, on the most familiar footing. Almost invariably he carried something, by way of propitiation—a large apple, a piece of pie, a doughnut, or something of that kind, which he would gravely deposit in Mr. Chester's hand.

After a while he took to a new species of offerings, and conveyed to our amused neighbor my shoes, bonnets, gloves, jewelry, etc., with the greatest liberality.

Mr. Chester declared he had enough of my wardrobe to set him up as a fine lady, any time he chose to make the metamorphosis.

At one period, I had Mr. Chester's bootjack, dressing gown; a flute, shaving case, and meerschau, all at once; and he was in possession of my slippers, three pair of undersleeves, a Sontag, two bosom pins, and my best embroidered night-cap.

I got so that I fairly hated the man, or thought I did, which amounted to the same thing. Our family took to teasing me most mercilessly about him, and, if anything will make a woman disperse a man, it is to be accused of having "designs" on him.

Papa insisted upon it that Mr. Chester had engaged Shylock as diplomat, to arrange the marriage settlement, and that he was generous enough to "endow" me with his goods before the performance of the ceremony.

One night, when they had carried the thing beyond all bounds, some of the young people of the vicinity being present, I was provoked to do something daring. I just wanted to convince them all that, in spite of the monkey express line between us, I did not care a fig for Mr. Chester.

So I made a sketch of the Hon. Zebulm—I was only too clever with my pencil—riding a donkey, and underneath was the inscription:

"A PAIR OF 'EM."

There was no particular wit in the caricature, but the likeness was unmistakable. I have the drawing before me now, and must be pardoned the egotism of saying, that Mr. Chester's personel was perfect; but the donkey's ears, at this late day, strikes me as rather too long, and his frame a little too angular for a respectable beast.

We all laughed at it, of course, and afterward threw it a side, and, for the time, it passed entirely from my mind.

A day or two afterward I was in the garden, which joined Mr. Chester's, when, suddenly, there shot past me the most grotesque object I have ever seen. A second glance revealed Shylock, invested in my new crinoline, minus all drapery, my lace fichu over his shoulders, my "love of a bonnet" perched on his head, and my fifteen dollar parasol in one paw, and in the other—good gracious! it was that very indetical scrap of paper on which I had sketched "A Pair of 'em!" And he was going right in the direction of Mr. Chester's!

I called frantically to him to stop, but he only grinned, and wriggled on, as effected as any Broadway belle. Shylock must have seen society somewhere, or he never could have assumed that fashionable mind.

Mr. Chester sat smoking on the piazza. Shylock saw him and quickened his pace. My face grew dreadfully hot. I would have given my pearl set to have laid my hands on that terrible scrap of paper! I started to run after the little wretch. He bounded over the fence and struck for Mr. Chester. I gained upon him. His new style of rig impeded his progress, and for a moment, I cherished the delusive hope that I might capture him in season to prevent the fatal disclosure.

I exerted myself to the utmost, and succeeded in grasping the last spring of his skirt, just as he put the drawing into Mr. Chester's hand. I thought I should sink with shame. If my nerves had been in the least weak, I should have fainted away, like the heroines in five volume novels.

Mr. Chester looked at the vile sheet. His face flushed slowly, but there was no other exhibition of emotion. I respected him enough then.

"A good representation!" he said, holding it off. "Thank you, Shylock. It is equal to a photograph. Allow me to enquire, Miss Cherleigh, if the conception of the four-footed character was original or borrowed?"

I burst into tears. If it had been to have saved my neck from the hemp, I couldn't help it. He was so coolly sarcastic, and looked down upon me from such an immense height!

He lifted me up and carried me into the sitting-room, still holding his arm around me.

"Margaret, what are you crying for? Is it because I have seen the drawing, or because you are sorry that you made it?"

"Oh! how can you ask?" I began, impetuously. "I dispise myself too thoroughly to need your scorn! But if you only knew how they have all provoked and teased me with—with——" and here I broke down.

"With what, Margaret?"

"With having designs on you! There, I have said it! And I thought I would show them that I didn't care!"

"And did you care?" His arm tightened around me, and, really, what is the use of telling all one knows to everybody? But Mr. Chester is a tyrant, and forced me to a full confession.

He patted Shylock on the head, and said he was our best friend.

And now that we are married, we keep Shylock still, the very apple of our eyes, though old and gray.

Charlie Moreland is married, and has a half-dozen little Morelands around his table, and the oldest is christened Margaret.

I am happy, but I never call my husband Zebulm; and sometimes I think he never would have been mine, but for MY PRECIOUS PET.

Uncle Jake's Dumb Critters.

I don't know much of language such as the scholars tell,

But the language of the dumb critters I understand quite well,

And I think, sir—yes, I think, sir, that their voices reach the sky,

And that their Maker understands the pleading of their eye,

And I shouldn't be surprised, sir, if in the judgment day,

Some cruel, heartless human folks should be as dumb as they.

My house is not as elegant as many are, I know; But my cattle are all sheltered from the wintry winds and snow.

And they're not kept on rations that leave nothing but the frame,

Or in the spring returning to the "dust from whence they came."

Ah! God hath wisely ordered, sir, that in a money way,

Starving, abusing critters are the things that will not pay.

If any of my flock are sick or hurt in any way, I see that they are cared for, sir, by night as well as day.

My letter's on their wool, sir—that's all the brand I know;

My lambs—they are not tailless, for God didn't make them so.

Some say sheep don't need water, but I tell you it's a lie!

They're almost frantic for it, sir, the same as you or I.

My horses—you have seen them, sir; they are just what they seem;

And, if I do say it myself, they are a splendid team.

They wear no foolish blinders, and from hitchup reins are free;

And they never had a hurt, sir, that has been caused by me.

The way they do my bidding now, 'tis really a surprise!

They know my very step, sir, and thank me with their eyes.

My pigpen, over yonder, I'd like, sir, to have shown;

My hogs—they never are the "breed" that is but skin and bone;

I know, sir, that to fatten them, they need both food and drink,

A shelter and a bed, sir, will help it on, I think. I have a yard on purpose they can root where they choose—

It seems to me like cruelty, so rings I never use.

There's one thing more I want to show, 'tis Hannah's hen house here—

Our poultry always pays us well, and just now eggs are dear.

'Tis warm and clean and bright, you see, with gravel on the ground;

There's feed and water standing here all day the whole year round.

But maybe I have tired you, sir—forgive an old man's pride;

But somehow I love dumb critter's and I want their wants supplied.

—Our Dumb Animals.

E. H. BELKNAP, EDITOR.

WM. P. DANIELS, MANAGER.

W. N. GATES, ADVERTISING MANAGER, 10 Public Square, Cleveland, O.

ANOTHER APOLOGY.

Again must the readers of THE CONDUCTOR be asked to exercise patience. If they find this number below the usual standard, and it undoubtedly will be, the cause thereof will be found in the fact that sore affliction has overtaken the editor, E. H. Belknap, who at this writing, May 20th, is very nigh unto death's door, though showing a slight change for the better. Editor Belknap suffered a stroke of paralysis on the 13th, which brought him to the very brink of the river, the opposite shore of which is such an impenetrable mystery to mankind. For days despair of his recovery had possession of his devoted wife and hosts of friends. His condition was such that the advent of the insatiate Reaper was momentarily expected. But thanks to a rugged constitution, which, though weakened by severe attacks of La Grippe, retains sufficient vigor to successfully battle with a more subtle foe and holds out fair promise of ultimate recovery.

As a consequence of Editor Belknap's illness, coupled with the additional fact that everyone connected with the "headquarters" at all conversant with the details necessary to getting out THE CONDUCTOR is in Rochester attending the annual session of the Order, a new man was compelled to take the "run" on the shortest kind of notice. He will do the best he can under the circumstances, and with the above explanation and sad announcement feels assured that the readers will treat his shortcomings charitably, and with him devoutly wish for the speedy restoration of Mr. Belknap to health and editorial duties.

P. S.—At the hour of going to press, May 29th, Editor Belknap, we are much pleased to inform the readers of THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR, is in a very promising way for early and complete recovery. For days he was unconscious, and when consciousness returned he was speechless and his entire right side paralyzed. Now he can converse and is able to slightly move the portions affected. His physician says he will recover, a consummation his legion of friends will hail with great satisfaction.

Strange, isn't it, how men will differ? How level-headed men will arrive at opposite conclusions on important matters? A case in point is the report of the Railway Commission of New York, in which the astute members of that body assert that the blocking of frogs and guard rails has a tendency to promote instead of prevent accidents to railway men. On the same principle a sumptuous meal would produce hunger and a continuous fast take the place of a "square" meal.

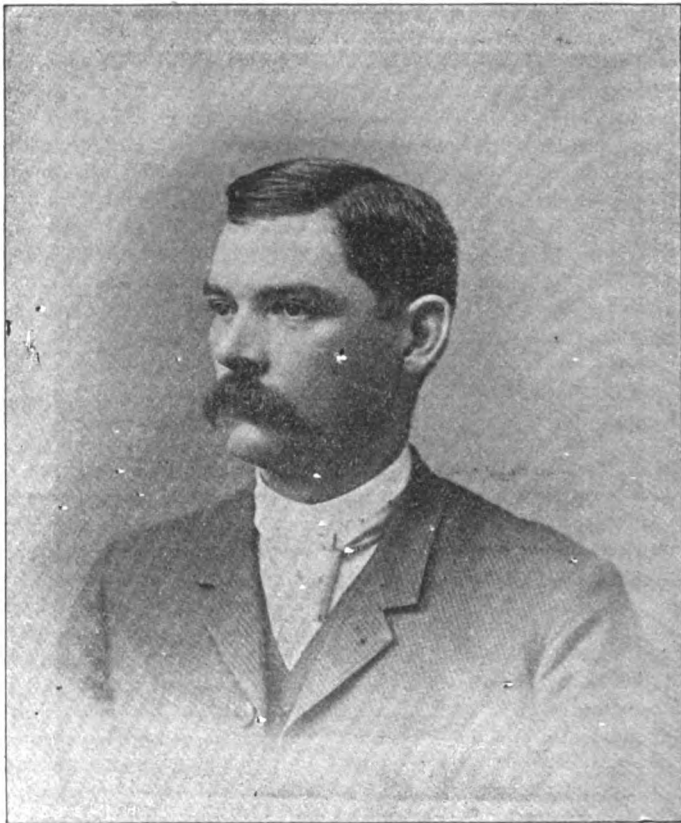

TREAT HIM KINDLY.

Shortly after this number of THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR reaches its readers, the census enumerator will be abroad in the land. Dear reader, you will, no doubt, have to pass the ordeal of the enumerator's interrogatories, and we counsel you, in fact, beg of you, to have in store an inexhaustible stock of patience. It will come in very handy before you get through replying to all the questions, to refuse an answer to any of which will subject you to a fine of $30. The charge that nearly all the questions are either nonsensical or impertinent will not be accepted as a valid excuse for declining to answer. Nor will it be polite to inform the enumerator that the primary design of the census was to learn the number of the inhabitants of the country. The fathers who formulated the census scheme were fogies who indulged the homely fashion of attending to their own business—a fashion now moth eaten and dust covered and almost unknown to "sassiety." But this is no fault of the enumerator. He has a duty to perform, and has taken an oath to follow not only the spirit but the letter of his instructions. Bear with him in patience, even though inclined to "punch" his head for impertinence. Remember his string of questions is tormentingly long, and if his memory be faulty, he may get mixed in his interrogatories and interject others not down on his "list." Come to think of it, there are some essential questions not down on the list, answers to which would be valuable auxiliaries in filling the census publications which the dear people pay so liberally for compiling and publishing. For instance, it is of vital importance that the readers of the census volumes should know whether you consider marriage a failure; how you treat your children; whether you ever thrash your wife; who is your grocer and whether you paid your last month's grocery bill; whether you belong to a club and if so, how often you come home from it

EDGAR ERASTUS CLARK.

We give to the readers of the CONDUCTOR in this number a portrait and sketch of the Grand Chief Conductor elect, of the Order of Railway Conductors. Edgar Erastus Clark was born in Lima, Livingston Co., New York, February 18, 1856. At the age of six years, his father died, leaving him and his good mother to tread the pathway of life together. As soon as he was old enough he was placed in school at the Genesee Wesleyan

E. E. CLARK, GRAND CHIEF CONDUCTOR-ELECT.

"full;" whether you bet on your home base ball club through a run of bad umpiring as well as when said official is afraid to give decisions against your favorites; whether you go to church when you can't help it, or hale up somewhere of a Sunday and play "cinch" or "penny-ante;" whether it will rain, and where did you get that hat? He may not put these question to you, but if he does, answer them kindly, promptly and truthfully, for they are of as much importance as the majority of questions formulated by the census commissioner.

Seminary where he remained until 1872. After leaving school he was taken suddenly ill, like many a young man in those days, with what was usually termed western fever, and starting west without any particular place in view, after a few days wandering found himself in the now flourishing city of Austin, Minn. He applied for a situation as brakeman on the B. C. R. & N. railway, and for a while was acting in that capacity for the present Grand Secretary and Treasurer of the O. R. C. After working here for a time he concluded it was to his interest to go farther west, so in 1876 we find the young man at Ogden on the Central Pacific railroad. In 1880, September 1, Brother Clark met with an accident which undoubtedly changed the whole tenor of his life; what he might have done or become had it not been for this accident we shall probably never know, but we surmise it was the making of the boy. It was the occasion of his marriage to Miss Lavinia Jenkins, of Ogden, Utah, which union has been blessed with four children, two boys and two girls, of whom Brother Clark is very proud. For a little over four years he was employed by the D. & R. G. W. railroad, and for nearly four years as passenger conductor. At the session of the Grand Division, held at Denver, he was elected Grand Senior Conductor for the period of two years. Brother Clark is a member of Wasatch Division, No. 124, of Ogden, Utah, having served three terms as Chief Conductor of that division. This alone should serve as a fitting credential to his worth as a member of the Order.

By a recent decision of the Railway Commission of Missouri, the practice of collecting extra fare from passengers who fail to purchase tickets is declared illegal and consequently forbidden. This ruling is at variance with several federal court decisions, which latter were based on the grounds that railway companies had a right to require the purchase of tickets before entering trains, the object aimed at by this apparently harmless measure being to remove temptation from conductors. The Missouri commission's ruling is the proper one. All just men will concede this. It is democratic and on the strict line of justice. The currency of the land is made a legal tender on the train as well as at the ticket office, and the conductor recognized as a reputable man, worthy of the confidence of his employers and the public, instead of unjustly resting under the ban of suspicion, as he is made to by the text of other decisions.

RAILWAY CONDUCTORS.

OPENING OF THE 22D SESSION OF THE GRAND DIVISION OF THE ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS.

A public reception in the Lyceum theatre to the Grand Division opened the convention of the Order of Railway Conductors on Tuesday May 13th, 1890. The exercises took place in the Lyceum theater. The stage was prettily arranged as a drawing room, the chairs being occupied by the speakers and Grand Officers. A large audience was present, including members of the Order with their wives and friends. The orchestra, dress circle and boxes were filled and many occupied seats in the balcony.

On the stage were the speakers who welcomed the convention to the state and city: Hon. Frank Rice, secretary of state; Mayor Carroll, Senator McNaughton, City Attorney Ernst, and W. A. Sutherland. The following officials of the Grand Division were also on the stage; C. S. Wheaton, Elmira, Grand Chief Conductor; W. P. Daniels, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Grand Secretary; C. H. Wilkins, Chicago, Assistant Grand Chief Conductor; E. E. Clark, Ogden, Utah Territory, Grand Senior Conductor; Howard Evans, Schenectady, N. Y., M. Clancy, Kent, Ohio, W. C. Cross Burlington, Iowa, all of the Executive Committee; C. E. Weisz, Middletown, N. Y., J. H. Lattimer, Atlanta, Ga., both of the Insurance Committee; J. O. Spelman, chairman of the local committee of arrangements.

An overture, admirably played by the theater orchestra under Prof. Laisy's direction, opened the exercises. Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Stebbins of the Central Church, and was an earnest invocation for wisdom in the proceedings of the convention and Divine protection for the delegates. J. O. Spelman, chairman of the committee of arrangements, presided, and at the close of the prayer introduced the first speaker of the day, Hon. Frank Rice, secretary of New York state. His address, which was frequently interrupted by enthusiastic applause, is given in full, as follows:

Grand Chief Conductor, Officers and Members of the Order of Railway Conductors of America:

The opportunity to speak a word of welcome on this occasion affords me great pleasure, because, first, it is scarcely possible for any citizen to face this great assemblage of railroad men without being able to recognize many familiar forms and faces; and because, second, he who is your chief officer and presides over your deliberations, who is your official head, and conducts, manages and controls your organization subject to the direction of your Grand Division is, and since the days when he and I occupied the same wooden bench in the old country school house, less than three score miles from here, has been my intimate and trusted friend. The elevation to first position in your Order of one possessed of his honesty of purpose and capacity for organization and business, is a sufficient guaranty of the wisdom of its members, and their determination to found and build for the present and the future.

Conductors of railway trains more than any other men, have relations, connection and intercourse with the whole people. They come in daily business contact with the traveling public, which comprises the inhabitants of the civilized portions of the world. More than any other men, to them is committed the safety, protection, comfort and pleasure of immense numbers of people—those who are continually being transported from place to place as business or inclination leads or dictates. Their command starts, controls and stops the mighty inventions of science devised for the purposes of transportation, and an inconsiderate word or a false sign may send to destruction the lives of hundreds. To them, therefore, in the pursuit of their occupation, attaches a responsibility which is not easily measured.

Their task-master may be said to be the general public, and none is more exacting. Patience, civility, forbearance, courteousness and strict attention are expected and demanded at all times, in all conditions, whatever provocation, annoyance or insult is offered. The inconsiderateness of childhood must be overlooked; the inquisitiveness of youth must be satisfied; the selfishness and unreasonableness of middle age must be endured, and the infirmity of old age excused. If the nervous persistence of some old lady traveling alone has induced a conductor to stop his train at some way station, to be told, by her after the train had stopped, that she desires only to take a dose of medicine at that point, as advised by her physician, he must avoid all appearance of exasperation and with amiable countenance, blandly assure her that it is a great personal privilege to have been allowed the opportunity to accommodate her. If the bully or inebriate cause disorder or confusion, the conductor must persuade to quiet by the power of temperate language, or remove from the train by gentle force which will not offend. If the dead beat attempts to ride from Rochester to Syracuse, and the conductor ventures to remind him that his ticket read Brighton, and was taken up just before reaching that station, he must wear a calm look of satisfaction when the passenger, appearing to burst with indignation speaks of the outrage upon his honor and integrity, and the vindication of his veracity and good name by taking prompt means to secure the dismissal from employment, of a servant so insolent and unworthy.

Vexations and annoyances which these instances illustrate, are of daily occurrence, and constantly call for great self-possession and control; and to the credit of our craft, conductors, it must be said that, in the main, these responsibilities, obligations and duties, are well borne and performed. The general public owes you a debt of gratitude, when your work is faithfully done, which never has been and never will be, fully paid, because never fully appreciated and understood.

This Order of yours has existed more than twenty years. Its membership has grown from 1,000 to 14,000, and it has paid to its widows and orphans and sick and disabled $1,000,000. Its plans, purposes and methods are similar to those of many other organizations and are admirably stated in a section of its constitution. But in one respect you have stepped in advance of any other association whose members are wholly employes, dependent for wages, or compensation for their labor, upon contract with the employer.

For the enforcement and protection of your rights you do not depend upon might. Force has given place to reason. You have declared against "strikes." As the nations of the world have abandoned a resort to arms and have sought peace in arbitration, so you have depended on the power of enlightened public opinion and the justice of your cause. Your experience, I am informed, is satisfactory. While wrong has not always been avoided or removed, injustice has oftener and more readily yielded to reason than to force. For this radical action great commendation is due your Order. The great corporations of the country owe you much. They owe you, at least, one thing they have not yet accorded. The contemptible spy, who boards your train in disguise, must earn his price. The envelope of ominous blue, which is supposed to result from the secret information imparted by him, is odious and unjust. One of the first principles of civil government requires for the accused a hearing and defense. As much as this should be denied to no man charged with wrong, whenever or wherever the charge is made.

Let your accuser, whether it be the paid detective, or the bully or dead beat whom you have corrected or offended, be made to confront you with his accusations. Let your answer and defense to these accusations be heard and considered, and the greediest demand of the honest and honorable conductor will have been satisfied, and the full measure of justice have been done in this regard.

Conductors, I say again it is a pleasure to face you, and honestly, earnestly and sincerely I extend to you a welcome to our Empire state. May this session of your Grand Division be harmonious, successful and profitable; may your intercourse with each other be fraternal; and may your sojourn be so pleasant and agreeable, that in the near future you may again direct your Grand Chief Conductor, by the fall of his gavel, to convene your Order at some point within our state.

Grand Chief Conductor Wheaton on behalf of the organization responded to Mr. Rice's address of welcome and returned the thanks of the members. Mr. Wheaton referred in a feeling manner to his meeting with Secretary Rice, the latter representing the greatest state in the Union, and the speaker representing, he believed, the greatest Order in the country. The speaker knew that the honorable secretary had little time to make speeches and would say nothing which did not come from his heart. Continuing, the speaker dwelt on the nature of the organization. Its affairs are carried on according to business principles, he said, and it has succeeded in making the conductor's life happier than it would have been without such an organization. The conductor's position, he said, is one of great responsibility, and should be filled by honorable, upright men. Of first importance is it that the conductor shall be a law-abiding citizen. The speaker closed by giving statistics in regard to the work of the association in relieving the widows and orphans of deceased members.

Mayor Carroll was introduced and received with hearty applause. He spoke as follows:

In the name of this people, whom you have honored by holding your session here, I bid you a hearty welcome. Many of your members are residents of Rochester, esteemed by all for their many estimable traits of character and their pleasure is shared on this occasion by all their fellow citizens. Your grand organization, representing the multitude of interests which center in the successful operation of the railroads of the country becomes conspicuous above all similar associations in many ways. The vast properties in your daily care, the millions of lives entrusted to your watchfulness, the fidelity with which you meet daily emergencies, unprovided for by rules and left to your discretion, evoke the profound gratitude of all communities and the deepest interest in your welfare. I can tell you nothing you do not know of the important relations you hold to the public welfare and shall be content to give expression to the general appreciation of the worth, skill and noble character of your membership. No class of men evince a deeper sense of their responsibility nor meet their daily risks of life and limb with so much true courage. You assemble in a city which is in relations with distant parts of the country by large shipments of its products, and which sends its citizens in pursuit of profit or pleasure to the ends of the world. They have experienced your courtesy, have been protected by your faithfulness and returned safely to their families under your guidance from extensive travel. They sympathise with all the purposes of your meeting, and when it is necessary for your organization in defense of the rights of its members to make a stand against the corporations employing your service, our citizenship may ever be relied on to remember the debt of gratitude they owe you.

We are proud of our city, and nevermore so than since it has seemed good to you to meet in its halls. The early summer bids you welcome. The waterfall which thunders to the sky its joy in being the servant of our manufacturers, bids you welcome. The schools and churches turn out their attendance to join in the general welcome. Our art galleries and university museum open their doors in welcome. Priest, student, artisan, professional man, women and children, 130,000 strong, bid you welcome. The official bodies of our city bid you welcome.

May your stay be pleasant, your business prosperous and your remembrance of your session here be a joy unto you forever.

W. P. Daniels, Grand Secretary and Treasurer, was the next speaker. There are three times, he said, in the life of a conductor when he would not change his position with that of the Chief Magistrate of the country. The first time is when the conductor starts out with his first train. The second occasion is when he first struts up and down the platform with gold lace on his cap. The third time is when, as a member of the Grand Division, he comes to Rochester and receives such a royal welcome as they have received. He expressed special gratification at the evident sincerity and the open-hearted manner for which the delegates were received.

Senator Donald McNaughton was introduced as "that staunch friend of the conductor," and spoke as follows;

Mr. Chairman, Delegates and Ladies:

I have no words to express adequately my appreciation of the honor conferred on me by the invitation to be present on this occasion, nor to syllable the pleasure I have in being permitted to say a few words of greeting to representatives from all the States and Territories of our Union and the provinces of this useful and beneficent organization of railway conductors.

The privilege thus extended I attribute to the fact that I was a member of your fraternity, rather than to any official position I hold, for it must be known to most of the delegates that I was conductor on a train from Taunton, Mass., to Rochester. Yes, after leaving the elms of that handsome town, I took the helm. Conductor, did I say? I was not only that useful personage but baggage-man, brakeman, waterboy, newsboy and the only passenger and a deadhead at that.

Delegates, if a convention of railway conductors had been called exactly sixty years ago, this spacious theater would have been filled with one conductor, the one who shouted "all aboard" on the first train on any railway successfully operated, intended for miscellaneous traffic on this continent. It was drawn by the first locomotive made in America, used in the transportation of passengers, and that locomotive was built by Peter Cooper, of immortal and blessed memory. It will be a source of unbounded gratification to all present to learn that if a convention had been held in 1830, I can with becoming modesty—relying on the good taste and judgment of the committee on invitation assert that I would have been present to welcome the assembled delegates, for I was born that year, and it is said that I could make myself heard and understood better then than now. The fact that I was born in 1830, the year which marks so important an era in American railways impart to this sixtieth anniversary of that event great significance and the coincidence will, without doubt, be noted in the records of the proceedings of this convention. Fortunately for you I am not here to deliver an address, being to-day a sort of Miller coupler between the coaches, Daniels and Wilkins, a dull, rusty connecting link only in the brilliant intellectual train.

The locomotive that pulled the pioneer train six decades ago was named the Tom Thumb, the only American locomotive on the continent washed by two oceans—today we can say of American locomotives for speed and strength—thumbs up—and of them we have a full hand. Since that pioneer train, what marked and wonderful changes have been wrought; how rapidly have the hands moved across the great dial of human progress. In improvements in railways alone what a wealth of suggestion and thought. From the provinces to the sunny south, from ocean to ocean, over mountains, valleys, over rivers and plains the steel channels of commerce and transportation course, bearing from the Pacific to the Atlantic the wealth of empires, and from the murmuring waves of the Atlantic to the lands of sunsets of burnished gold the glow of fire that burns without consuming.

Conductors, you fill an important and responsible position, and you perform your duties and fill your places well. Your trains transport soldiers and sailors, aged patriarchs, the puffy infant, happy bridal couples, the lifeless form of the encoffined princess and peasant, presidents, living and dead. To your care, custody and control is entrusted all that represents the fertility and beauty of the earth, the products of the forest, the mines, what the seas, the lakes and the rivers yield, grains from golden harvests, cotton from southern fields, output of furnaces, fruits of all lands, and fabrics of the looms. It is eminently fitting and appropriate that your convention is held in the Empire state. New York owns her supremacy, the right to the title, by means of superior, unsurpassed means of transportation. Early in her history she extended aid in the construction of the Erie canal; then gave millions to assist the completion of a railroad from Lake Erie to the Atlantic, and nine years after the pioneer train ran from Baltimore to Ellicott's Mills, the governor of this state in a message stated that the largest amount of mileage embraced in any of the continuous systems of railways finished, was in the state of New York, being about 180 miles.

Delegates, of the utility and usefulness of your organization there is no doubt. It is a non-partisan, non-political, non-sectarian, but a compact body of earnest men for social enjoyment, benevolent and beneficiary purposes, and it is well that for a few days you lay aside the badge that gitters on your breast like the star of the East, and consult together on matters which concern the ultimate good and welfare of members of the Order.

But soon to be followed by a gentleman whom you will delight to hear, one who fills with great credit and honor an important office in this great State—who in turn will be succeeded on this platform by silver-tongued orators. These desultory remarks are but a feeble return for your courtesy, but let me in conclusion express the wish that your convention will be pleasant, profitable and harmonious; that you will have a safe return to your homes and various places of duty; that you will carry with you pleasant memories of the Flower City and the Empire State. Always may the face of your Waterbury watch look on you with approval and complacency, and when the last station in your life's journey is reached, may you be signaled on to a station of eternal rest by the pure, bright, white light from a lamp in the hand of the Conductor, Eternal and Supreme.

C. H. Wilkins, of Chicago, assistant grand chief conductor, was next introduced. He gracefully thanked the speakers who had so cordially welcomed the delegates to the city. Mr. Wilkins delivered a bright and entertaining speech on the life of a conductor. His many humorous "hits" were duly appreciated, as the ready applause showed.

Hon. Chas. B. Ernst, city attorney, delivered a characteristic speech, earnest, eloquent and witty. It has always been the custom for men of various trades to assemble together for consultation. The ancient guilds have assembled into the Knights of Labor and Federation of Trade, he said. It is in pursuance of this proper custom that you have met together. Your organization has a noble history. The conductors duty is to be more numerous with the advance of mercantile improvement. Years ago the conductor's principal duty was to save his passenger's scalps from the savage Indians. Now the conductors principal foe is the "spotter." He is also somewhat troubled with the tongues of woman who may take passage on his train. Your trains now travel from forty to fifty miles an hour but do not yet go as fast as a woman's tongue.

You are gentlemen of intelligence and bravery. In danger, when the faces of passengers blanch, the conductor must keep cool, reverse the lever, and save the lives of his passengers. It is eminently proper that you should be welcomed to this city. May your proceedings be harmonious and conduce to your own good and that of the public.

Norman Watkins of Kansas City was introduced as a representative conductor. He was listened to with special attention, as his name is prominently mentioned as candidate for grand chief conductor. He is an excellent speaker, with a good voice, and talks deliberately and impressively. The present convention he declared to be the most important ever held by the organization. There are most vital questions coming up for consideration, he said. He felt that he could assure those present that the organization will never do anything which will make it less welcome in any community than it is at present. The object of the organization is to secure justice for the members, he said, and this will be sought by lawful means.

Wm. A. Sutherland, of this city, was introduced and delivered a speech well filled with puns which excited both laughter and applause. "The Empire State is yours," he said, "and all the rice in the granaries, as the Secretary of State has told you. In coming days you will remember the dulcet tones in which the Mayor poured forth his carols. You will still remember, however, that he is capable of speaking in tones like the report of a cannon. He has said there is law in Rochester on the first day of the week, and there is law." (applause). The speaker paid a graceful tribute to Senator McNaughton. After this the speaker said he was glad to hear Dr. Stebbins speak, as he is a minister in favor of a wide gauge railroad with a fast express carrying millions of people into heaven, and does not believe in the old style of limited trains with only a few sent to their heavenly destination. In closing, he said the organization has a noble mission in hastening the day when all men will be brothers.

E. E. Clark, of Ogden, U. T., Grand Senior Conductor, spoke of the work of organized labor. He did not believe that it is true, as had been stated, that the deathknell of organized labor has been sounded. The opinions of the majority are generally right, he believed, and the officers of the order will be successful in their work while they carry out the wishes of the majority of members of the order.

Rev. Dr. Stebbins was the last speaker. He was glad the conductors brought their wives, as it was a delicate compliment to the cause of woman's rights—her right to her husband's society and reasonable recreation as far as possible. He desired to state with reference to the Mayor, that he believed not only in Sunday law, as was said, but also in law on every day in the week. "We shall read in the papers the accounts of your proceedings with interest," he said, "but not with solicitude, for we know enough of you to be assured that you will not do anything which will not be in accordance with equity. We put our lives in your care, and after doing this, what may we not entrust to you? Certainly we can trust that wisdom will guide your proceedings."

W. S. Butler, of Sioux City, Iowa, was the last speaker. He pointed out that while the organization is social to a large extent, still one of its first objects is to secure for conductors pay commensurate with their work and responsibilities. At the same time he said, the strictest compliance with the constitution and laws of the country must be observed. The exercises closed with a benediction by Dr. Stebbins. (Rochester Union and Advertiser.)

Bro. Daniels was directed to give the following letters to the daily papers in Rochester, N. Y., and to publish it in The Conductor.

In consequence of many exaggerated and false reports that have been published since the opening of the twenty-second Grand Division of the Order of Railway Conductors, I have decided to request you to publish for us a brief statement of the actual facts in regard to our action here.

I do not wish to be understood as censuring or reflecting with the newspapers of Rochester, in the slightest degree, as I fully realize the fact that they have simply published information that has been given them by interested parties.

The statement, openly made and sent broadcast over the United States that the Order of Railway Conductors has become a striking organization, is absolutely false. They have merely taken from their laws a clause by which members are obligated not to engage in any strike of railway employees. They have put nothing in place of it and will not do so, the intent being to maintain a position that will leave each and every individual member free to do exactly as he chooses, and to exercise his inalienable rights as an American citizen.

It is an absolute fact that can be proved by undisputed evidence, if necessary, that some of those members who are now accusing the Order of Railway Conductors of having resolved itself into a strike organization, have, within the very recent past, publicly announced themselves as in favor of the very action that has been taken.

There has been no change in the principles of the Order of Railway Conductors, the assertion of members to the contrary notwithstanding, and it certainly appears to the writer, as well as to many others, that the statements made by some of these members is for the two-fold purpose of gaining for themselves personal advantages in certain quarters and to injure the Order of Railway Conductors all that they possibly can, by endeavoring to make the public and railway companies believe that the Order has placed itself in a position of antagonism, not only to the corporations in whose employ its members are, but also to the best interests of the general public.

It is also a noticeable fact that all of the information given to the newspapers has been directly in this line.

The withdrawal of Mr. Chittenden was hardly an accomplished fact before it was published in the daily papers. The remarks of Mr. Wheaton declining the nomination as grand chief conductor, on account of what he alleged to be a change in the principles of the Order of Railway Conductors, were hardly uttered before they were published in the daily papers. The two telegrams received yesterday, one to Mr. Ostrander and one from Mr. Chittendon, are both published this morning.

Had those who have acted with the majority during the entire session, taken the same course with regard to giving the public information, matters would present an entirely different aspect. It has been openly asserted by some few of the members who declined to acquiesce in the action of a large majority, that they would use their best endeavors to make the Order of Railway Conductors a strike organization, or place it in the control, if possible, of the very few, who, perhaps, desired to go to the extreme on the strike question. Let me ask the members and the public generally, to suspend their verdict and make their decision upon the acts and record of the Order of Railway Conductors and not upon ex parte statements and accusations made by a very few dissatisfied members, among them some whose ambition for place has been disappointed.

In regard to the extract from the New Haven News, published in the Union of the 19th, which is also being spread broadcast over the United States by those same discontented members, such puerile nonsense is unworthy of any serious attention, and it is perhaps well for some of those whose cause Mr. Hermance espouses that it is so. For if all of the facts were made known to the public it would place some of these malcontents in a very unenviable position. The wholesale charge of perjury made by Mr. Hermance can, in my mind, only be likened to the one jurymen who could not, by any means, influence the eleven ignorant and obstinate ones to join him in his opinions.

The position of the Order of Railway Conductors in regard to these members is exactly this: There is no desire or disposition to force any members out of the order so long as they are willing to abide by its laws, and, in accordance with their obligations, yield a cheerful compliance to the will of a lawfully constituted majority. If, however, they can not do this, we have no room for them. Due allowance will be made for the disappointment and ill feeling consequent upon defeat, but if, after a reasonable time, common-sense and good-fellowship does not resume its sway with these men, they must leave the Order of Railway Conductors.

In regard to the surrender of the charter of Division 168, its charter has not yet been surrendered, and while it is quite likely that some of its members will withdraw, I am reliably informed that unless undue advantage is taken by those who follow the lead of Mr. Chittenden, its charter will not be surrendered.

Action has already been taken by the Grand Division to define exactly the position of the order and authoritatively deny the absolutely false statements that have been given, either directly or indirectly, to the press of this city.

Yours Very Truly,

WM. P. DANIELS.

The following resolution was adopted at the Grand Division:

Resolved, That the Grand Chief Conductor be authorized and instructed by this Grand Division to furnish to the press the following statement, and attest the same by his official signature:

"While individual action of members of this Order is now in no way restricted, this organization is not on a strike basis, nor has any legislation in that direction been proposed."

C. S. WHEATON,

Grand Chief Conductor.

LEGAL

Single Passage Ticket—Detached Coupons—Slander—Charge—Error.

In an action for damages wherein plaintiff recovered a verdict for $1,500, defendant appealed. When plaintiff purchased from defendant a passage ticket from B. to N. Y., which entitled plaintiff to one first-class passage only upon presentation of tickets with checks attached. To the tickets were attached two checks or coupons, containing the words, "This check forfeited if detached." Plaintiff left the train at U; the first check was detached, as plaintiff testified, by the conductor when he alighted. This the conductor denied, but alleged that he found it after plaintiff left, at the head of the berth he occupied. The following day plaintiff resumed his journey, and upon his refusal to pay fare was put off the train at J. He re-entered the train and paid his fare to A, when he, in company with the conductor, called upon the conductor of the first train, where the fare paid by plaintiff was returned to him, after which he remarked to the conductor, "This is not the end of the matter," to which the conductor replied: "You are a nigger and a thief, and I don't doubt but if your pockets were searched we should find them full of counterfeit money." The defendant requested the trial court to charge that the conduct of the conductor at A, was not admissible as defendant was not responsible therefor. This request was refused.

Held—error. As the company could not be held responsible for the conduct of the conductor further than ejecting him,

Held, also, that plaintiff's ticket only entitled him to a single continuous passage on each road without the right of stopping at an intermediate station and resuming the journey by another train, and if he had such right he lost it if he voluntarily or negligently detached the check. Judgment reversed.

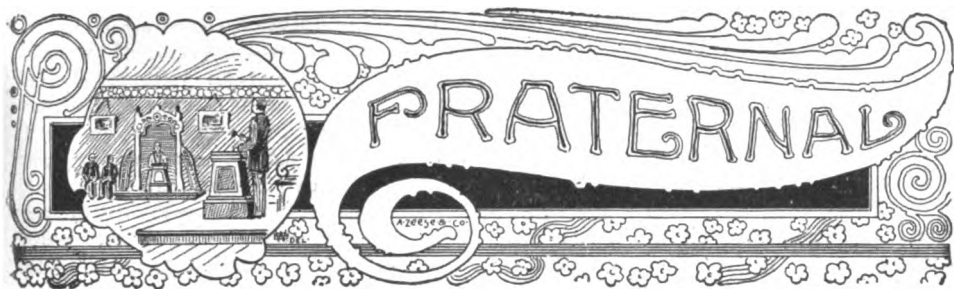

Hamilton vs. New York Cent. Ry Co., N. Y. S. C.

Carriers of Passengers—Sunday Traveling.

When plaintiff, a passenger on the defendant's railway train, received an injury in leaving the depot grounds at the place of her destination, through the conductor's negligent direction,

Held, In an action for damages for the injury that the fact that plaintiff was traveling on Sunday, in violation of the act concerning vice and immorality, did not preclude her from maintaining the action. Judgment affirmed.

Delaware, Etc. Ry Co. vs. Trautwein, N. J., S. C., May 2, 1890.

LITHIA SPRINGS, Ark., May 13, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:—On account of poor health, about the 25th of March I concluded to visit the celebrated Hot Springs of Arkansas.

Leaving Conneaut, O., I came over the "Nickel Plate" to Cleveland, thence, over the "Big Four," to St. Louis, where I boarded the St. L. I. M. & S. for Malvern, the junction for Hot Springs. From Poplar Bluff to Malvern I came down with Brother McNally, formerly of the L. S. & M. S., who, some twenty years ago, ran between Cleveland and Buffalo—a jolly friend most happily met—and who is yet well remembered by many friends in the east. At Malvern I met Supt. Richardson of the Hot Springs route, who showed me appreciated courtesies on account of our worthy train master, Henry Shaffer. I made the last miles to the Springs with Brother J. R. Cox, a genial gentleman, who directed me to the establishment of Brother I. S. Smith, formerly of the U. P., whom I found to be a whole-souled proprietor, keeping the Guinn House, an excellent hotel, and to whose hospitality I would recommend any brother visiting the "Valley of Vapors."

I had a short but sharp attack of illness while there, and was patiently and tenderly ministered unto by the charming wife and sister-in-law of mine host, and also by a member of the B. of L. E.—Gus Freeman, of Urbanna, Ill. The kindness of these friends will never be forgotten.

Hot Springs has been so often written of that for me to attempt a description of the place were superfluous, but I must say that it is a most attractive resort and, to those whose cases the waters suit, a veritable Bethesda fountain. It is a natural curiosity shop, also, and should be seen by all Americans seeking the rare and alluring in their own country,

At Hot Springs I had the pleasure of meeting a number of agreeable brothers, among them George W. Brooks, of Division 126, Grand Island, Neb.; T. J. Torney, Fremont Division 220, and that jovial, free-hearted German gentleman, Brother W. W. McCreary, of St. Louis Division No. 3, whose very presence serves to "drive away dull care" and make time fly pleasantly.

The 24th of April I ran up to Little Rock to attend a special meeting, expecting to hear Brother W. P. Daniels lecture, but was disappointed in not finding him there. However, there was held an enjoyable meeting of the O. R. C., and I met a number of gallant members of Division 131, whose headquarters, in the Wilson block, are handsomely furnished and arranged. They have a membership of eighty-seven, and a fine selection of officers, whose names, unfortunately, I have forgotten. My excuse for neglecting details is, that I was then just recovering from my indisposition.

Little Rock is a beautiful city of 40,000 inhabitants, and is well called the "City of Roses." Like the state, the city is rapidly growing and improving, and it ranks right along with sister cities of the north.

From the capital city I returned to Hot Springs but, being told by Brother McCreary, of the wonderful virtues of the Lithia Springs of Hempstead county, I decided to come here to try these waters. The place is as yet undeveloped—though not unknown. It lies somewhat remote from the railway line, and I hired a lad to drive me over a rough road to the Springs, which I struck one sunny Sunday morning. There are at the Springs, as yet, no accommodations but two rude cabins, one occupied by the family in charge of the Springs and the other intended for boarders. But I found, a mile off through the beautiful pine woods, a family who gladly entertain strangers visiting the Springs; and here I have sojourned for the last three weeks, tramping through the woods daily to drink from its source the strange brown water, and returning nightly to the plantation home of Mr. John Wimberly. His place comprises 1,243 acres, mostly under cultivation. Here I have seen growing cotton, cane, pea-nuts, figs, tobacco, gourd vines, muscadines and many beautiful flowers unknown to a northern clime. The sweet magnolia, choice roses in abundance and gorgeous woodland blossoms please the eye and fill the air with perfume, while song birds thrill the heart with joyous music. The mocking-bird is the prince of singers and is now in the first flush of his triumphs. In the cabin at the Springs I found, tarrying for her health, the daughter of a veteran railway knight of the punch—Miss Laura E. Brown, better known as the poet laureate of the Arkansas Press Association. Her father, Capt. L. R. Brown, now an R. P. C. on the Iron mountains, was, in former years, a conductor on the C. B. & Q. R'y between Madison and Harvard Junction, and was also for a number of years, a conductor on the St. L. I. M. & S., having taken the first passenger train over that road.

Of these Springs I can say with Miss Brown in her drinking song, "Here's to Lithia!"

O rare brown drink, brewed in the hills,
Thy glories all mankind astound!
Nectar which God himself distills—
In thy bright waters pain is drowned.
Escaping ill our lives uplift
To greet thy bounding spirits height;
Drinking, we gain the blessed gift
Of seeing things in heaven's own light.

CHORUS.

O, here's to Lithia, bright and brown!
Good old Lithia—drink her down!
A bumper fill with Lithia brown,
Up to the brim—thus! drink her down!
Then here's to Lithia, rare and brown!
Drink her down! Drink her down!

The Springs are four miles south-east of Hope, a pretty town thirty-eight miles north of Texarkana. The water has been analyzed by the best chemists here and in Europe, and is said to be prompt in diuretic, tonic and alterative action and to exert a decided influence in Bright's disease and cases of rheumatic, catarrhal and gouty diathesis. As a drink it is delicious and many remarkable cures are reported.

You may here from me again.

Yours Truly in P. F.,
JOSEPH HARE,
Member of Nickel Plate Div. 145.

LITTLE ROCK, May 11th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

As there is so much being said by the Brothers about the Benefit Department, I want to say a little if you will kindly give it room in THE CONDUCTOR. I have a certificate in one Benefit Department, and I think this insurance is all right with one exception, and that is make it so that if anything happens to me that I cannot follow my occupation as conductor, that this will constitute disability and entitle me to receive my insurance. This is all that this department lacks. Make it this way and then let it alone. I, for one, want no second-class, nor neither do I want a reserve fund. Let those that come in hereafter do as the rest of us have done; when there is an assessment made pay it; only cost ten cents per day, and anyone can save this much by not saying to some Brother when the pay car comes, "Are you any good?" and staying out of the saloon. And some of the Brothers talk about insurance in other companies, but they will not insure you unless you are young. Now, I for one, am getting along in years, and have been paying my assessments, and I do not want to be cast adrift because I am getting old. Now, Brothers, I want to say to you all, if you have no certificate in our Benefit Department, and you have a loving wife and children dependent on your salary, get one at once; make no delay. This may be your last trip.

I am yours in P. F.,

G. W. HORNER, Div. 131.

CHILLICOTHE, O., May 4, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor:

Several months ago we elected Brother O. T. Dewey as correspondent, hoping by so doing our division would be well represented in the columns of the CONDUCTOR. It is true he is young and shy, very modest, and not given much to talk; but why he has neglected so important a duty as this is a mystery. Probably he can explain.

I have just been reading the CONDUCTOR of the 15th, and the ideas advanced by some of the Brothers meet my approval. That is as to federation. I do not believe in it. I believe that if at any time we think we are not getting our just dues and have manly courage enough to take our grievance to the proper parties, we will be treated with respect and our wrongs righted. As to making any change in the ritual, as advocated by a great many, I say no, as I am unable to see where it will better our condition any. Is there any thing that prevents us from quitting if we want to? We do not agree with the Brother in regard to compulsory insurance, for this reason: when I joined the O. R. C., I may be carrying an insurance in some other benevolent institution. I would not feel like forfeiting all I had paid into the latter in favor of the former, and at the same time not getting any better insurance. But any Brother that will not make any preparation for his family "when he is called on his last run," surely needs some one to look after him. It is folly for any Brother to say he can not afford to carry one or two thousand dollars. And a Brother that wil-refuse to make provision for his wife and little ones should be scratched from the roll.

Well, Brother Howard has returned from Hot Springs—he was but little benefitted. He was there on account of the rheumatism.

Brother A. Shelton has returned. We understand he is past cure. We feel sorry for our Brother. In the prime of life, with the prospect of a happy future, to be afflicted in that way, is only too bad.

As you will hear from Brother Dewey soon, I will head in, lock both switches and wait until he passes.

Your respectfully in P. F.

BRASTOW.

Chicago & Atlantic Special.

I desire through the columns of your valuable magazine, to give a true statement in regard to the delay of the Chicago & Atlantic special carrying members of the O. R. C. to the Grand Division at Rochester, N. Y.

The second circular from the grand secretary and treasurer stated, "that a special would leave Chicago May 11th, at 10 a. m. via the Chicago & Atlantic, N. Y. P. & O. and B. R. & P. Members expecting to take this train must advise O. H. Ayers, 276 Michigan avenue, Chicago, not later than May 5th, stating whether or not they would be accompanied by their wives. It will be necessary for all members who take this train to procure passage by request of proper officials of the road upon which you are employed."

This was very clear that no one should present himself as a passenger unless he was provided with proper request upon the officers of the line for them. These instructions were disregarded by at least one-half of the party; and more than one-hundred came to Chicago, with the intention of taking this train, that had only provided themselves with credentials. In the meantime the Chicago & Atlantic officials had been advised that a party would be on hand at Marion and Salamanca to furnish passes to all. Upon the strength of this advice the Chicago & Atlantic gave most of the party passes from Chicago to Marion. Upon arrival at that point the gentleman was on hand to give the passes, but would only supply those who held requests, refusing emphatically to supply those who held credentials only. Telegrams were sent to heads of departments stating the situation, and word soon returned to run the train as far as Kent; in the meantime some conclusion would be reached, or some arrangement made. Upon arrival at Mansfield nothing further had been heard, and the train was put on the side track to remain until some arrangement could be made for passing those not provided with transportation. In the meantime most every one had retired. After it was learned that the train would go no farther, a few set about to wake up the gentlemen with a view of making some arrangements to go forward. A meeting was held in the passenger car, and a committee of three was appointed with power to act. The committee got together about 2:30 a. m., and after consulting time cards, railway guides, etc., it came to the conclusion that there was no possible way to get to Rochester via lines that would honor credentials. Telegrams were sent to head officials with request that something be done to get this party through to Rochester. The committee arranged for breakfast, and about 9 a. m. word came from Cleveland that special should proceed, accepting such transportation as the conductors held. A shout went up and every one was happy.

As there was still another road to pass over before reaching Rochester the committee opened up negotiations and succeeded in receiving reply that a party would meet the special at Salamanca and furnish passes to all who held requests. Those holding credentials only would be carried from Salamanca to Rochester, a distance of one hundred and nine miles, at a rate of 1c. per mile, or $1.10 for the entire distance. Fifty or more paid.

We arrived in Rochester about 1 a. m., Tuesday. Everyone seemed satisfied that matters were no worse. The Rochester morning papers stated that most of the delegates had arrived, excepting those coming via the Chicago & Atlantic special who were detained on account of the "N. Y. P. & O. washout."

BINNEY.

Too Old to Learn New Tricks.

It is indeed a hard task to instill the latest fads of fashion into the every day life of the old timer who likes the old ideas best and who hates to break away from them. It was a Michigan boulevard millionaire who sat down, to his dinner table not long ago and noticed the absence of the good old silver castor that had graced the center of the board for years and years. He could not see it anywhere and he asked his eldest daughter what had become of it. "Why, papa," she said, "you know that castors are not used at all nowadays. Small bottles are placed about the table instead." For a few moments the old gentleman regarded his stylish daughter sternly. Then he said: "You just ring the bell there and order up the castor. I've been used to a castor all my life, and I'm too old to make a fashionable change now." The daughter saw that there was no help for it, so she ordered the servant to shy the castor into the ring again.—Chicago Herald.

In our last issue we mentioned the sad accident that befel Brother Maxon, of Division 58. We are glad to hear that he is slowly improving. His physician thinks he will soon be able to be out if the weather is favorable and nothing new sets in to keep him back. It was a pretty close call for the Brother, but his good constitution has aided him materially in his recovery.

From a letter and also a card recently received from Brother B. T. Hedrick, member of Mt. Hood Division, The Dalles, Oregon, we learn that he has left the employ of the O. P. railway, and is now engaged in the real estate business under the firm name of Guiss & Hedrick, Albany, Oregon. We hope that the Brother will be very successful in his new undertaking.

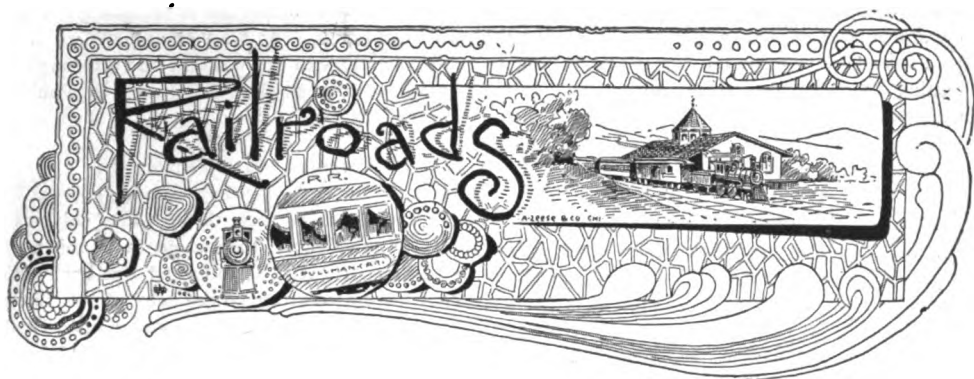

This is the 13th day of May and it is 12 o'clock. We trust that it is as beautiful a day in the Empire state as it is here. Also, that the brightness that gleams forth will be an omen of the happiness that will gather around the opening exercises of the Grand Division now assembled in Rochester. May their work be such that it may more closely unite the hearts of every member, and be the means of bringing them more closely together in the bonds of friendship and brotherly love, to the end that we may stand united and firm in all that is for our mutual good, which is, the welfare of every member.

Brother George Miller, of the B., C. R. & N., and a member of Division 58, has been wrestling with the duties of chief clerk while Brother Sackett has been in attendance at the Grand Division. George is a hustler at any business that he undertakes, and is also a genial, pleasant gentleman. It comes rather hard for him to be compelled to say "Not to-day," when a friend drives around to take him out to the ball grounds; but he is able to do so, and merely orders a little more ice and then settles right down to business. He always smokes crooked cigars. We asked him one day why this was thusly. He answered that it was because the smoke curled more easily than with the straight ones. We have not spoken since.

Paper is now made to serve for steel and iron. When strong fiber is used, it can be made into a substance so hard that it can hardly be scratched. Railroad car wheels made of it more durable than iron. A store in Atlanta, Ga., has been built entirely of paper. The rafters, weather boards, roof and flooring are all made of thick compressed paper boards impervious to water. On account of the surface of the paper being smooth and hard, it cannot catch on fire as easily as a wooden building. It is found warm in cold and cool in hot weather. The Breslau fire-proof chimney has demonstrated that cooking and heating stoves, bath tubs and pots, when annealed by a process that renders it fire-proof, becomes more lasting than iron, and will not burn out.

There will some day come an hour of solemn reckoning to that class of people who stand in the way, and are always a hindrance to the settlement of any question that pertains to the welfare of the poor laboring man. The great cry universally is that at whatever cost it may be the rich must be protected at all hazards and on all occasions. The day is fast approaching, and the time is close at hand, when this state of affairs will be materially changed. And he is wise instead of foolish who sees the "handwriting on the wall." And he is wise who makes up his mind, with the best grace imaginable that the poor man, even the railway employe, no matter how humble his position, has the same right to have his grievances looked into richest magnate in the world. What makes us think so arises from the fact that it is right, and in a becoming manner and no grumbling as has the we are firm in the belief that some day the right will prevail.

The ninth annual meeting of the Association of Railway Telegraph Superintendents will be held at Niagara Falls, June 18th.

Negotiations are pending for the sale of a controlling interest in the Baltimore & Ohio road to the Richmond & West Point Terminal Co.

Samuel Bailey, the oldest conductor on the Passumpsic railroad, died at East Barnet, Vt., May 11, aged about 60 years. He had been a conductor on the road for 30 years.

The Train Dispatchers' Association of America will meet in annual convention on June 10th, at St. Louis. Indications point to a very large gathering.

The Panama Railroad annual statement shows a decrease of $700,000 in net earnings as compared with last year. Stoppage of work on De Leisep's ditch is assigned as the cause.

It is reported that a grand jury at Boston has found an indictment against the Old Colony railroad for not complying with the law requiring weekly payments to railway employees.

To calculate the number of gross tons of rail for a mile of track, multiply the weight of the rail per yard by one and four-sevenths and the product will be the exact weight in tons per mile.

The Canadian Pacific has applied for admission to membership in the Central Traffic Association. This in anticipation of its entrance into Chicago in connection with the Wabash from Detroit.

It is said that there will soon be under construction another trunk line from Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard. The route will be from Chicago to Toledo, thence to Wheeling, Connellsville and Harrisburg.

The Alton has declared its usual 2 per cent. quarterly dividend, payable June 2. The rate wars in which the Missouri River lines are now engaged will make future dividends extremely problematical.

The Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo railway lost $8,000,000 through the manipulations of Ives and other "Napoleons" of finance. Suits have been instituted for the recovery of a portion of this 'swag', the most prominent defendant being Judge Stevenson Burke, of Cleveland, O.

The St. Louis & San Francisco, with leasehold rights, has been purchased by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe. The purchase price, $26,000,000 was paid in new stock of the purchasing company. The acquirement of these new lines makes the Atchison a very formidable organization.

President J. C. Clark of the Mobile & Ohio has voluntarily increased the wages of freight conductors and brakemen on that road, the former receiving $3.25 a day and 25 cents an hour for extra time. The brakemen are paid in proportion and receive 15 cents an hour for extra time.

Railway rate wars bring about queer proceedings, sometimes. For instance, the rate from St. Louis to Chicago is $7.50, yet St. Louisans last month could travel to Chicago, via Kansas City for $4, a route 500 miles longer. It is little wonder people generally grumble at railway management.

The Canadian Pacific, through an active competition for eastbound freight from Chicago less than a month, has already taken second place as a dressed beef carrier. Cutting rates is charged by competitors. The Lake Shore is the principal sufferer, and the officials thereof are making dire threats. The Canadian Pacific's traffic is handled over the Wabash from Chicago to Detroit, where the former's tracks end.

Rate cutting on lines between St. Paul and Chicago, has been carried to the greatest extent the past fortnight. Affected roads are retaliating by cutting in other directions, notably between Chicago and Council Bluffs, and Chicago and Kansas City. A general passenger rate war seems to have been inaugurated.

**

The Iowa Railway Commission has ordered the B., C. R. & N. to forthwith revise their freight schedules so as to conform to the rates of the commission. This action resulted from charges lodged before the commission by Burlington jobbers, the charges having, on investigation, been found true.

**

A new classification of Iowa railroads was made and announced May 26. The Kansas, City St. Joe & Council Bluffs is changed from class A to B, and the B., C. R. & N., and Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City from C to B. This necessitates the immediate preparation of new tariff schedules for the roads named.

**

The earnings of the "granger" roads for May will, it is said by traffic managers, show up grandly, being much larger than for any month in the year. The Rock Island, C., B. & Q., M. & St. P., Northwestern and Missouri Pacific are all short of cars, due to the very large grain and live stock movement.

**

The railroad employee fraternities of Indianapolis had a joint meeting May 24, at which over two-thousand members of the different brotherhoods were present. A noticeable feature of the gathering was the large number of conductors present, and this fact was taken as evidence that there was no longer any reason why complete federation of railway employees could not be accomplished. The repealing of the non-strike clause by the Grand Division of the O. R. C. was very favorably commented on. The meeting resolved in favor of federation.

**

At Toledo, Ohio, May 11, Judge Howell E. Jackson of the United States circuit court entered a decree in the case of Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York vs. the Chicago & Atlantic railway, authorizing the sale of the road. The court appointed William P. Fishback of Indianapolis master commissioner to make the sale.

**

As a result of a close traffic arrangement with the Iowa Central the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul has put on a new vestibule train between St. Paul, Minn., and St. Louis, Mo., forming a route which is said to be forty miles shorter than any other line and reducing the time between the two cities five hours. At St. Louis close connections will be made with the Wabash and a through car service will be established between St. Paul and Kansas City.

**

The following is self-explanatory:
Editor Union and Advertiser:

We wish to correct, through the columns of your valuable paper, the statement in this morning's Democrat that "Shults and Spellman of the local committee arranged the hop at the Livingston last night." The affair was gotten up by Brother Honin of the Railway News Reporter. We have had all the honors we can stand.

SHULTS AND SPELLMAN.

The Humorous Job Printer.

The humorous job printer was working at his case in a St. Paul office yesterday morning. In the afternoon his case was vacant. Why? Well the job printer was too humorous. Dearly he loved a practical joke. A quiet-looking man entered the office, and, approaching the job printer, engaged him in a low conversation for a few moments. Seven or eight other printers were working in the immediate vicinity. Suddenly the humorous job printer ostentatiously broke out in a loud voice:

"No, sir, not a cent."

"I have not asked to borrow any money," continued the quiet-looking man. "You make me ridiculous by such language; all the men are watching me."

"Can't help it," continued the humorous job printer, "I have no money to loan today."

The other printers tittered and the quiet man's face grew scarlet. Seeing this they attributed his expression to embarrassment over the refusal of his request for money, and they began to make side remarks of an uncomplimentary character.

"It's no use," said the humorous job printer, shaking his head solemnly.

"It isn't, eh?" said the quiet man, suddenly hauling off and landing a left-hander squarely on the printer's nose. He went down under his case like a brick blown from a chimney. The quiet man commenced to dance around the prostrate joker.

"Come and see me!" he cried, excitedly; "I'll learn you to play your scurvy tricks on an old friend who dropped in to invite you to meet better company than you deserve to mingle with. Want to make the boys think I came to borrow money, eh? That's a gag that's too old to play on me. Come and see me, and I'll feed your flesh to the fowls of the air; paint an Italian sunset on one cheek and the battle of Solferino on the other."

No, the humorous job printer did not stand any more display types up on end during the balance of the day.—Pioneer Press.

From a St. Thomas, Ont., paper sent us by Brother MacKenzie, Union Division No. 13, we reproduce the following regarding the funeral of Brother Robert J. Garbutt, who was killed by falling between cars of his train :

The funeral was under the direction of Union Division, No. 13, O. R. C., and the large number who attended, and the crowds which congregated at the late residence of deceased, and lined Wellington street, testified to the general respect entertained for the deceased, and sympathy for the bereaved. The societies, owing to the muddy state of the roads, walked on the sidewalks, being headed by the I. O. O. F. band. First marched Oddfellows, including about fifty from Ridgetown, followed by Antiquity Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Brotherhood of Brakemen, and Order of Railway Conductors. About thirty-five carriages were in line. A number of conductors attending the O. R. C. convention at Rochester, came here to attend the funeral, returning this morning on No. 6 express. Those who did so were : C. H. Wilkins, assistant Grand Chief Conductor; Cyrus Stanchfield and Wm. Kilpatrick, of the Grand Lodge Executive Committee; Norman Watkins, of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe; W. Kent, of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, formerly of the M. C. R.; Geo. Hill, of Bay City, Mich., an old M. C. R. conductor, and Geo. Gillespie, A. J. Smith, D. Powers and J. McKenzie, of this city. The floral offering included a large pillow, from the members of Union Division, O. R. C., with the words "O. R. C.—Our Brother." The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. Whiting, the casket being borne by Messrs. Asa Egglestone and Geo. Gillespie, of the O. R. C.; W. H. Kells and J. C. Weir, of the A. O. U. W., and W. Collins and P. Scott, of the I. O. O. F.

The following is a copy of a letter sent to the Grand Chief Conductor, officers and brethren, in convention assembled in Rochester :

On behalf of Union Division, No. 13, Order of Railway Conductors, St. Thomas, Ont., we desire to thank you for your great kindness in sending your committee to assist us at the burial of our deceased brother, Robert J. Garbutt. May your sessions be harmonious, and all your acts be prosperous. May the divine blessing of the Supreme Grand Chief Conductor attend all your deliberations, is the wish of Union Division, No. 13.

(Signed).

JOHN MACKENZIE,
Sec.-Treas., Chairman Com.

St. Thomas, May 19, 1890.

ST. THOMAS, May 19, 1890

The following is a copy of the letter sent to the parties named :

J. B. MORFORD,
Superintendent.
F. P. McDONALD,
Ass't Supt., M. C. R.
T. E. SCOTT,
Trainmaster, M. C. R.
C. J. WEIR,
Ass't Trainmaster, M. C. R.

GENTLEMEN—On behalf of Union Division, No. 13, Order of Railway Conductors, I desire to express our most sincere thanks for your many kind acts and your great generosity in allowing our members the many privileges to attend the funeral of our deceased Brother, Robert J. Garbutt.

By order,

J. MACKENZIE,
Secretary-Treasurer,
Chairman of Committee.]

May 13, 1890.

At the regular meeting of Belknap Division, No. 96, Sunday, May 2nd, the following resolutions were adopted :

WHEREAS, God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove by death from the home of Brother E. A. Nall, their eldest daughter, Bessie, aged thirteen years, causing sorrow and mourning to their happy home.

Resolved, That the heartfelt sympathy of this Division be extended to Brother Nall and his wife in their sorrow.

TIM CHASE,
C. D. ROSSITER, } Committee.
T. FLYNN,

May 10th, 1890.

Editor Railway Conductor.

Death has again entered the circle of Division No. 19, of the Order of Railway Conductors, and again has removed one of the charter members. One, who in the ten years of the existence of Division No. 19, has proved by his allegiance to the principles and precepts of the Order and loyalty to his Division that though "many are called but few are chosen" to prove faithful to their obligations and teachings through periods of adversity, which seem at times to cast over us shadows as deep as those of the "dark valley of the shadow."

We refer with feeling of deep regret to the death of Brother O. F. Milliken, who was twice selected to represent Division No. 19, in a session of the Grand Division, viz: At St. Paul in 1882, and at Kansas City in 1883, receiving from his Division each time a resolution of thanks for the able manner in which he performed his duties. Brother Milliken was born in Rockford, Ill., June, 1850, and entered the service of the L. S. & M. S. R'y in 1873, and for nearly seventeen years remained with that company in the capacity of brakeman and conductor.

Brother M. was a member of the new church, (Swedenborgian,) and had always proved by his humility and adherence to principles of morality, that it is among the possibilities for a man to live the life of a christian, even while surrounded by the many temptations which beset a railroad man on every hand. His love of country and of patriotic principles were proverbial, coming as he did of ancestors who landed in this country in 1672, and whose grandfather fought in the Revolution, and whose brother died in the late rebellion.

Brother Milliken carried a policy in the Benefit Department of our Order, in favor of his mother, Mrs. P. L. Milliken, 3711 Dearborn street, Chicago, so ending a well rounded life of good deeds by aiding in placing beyond want those nearest and dearest to him in life, and assisting in proclaiming to the world the fact that it cannot be said of the true and loyal member of the Order of Railway Conductors that "The evil which men do lives after them, but the good is oft interred with their losses."

H. W. G.

At a regular meeting of Collins Div. No. 5, O. R. C., April 14th, 1890, the following resolutions were adopted:

The dread avenger, Death, has again invaded the ranks of Div. 97, B. L. E., and claimed another worthy and zealous member of their order, and a good tried and true friend of the O. R. C. Friend Galloway, is no more; aged, vigorous and with health and energy giving promise of long life and usefulness, he has been suddenly summoned by the Grand Chief Engineer of the Universe to join that heavenly order to which sooner or later we will all be called.

Our departed friend of the B. L. E. was possessed of a disposition meek and childlike in its simplicity and purity of purpose; confiding and fraternal in his intercourse, assiduous and faithful in discharging responsibilities and duties, and over zealous perhaps in his aspirations to excel in his vocation. Friend William Galloway, calm and peaceful in death; in full consciousness of its approach; evidenced his life to have been such that the summons came with no terror to him; but with christian courage he gathered around him those "near and dear", and with a fortitude as remarkable as it was consoling bade a final farewell and peacefully entered the realms of bliss.

Be it resolved: 1. That in the death of friend William Galloway, Collins Div No. 5, has lost a worthy and faithful friend; and the Order of B. L. E. a zealous and true co-worker.

2. That we deplore his death with unfeigned sorrow, and extend to his sons and daughters the expression of our profoundest sorrow and condolence in their loss.

3. That a page in our minute book be dedicated to his memory as a mark of respect.

4. That a copy of these proceedings be sent to the sons and daughters of our deceased friend, and a copy to Div. 97, B. L. E.; and that this preamble and these resolutions be published in our Journal.

A. L. WILSON,
O. E. WELLMAN,
H. MORRIS.

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

VOL. VII.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA., JUNE 15, 1890.

NO. 12.

LE PETIT ALPHONSE.

On the peninsula formed by the junction of the back bay of Biloxi and the bay proper, lying between Deer island and the main land of what is now the state of Mississippi, stood a rude fortification of timber and earth erected by that gallant Frenchman, d'Iberville, who had planted a colony there, laying the foundation of the present town of Biloxi, which is, by consequence, one of the ancient cities of the United States—if anything within its borders save its "rock-ribbed hills" and mighty streams may be considered ancient.

On the ramparts of this fort a tall, handsome officer, wearing corselet and helmet, with a long sword hanging at his side, was taking his morning promenade, stopping now and then to listen to the gay carol of a mocking bird, already half civilized and domesticated, or to watch the evolutions of a flock of white-winged sea gulls as they circled over the glancing water, dipping occasionally to the capture of the small fry that all unmindful of danger leaped from their native element to show their glistening sides in the sunlight, those who were fortunate enough to secure a breakfast darting away, whirling and dodging, followed by a dozen or more of their screaming comrades.

It was a bright, sunny day and all nature seemed to quiver under the touch of the newly risen sun whose light danced over the waves that softly lapped the smooth sandy beach with low, caressing murmurs, glistened on the broad, dark leaves of the magnolia where great white blossoms filled the air with a delicious lemon perfume, and played among the whispering foliage of the wide-spreading live oaks and the murmuring plumes of the stately pines.

Sauvole paced back and forth on the narrow space he had chosen for his promenade, breathing the pure air with delight and an exulting sense of elation only to be accounted for by certain dreams of future glory and happiness that were fitting through his fancy—dreams which so completely occupied his thoughts that he came near stumbling over a little boy who had clambered up on the rampart behind him just as he was about to turn in his walk.

The little fellow was dressed in the style of a beau chevalier of the time—velvet jerking, silken hose, top-boots and bright red cap, in which was a black plume that drooped over the back of a head covered with shining yellow curls. From a bald-ric hung over his shoulder depended a little sword and in a belt buckled around his waist was stuck a miniature poniard.

"Good morrow to thee, monsieur le commandant," said this child, giving the military salute.

"Good morrow to thee, monsieur le chevalier," said the officer, looking down with a kindly smile upon his diminutive companion. "I had near made a stepping stone of thee, monsieur, for which I heartily crave thy pardon."

"The fault was mine, monsieur," replied the boy. "I should have notified you of my presence."

"By mine honor," said the commandant laughing, "thou look'st like a gallant out of a picture-book, but thou talkest like a grand signeur. And where learn'st thou such good manners and fine phrases, mon petit?"

"From my mother, monsieur le commandante."

"Then thy mother must be a noble lady indeed. And where may she be at this speaking? I have seen none such hereabouts."

"She is in France, monsieur."

"In France! And prithee, why came she not hither with thee? It seemeth strange that she should trust thee so far away from her loving eye."

"Because she is asleep, monsieur."

"Asleep! And could'st thou not wake her!"

"No, monsieur. The good God put her to sleep, and she will not wake until He shall touch her eyes again."

"Ah," said the commandante, "I understand. By my faith," he continued, communing with himself, "but this is a rare child, a most marvellous baby, indeed. And where is thy father, mon petit?" he asked.

"He is one of your soldiers, monsieur," was the reply.

"Ha!" ejaculated the other, "a common soldier with such a child as this! 'tis somewhat uncommon, surely. And what may be thy father's name?" to the child.

"Pierre Lanier, monsieur."

"And thine own?"

Le Petit Alphonse, at your service, monsieur."

"And wilt thou, too, be a soldier, little one."

"No, monsieur."

"No! What wilt thou be, then? A sailor, perchance."

"Nor yet a sailor, monsieur."

"What then wilt thou be? Surely thou wilt not be a priest or a scholar?"

"Will you excuse me one moment, monsieur le commandante?" said the boy, instead of answering the query.

"Certainly, monsieur le chevalier," replied the officer, "but wilt thou not answer my question first?"

"I will answer it when I return, if it please you, monsieur," said the boy, clambering down on the outside of the fortifications and running away to one of a number of huts occupied by a portion of the little garrison.

"So," said Sauvole, resuming his walk, "we have a common soldier here who hath a boy who might well be the son of a lord. I must seek out this Pierre Lanier and note what manner of man it is who is father to so marvelous a child."

In a little while Alphonse again made his appearance, this time arrayed in the costume of an Indian chief—buckskin robe, leggings and moccasins embroidered with shells and beads, and head dress of feathers. He brandished a little tomahawk in his right hand, carried a bow in his left and had a quiver of arrows slung on his shoulders, and his fair young face was smeared with red paint.

With a shrill whoop he leaped toward the commandante, flourishing his tomahawk as if he would throw it, and then stood before him laughing.

"By the mass!" said Sauvole, "but thou art as brave a warrior now as thou wast a brave chevalier anon."

"Ah, monsieur, exclaimed the boy exultingly, "that is it—that is what I would be—a warrior, a great chief."

"What! And wouldst thou be a wild savage? Who hath put such notions into thy young pate?"

"See," replied Alphonse pointing to an Indian who was going towards one of the huts; "there he goes now—Wam-po. He hath told me of the great forest out yonder where the red man hunts the deer, the wild cat and the bear, and of the brave chiefs who lead the tribes to battle."

"Wam-po? He? That lazy vagabond who doth naught but lie around our camp and pick up what he may without labor? And he hath bestowed upon thee this fine toggery in which thou art e'en now bedecked, I'll warrant."

"Aye, monsieur," replied the child, somewhat crestfallen. "But he is not always a vagabond; he doth often follow the chase and bringeth us fat venison, and he hath been in many battles."

"Well, well, child," said the commandante, "perchance I was wrong; do not look so lugubrious; it becometh not thy pretty face. But harken not to his tales. Know that 'twere better to be the poorest among civilized Christian men than the chiefest among untutored savages."

The little Alphonse went back to his father's quarters, and the commandante thought no more of his strange ambition until a few days later when an unusual commotion in the camp attracted his attention, and upon inquiring into the cause he was informed that a child eight years of age, the son of Pierre Lanier, had disappeared. No trace of him could be found, and the general impression seemed to be that he had fallen into the water and drowned. The father, whom Sauvole now noticed particularly for the first time, was well nigh distracted.

There was something in the appearance and air of Lanier which convinced his commanding officer that he had been accustomed to a higher station in life than he then occupied.

"Your name," he said, looking steadily in the man's eyes, "is —."

"Lanier, monsieur le commandante," interrupted the soldier hastily, "Pierre Lanier."

"Yes," continued the other, though he did not believe that was his true name. There were many young men, he knew, of the better class, who, by some disgraceful escapade, had forfeited the regard and interest of their relatives and friends and brought themselves down to even lower positions than that of the common soldier of fortune. "Yes, the boy told me that such was his father's name, and I will say to the father now, that such a boy should be at home in France, and under the guidance of better counsellors than he seems to have here."

"His being here cannot be helped, monsieur," said Lanier hesitatingly and with some confusion. "But you have seen him—to-day?" he added eagerly.

"No, not to-day," was the reply. "I held some discourse with him several days past."

The soldier looked disappointed.

"But," continued the officer, "I think not that he is drowned, if that will be of any comfort to you."

"Ah, yes, monsieur," said the other, "but where is he? What can have become of him?"

"That I cannot tell you. But go to your quarters and see what clothing the child has taken—what he wore. You can tell by what he has left."

The old man did as he was bid, and soon returned to say that Alphonse must have worn his Indian suit.

"'Tis as I thought," said Monsieur Sauvole. "He has wandered off into the wilderness, without a doubt. Wam-po?" he said, looking at several Indians who were standing about regarding the white men with open-eyed wonder, not comprehending what the trouble was about.

"Wam-po?" repeated several of them, looking at each other, but making no sign of comprehension. "He is not here," continued the commandante. "He has been telling him wild tales to excite his fancy, I know. Pity 'tis the little one hath learned the Indian tongue, which none of you men have been able to master."

Just then a shrill whoop was heard—such a whoop as only an Indian can give. It seemed to come from some distance in the forest, and the Indians again repeated the name of Wam-po.

Immediately the commandante and Lanier, followed by several of the garrison, started off in the direction whence the sound had come, their hearts, hardy soldiers that they were, beating nervously, for they knew not what the Indian might have found, and notwithstanding what the commandante had said they did not believe Wam-po had had anything to do with the child's disappearance—indeed, one of the men said he had seen him since Alphonse was missed.

The whoop was repeated from time to time, and at last the party of soldiers came upon the Indian, who was standing near one of those thickest of underbrush that grow on the low, moist places in the pine lands pointing to a bambo vine hanging like a swing from the limb of a tree. Caught in the strong thorns of this vine were a few strands of yellow hair.

The Indian had learned a few French words from the boy. He ejaculated "Lui," in the short, jerky way peculiar to his people, and fixing his eyes on the ground started off at a rapid, gliding pace, following what to him was a certain trail, though the white men could see nothing, there being a thick bed of pine needles spread beneath the forest.

Having pursued his way a mile or more, Wam-po stopped and pointed to a spot of uncovered moist ground. There was the track of a little moccasin foot. "Lui" he jerked out again, and went on.

Thus they continued to penetrate the forest, the soldiers with difficulty keeping up with their guide, occasionally finding the track of the little foot, until they arrived at a bit of swampy land bordering the banks of a bayou that debouched into the back bay. Here big Magnolia, bay, tupelo and cottonwood trees grew, over which clambered vines—the wisteria, laden with hanging clusters of purple flowers, the trumpet vine whose brilliant blossoms looked like flashes of flame among the dark green foliage, and the thorny bamboo which swings its strong tendons from limb to limb. Innumerable birds flitted about in the mysterious shadows, twitting, chirping, caroling, filling the place with music, which was not in concert and yet was not inharmonious.

The Indian stopped and peered through the underbrush into the deep shadowy recesses and then lifted his hand with the index finger pointing upward. The white men hastened to join him, and looking in beheld a picture at once beautiful and terrible—in the suggestion of what might be the end.

There, under the drooping branches of a large magnolia tree, out of the hollow trunk of which they had probably crawled, sat the child watching the gambols of two panther cubs. The little creatures—their fierce, savage natures not yet developed—were rolling on the ground like two kittens, now locked in close embrace, now standing off growling and spitting, or again bounding over each other, catching at the long flexible tails that kept up a constant twisting and turning like the twisting and turning of serpents.

Sauvole and his comrades saw this; but the Indian saw something more, and his bow was raised, the string drawn with steady hand to the ear. The shaft flew whizzing through the air, there was a terrific yell, and the mother panther bounded high over the head of the astonished and terrified boy, and fell writhing at the feet of the men.

With a leap, the Indian cleared the dying beast, brained the two cubs with his tomahawk, and caught up Alphonse in his arms.

Allons, allons!" he grunted in his curious French as he hurried away, followed by the soldiers, who wondered at his haste. But they did not wonder long, for soon they heard a cry, something like the wail of a child, coming from the spot where they had left the dying panther, and it was not long before a peculiar whining behind them attracted their attention, when looking back, they saw through the open pine forest, its mate creeping stealthily on their trail.

As they had no other weapons with them than their swords, and Wam-po, whose bow had already proven so effective, was far ahead, they did not deem it prudent to attack the beast, which apparently governed by a like instinct when it saw so many enemies kept at a respectful distance, they pushed on and safely reached the camp, near to which it did not dare come.

It was long before Le Petit Alphonse forgave his friend Wam-po for killing his pretty playmates, but he did eventually, and in time actually did go out among his people—not, however, as a warrior, but as a teacher, for which his knowledge of their language and his sympathy for them in their savage ignorance made him well fitted; and this after he had fallen heir to a title and estate in France.—Robt. Boggs in New Orleans Picayune.

The African Order of the Tall Hat.

I was most heartily welcomed, when at last I arrived at my destination, by my old friend Lieutenant Liebrechts, a Belgian artillery officer, who is in command of Bolobo Station. I was right glad again to shake hands with Liebrechts; we were very old friends, having occupied the same quarters together at Leopoldville in 1883. What a change in this Station at Bolobo since I first saw it in 1883! There had been much trouble between whites and natives then, and the Station-houses had been burned to the ground; even now the grounds were encircled by a high, stout palisade. Nice, well-kept houses and stores had been built. There were also flocks of goats and sheep, good poultry-yards full of fowls and ducks, and immense plantations of sweet potatoes, maize, and peanuts, and gardens of vegetables. What was more important still, the relations with the formerly unfriendly and hostile natives were now of a most satisfactory nature in every way.

The villagers of all the surrounding country were constantly visiting the Station and exchanging presents.

Markets had been re-established for the sale of food, pottery, and native produce, and long-standing feuds between the different tribes were amicably settled by the happy intervention of Liebrechts. It is such as he who are required to gain the confidence of the African savage, men with a keen sense of justice, and the will to enforce it. My life at Bolobo was a happy one. Liebrechts and I spent our time in visiting the different chiefs, superintending Station matters, and making little excursions into the interior in search of guinea-fowl, partridges, ducks, or the more formidable buffalo of the plain.

Formerly, Ibaka was the most powerful chief of Bolobo district. His name was mentioned by the natives of the surrounding villages with a great deal of reverential awe. But his village had become disunited; each of his sons was at enmity with him, and Manga, Gatula, Lingenji, Nkoe, Ngai Utsaka, the chiefs of the neighboring territory, being keen traders, had obtained numbers of fighting men, and Ibaka's word, which at one time commanded instant obedience, was now but little regarded. His title of chief of Bolobo was of small value; he had lost all influence. During my stay at Bolobo many a time he applied to us for assistance against his neighbors, and on several occasions he arrived at our gates in full flight, chased by his own sons, armed with heavy sticks, who sought by this method of persuasion, to make their father agree to an immediate and complete division of the little wealth he still possessed, or to gain his consent to any other extortionate demand that might have suggested itself to their inventive minds.

Poor old Ibaka was a well-meaning fellow, and was very favorably disposed toward the white men. He was, indeed, anxious to be on a friendly footing with his white neighbors, but the other villagers were jealous of him, and talked him into trifling but irritating acts of arrogance against the Station, which resulted, a few months before my arrival, in a little war between Ibaka and Liebrechts, who was in command of the Station. As a punishment for his aggressiveness, Ibaka's town was burned to the ground.

There is an institution among these people which cannot be more correctly described than by terming it the "Order of the Tall Hat." There is in each district a chief who has proved by his warlike success that he, of all the chiefs, is the most powerful. A public acknowledgement is made of this fact, and the elected individual is carried around on men's shoulders through the different villages, the bearers proclaiming to all that he is the Mokunje Monene (Big Chief,) and that in future all tribal disputes are to be submitted to his judgment. Upon his return to the village, amidst dancing and singing and general feasting and joy, the Fetishman, or charm doctor, places on the chief's head a tall hat, resembling the "stovepipe" of civilized countries, but which is built with a brim at the crown, and not at the base. This hat is hereafter worn on all great occasions, and the wearer retains it until his death, when a new candidate is elected. In times gone by Ibaka had received the honor of election to this proud order, but, unfortunately, during the trouble with Liebrechts the towering emblem of peculiar distinction was burned. A sympathizing white man, traveling through the country, heard of the old chief's hatless condition, and presented him with a red opera hat of exaggerated construction, which had probably in years past formed a prominent feature in a pantomime or burlesque, or had been used with great effect by some comic singer or wondering minstrel.

The possession of this truly wonderful creation of the theatrical costumer made Ibaka a proud and happy man. His delight in his new decoration would have been unalloyed were it not for a haunting fear that some one might steal it. He kept it, when not in use, in our Station house, and called for it only on state occasions and big public drinking-bouts. I insisted on his continual care of this valuable acquisition, and would place it on the side of his head for him, and impress upon him the necessity of wearing it in that position, as we white men were very particular about such details. Old Ibaka was intensely superstitious, and was constantly with the Fetishman, who was kept busy manufacturing new charms to protect him against imaginary evils. The poor old chief was easily gulled, and would accept from any body any thing that had the semblance of a charm.

One day Ibaka arrived back from some prolonged native festival. The old fellow bore evidence of having taken more than his share of the strong wine. He had worn the red opera hat on this occasion, and he now brought it to the station to see it returned to a place of safe-keeping. Upon closing it up I noticed a mysterious little package, and was informed that it was a monkanda monganga (fetish letter). It was, in fact, a Mohammedan prayer, given to him by one of our boat's crew, as a safeguard against all forms of death. It struck me that a red opera-hat with a Mohammedan prayer pinned in it was, indeed, a strange "find" in the wilds of central Africa.—From "Six Years in the Wilds of Central Africa," by E. J. Glave, in St. Nicholas for June.

The Influence of Women Upon Literature.

It is needless to discuss here the much vexed question of sex in literature, but we may assume that, whether through nature or a long process of evolution, the minds of women as a class have a different coloring from the minds of men as a class. Perhaps the best evidence of this lies in the literature of the last two centuries, in which they have been an important factor, not only through what they have done themselves, but through their reflex influence. The books written by women have rapidly multiplied. In many of them, doubtless, the excess of feeling is unbalanced by mental or artistic training; but even in these crude productions, which are by no means confined to one sex, it may be remarked that women deal more with pure affections and men with the coarser passions. A feminine Zola of any grade of ability has not yet appeared.

It is not, however, in literature of pure sentiment that the influence of women has been most felt. It is true that, as a rule, they look at the world from a more emotional standpoint than men, but both have written of love, and for one Sappho there have been many Anacreons. Mlle. de Scudery and Mme. de La Fayette did not monopolize the sentiment of their time, but they refined and exalted it. The tender and exquisite coloring of Mme. de Stael and George Sand had a worthy counterpart in that of Chateaubriand or Lamartine.

But it is in the moral Purity, the touch of human sympathy, the divine quality of compassion for suffering, the swift insight into the soul pressed down by

The heavy and the weary weight
Of all this unintelligible world, that we trace the minds of women attuned to finer spiritual issues. This broad humanity has vitalized modern literature. It is the penetrating spirit of our century, which has been aptly called the Woman's Century. We do not find it in the great literatures of the past. The Greek poets give us types of tragic passions, of heroic virtues, of motherly and wifely devotion, but woman is not recognized as a profound spiritual force. Aphrodite, the ideal of beauty, is the type of sensual love. Athena, the goddess of wisdom, is cold, crafty and cruel. The Greek heroine is portrayed with all the delicacy and clearness of the Hellenic instinct, but she is the victim of an inexorable fate, a stern Nemesis, an Antigone patiently hopeless, an Iphigenia calmly awaiting a sacrifice. It is a masculine literature, perfect in form and plastic beauty, but with no trace of woman's deeper spiritual life. This literature, so vigorous, so statuesque, so calm, and withal so cold, shines across the centuries side by side with the feminine Christian ideal—twin lights which have met in the world of to-day. It may be that from the blending of the two, the crowning of a man's vigor with a woman's finer insight, will spring the perfected flower of human thought.—Amelia Gere Mason in Century for June.

—•—

The One Hundred Yards Dash.

FROM an article in the June Century, on "Track Athletics in America," by Walter Camp, we quote as follows: "The fastest running thus far done by any amateur for one hundred yards from a standstill is ten seconds, and if one may believe the best authorities in the way of sporting journals, amateur runners have been coming up to this limit occasionally ever since 1868, but not one has passed it. In that twenty-odd years some eight American amateurs and an equal number of Englishman have dashed down the track in the even time of ten seconds, while hundreds have run the course in the next fraction of a second. This record was made first in London in 1868, and last in Detroit in 1889.

"A story was once written of a man who traveled many a mile to attend performances of a lion tamer. He was possessed of the insane desire to see the man eaten by the wild beasts, and eventually his passion was gratified. There is a similar feeling of expectation in the minds of most the enthusiasts who attend the amateur meetings of track athletes. Sometime that ten-second record will be beaten, and it will be a story worth the telling if one has seen it done. Naturally, the fifth of a second by which this coming champion will dash into prominence will not be appreciable to the eye of the best of judges. Just the slightest movement less of the fine split second-hand on the watches of the timers, and some man's name will be famous as the name of an athlete who has accomplished what thousands have been attempting for twenty years. When one thinks that these sprinters, as they are called, go at the rate of thirty feet a second, he realizes something of the meaning of the term "dash" as applied to the short-distance races. Nor are the longer distances without special interest, each in its own way. From a quarter of a mile down the races are run at the top of a man's speed, but the half-mile, mile, and above require the husbanding of strength and proper putting forth of just enough to run out the entire distance at the best uniform speed. The walking requires a rather more accurate idea of the rules to make it of the most interest to the average spectator, who fails to feel that the walkers are putting forth their best endeavors because they do not run. This feeling is but human, and it often seems to take possession of the contestants themselves, as one may see by the occasional warnings given by the judge."

Death of a Pearl.

One peculiarity of pearls is that, unlike other precious gems, they are liable to decay. Occasionally a valuable pearl changes color, seems to be attacked with a deadly disease, and crumbles into dust. Such is reputed to have been the fate of the most magnificent specimen ever known. It was found by an ignorant fisherman, who disposed of it for an insignificant sum. Passing through successive hands it finally became the property of a Russian merchant and found a possessor who knew its immense value and prized it accordingly. He kept it carefully in a secluded room of his magnificent mansion, apart from all other of his treasures. It was the wonder and admiration of favored friends who were permitted to look at it. The merchant finally became involved in a political conspiracy and fled to Paris, taking his one great treasure with him.

He kept it hidden for a time, but at last consented to show it to some distinguished lovers of precious stones. But when he opened the casket he fell back in dismay and staggered as though stricken with death. The gem had begun to change color. A fatal disease had attacked it. It was soon a worthless heap of white powder, and the once wealthy merchant was a pauper. The death of a pearl is caused by decomposition of the animal membrane which enters into its substance.

The application of a caveat to stop a marriage is something new. It is stated that a member of the Maryland legislature had contracted a marriage with a lady, and journeyed to the county seat to procure a license, when he made the painful discovery that his rival had filed a caveat against the issue, and before he can get it the case will have to be argued. The wedding day has been postponed, but the man is a fighter and won't give up easily.

Starvation Camp in the African Wilderness.

After informing the unfortunate cripples of our intention to proceed forward until we could find food, that we might not all be lost, and send relief as quickly as it could be obtained, I consigned the 52 men, 81 loads, and 10 canoes in charge of Captain Nelson, bade him of good cheer, and, hoisting our loads and boat on our shoulders, we marched away.

No more gloomy spot could have been selected for a camp than that sandy terrace, encompassed by rocks and hemmed in narrowly by those dark woods, which rose from the river's edge to the height of six hundred feet, and pent in the never ceasing uproar which was created by the writhing and tortured stream, and the twin cataracts which ever rivalled each other's thunder. The imagination shudders at the hapless position of those crippled men, who were doomed to remain inactive, to listen every moment to the awful sound of that irreconcilable fury of wrathful waters, and the monotonous and continuous roar of plunging rivers; to watch the leaping waves coiling and twisting into uprising columns as they ever wrestled for mastery with each other, and were dashed in white fragments of foam far apart by the ceaseless force of driven currents; to gaze at the dark, relentless woods spreading upward and around, standing perpetually fixed in dull green, mourning over past ages, past times, and past generations; then think of the night with its palpable blackness; the dead, black shadows of the wooded hills; that eternal sound of fury, that ceaseless boom of the cataracts, the indefinite forms born of nervousness and fearfulness; that misery engendered by loneliness, and creeping sense of abandonment; then will be understood something of the true position of these poor men.

And what of us; trudging up those wooded slopes to gain the crest of the forest upland, to tramp on and on, whither, we knew not, for how long a time we dared not think, seeking for food, with the double responsibility weighing us down for these trustful, brave fellows with us, and for those, no less brave and trustful, whom we had left behind at the bottom of the horrible canon?—From "The Emin Pasha Relief Expedition," by Henry M. Stanley, in June Scribner.

Gigantic Bear Story.

A recent Nevada paper tells this story of the destruction of bears.

Considerable excitement was occasioned this morning about town when Mike Wallace, the old-time Water Canyon miner, came in from the west with a wagon loaded with dead bear, there being four carcasses, which he disposed of to the Blanchard Meat and supply company. It appears that a day or two ago Mike Wallace, accompanied by a Mr. Hanna, took a stroll up the canyon some distance from the residence of the former, and suddenly Wallace discovered several big bears before him. Almost at the same moment bears rose up all around him, the timber being full of them. Wallace began work with his Winchester, and when the magazine was emptied he seized Hanna's rifle and continued to lower the price of meat in this vicinity. In but a few moments he had succeeded in killing seven big bears, and with the help of miners farther down the canyon, who were summoned to assist, five of the animals were carried to the camp. The last two killed were within ten feet of Wallace and charging down on him when he shot them, so that his escape was a marvelous one. Nineteen bears in all were counted in the bunch.

When the Trees Begin ter Blossom.

I certainly do like the season of the year that comes around

When the trees begin ter blossom an' the frost comes out o' the ground.

They's a kinder dreamy feelin' a hangin' in the air,

That makes a fellow hate to work, and a sorto' dosen't care

Fer nothin' but sittin' quiet like; an' sorto' lazyin' 'round,

When the trees begin ter blossom, and the frost comes out o' the ground.

I like ter see them blossoms, a hangin' from the trees

So long an' fuzzy like, you know—an' wavin' in the breeze,

An' I like to see'em fallin', an' I've set a many a day,

A watchin' them things come sailin' down, so slowly all the way.

Like's if they was too lazy ter care 'bout fallin' down,

When the trees begin' ter blossom, an' the frost comes out o' the ground.

It's a lazy kind o' weather, and it does a feller good,

Jest to set an' watch the sunshine, and to wonder if he could

Contrive to ketch a little, to lay by for a rainy day,

That he knows is soon a comin', if nature has her way,

An' sorto' keep it handy for the day that's comin' 'round,

When the trees are through their buddin' an' the frost is out o' the ground.

I love to watch the growin' grass, an' see it day by day,

A gittin' a little higher and brighter every way,

An' to watch the sleepy flies come out o' their winter homes an' try "

To stretch their wings a little, like they wondered could they fly,

An' to hear the birds a singin' is a mighty cheerful sound,

When the trees begin ter blossom, and the frost comes out o' the ground.

The flowers' ll soon be growin' up an' burstin' inter bloom,

(I like ter see a lot of 'em a settin' a in room, in a glass or somethin' or other). It makes me feel real fine

When spring is here and summer is a comin' clost behine,

An' so I say I like the time, though it's lazy, I'll be bound,

When the trees begin ter blossom, an' the frost comes out o' the ground,

—Louis P. Whitaker, in Home Magazine.

Before and After.

BY S. E. F.

Heights gained bring not the elation
That was ours in anticipation.

We begin with laborious pace

To gain the summit from the base.

Towards the top we slowly creep,

While looking up we say, "how steep."

From the summit with clearer sight,

Looking downward we say, "how slight."

Meeting a grief we think or say,

Within its shadow we must stay.

Continued bearing lessens pain,

Within the shade comes joy again.

With surprise we exclaim "how brief"

A stay with us was made by grief.

Find that grief, like joy or sorrow,

Comes to day and goes tomorrow.

Some tasks to be accomplished, rise

Gigantic like before our eyes.

Accomplished tasks, like giants thrown,

Cause wonder at such skill, our own.

Unfought battles bring dejection

Unwarranted by retrospection.

The race of life, when just begun,

Is swifter than when it is won.

PLAIN MARY ALLEN.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

She was not handsome. She was not brilliant. She had none of those salient points of character from which light flashes. You would not single her out in a room. And yet, no intelligent person could sit beside plain Mary Allen, for ten minutes, without being interested. When she talked, there was a certain firmness of tone, and earnestness of manner, that gave weight to her well-considered utterances. You felt that what she said had a meaning in her thought, and was not simply the light impression of a passing sentiment.

"Do you know Miss Allen?" said a young officer, named Wilmot. He asked the question of a lady friend, whom he had found quite agreeable—a Miss Helen Wilde.

"I have met her in company a few times—nothing more."

"She seems to be an intelligent girl," remarked the officer.

"She is said to be very peculiar," answered Miss Wilde.

"Ah! In what respect?"

"Odd."

"Odd?" Capt. Wilmot smiled. "What do you mean by odd, Miss Helen? To me, she appeared anything else but an oddity—calm, quiet, self-possessed, and agreeable in conversation."

"I know nothing of her myself, captain," returned Miss Wilde, "and only spoke from hearsay. People mention her as peculiar. A person who will do out-of-the-way things."

"Independent!" said Capt. Wilmot.

"Yes; that word expresses it, no doubt. Independent. Don't care. If she wants to do a thing, she will do it, and not stop to ask what you or I may think."

"But only, 'Is it right?'" remarked the captain.

"I can't say as to that. I don't know her intimately. And, in fact, have no desire for a very close acquaintance. These independent, peculiar, one-sided people never had any attraction for me. There is so little that is sympathetic about them. They don't flow in with you. Stand on principle, as they call it, no matter how trifling the question may be."

"Miss Allen is one of this kind?" said Capt. Wilmot.

"Yes, I believe so."

"Then I will know her better." This was spoken inwardly. While thought was still playing around this conclusion, Miss Wilde said,

"Are you going to Mrs. Barton's, next week?"

"That is my present intention. Will you be there?"

"If nothing happens to prevent."

A brief pause in the conversation followed. When resumed, the subject was changed.

The entertainment at Mrs. Barton's, to which reference had been made by Capt. Wilmot, was to come off within a few days. Plain Mary Allen had received a card.

"You must go," said her mother. The voice was thin and weak. Large, tender eyes, bright from hectic fervors, looked fondly across the room to where Mary sat near a window, holding in her hand a card of invitation.

Mary did not answer. She dropped her eyes to the floor, and sat musing.

"There's time enough to have a dress made," said Mrs. Allen.

"I shall not get a new dress," replied Mary. "My blue and white plaid, with a little change of trimming, will answer."

"But you have worn it so many times," objected Mrs. Allen.

"No matter. I am scarcely of sufficient consequence for people to keep an inventory of my wardrobe. Not one in ten, if asked, would be able to say whether I had appeared in the dress before, or not."

"Don't you believe it, my child. Some people are hawk-eyed in these matters."

"I wish them better employment," returned Mary. "As for a new dress, I can't think it would be right for me to spend the money at this time, more particularly," she added, in a lower voice, touched with feeling, "as it is not at all certain that I shall see it best to go when the evening comes around."

"Why not, Mary?" Mrs. Allen spoke with some surprise.

"If you are no better than you are to-day, mother, I shall not leave you."

"Oh! I shall be better. It was the excitement of company, yesterday, that gave me such a bad night, and leaves me so weak and nervous to-day."

A coughing spell followed this sentence. Mary arose quickly, tossing aside the card of invitation, and going to where her mother sat in a large, cushioned chair, held her head while the paroxysm lasted, and, when it was over, drew it lovingly against her bosom.

"I think you ought to have a new dress, Mary," said Mrs. Allen, as soon as she felt strong enough to speak again. The mother's pride, love and forecast were with the daughter—her only child, who, when she passed away, must be left alone in the world. She desired the new dress for Mary, in order that she might not be eclipsed, or overshadowed, by other young ladies at Mrs. Barton's. "Your cousin Jane will stay with me. I will send for her."

"She may have an engagement on the same evening," suggested Mary.

"It isn't likely. Anyhow, I'll send for her. You go out and buy the dress. Go to-day."

But Mary demurred to this, saying that, considering their circumstances, she did not think it right to spend twenty-five or thirty dollars for a new dress just for a party. While the fond contention was going on, a servant handed in a card. It bore the name of Capt. Wilmot. "Say that I will be down." The servant withdrew.

"Who is it?" asked Mrs. Allen. Her watchful eyes had noted a change on her daughter's face, and a deepening of its color.

"Capt. Wilmot," replied Mary.

"Capt. Wilmot!" The surprise in Mrs. Allen's voice was marked. "Have you met him?"

"Yes, once. He was at Mrs. Cline's. We happened to be thrown together, and, without introduction, entered into conversation. He is a man of intelligence. I was much pleased with him.

Mary arose, and, going to the bureau, examined her hair in the glass. Its smoothness satisfied her. Then, removing her collar, she took from one of the drawers another, of snowy white linen, and was drawing it about her neck, when her mother said,

"Change your dress, dear, by all means."

"And keep him waiting for ten or fifteen minutes? No, mother. My dress is clean, neat, and well fitting. If he has come to inspect my garments only, this attire will do as well as anything else."

"You are a strange girl, Mary," said Mrs. Allen, fondly, yet just a little sadly. "Too independent. I fear sometimes, for your own good."

Mary went down and saw the captain, who sat talking with her a whole hour. Just before retiring, he asked if she were going to Mrs. Barton's.

"It is my present intention to go," she replied.

"If entirely agreeable, Miss Allen, I will call for you."

She answered, frankly, that it would be agreeable. So he went away with this understanding. In that short hour, the heart of Mary had been touched. The tones of Capt. Wilmot had a melody never perceived, by her ears, in any other voice. His eyes had looked into hers with a meaning never read in eyes before. There was a sphere about him that penetrated to her inner life and consciousness, and awakened a delicious sense of pleasure.

When Mrs. Allen learned that Capt. Wilmot was to call for Mary on the night of Mrs. Barton's entertainment, and saw by Mary's manner how much she was pleased by the compliment, she was still more in earnest about the new dress. But, on this point, Mary did not change her views. "We cannot afford the expense, mother," was her argument, backed by the assertion, that, with a little change in the trimming, which would not cost over three dollars, her blue and white silk could be made to "look very nice indeed."

Two or three evenings afterward, Capt. Wilmot met Miss Wilde again. She was one of those free, forward, chatty girls, always trying to be agreeable and make a good impression, with whom young men get easily on terms of intimacy.

"I called to see your oddity, the other day," said the captain.

"What oddity? Whom do you mean?"

"Miss Allen."

"Indeed!" An amused expression flashed over the bright face of Miss Wilde. "Well, what did you make of her? She met you in a calico wrapper, and curl paper—ha?"

"Upon my word, Miss Wilde," answered the captain, "if I were to be put on oath, I couldn't say what kind of a dress she wore. There went no curl papers, however, for I remember that her brown hair was smooth, and as glossy as a bird's wing."

"How long did she keep you waiting?"

"Not three minutes."

"You were charmed, of course." There was just a little irony in the tones of Miss Wilde.

"So well pleased," answered the captain, "that I could not resist the inclination to ask if I should call for her on next Wednesday evening."

"Well—what did she say?"

"I am to call."

"And you expect to find her already, of course?"

"Certainly."

There was a shrug and a grimace. Sprightly girls do these things, sometimes.

"What do you mean?" asked the captain.

"I expect to see you, all forlorn, at Mrs. Barton's."

"You don't mean that Miss Allen will recede from her engagement?"

"She's peculiar, captain. I told you that before—an oddity. Ten to one, she will change her mind before next Wednesday evening. There'll be a headache, a sick mother—her mother is an invalid, I've heard—or some other excuse. It won't be the first time."

"Why do you say, 'not the first time?'" asked Capt. Wilmot.

"Because, to my certain knowledge, she has failed to keep two engagements of a like character. She's queer, captain. You never know just how to take her."

The captain smiled, incredulously, and said that he had no fears. But, as the time drew on, he could not help recalling the conversation with Miss Wilde, and feeling just a little uncertain and uncomfortable.

Now, in the eyes of Miss Wilde, the captain had found favor. This being so, she, very naturally, desired to find favor in his eyes. It did not affect her pleasantly, this evident drawing of Capt. Wilmot toward Mary Allen, a girl whose attractions she had so lightly esteemed that rivalry had not been thought of as possible. Here was, therefore, personal feeling, in her depreciation of Mary Allen, which led to invention as well as exaggeration.

It was Monday, and the party was to come off on Wednesday evening. Miss Wilde could not push the thought of Mary Allen out of her mind. She knew a cousin of hers, named Jane Ridgely, intimately. This cousin was a girl something after her own style. Thinking about Mary, brought up the image of Jane, and the thought of Jane prompted a visit. So she put on her things, and went to see her. It soon came out, in conversation, that Jane was going to spend the evening with Mrs. Allen, who was too sick to be left alone, in order that her cousin might go to the party at Mrs. Barton's.

"You are wonderfully self-sacrificing!" was responded to this.

"Why do you say so?" asked Jane.

"You had an invitation to the party."

"No. I am not in Mrs. Barton's circle."

"There has been a mistake, or some unaccountable delay," said Miss Wilde, through whose thought had flashed a scheme for disappointing Mary Allen, and at the same time, hurting her in the estimation of Capt. Wilmot.

"I know Mrs. Barton intended inviting you. In fact, I saw a card with your name."

"Are you sure?" Jane's eyes grew bright, and a warmer color melted over her face.

"Certain. The invitations were very extensive, and it is just possible that a careless servant may have delayed some of them even to this late period. I am almost certain yours will come to day."

"It will be too late. I should have no time for preparation left," said Jane, in a tone of disappointment and annoyance.

"Extemporize something, my dear," answered Miss Wilde. "It is going to be a splendid affair. I'll help you all I can. The fact is, you look well in almost any dress. You're just the style."

"But, I have promised to stay with aunt Allen."

"In order to let Mary go? I'd like to see you do that. You are not quite such a fool!"

"You talk as though I had an invitation," said Jane.

"Because I saw one made out, and am dead sure, as our Harry says, that it will be here within an hour or two. Send me word the moment it is received, and if our united wit and taste don't put you into splendid party trim, by to-morrow evening, we are duller than I fancy."

Miss Wilde's visit was brief. On leaving her friend, she hurried off to the residence of Mrs. Barton. She was intimate with this lady.

"I have a favor to ask," she said.

"Name it."

"Send an invitation to Jane Ridgely."

"If you desire it, certainly; but it is so late that she will scarcely accept."

"I'll manage all that. She'll come."

"Very well." Mrs. Barton took up a printed card of invitation, and, slipping it into an envelope, wrote thereon the address of Jane Ridgely. In less than half an hour, the card was in the young lady's hands.

It was Tuesday morning, the day before the party. Mary Allen sat in her mother's room, at work on the dress to be worn next evening. She was making some alterations, and putting on new trimming. Mrs. Allen had not been as well even as usual, during the last few days, and was lying in bed. Every few minutes, Mary would put down her work, in order to give some attention to the invalid. She had readjusted the pillows, that her mother might lie more easily, and resumed her seat by the window, when a note was handed to her by the servant. As she read it, Mrs. Allen's eyes were on her face, and saw her countenance change; a shadow fell over it suddenly. Mary sat very still, and seemed lost, after finishing the note.

"Whom is it from?" asked Mrs. Allen.

"From Jane." Mary's voice did not betray any feeling, but it was lower than usual.

"What does she say?"

"That she is sorry to disappoint me, but cannot come to-morrow evening."

"Why?" Mrs. Allen rose up in bed.

"She does not give the reason, but says that it will be impossible to come. So, that settles the party question." She sighed faintly; then, rallying herself, and affecting a cheerfulness she did not feel, added, "It's all for the best, no doubt. I'm only sorry to disappoint Cap. Wilmot, since he was so polite; but it cannot be helped."

"It must be helped!" answered Mrs. Allen.

"You shall go to this party, if I have to stay alone."

"The right way, mother, for every one, is the best way. You have not been so well, for the last two or three days, and there has been a question in my mind about leaving you even with Jane. This note decides the question."

"I'll send for Mrs. Kennard," said the mother.

"Now, don't object; for I have set my heart on your going, Mary."

"Mrs. Kennard! Why, mother, dear, how can you think of her? I wouldn't trust you alone with her, for a whole evening if I were to gain a kingdom. Don't think any more about it. The question, as I said just now, is settled. If, as you have declared so often, there is a Providence in each event of our lives, no matter how small, or seemingly unimportant, there is a Providence in this; and my surest way to receive the highest good designed, is to meet it in a right spirit, that is, to do just what duty, conscience and love, dictate, and these all say, 'Remain at home with your mother.'"

Mary had risen from her seat by the window, and crossed the room. She now stood by the bedside, and was gently pressing her mother back upon the pillows. Mrs. Allen shut her eyes, and looked sad and disappointed. She did not know how keenly the disappointment had touched Mary also; for the true-hearted girl was concealing what she felt, for her mother's sake.

The dress upon which Mary had been working was put away, and a book that she had been reading aloud, the previous night, taken in its place.

It was impossible for Mary Allen to look forward to the hour when Capt. Wilmot was to call for her, without uncomfortable sensations. She wished to appear well in his eyes—to stand fair with him. There was a feeling that his offer to accompany her to Mrs. Barton's was grounded in something deeper than a mere compliment. How would he regard her conduct? The hour came at last. She heard the carriage that brought him stop at the door, heard the bell ring, and waited for his name, or card to be sent up. Then she went down to meet him, feeling strangely ill at ease and embarrassed. The look of disappointment, almost displeasure, that came into his face, when she entered, dressed in a plain wrapper, hurt and confused her. But she pushed aside her disturbed feelings with a strong hand, and, in a few quiet words, offered the excuse of her mother's sickness as a reason why she could not keep her engagement. She saw that Capt. Wilmot was not satisfied, and hurt pride made her draw back, silent, cold, changed. Each felt uncomfortable and embarrassed. After a few minutes the captain arose, and, with a polite formality, retired. The instant Mary was alone, she covered her face with her hands, not able to restrain a gush of tears.

"Where is your belle companion?" asked Miss Wilde, on meeting Capt. Wilmot at the party. She smiled into his face with an arch malignancy that threw a suspicion into his mind. The captain had sharp eyes, understood human nature, and was skilled in character-reading.

"Miss. Allen, you mean?"

"Yes. I don't see her."

"She is not here."

"Aha! Didn't I prophesy as much?"

"Yes."

"Did you call for her?"

"I called."

"And she wasn't ready—had changed her mind! It isn't my fault if you were disappointed, captain. Forewarned, forearmed, you know. You'll believe me touching her oddity, now, won't you?"

And she laughed archly. someone drew her away, and the captain mingled with the company, feeling annoyed and uncomfortable. Had this girl really been trifling with him? Was the old mother story a mere subterfuge? He had been foreadvised of this very thing as possible. And yet, there was something in the affair altogether out of harmony with his own estimate of Mary Allen's character, formed on brief observation.

"I am sorry my young friend, in whom you expressed so much interest, is not here to-night," said Mrs. Barton, speaking, not long afterward with the captain.

"Miss Allen you mean?"

"Yes. I received a note of regret from her this morning. Her mother is in rapid decline, and Mary is her devoted nurse. They are very tenderly attached to each other. She says that her cousin had promised to take her place with her mother, while she came out this evening; but, something had occurred to prevent the cousin from keeping her promise, and so it was impossible for her to leave home."

"This is the true reason, you think?" said the captain.

"The true reason?" Mrs. Barton seemed surprised at the question. "Of course it's the true reason! She could give none other,"

"Isn't there something peculiar, something odd, about her?" asked the captain,

"She may be peculiar in some things; but her peculiarities are worthy of imitation. A truer, purer, sweeter, and more selfdenying girl is not within the circle of my acquaintance.

"But, I was warned of this very thing, Mrs. Barton—told that she would disappoint, or, rather, trifle with me, as she had trifled with others."

"From whom came the warning?" Mrs. Barton grew serious.

"From Miss Wilde. I will be frank with you."

"Can this be possible?"

"It is just as I say."

"From Miss Wilde!" Mrs. Barton looked disturbed. Then angry spots burned on her cheeks. "I see it all now captain," she added. "There has been a little plot to hurt Mary Allen in your good opinion. The cousin, who was to take her place in the mother's sick-chamber, is here. She is not one of my friends; but a young acquaintance asked me, two days ago, as a particular favor, to send her a card of invitation. I hardly thought she would come; but her acceptance is answered by her presence here to-night."

Two conflicting emotions recorded their existence in Capt. Wilmot's face—pleasure and indignation.

"Your young acquaintance is Miss Wilde?" he said.

"Yes."

"Thank you for having unveiled the truth. It is but just. I have wronged Miss Allen in my thoughts, and hurt her by coldness. You are not aware that I engaged to call for her this evening. I was warned that she was odd and capricious, and I was disappointed. I was annoyed and showed my annoyance. We parted coldly and formally."

"You understand it now?" said Mrs. Barton.

"I do, and shall act according to my new understanding of the case."

"How?"

"You will excuse my absence for an hour—perhaps altogether."

"Certainly."

"Good-evening. You shall hear from me, if not to-night, in the morning."

Mrs. Allen saw, by the sober face and moist eyes of her daughter, that the interview with Capt. Wilmot had not been a pleasant one. She asked a few questions, but Mary answered only in monosyllables, and then spoke of other things. A book that she had been reading aloud was taken up. An hour passed, when the feet of a man were heard ascending the steps, and, immediately afterward, the front door bell was rung. Both mother and daughter listened, without speaking. When the door opened, there followed the sound of a man's tread and a man's voice in the hall.

"Who can it be?" asked the mother. Mary did not answer, but her heart beat with a muffled sound. She felt oppressed, and was in a strange half-tremulous suspense. The servant came in a few moments afterward. The card she handed to Mary bore the name of Capt. Wilmot. She was not surprised, but she felt weak all over.

"The gentleman says, Miss Mary, that he will take it as a particular favor, if you will see him for just a moment or two."

Mary did not hesitate. She handed the card to her mother, and then directed the servant to remain in the room until her return. She did not glance into the mirror—made no readjustment of her dress—but went down to the parlors, walking with a slow, firm step, and schooling herself to calmness all the way. The captain stood in the middle of the room, but advanced a few steps to ward her, as she entered, holding out his hand.

"I am afraid, Miss Allen," he said, with a frank manner, "that you thought me rude and cold, a little while ago, and I could not rest until I saw you again, in order to do away, if possible, with that impression. I was disappointed, for, to confess the truth, I had promised myself no ordinary pleasure in your society at Mrs. Barton's this evening; and it sometimes happens that we are not in a mood to bear disappointment gracefully. That was my misfortune to-night, and I offer an apology."

He had taken her hand, and he felt it tremble. At first she looked at him firmly; but her eyes soon dropped away from his, and her face grew warm with blushes. He led her unresisting to a sofa, and took a place beside her, still keeping hold of her hand, and still perceiving its tremor. Why this agitation? Hearts are quick interpreters. It was the propitious moment—not looked for, but welcomed and accepted.

When Mary returned to her mother's room, an hour afterwards—to the happy girl the minutes had fled like seconds—her face was paler than when she went out, but over it lay a veil of tender joy, subdued, but full of heart revealings that no true mother's eyes could fail to read. She bent over the expectant invalid, gazing with love-lit eyes into her white, patient countenance, and then, hiding her own face on her bosom, whispered.

"I am very happy to-night, dearest, dearest mother!"

Not very long afterward, the fact of an engagement between the captain and plain Mary Allen transpired. This, to Miss Wilde, after all she had done in the case, was a mystery that perplexed and annoyed her. She had another feeling, one of shame, when Mrs. Barton, a woman of courage as well as honorable feeling, held to her eyes a mirror in which she saw herself reflected.

"You meant evil to a true-hearted and noble girl," she said; "but the shaft, designed for her, glanced aside, and hurt your own good name. It was not well done, my young friend, and, if you suffer in consequence, may the memory of pain, if no higher impulse rule in your spirit, hold you guarded in the future. There lies, in all wrong doing, a germ of retribution, that will punish the wrong deed, sooner or later."

When plain Mary Allen became Mrs. Wilmot, brilliant, showy girls, like Miss Wilde, did not hesitate to announce themselves as puzzled. What could he have seen in her? they asked. "Ordinary," "plain," "homely," "dull," "commonplace," such were the terms applied. "Good and true, and honorable—full of all soul-sweetnesses—a woman rightly planned," said Mrs. Barton, in answer to such poor cavilings. "True men seek for such to be their life-companions, and leave the proud, the vain, the showy, and frivolous, to mate with meaner natures. Accept the lesson, my young friends, and be wiser in future."

ONLY A LITTLE OLD SHOE.

Only a little old shoe,
Misshapen, and wrinkled, and torn,
Only a little old shoe,
That a baby's foot has worn!
Only a little old shoe,
By a grief-worn mother pressed,
Only a little old shoe,
By her loving hand caressed!
Only a little old shoe,
But I hold it close, as if it knew
The hunger here and the great heart-pain,
As I seem to see, and to hear again,
The dainty foot, with its dimpled grace,
As it lightly flits from place to place!
Once more I look into laughing eyes,
That meet my own with a glad surprise,
Once more I play with the ringlets fair
Of the tangled, nut-brown hair,
And though 'tis a vision, to me it is true,
As I looked once again on this little old shoe!

Only a little old shoe,
With a tattered heel, and the toes cut through,
But it weaves for me now a wonderful spell—
It is dearer to me than tongue can tell!
As I gaze on it here, through the mist of my tears,
It is crowned with the glory of vanished years,

When my heart thrilled with gladness, as proudly I stood
In the God-granted joy of real motherhood!
Through the quivering depths of the silence
I hear
Soft-measured sounds, that fall full on my ear,
And the words that are spoken seem those of a saint,
In answer, I know, to a mother's complaint!
Cease grieving, oh heart, and turn to the light
That is shining for thee, and shining so bright,
For the little one's love, by the Father's own will,
That once blessed the mother is blessing her still!

Guided by angels, and guarded by Him,
The soul of the child is untempted by sin—
Unfolding in growth, it is planting its place
In the wonderful ways of God's wonderful grace,
And the dear little feet are now passing between Thy life on the earth and the life unseen."

—Ella Dare, in Inter Ocean.

A Young Tennessee Heroine.

RIDING A HORSE INTO THE RIVER TO SAVE HER BROTHER FROM DEATH.

Near Gainsboro occurred an incident the story of which reads more like a romance than truth, yet it is vouched for by Judge Fite, one of Tennessee's most distinguished jurists. It was while the angry Cumberland was in his most violent mood, when the swift flowing waters were at their highest, that brave Mica Hall, a frail young girl of 15 years, performed an act of heroism which should emblazon her name high upon the scroll of fame.

Mica's brother, Comer Hall, and another young man, both aged about 18, were in a canoe catching driftwood in the middle of the stream. The weather was intensely cold and both young men had on their heavy overcoats and heavy underclothes. Suddenly the canoe was upset and both boys were thrown into the stream. The current at this point is very swift and the canoe quickly went to the bottom of the river. The brave young fellows began to struggle desperately to save themselves, but the heavy clothing weighed them down so that they could make little headway against the angry waters which bore them swiftly down stream.

Some distance down the river is a small island, which was covered at the time by about four or five feet of water. Young Hall's companion landed against this island and managed by the most desperate efforts to maintain his position upon it.

Poor Comer, however, was not so fortunate. In his efforts to escape he continued to float farther and farther away. About 300 yards from where his companion lodged Comer floated against a tree top and clung to it with a desperation born of despair.

All this time young Hall's mother and 15 year old sister, Mica, were standing at the edge of the water several hundred yards from where he had lodged. They were, in truth, at the edge of a great sheet of water which had backed up from the river. The frenzied mother saw the desperate struggle of her son to save himself, and wringing her hands in grief at the thought of his meeting death in the bosom of the angry river, was almost ready to plunge into the water and make an effort to reach him.

Then it was, in the supreme hour of peril, that the heroic young girl ran back to the barn and secured a horse. Seizing hold of the halter she pulled him down to the edge of the water, and tearing off her clothing jumped upon the back of the animal with the words, "Ma, I'll save Bub, or die," and plunged into the icy waters. Far down the stream her fast tiring brother clung to the tree top, the agonized mother expecting every moment to see him sink into the river never to rise again.

Mica urged the trembling animal forward until he struck deep water, where it was with the greatest effort the shivering girl could keep his head straight toward the boy.

The waters surged and splashed against the brave rescuers and every moment seemed an age. At last the tree was reached and just as Comer was becoming unconscious he was seized by his heroic sister, pulled upon the back of the horse, and the battle of life began. The horse struggled desperately, but the poor girl held tenaciously to his mane, and with one arm around the semi-conscious boy, finally managed to reach the bank far below where she started in. Once safely upon terra firma, she gave way under the terrible strain and it was several hours before she was able to recite the story of her brave deeds to the assembled neighbors.

The other young man was rescued by a party of men, and Mica Hall is the heroine of the Upper Cumberland.—Nashville American.

The Value of Wives.

A recent opinion rendered by the Virginia Court of Appeals shows that the law recognizes a graded valuation of wives. The complainant had sued for damages for the loss of his wife, who had been accidentally killed through the negligence of the defendant. On the trial, evidence tending to show that the deceased had been a superior wife was offered, and, presumably influenced by this, the jury gave the complainant a verdict for $6,000. The defendant objected to proof as to the character of the wife, and carried the issue to the highest court of the state. That tribunal holds that such evidence was perfectly proper as a means of estimating the damage suffered by the husband. "If the character and conduct of the wife," says the court, "be such that her death will cause but little sorrow, suffering and mental anguish to the husband, then the fair and just proportion of the damages to be awarded by the jury will be measured accordingly." "But if, on the contrary," the court adds "the wife be loving, tender and dutiful to her husband; thrifty, industrious, economical and prudent—as the evidence in this case proved Mrs. McConnell to be—then 'her price is far above rubies,' and the loss of such a wife, of such a helpmeet, of such influence, of such a blessed and potent ministry and companionship, is a proper element of damages to be considered by the jury in fixing the solatium to be awarded to the husband for tearing her from his heart and home."

She Wanted to Price Tickets.

There was a line ten feet long at the ticket window in the Hudson River railroad waiting room, and the policeman on duty was busy reminding the slower travelers to be brisk with their change, when a tall, thin, elderly woman, with spectacles and with a complexion like a halibut, peered in at the ticket clerk and said:

"What do you ask for a ticket to Poughkeepsie?"

"One dollar forty-seven."

"Is that the lowest price?"

"Only one rate."

"Eliza Smith went up last month and only paid one dollar and thirty cents."

"There's been no change, madam. Do you want a ticket?"

"Would I save anything if I went to Peekskill, got off and bought another ticket there?"

"Costs more. Hurry, madam, there are others waiting."

"Well, I only wanted to price tickets. I never knowed Eliza Smith to tell the truth before, and I just wanted to be sure that she hadn't broke no record."—New York Tribune.

Came a Day Ahead of Time.

A good story comes from a Birmingham photographer. A lady sat for pictures. The next day she returned for the proof, which was given her in an envelope on which was printed: "Return after five day to —, photographer, Birmingham, Conn." The lady kept the proof much longer than persons usually do, particularly as she said she was in a big hurry for the pictures. On the fourth day she came to the studio bringing the proof, and apologized to the artist for coming back "one day ahead of time," but she said she had business in town and could not come again. It took the artist a day to understand what she meant.

Many of our girls do not know why old lace is so much more valuable and generally so much more beautiful than new lace. The fact is that the valuable old lace is all woven in lost patterns. It is frequently as fine as a spider's flim, and cannot be reproduced. The loss of patterns was a severe check to lace making in France and Belgium, and was occasioned by the French Revolution. Before that time whole villages supported themselves by lace making, and patterns were handed down from one generation to another. They were valuable heirlooms, for the most celebrated weavers always had as many orders as they could execute in a lifetime, and they were bound by an oath taken on the Four Gospels, to work only for certain dealers. When the Reign of Terror began, all work of this kind was interrupted for a time. After the storm had subsided, the dealers and workers were far apart; some dead, some lost, and some escaped to foreign lands, and such of the woman as remained were bound by their oath, which, in spite of Robespierre's doctrine, was held by the poorest of them to be binding, and there are instances where they suffered actual want rather than break their word. Some, however, taught their children and grandchildren, and many patterns were preserved in this way. Some of the daintiest patterns were never recovered, and to-day specimens of these laces are known to be worth fabulous sums.—Southern Fact.

She Didn't Know.

New Parlor Maid—Here's a letter, ma'am, if you please.

Mistress—Pray, Mary, are you not accustomed to see letters handed on a tray?

New Parlor Maid—Yes, ma'am; but I didn't know if you was. St. Louis Magazine.

A Woman's Reasons.

Epoch: Maud—Why, you have thrown Clarence overboard?

Madge—I couldn't marry a man with a broken nose.

Maud—How did he get his nose broken?

Madge—I struck him playing tennis.

A Farmer's Luck.

We were going within about a mile of Findley O., and the train had just begun to slacken speed, when we felt a jar, and knew that the locomotive had struck some considerable object. In the seat next ahead was a farmer, and he threw up the sash, shoved out his head and exclaimed:

"By gum! But I'm in luck!"

"Why, they have killed a horse!" shouted a man behind us as he looked out.

"Yes, and it's my hoss!" Added the farmer

"But you said you were in luck?"

"You bet I am! I've been riding up and down this line for five years on a pass given me for killing an old cow, which wasn't worth five dollars. The pass expired yesterday, and now my old hoss who ain't worth skinning, gits in the way and is knocked over. Luck! Why, gents, that meahs a free family pass for five years more and there is fourteen of us in the family!"—New York Sun.

E. H. BELKNAP, EDITOR.

WM. P. DANIELS, MANAGER.
W. N. GATES, ADVERTISING MANAGER, 10 Public Square, Cleveland, O.

E. H. BELKNAP.

It is with a pleasure that cannot be well described that we inform the readers of THE CONDUCTOR that Bro. Belnap is slowly but surely gaining and that his physician pronounces him in a fair way to completely recover. The snows of nearly sixty winters have whitened the head of this kindly old man, but the heart in his bosom does not grow old, and in his long life journey there is not one on earth that knows him who is not his friend, unless the last spark of feeling has been obliterated from the breast of that one. Who among us would not be proud and glad to have such a record? The near friend and boon companion of every child in the vicinity, the generous neighbor whose last thought is for himself, his absence would create a void that but few could fill. When urged by friends to resent an injury or indignity, his reply is invariably, "life is too short, it will hurt them more than it will me" and this while an extremely sensitive nature is writhing in anguish. One of nature's genuine noblemen, his only fault yielding too readily to the persuasion of others against his better judgment while his open handed and lavish generosity to all, has kept him poor in this world's goods. That he may speedily be with us again is a hope that will be heartily echoed by every reader we are confident.

YE EDITOR PRO TEMPORE.

Owing to the continued illness of Bro. Belnap and the fact that under existing circumstances, there is absolutely no one else to assume the position of acting editor and that no one else may receive condemnations for the sins of omission and commission in the present number, I announce myself "editor pro tem." In consideration of the fact that it is not many moons since a large majority in the Grand Division kindly excused me from farther performance of these duties my voluntary return to the "journalistic arena" may seem to some members, to be a particularly aggravated case of unadulterated "gall" but I am like the bashful swain who, when requested by the fair maiden whom he had for the first time escorted home from 'spellin' school', not to tell anybody, replied, "you bet I won't; I am as 'shamed of it as you be." I shall be "as 'shamed of" this number as you will and I only trust that the extra earnestness that will now be added to the wishes for Bro. Belnap's recovery will hasten the "consummation devoutly to be wished".

WM. P. DANIELS.

"SHOULD AULD ACQUAINTANCE BE FORGOT?"

Friend Debs of The Firemen's Magazine congratulates the Order on the action at Rochester in regard to the "strike clause" and in the selection of a Grand Chief Conductor and extends "the right hand of fellowship," which certainly will not be rejected by members of the Order, but at the same time reminds us irresistably of an excerpt from an old ballad, by saying that he "will not in the least abate in his zeal in promoting the success of the B. of R. C.": Now has any body asked you to cut your old friends Brother Debs? And don't you think, upon reflection, that you are just a little bit previous with your

"I'll not marry you, my pretty maid?"

It is quite likely that if you had waited a bit, we would have asked you to turn Mr. Howard and the office of the B. of R. C. out of your rooms, and turn your back upon them forever, we won't do it now but on the contrary we can say we never, never thought of such a thing.

FRATERNITY.

The Locomotive Engineers' Journal for June, concludes a brief article on our last Grand Division with the following words: "It is our earnest wish that the past be obliterated by the members of the B. of L. E., and that the fraternal friendship that should exist between the O. of R. C. and the B. of L. E. may be extended to each other by the members of these organizations."

THE CONDUCTOR can assure Mr. Arthur, and the members of the B. of L. E., one and all, that if the sentiments expressed in the above extract, are observed by the engineers, a like spirit and feeling will not be found wanting on the part of the members of the Order. Had such a spirit always been exhibited by the engineers in the past, the troubles and difficulties of the recent past would never have occurred. The Journal and members of the B. of L. E. generally, have always, and very naturally, endeavored to place all the blame for these difficulties upon the Order, and while we might under other circumstances, feel like justifying ourselves to some extent, we join the Journal in the wish, that the "dead past may bury its dead," and the hope that while the experience of that past may not be without its lessons to us all, any ill-feeling engendered by it, may be buried in oblivion so far, at least, as the general membership of the organizations are concerned. It would, perhaps, be expecting too much that it should be so in all individual cases, and particularly so in the case of the writer, and it is somewhat unfortunate, that circumstances compel the Grand Secretary to be the writer in this case. We can promise, however, that in the future, circumstances will not require the Grand Secretary to be identified with matters outside of his particular domain, and it is his earnest desire now, not to say anything to, in the slightest degree, retard a friendly and fraternal feeling, not only between members of the Order and the B. of L. E., but also between other organizations. Future developments may seem to him to require that some of the "inside history" of the past be given, but if it is given, it will be by him as an individual and not when occupying the borrowed seat of editor.

THE PHILADELPHIA & READING.

Considerable prominence is being given to the fact that one Bonzano, assistant superintendant of the above road, is said to have issued an order to conductors employed on that road who are members of the Order of Railway Conductors, that they must withdraw from the Order or leave the employ of that company and this order is said to have been issued because the Order, at its last annual meeting, repealed the clause in one of its obligations prohibiting its members from engaging in any strike of railway employees. That this order has been issued by Bonzano is probably true, but that it is issued on account of the action of the last Grand Division, all who know any thing of the man Bonzano and his past history, know to be absolutely false and that if Bonzano himself says it is on account of such action, Bonzano tells what is untrue. It is not so far in the past but all members of the Order will remember it, that this man directed the members employed on that portion of the Reading then controlled by him to withdraw from the Order on pain of dismissal and what is not generally known, he went further than that and demanded that the division be closed, thus endeavoring to include in his crusade, employees of other roads than the Reading. The method he took to gain his end is characteristic of the man; he called to his office, a member who held a minor official position and said to him, if division No. 204 does not surrender its charter to-morrow, you will not have a position Monday. The member said he was willing to leave the Order but that he alone could not close the division and that he should not be held responsible for the acts of the division if it should refuse to surrender its charter. He replied, "you have authority over many of the members and if the division is not permanently closed you can consider yourself dismissed." We do not pretend to give the exact language of the parties to this infamous conversation, but we do give the exact purport of it and as a consequence when Monday came the member notified Bonzano that his orders had been complied with and that the division was permanently closed. In this statement he was mistaken as the sequel showed. Mr. Wheaton endeavored to have this order of Bonzano's recalled or countermanded by higher authority but without success, the utmost concession that he was able to obtain was what was said to be a secret and confidential agreement with Mr. Corbin that the men on other divisions would not be disturbed and nothing further would be done on Bonzano's division if the members would disclaim being members of any labor organization. Having never seen any copy of any agreement if any was made, we do not profess to state that either, but give the understanding of it that we received from Mr. Wheaton immediately after his return. Whiskerandos Bonzano having, as a reward for his efficiency in carrying out his superior Corbin's wishes, in a small way, been promoted to the assistant superintendency, now, soon as fairly settled in his new chair, enlarges his former order and as a semblance of an excuse to the public, refers to the action at Rochester and thereby, as all who know anything of him, are well aware, tells an absolute falsehood.

The Reading road has an extremely unsavory record for the past decade and while it has, for a wonder, some officials who are gentlemen and who do not deem it their duty to needlessly persecute the employees, it is quite likely that Corbin does not know it, and should we name them it would quite likely stimulate Whiskerandos to undermine them or injure them in some way, and to the extent of depriving them of their positions if possible.

Since writing the above, attention has been called to an interview with Bonzano, published in the Philadelphia Press of the 2nd, in which he says: "We had no objection to this Brotherhood (Order) until it held its last convention." In view of the facts given above, what a mean, pitiful liar this man is shown to be.

STILL DISSATISFIED.

Our good friend "Majah" Leffet does not seem to be quite satisfied with the deliberations of the last Grand Division of the Order of Railway Conductors: In fact if a late number of that elevating and ennobling specimen of the highest class of modern literature, the "Majah's" Gazette, is any indication of the "Majah's" state of mind, the "Majah" feels real bad. The fact that the Grand Division followed the "Majah's" advice and repudiated that bete noir of the "Majah's" existence, W. P. Daniels (at least he says they did) does not seem to relieve his herculean brain; which by the way requires trousers 48 inches in the waist to encompass, and with so much brain to feel bad with, our readers can readily imagine that the "Majah" is in a condition not to be envied. He is so much disturbed over the mistakes and misdemeanors of the delegates at Rochester that he even seems to be a little bit angry. The "Majah" however should not be too severe on the boys; indeed it is not unlikely that the "Majah" himself is somewhat in fault; he should, before condemning too severely, reflect that he was direlict in duty in not being present to tell them what to "do to be saved" as was his wont in days gone by. It is perhaps true that a few of them failed to consult the "Majah" as to the proper course to pursue before they went to Rochester and this failure to take advantage of this "fountain of knowledge" that is, through a feeling of pure and disinterested philanthropy, ever at their service "without money and without price," cannot be too severely reprehended: it is also likely, judging from results, that of those who did take the precaution to sit at the feet of this Gamaliel and drink deep from the inexhaustible fount, many fell by the way-side or were seduced by false prophets and as a consequence the "Majah" wears sackcloth and ashes and lifts his melodious voice in bitter agony of spirit and calls upon us to "listen to his tale of woe" of how a whole Order of Railway Conductors is doomed to dissolution, despite his efforts to save them from so terrible a fate.

We, as a nation, claim to live in an enlightened age, to be far in advance of our ancestors who did honor to Chevalier Bayard and other illustrious and celebrated examples of the highest type of manhood, yet we eat, drink, sleep and die in deepest degradation when all that is necessary is for conductors to look to this new Moses who is anxiously waiting to lead them out of the wilderness.

THE CONDUCTOR when first issued as the Railway Conductors' Monthly determined that it would not make a practice of inflicting its readers with any journalistic controversies and we have consistently adhered to that determination, except that in a very few instances we have asked the "Majah" to "please don't." For instance in March, 1889; the writer gave a couple of incidents in the history of this gallant warrior, the "Majah" by publishing the fact that he had made a practice of wearing the pin emblematic of the Order and that he had procured transportation by misrepresenting his connection with the Order. The "Majah" promptly denied the truth of the charges. Some other publications published the "Majah's" denial and gave him a certificate of good character and condemned THE RAILWAY CONDUCTORS' MONTHLY severely for slandering so good and pure a man as the "Majah." After waiting for all to have their say, we published ample proofs and if either the "Majah" or any of his sympathizers have heard of it, they have taken particular pains not to say so: let any interested look at pages 155 and 311 of Vol. VI of THE RAILWAY CONDUCTORS' MONTHLY, the "Majah's" Gazette and a few other publications during April, May and June '89, and note how they all immediately hastened to say not a single word after the proof was produced in the June MONTHLY.

The writer of this furnished a part of the money to issue the "Majah's" paper after it was made the "official" paper of the Order at Buffalo in '81 and that gentleman (?) owes the fact that he has a paper at all to the Order: After he was dumped overboard at St. Paul, he began to attack the Order and its members; one article soon after the St. Paul Grand Division being so absolutely false that the writer of this wrote a communication giving some of the "Majah's" history up to that time, and sent it to him with a personal letter advising him that if he ceased his attacks on the Order and its members and apologized for the article already published, he need not publish the communication sent him. He returned the communication, stating that the article had been inserted by some one during his absence, expressed his regret, and his willingness to apologize for it, and asked that the matter be dropped: He did publish sort of an apology and for a long time did not insert any slanders. The "Majah" is the sort of a warrior that is ready to fight at any time provided there is no enemy in sight or he can be reasonably certain that they won't "fight back," and improving the opportunity afforded by the well known position of this publication and the members of the Order generally, in regard to himself, has amused himself and a few others of that ilk, by wading waist deep in gore, and every bit of it, gore of the Order or some of its members. In '85 it became necessary to use a lath across the most prominent portion of the "Majah's" anatomy, and the silence that followed for almost a year could be felt; finally like all other vermin, he plucked up enough courage to peer out of his hole and finding that no one noticed him he soon got brave enough to go to war again, and make the welkin ring with his shouts of defiance. Then came the the June number of the MONTHLY showing him to be a genuine, but owing to the location of his brains, very weak imitation of Falstaff. Having learned from previous experience that the MONTHLY was sincere in its assurance to its readers that they would not be annoyed by any fumes caused by this animal of the genus Mustelidae being stirred up by us, it did not burrow very long this time but in all of its glorious warfare, it has carefully avoided the "pin" and "pass."

There is on file in this office, several letters, confidential letters addressed to the writer and signed by the "Majah" that would make interesting reading for some people; they are dated along in 1881, 2, and 3, and we have on several different occasions tried, by reference to them and a threat to publish, to induce the gallant "Majah" to say "publish them", but he has taken care not to say any thing that could be construed into any such permission.

Had we as little regard for common decency as is shown by the "Majah" we would have published them without his consent. You can safely give that consent now though, dear "Majah," as we promise not to inflict them upon our readers, (and now the promise not to publish being made, the "Majah" will probably deny the existence of the letters, and in virtuous indignation demand their publication; don't demand too strenuously though, or we may be tempted to break this promise,) nor will we soil THE CONDUCTOR by any further reference to Mephitis varians for a twelve-month at least.

THE NEW ORDER.

Under the heading of "A New Order Formed," the New Haven News of June 2d, has the following:

New Haven Division, No. 201, Order of Railway Conductors, is no more. It is dead and buried beyond resurrection, and its death is due to the action of the Grand Division at its session two weeks ago, at Rochester, in eliminating the anti-strike clause from its constitution.

But a new order, that will prove more popular, stronger in every sense of the word than the old, has come into existence. It is to be known as "The Association of Railway Conductors," and there were present at its birth in this city yesterday afternoon every conductor on the Consolidated and Housatonic roads who could possibly attend.

New Haven Division, Order of Railway Conductors, had a membership of 101, composed of conductors employed by the Consolidated and Housatonic system. It was the strongest division in the Order, and every member of it was firmly opposed to the elimination of the anti-strike clause. Its largest meeting was held yesterday afternoon, and it was the largest ever held in the history. Every member present and absent, voted unanimously to surrender the charter and the New Haven division's existence ceased.

Immediately after the surrender of the charter a temporary organization, to be called "The Association of Railway Conductors," was formed, every member present signing his name to the roll. Delegates were then selected to attend the convention of loyal delegates, the "65" who stood firm and true to the principles of the old Order at Rochester, that is soon to be held in New York. These officers were also elected; Chief Conductor, N. W. Pardee; Secretary, A. S. Ostrander.

The action yesterday of the New Haven conductors, although not the first to surrender their charter, will secure to them the rank and title of No. 1 in the new organization.

This action is no surprise to any member who attended the last Grand Division, and who is at all acquainted with the actions and talk of A. S. Ostrander. This gentlemen with others had announced some time previous to the meeting of the Grand Division, that if they could not rule the Order they would make an effort to ruin it, and at a meeting held at Springfield some time previous, they went so far as to select the grand officers for the "new order," naming Mr. Ostrander as "Grand Chief Conductor," and now it remains to be seen whether the plan will be carried out in full. THE CONDUCTOR does not question the right of these members to leave the Order, but as in the cases of other seceders in the past, it proposes to let members of the Order know exactly what manner of men they are and the course they take, and shall not be at all backward in expressing our opinion as to their action and motives. We shall regret to see honest, well-meaning members of the Order, who may be deceived by the assertions of these malcontents, leave our Order, as we regret to see any good man and true leave us, but there will be no sorrow over the departure of such men as Mr. Ostrander and if late reports be true, Mr. Chittenden, have proved themselves to be.

Ostrander has for years been a warm personal friend of the writer, and it is only with a heartfelt pang that that friendship is severed, as it must be, by the action of the gentleman himself.

Ordinarily, personal feeling should not be permitted to enter into association matters, and we sincerely believe that there are thousands of members of the Order, and many persons now outside of the Order, that will testify to the fact that open, manly opposition, whether it be in regard to the internal affairs of the Order or differences of opinion between it and other associations, has never made the slightest difference in the actions or feelings of the writer, that whether defeated or victorious, the personal relations have never been altered, and should Mr. Ostrander withdraw from the Order in a manly way, and without the use of deception and falsehood to injure the Order, the personal friendship would not be affected so far as the writer is concerned. The honorable way for Division 201, or any of its members, to withdraw from the Order, would be to notify the Grand Chief Conductor that it wished to surrender its charter, and request him to take the necessary action in the matter, as is provided by the law, which they have each and all sworn to obey. Yet, the first thing they do is to resolve themselves into a new organization, publish the fact in the daily papers, but say no word and send no notice to any officer of the Order, and a reasonable supposition is that they have followed the example of the southern California members, which they so loudly condemned a short time ago, appropriated the property of the Order, and doing it just at a time when they know that it is impossible for any officer of the Order to get there on account of the meeting of the board of directors. One of the members of this division is he, who since the "under the daisies" peroration at Philadelphia, has been universally known as "the man with a methodist voice," who before he knew what the action of the Grand Division would be, rushed into print, and denounced members as perjurers, yet he joins in actions that are in plain violation of law he has sworn to obey while denouncing others as perjurers who certainly as yet have violated no law or obligation of any kind. The animus of this gentleman's screed in the paper was so plainly evident, that one paper in reprinting it gave it the heading of "Trying to Stand in with the Officers."

Mr. Ostrander asserts that by repealing the sentence known as "the strike clause," the Order has made itself a striking organization, and this he knows to be a falsehood. Early in February the writer received from a number of members of the Order, a letter making a formal request that he become a candidate for the office of Grand Chief Conductor, and one of the names appended to this letter was A. S. Ostrander. Under date of March 3d, he writes, that having received a copy of my reply to that letter, he is surprised to learn the views expressed, and cannot see his way clear to support the writer. In reply, he was informed that the letter distinctly relieved him of any obligation, real or fancied to support us, and that our sincere hope was that some other would be selected. Following this, we were not a little surprised to be told, at Philadelphia, that Ostrander denied signing the letter, or giving any one authority to use his name in connection with it. Brother Chapman, who was the leader in the canvass in our behalf, was immediately notified that it was reported that Ostrander had said, that his name was used without authority, and as a consequence, we were shown the letter of Ostrander to Chapman, from which the following is an extract, and which further illustrates the "peculiarity" of the man who, it seems from his own letter, was perfectly willing to act in opposition to the wishes of his division provided they didn't find it out until after he was elected:

"I am heartily in favor of Brother Daniels for the position you speak of, but I do not wish to have my name used in connection with the matter until after the election for delegate in my division, for which position I am a candidate. The election occurs on the third Sunday in December, and if the matter we referred to is not published before that time, you may sign my name, previous to that, you will of course understand how I am situated."

As to Mr. Chittenden, it is reported, that at a meeting attended by only thirteen members out of a total of sixty-three, the remaining fifty having received no notice of the meeting and what it was for, ten voted to surrender the charter, and three against it, and on account of this action of these thirteen members who are said to have been selected for the purpose, the message was sent to the Grand Division pretending to surrender the charter of the division. It is further said, that when notified of the action of the Grand Division, directing him to inform all the members of the division of their rights in the matter of a surrender of the charter, Mr. Chittenden said, that he would be d—d if he would do it. This while he was yet a member of the Order, and after having sworn to obey its laws. If the information that the CONDUCTOR has received in regard to Mr. Chittenden's action shall prove to be incorrect, we shall gladly make it public through these columns, and make due reparation for any wrong done him. If, however, it is correct, we have no hesitation in saying, that he has violated his obligation, and is unworthy the respect or friendship of any one.

The columns of the CONDUCTOR are open to any reasonable extent to either of the above named gentlemen, to reply to anything said by us in relation to them.

WM. C. CROSS.

It is with extreme regret that we learn, that any officer of the Order, and particularly, one occupying so important a position as chairman of the Executive Committee, should, while holding that position, endeavor by misrepresentation, to injure the Order.

Brother Cross has, for most of the time since his return from Rochester, been thus engaged. He has visited different places on the "Q" system, and by every means in his power, has endeavored to intimidate members and influence them to withdraw from the Order and join Messrs. Ostrander, Beals, Chittenden and a few other malcontents, in an effort to form another organization. Had Brother Cross carried out his intention, as announced to the writer, namely, to quietly withdraw from the Order, and then endeavored without misrepresentation to persuade others to withdraw and join some other organization, THE CONDUCTOR would have no complaint to make, but we have no hesitation in pronouncing his actions, while holding an office in the Order, as dishonorable, traitorous and unmanly.

FEDERATION.

And still they come. There seems to be no end to the falsehoods that are being set afloat by some one in regard to the Order of Railway Conductors, the latest being the following from the New York Sun:

It has just become known, that the Order of Railway Conductors, after dropping the "anti-strike" clause in its constitution at the convention in Rochester decided to adopt federation with the other railroad organizations. It won't be formally approved until the next convention, since a year's notice has to be given for the amendment to the constitution. A committee was appointed, of which E. E. Clark, the newly elected Chief Conductor, is Chairman, to prepare the necessary amendment and to look into the best methods of combining with other orders.

The statement that the Order decided to adopt Federation with other organizations, is absolutely false. The motion for the appointment of a committee was made by the writer, than whom there is no more earnest opponent of any general Federation scheme. It is our belief that a large majority of the members present were and are opposed to it, but so also were a very large majority opposed to smothering discussion upon it or any other subject, and who believed, that if one single member of the Order did favor federation, he should be given opportunity to express his views without being "sat upon." It was with a view of hearing dispassionately, any argument that might be presented, either for or against federation, that a committee was appointed. To refuse to listen to argument is simple cowardice and evidence of a want of confidence in the position taken.

If those who favor federation are able to show us that it will be for the benefit of members of the Order, we shall most certainly favor it. With our present knowledge and views, we believe it will not be for the benefit of the Order and its members, to enter into any general federation, and consequently we are opposed to it.

The Railway News Reporter, in its last issue flays the Toledo wind bag with neatness and dispatch. It isn't much use, though, Brother Honin, to hang his pelt on the fence; the genus Ophidia grows a new skin very readily and is not very much discommoded when the old one is removed a little in advance of the natural course. If ever there was a case of chronic mendicancy, however, it is this gallant "Majah," who poses as the great and only friend of railway employees. He hangs around every meeting of any association, covering officers and members alike with fulsome flattery, winding up with an appeal to their purses. If, becoming disgusted with his fawning sycophancy, any association kicks the lickspittle cur out, the flattery is changed to Billingsgate.

THE BENEFIT DEPARTMENT.

There seems to be an idea on the part of a few delegates to the last Grand Division, that something was done that would be detrimental to the interest of the present members of the Benefit Department, and that changes have been made that would affect the present insurance.

The laws governing our present insurance have not been changed in any particular, but they remain exactly as they have been for the past year, except a minor amendment in regard to making proof in case of the death of a member. Amendments providing for a second class to be known as "Class B," were adopted, and in that class the certificates are for $1,000 each instead of $2,500, thus enabling members who do not feel able to carry $2,500 to become members of the Benefit Department. There is also a provision for a "reserve fund," in Class B, which will, as a matter of course, make its cost somewhat more than in Class A, for the same amount of insurance. The assessments in Class B are graded according to age of the member. A provision was also adopted providing that members of Class A, who wish to do so, may exchange one certificate in Class A, for two certificates in Class B, without any fee and without medical examination. If the present members of Class A are satisfied with it as it is, they can simply continue their membership, persuade others to do so, and induce new members to join it. The laws providing for Class B, do not take effect until January 1st, 1891. Members will have ample time to examine them, as they will be published in THE CONDUCTOR soon, and certainly any who drop out of Class A, on the rumor that is being spread by a few who do not understand the laws adopted at Rochester, or because of any rumor that the Grand Division in any way injured the interest of Class A, or its members, are certainly very foolish. Class A is in good condition, and is paying its losses in full, and has nearly 4500 members. Certainly so long as this is true, no member has any cause to complain. If Class B shall prove to be popular and become a better insurance than Class A, every member of Class A is given an opportunity to become a member of Class B without any trouble to himself except to make the request. If it shall prove to be unpopular, or not so good an insurance as Class A, there is nothing in the laws, rules or regulations to prevent members retaining their membership in Class A, and in that case it is likely that Class A will continue to grow and increase in numbers. Do not, however, through hasty and ill-advised action on erroneous information, do what you may soon have cause to regret.

THE GRAND CHIEF CONDUCTOR.

It is peculiarly fitting that this number of THE CONDUCTOR should say a word about the man who has just assumed the position of executive of the Order of Railway Conductors. It is fitting first, because the writer wishes every member of the Order to know, that what was said by him at Rochester immediately after the decisive ballot was in earnest, and that as the leading candidate against Brother Clark at Rochester, he proposes that no member in the Order shall lead him in support of the man of their choice. It is fitting also, because a personal acquaintance of over fifteen years gives us some reason to pronounce an opinion.

The members of the last Grand Division, did well, as was said at Rochester, in refusing to spoil a reasonably fair Secretary to make a very poor Grand Chief Conductor, and while it is reasonably certain that no mistake would have been made in the selection of any one of those prominently mentioned for the place, with the exception above, it is certain that no mistake has been made in the selection of Brother Clark; the only mistake being, that the matter was not settled outside prior to Saturday by an agreement whereby only one name would have been presented, thus settling the matter on the first ballot by the election of Clark by what would have been practically a unanimous vote.

Clark has been denounced by some as a radical and a fire-eater, but if any delegate cast his vote for him with any such idea he is doomed to disappointment; those very few who voted for Clark in the hope that he would lead the Order into trouble and disaster, thereby giving them an opportunity to say "I told you so," are also doomed to disappointment of the bitterest kind. Clark is a reasonable man, who will ask nothing but justice, and who will accept nothing less, or at least leave nothing reasonable undone to secure it. Do not, however, permit yourselves to fall into an idle slumber, dreaming that in electing him you have done all that remains for you to do, and that all that is necessary for you to do is to call the Grand Chief Conductor to remedy any of the evils that flesh is heir to. He will make mistakes; if he don't he is too good a man for Grand Chief Conductor and should be removed immediately, but if the members will treat him with half the consideration and extend to him half the leniency that has been extended to your officers in the past, you will have no cause for complaint on his part. He will give you faithful, honest, intelligent service, and if you don't give exactly that kind of support you are not living up to your obligations and have no right to complain of any possible errors that may be made.

It has been the good fortune of the writer to be associated with Clark in matters of the Order in connection with his duties as G. S. C., and it has, in every case, been his voice that has been first raised against anything unreasonable or unfair. Possessing the courage of his convictions, a quality not always prominent, and not hesitating to take issue against odds at any time; entirely free from any apparent desire to sacrifice conviction to retain goodwill, he may be safely trusted with the helm, and no one need fear (or hope) that disaster will follow.

"WILL IT PAY?"

In The Railway Age for May 24th, we find an editorial under the above caption, and while we do not propose to decide the case nor make any attempt to decide, that will be in the least satisfactory to the Age or even to ourselves just at present, there is one question that we can answer satisfactorily to ourselves at least, and that is, that it has not "paid" to depend solely upon the sense of justice of railway officers for fair treatment. We refer to the article, however, more to correct some misstatements than to attempt to say whether or not it will "pay". Referring to the B. of R. C., the Age says, "the two organizations are now agreed in endorsing the principle of strikes," and in saying so, it is very much mistaken as the two organizations are not by any means agreed in regard to the matter of strikes. It is hardly necessary for us to take up this matter in detail again and explain the difference between the two organizations; members of the Order understand their situation exactly, and not withstanding the noisy bluster of a few who claim to be "the minority" and to have made "strong protests" against the action of the majority, the membership generally is well satisfied with the action of the Grand Division and a large majority of "the minority" have made no "strong protest," are not now and have not been complaining, but on the contrary have pronounced themselves well satisfied. It is true that when the reports sent out by the few "rule or ruin" members at Rochester, came to their knowledge, there was considerable dissatisfaction among members, but as soon as they learned the truth, that dissatisfaction immediately disappeared. It is also likely that through the influence of interested parties, other divisions of the Order may possibly follow the lead of 201, and leave the Order, particularly when it is known that members who are in official positions are in some cases using the influence of their positions to that end. As an instance, one division which instructed its delegate to vote for the retention of the strike prohibition, did so by a majority of only two, and that vote was taken when two officials of the railway on which they were all employed were present and used their influence to that end, and it is a fact known to the writer that when this vote was taken, a majority of those present were in favor of its repeal, and had the ballot been a secret one the result would have been different. Both of the officials hope for and expect promotion, and one of them is actively engaged now, in an effort to have all the divisions on that line of railway leave the Order, using as is demonstrated by a letter written by him, which is before us as we write, his official influence to bring it about. The Age further says, and says truly, that "eliminating the prohibition of strikes in the organization" does not mean "that strikes are contemplated or will be resorted to." No one, except those who at Rochester, endeavored to commit the Order to a strike platform in order, as they openly expressed it, to injure the association, has for one moment understood or thought that the Order of Railway Conductors had by this action, at once resolved itself into a band of strikers. It is true that Bro. Wheaton declared that "there was no middle ground" and now the prohibitory clause had been repealed, members must strike whether they wished to or not, and if they did not, the Order would decay and die, but fortunately the object of such incendiary talk was too obvious to deceive any one, and Bro. Wheaton was compelled to contradict himself in public print.

In a later issue of The Age, we find the following:

The action of the Order of Railway Conductors at their recent convention is thus interpreted by Mr. W. P. Daniels:

The statement that the Order of Railway Conductors has become a striking organization is absolutely false. They have merely taken from their laws a clause by which members were obligated not to engage in any strike of railway employes. They have put nothing in place of it and will not do so, the intent being to maintain a position that will leave each and every individual member free to do exactly as he chooses and to exercise his inalienable rights as an American citizen.

The Order has hitherto been on record as opposed to strikes and its influence has been to that effect. Of course the repeal of the clause referred to is practically equivalent to a positive declaration in favor of the principle of strikes, and this is a reversal of the position before occupied, whether or not the Order as a body engages in strikes, which it is still to be hoped it will not do. But the action taken is in the nature of a threat, the occasion for which on the part of the conductors we have not yet seen clearly stated.

It is somewhat difficult to understand this change of front on the part of The Age, unless it goes by the rule of contraries. Before any authoritative statement had been made in behalf of the Order, and while Messrs. Ostrander, Chittenden, et al., were noisily proclaiming that the Order had become a dynamiter's association, and that they would leave and take all the eastern members with them, The Age says, as quoted above, "that in its opinion the Order had not by any means committed itself to strikes." A week later, quoting a portion of an authoritative statement, published by the express direction of the Grand Division, it gravely decides that "of course the repeal of the clause referred to is practically equivalent to a positive declaration in favor of the principle of strikes." This is a little qualified by what follows, but is still somewhat peculiar. As to the action taken being somewhat in the nature of a threat, we are of the opinion that no railway officer who has endeavored to be just and fair to the conductors employed under him, will regard it as a threat. On the principle that "the guilty flee when no man pursueth," it is quite likely that some of those who in the past have said to members of the Order, "we don't have to pay attention to you and your requests," will consider it a threat. It would not, perhaps, be extremely judicious just now, for us to satisfy The Age by "stating clearly" the occasion for the action, but we can assure our cotemporary, that "reasons are as plenty as blackberries." Would not The Age consider it something of a reason, that on several different occasions, railway officers have advised just such action; telling members that owing to the position they occupy, nothing can be done for them, but if they would place themselves differ-ently, superior officers would permit justice to be done.

The reason for not locating such officers will be obvious to The Age, but it would surprise many people to know who some of them are.

Not long since THE CONDUCTOR published a letter written by Gen. McNulta to members of the Order in Springfield, and in our humble opinion, that letter is a strong argument in favor of the action that was taken at Rochester, though right here we wish to say that Gen. McNulta is one of those who will not regard such action as a threat, nor will he ever need fear a strike of conductors on any road with which he is connected, unless brought about by those in authority over him; he has always been foremost in dealing fairly with all employes, and is far from being one of those who have taken any advantage of the misunderstanding of members as to the effect of the "strike clause."

So long ago as the spring of 1887, the writer in a circular to railway officers, said that if the practice of some railway officers of taking advantage of the members of the Order was not discontinued, it would result in the association becoming a strike organization, and one with, in the opinion of its members, many wrongs to avenge, and that the result would be disastrous in the extreme for both. Happily for all, that has not occurred and we believe now, that it will never occur. Had, however, the state of affairs that has existed for the past five years continued for a year or so longer, that prophecy would have been literally fulfilled, and the Order would have placed itself in open antagonism to railways generally. Now, none who do not wish to take any unfair advantage of members need fear any evil consequences, and while it is within the bounds of possibility, that some members may possibly strike some time, no one has or will ask the New England members to do so.

When an officer admits in just so many words, that he has done an injustice, but will not right it because he does not have to do so, and because the members of the Order can't strike, it is a reasonably strong argument against further efforts to prove the millenium is at hand.

It is well known to members of the Order generally, that the writer has always argued that this clause was virtually of no effect, and that if correctly understood, did no harm. That any member of the Order had a perfect right to quit his employment at any time, and that all that this strike prohibition kept him from doing was what is prohibited by our state and national laws, and that this view of the matter was correct, was demonstrated by the result in the case of charges against members of the Order by W. R. Woodward, then superintendent of the "Monon," in 1887. Unfortunately, however, many of the members did not so understand and more than that did understand and believe that while they had no right to quit, if any one objected, they were even compelled to do anything, no matter what, that their superior officers might direct. Had all the officers of the Order labored for a correct understanding among members there would have been no need of repealing this clause, but unfortunately, some of them taught members that they must do whatever they were directed to do, that if in case of a strike of any class of employes on any road, they were directed to run engines, switch or do anything of the kind, and refused to do it, they were "violating their obligation;" and more than that, railway officers have been told the same thing by those in authority in the Order. The influence and services of the Order have been offered to railway companies, in advance, by its officers, and it is this which has brought about the necessity for the Rochester action.

The Age admits, that "conductors may not be, and in a good many cases are not, as well paid as they ought to be." Now, will The Age please cite one single instance, one single road, where conductors are paid what they ought to be, in consideration of the responsibility placed upon them, and the arduous requirements of their employment?

As to legislation, we have only to say, that legislation that will deal fairly with us, will be welcomed, and we do not fear any other, for we are beginning to appreciate the political influence that we can bring to bear when united, and while it may be difficult for us to unite in regard to what we want, there will be no difficulty in uniting against any adverse or unjust legislation, and the legislator, state or national, who aids anything unjust to railway employes will make a visit to the late lamented McGinty.

By the way, does not The Age think, that the existence of even one Bonzano, is a good reason for the Rochester action?

It is with sincere regret that THE CONDUCTOR learns of the retirement of Mr. E. Dickinson from the management of the U. P. The writer first met Mr. Dickinson at the now celebrated "Cheyenne conference," and went there with a prejudice against the gentleman, which it took some little time to overcome, but we left there with the conviction that while Mr. Dickinson was there to represent and protect the interests of the Company by which he was employed, and while there existed a wide difference of opinion between us as to some things, he was an honorable opponent, a pleasant gentleman socially, and certainly an able railway officer.

Scribner's Magazine for June is a Stanley number, containing the only article which he will contribute to any periodical, and the first authoritative word from him on many of the most important features of his great expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha. This article fills thirty-two pages of the issue, and is a most graphic and exciting narrative from first to last. It opens with a solemn acknowledgement of Stanley's belief in God's help to him when he was helpless in the forest solitudes of Africa. "I feel utterly unable," he says, "to attribute our salvation to any other cause than to a gracious Providence, who, for some purpose of His own, preserved us."

Stanley reviews the work of his officers, and plainly but charitably criticises the conduct of the Rear Guard. He explains fully Emin Pasha's attitude, and speaks vigorously on the whole question of slavery in Africa and its extirpation.

The larger part of the article is a detailed account of the wonderful journey through the forest in search of food, and the relief of Nelson's starvation camp.

The illustrations are unique—presenting the first results of modern photographic methods as applied in places never before seen by a white man, as well as drawings from sketches made by Mr. Stanley himself. One of the most striking pictures shows a group of the Wambutti Pigmies—a new race discovered by Stanley.

St. Nicholas for June has an exciting and instructive story, "With Stick and Thread," by L. Clarke Davis, relating a boy fisherman's triumph in capturing a "red drum" with rod and reel. No angler can read it without a desire to start at once for the fishing-grounds. It is illustrated by M. J. Burns. Another striking story is "A Divided Duty," by M. A. Cassidy, telling of a little boy who had one brother in the Federal and one in the Confederate army. Being unwilling to decide against either, he compromises by having a parti-colored suit, one side gray and one side blue.

"Hurdling" is described and analyzed by Herbert Mapes, intercollegiate champion, and the article is illustrated both from photographs and H. A. Ogden. "Orie," by Florence A. Merriam, is a pretty story of a pet Baltimore oriole. It is illustrated by Nugent.

A novel feature is "A Living Chain from Adam to Abraham Lincoln," or a list of historic personages each of whom has been seen by the next in order, since the beginning of the world.

There are poems by Celia Thaxter, Grace Denio Lithfield, Margaret Johnson, and Katharine Pyle; and humorous verses, or jingles, by George M. Murphy, Valentine Adams, William Wye Smith, and Laura E. Richards.

The number is rich in continued articles "Crowded out o' Crofield" for the boys; "Lady Jane" and "Marjorie and her Papa" for older and younger girls; "Bat, Ball and Diamond," the valuable base-ball series, by Walter Camp; "Six Years in the Wilds of Central Africa," by Stanley's officer, E. J. Glave, and "Through the Back Ages," the geological papers by Teresa C. Crofton.

Besides all these, nearly every one of which is strongly illustrated, there are the departments, and other features of interest.

Every member of the Order should have the special number of The Railway News Reporter containing a history of what Bro. Honin saw and heard at Rochester, cuts of officers of the Order, past and present and many other things interesting and instructive. In fact we only note one omission. Dan fails to tell us about his bath at Coney Island.

The June Century opens with another article by Albert Shaw, whose paper on "Glasgow" recently attracted so much attention. This time Mr. Shaw treats of "London Polytechnics and People's Palaces," a subject which is particularly timely, as similar institutions are springing up in different parts of the world. The frontispiece is a portrait of Walter Besant, author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men."

John La Farge, who is writing "An Artists Letters from Japan," this month describes the very beautiful temple of Iyemitsu, and makes some general remarks on Japanese architecture. These papers being both illustrated and written by the famous colorist, are quite unique in their treatment of a subject which is growing in popularity—namely, the life, art, religion and thought of the Japanese.

This being the first summer number of The Century, Walter Camp's illustrated paper on "Track Athletics in America" is particularly timely.

Perhaps the most striking feature of this number is the beginning of another anonymous novel called "The Anglomaniacs." The scene is laid in New York, and the story is evidently written by one who knows well the situation. The pictures are furnished by C. D. Gibson, who knows how to give charm to his heroines.

The second of Mrs. Mason's very strikingly illustrated papers on "The Women of the French Salons" treats of the literary influence of the Salons in the Seventeenth Century. As every community in America of any size has something which is supposed to emulate the French Salon, these papers should have an unusual number of readers. The full-page illustrations of the present contribution are portraits of the Duchesse de Montpensier, the Marquise de Sable; Anne of Austria, and Mme. de Motteville. There are smaller portraits of the Dutchesse de Montbazou and Catherine de Medicis.

A paper illustrated with four very striking wood cut engravings by Elbridge Kingsley is devoted to the young American, Albert Pinkham Ryder, who is here called "A Modern Colorist."

Joseph Jefferson's Autobiography this month deals with the "Keans in Australia," there being full-page illustrations of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Kean.

Charles de Kay has another paper in his series on Ireland, this one being entitled "Irish Kings and Brehons." Mr. de Kay gives new derivations of the names of the five Irish provinces. The pictures accompanying this article are very curious and instructive, including a landscape by Alexander of "Reginald's Tower."

An extremely timely paper is Edward Atkinson's on "Comparative Taxation," which will be found to bear directly upon current discussions of tariff revision.

The fiction in this number, besides "The Anglomaniacs," consists of the eighth installment of Mrs. Barr's "Friend Olivia," and illustrated short stories by Arlo Bates and Octave Thanet.

"What's the News?" is a fresh and interesting statement, by Eugene M. Camp, of the cost of gathering news, with other matters germane to the subject. He publishes, by permission, some striking figures in this connection.

The Life of Lincoln has a sequel in the number consisting of numerous memoranda of great interest and value. A drawing is reproduced in connection with these, showing the stage and proscenium boxes of Ford's Theater as they appeared on the night of the assassination.

Poems are here printed by Florence Earle Coates, W. C. Wilkinson, the late Mrs. Hutchinson, Andrew B. Saxton, Edward A. Oldham, Charles Henry Webb, and others.

The Topics of the Time treat of the following subjects: "The Outlook for Wood-Engraving," "Journalism and Newsmongers," "Nine Thousand Manuscripts" (received in one year by the The Century Magazine), and the "Influence of Athletics."

In Bric-a-Brac a series of drawings by Mr. Kemble shows the start, progress, and conclusion of a "Possum Hunt."

Over Reached Himself.

English railways have the very sensible rule that passengers are not allowed to stand in the cars if anyone objects. An English paper gives the following instance of how one's rights may be too strongly insisted upon:

"Will you kindly allow me to stand?" asked a gentleman as he got into a railway carriage, which carriage already contained the specified number.

"Certainly not, sir," exclaimed a passenger occupying a corner seat near the door. "The way these trains are overcrowded is shameful!"

"As you appear to be the only person who objects to my presence," replied the gentleman, "I shall remain where I am."

"Then I shall call the guard and have you removed, sir."

"Suiting the action to the word, the aggrieved passenger rose, and, putting his head out of the window, vociferously demanded the guard. The newcomer saw his opportunity, and quietly slipped into the corner seat.

"One over the number," said the newcomer to the guard coolly.

"You must come out, sir, the train's going on," and without waiting for further explanation, the guard pulled out the aggrieved passenger, who was left wildly gesticulating on the platform."

A Scientific Order.

Scientist (in restaurant)—Bring me a decoction of burnt peas, sweetened with glucose and lightened with chalk and water.

Waiter (vociferously)—Coffee for one.—Chatter.

MENTIONS

The Secretary of Division No. 199 wants to hear from Bros. O. P. Godfrey and W. H. McLaughlin.

Brother Blount, Secretary of Division 77, would like to hear of, or from, Brother Chas. Coregdon and F. M. Tullis.

Bro. A. B. Garretson, of Division No. 53, who succeeded Bro. Clark, as G. S. C. is at this writing making the general office a visit.

Otis Aldrich, late member of Division No. 54, has resigned his position as conductor on the L. I. R'y, and will open a hotel at New Rochelle, N. Y.

Bro. A. D. Maxon, who was so seriously injured in an accident nearly two months ago, is just able to be about, and made us a pleasant visit a few days ago.

Brother L. P. Steims, of Division 8, was particularly anxious that all members of the Grand Division should enjoy their stay in Rochester. Are we right, L. P.

Past Grand Chief Conductor Wheaton handed the gavel to Bro. Clark, Grand Chief Conductor, Tuesday afternoon, June 10th, and departed for the east the same evening.

Brother R. J. Shekelton, of Division 42, is attending to Brother Belknap during his illness, having taken a leave of absence from the service of the B. C. R. & N. R'y Co., to enable him to do so.

The next number of THE CONDUCTOR will contain the new laws governing the Benefit Department, which go into effect January 1st 1891. It was impossible to get them in type for this number.

One member of the Order went to Rochester charged with a pleasing mission, it being no less than that of presenting to the Grand Division, in behalf of Mrs. Jennie Lapping, a beautifully embroidered emblematic banner. Hank says he did it Wells he could, but he don't think anyone could have did the subject justice.

A communication from Division 177 comes too late for insertion, but from it we learn that Bro. Foster of that division is contemplating a trip to Denver, and will spend a portion of the summer there.

New England was not only the birth-place of American liberty, but is, judging by the brays of F. A. Hermance, of New Haven, the birth-place of a full-blooded American ass.—Railway News Reporter.

We are glad to note the reinstatement of three good members of the Order, to their trains: Bro. Staiger, of the Peninsula Division of the C. & N. W., and Brothers Newton and Winslow, of the L. S. & M. S.

From a letter from "A Conductor's Wife," which either started "behind time," or was "laid out" on the road, we learn, that Division 47 is in a flourishing condition, and that conductors Bonter and Tucker are back on their old runs again.

J. M. Chase-d the Texas delegation to Rochester, so he says, and now reports that he is home chasing cars again, and that on his arrival, a brass band chased him home, but that he will be on hand, the same old Chase next year, at St. Louis.

The Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg has paid the judgments and costs secured against them by the ex-conductors, Samuel Bull and L. O. Rand. In the former case $296.29 was paid, and in the latter $293.69.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

A little man can sometimes Cutter pretty wide swath as has been demonstrated on different occasions. No one in Rochester was happier than Albert, when engaged in showing delegates where he dipped water out of the canal to make mud pies thirty years ago, and if every one that saw him there didn't think he owned the town, it wasn't his fault, for he acted as if he did and wanted every one to know it.

* *

Brother H. Celleyham, Jr., of Division 222; Geo. M. Cole, of Division 42; Mead, of Division 60 and Capen and Hartman, of Division 58, were all welcome callers at the general office during the past week.

* *

Brother J. D. Shults, Grand Junior Conductor, has been quite sick since the close of the Grand Division, but it is reported that he will be able to return to duty on the N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. in a few days. Guess the "Cane" was too heavy for him.

* *

Mr. A. J. Penn, stenographer in the office of the G. S. & T., is the happy "papa" of a bouncing boy, who came to him on June 4th, the first anniversary of his wedding. It is hoped that "slips of the Penn" will be overlooked for a little while until he gets used to the new order of business.

* *

The Board of Directors are in the city in attendance upon the annual meeting. Members present: E. E. Clark, Grand Chief Conductor; C. H. Wilkins, Assistant Grand Chief Conductor; Wm. P. Daniels, Grand Secretary and Treasurer; H. Evans, M. Clancy and R. E. Fitzgerald, of the Executive Committee, and C. E. Weisz and Sam'l Phipps, of the Insurance Committee.

* *

Another old resider visiting the scenes of youth was Bro. Greer, and everything was lovely except when Levi and Albert differed slightly on some reminiscence, when there was likely to be trouble; we say likely to be, because people who don't know them would think so. It is still unsettled as to who first played tag where the Powers building now stands.

* *

Among the "braves" who journeyed to Rochester in full war paint, and with scalp-knives newly sharpened, there were many chiefs, and among the latter was "Man-not-afraid-of-himself." After the fray, this big injun went over to Knickerbocker-town to get some war paint. He induced Watkins to order the paint in the shape of a supper, but when the "charge" came, the red man was well nigh conquered.

* *

One of the welcome visitors at Rochester, was Brother H. H. Moran, erstwhile a conductor on the Mex. Cent. R'y, still a member of Division 159, and now located in New York City, engaged in introducing the Cactus Blood Cure, and Bro. Moran himself is a tangible example of the efficacy of this medicine, it having completely cured him of a bad case of cancer. Brother Moran asserts, that if any member of the Order will try one bottle of the Cure he will continue to take Mor-an more of it.

* *

The following from a Buffalo, N. Y. paper of recent date refers to Bro. C. M. Bryant, of Buffalo Division No. 2.

Mr. C. M. Bryant, formerly proprietor of the New Continental, has, in company with Mr. W. C. Bryant, of Conneaut, O., bought the Empire House at Akron, O. Mr. Bryant is well known to the traveling public from his connection with the Nickle Plate, and his management of the New Continental shows that he can run a first-class house.

* *

By referring to a late issue of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, we learn, that Brother A. H. Smith, of Division 8, conductor on the Charlotte branch of the New York Central R'y., has taken a leave of absence for several months, or during the summer season; as travel is very heavy on that branch during the summer, we think Henry is to be congratulated that his standing with his company enables him to obtain a "lay off" at this time.

* *

We are pleased to advise our readers that the matters of difference between the Union Pacific R'y and the employes, have been settled satisfactorily to all, the brakeman, baggagemen and conductors having been granted nearly all that was asked by them. Want of space prevents our giving the Mo. River Div. schedule in full. The members of the committee speak highly of Bro. Clark in connection with the settlement, and THE CONDUCTOR is in a position to know that what they say is correct.

* *

The Railway Service Gazette, with less influence than a last years almanac, is using every means in its power to injure the Order of Railway Conductors. There are but few persons in the railway service to-day who are not acquainted with the past history of the "Majah," or his connections for one short year with the Order. His rabid mouthings are presumably in the interest of the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors, an organization which he is using to pull his well roasted chestnuts from the fire. Nothing that he can print will injure the Order, and that is one pleasure of being a member of the O. R. C. The "Majah" will never be a member, and it is doubtful if he will ever wear the monogram pin again. —Railway News Reporter.

Alonzo E. Hutchinson, a switchman, was arrested at St. Louis, Mo., June, 5, on a charge of being leader of a gang of six railroad men who have been systematically robbing freight cars of Denver & Rio Grande railroad at Salida, Colo., for months past. Two other arrests have been made at Salida. The goods stolen are said to be in silks, boots, shoes, notions, etc., and the value is alleged to be over $50,000.

* *

The annual meeting of the Railway Yardmasters' association was held at Kansas City, Mo., June 11, with about 40 delegates in attendance. The report of the secretary showed the association to be in a flourishing condition. Mr. J. Q. Hicks, of Indianapolis, Ind., was re-elected president, Mr. J. T. Robinson, of Chicago, vice-president and Mr. R. F. Marshall, of Cincinnati, Ohio, secretary. It was voted to hold the next annual meeting in Toledo, Ohio.

* *

The Locomotive Fireman's Magazine estimates the membership of the various railway orders as follows: Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers 20,000, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen 18,000, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen 16,000, Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association 6,000, Brotherhood of Railway Conductors 2,000. Of these all but the first named are members of the Federation, thus giving that body a membership of 42,000. The Order of Railway conductors, before the Rochester convention, estimated their membership at 20,000.

* *

A passenger train on the Northern Pacific was robbed by four masked men near Salem, N. Dak., June 7. Two of the men covered the engineer and fireman with revolvers and compelled them to stop while the other two uncoupled coaches from the rest of the train. The engineer was then made to run ahead some distance with the postal, baggage and express. The postal car was first robbed and about $500 was secured from registered letters. The express car was next broken open, but nothing of value was secured, as the messenger had covered the safe containing $2,000 with a mattress and vacated the car before the robbers made their entrance. The mattress concealed the safe so that the highwaymen did not see it and they left in disgust. The U. S. postal department has offered a reward of $1,000 each for the arrest and conviction of the guilty parties.

* *

Much dissatisfaction was caused among the engineers, firemen, conductors and trainmen on the Central Georgia road by the recent issuance of a circular containing 21 questions pertaining to the past records of the men, which were to be answered and signed. One of the exactions of the circular was, that the employes were to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors and keep away from places where liquor is sold. A strike was threatened and Chief Engineer Arthur of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers was called to settle the trouble. A compromise was effected by the withdrawal of the circular and the substitution of a new contract which is satisfactory to all parties. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers agrees to assist the officials of the road in keeping incompetent men out of its service, and to furnish all information possible about an employee when called upon by the road.

* *

The state railroad commissioners in their recent convention were almost unanimous in calling upon congress to take action in the direction of compelling the railways to adopt automatic car couplers and train brakes, and some of the states have already legislated to the same effect. While the desirability and importance of having the entire railway equipment of the country substantially uniform in these respects is admitted by railway men, they appreciate better than the general public possibly can, the vastness of the work and expenditure which the accomplishment of this result means, and it is to be hoped that railroad commissioners and others will give due consideration to the necessity of time for completing the desired improvements. The number of freight cars in the United States is already over 1,000,000, of which only a very small fraction have thus far been provided either with standard couplers or air brakes. It would be physically impossible to complete within any brief period the re-equipment of these cars, and the new equipment of the many thousands which are every year being built. One railway manager expresses the opinion that it would take ten years to equip all the rolling stock and would cost at least $150,000,000. The railways are generally acting as rapidly as practicable in introducing the approved appliances, and it would be a great injustice and unwisdom to attempt to force the reform too rapidly. To undertake, as has been proposed in some states, to compel the equipment of all cars with automatic couplers within a year or two would be folly, looking at it from a mechanical standpoint, and would place upon the railways a financial burden which none of them could well endure, and which for not a few would mean bankruptcy.

—Railway Age.

Railways Entitled to Some Gratitude.

The liabilities of the railroad system of this country are $10,000,000,000. They paid out in dividends $1,000,000,000 last year. They carry annually one-half a billion of passengers with a very small percentage of accidents. They have increased their facilities at a ratio one-third greater than the increase of population. More than one-tenth of the entire population of the country live directly or indirectly by railroads, yet, in spite of these facts, which cannot be contravened, there is ever to be found rampant antagonism to railway interests. In New Orleans the antagonism amounts to folly. One does not require to be a political economist to arrive at the conclusion that the benefits this city receive directly or indirectly from the several lines of road running into it are indeed very great.

The idea has been deep sown and taken good root that railroad companies are the legitimate prey of any one who can make them disgorge. When an untoward accident occurs that is detrimental to a railroad company's interest, such as was that which occurred on the Illinois Central line, whereby its travel has been stayed, instead of awakening public sympathy and regret, a feeling seems to be prevalent that no evil could be too great that would lessen the dividends. But

